M. Martin s'appose à cette motion. Nous ne devons pas, dit il, agir à la hate sur une question aussi importante que celle-ci, surtout lorsqu'il y si peu de membres presents au Sénat. La Convention qui a inséré dans la Constitution un article qui ordonne l'établissement d'un bureau des travaux publics, était un corps composé d'hommes sages. Il était plus nombreux que ce corps dont nous faisons partie, et devait par consequent présenter collectivement plus de sagesse que nous n'en avons ici.

Quant à l'opinion émise par le Sénateur de la Nouvelle Orléans [Mr. King] qu'une forte majorité de la Législature est opposée à la création de ce bureau, je dois dire que c'est la première fois que je l'entends exprimer. Le Sénateur à demandé si telle n'était pas l'opinion générale et on lui a répondu, qu'on l'ignorait. Il a dit que quelques uns d'entre nous pensaient que ce bureau etait inutile, que peut-être même il serait nuisible. Pour moi personnellement je n'étais pas compris dans ce mot "nous". Mon opinion est loin d'être telle, et avant que l'on agisse sur cette résolution, je désire que le Sénat soit au complet. Je n'aimerais pas la voir adopter en si grande hate.

M. Rivers. Le Sénateur de la Nouvelle Orléans [Mr. King] a dit, qu'il présentait la résolution comme une épreuve par laquelle il put reconnaitre si les 3/5 du Senat étaient opposés à ce bureau des travaux publics, afin qu'il fut dispensé de la peine de rédiger un rapport qui ne serait pas soutenu par une majorité constitutionelle. J'avais compris par l'art. 134 de la Constitution, que le bureau pouvait être aboli; mais comment le Sénateur pourrait-il ne pas s'arrêter aux articles 130 et 131, qui disent, "qu'il sera établi un bureau des travaux publics, lequel sera composé de quatre commissionnaires. L'état s'en a divisé par la Législature en quatre districts", et — "l'Assemblée Générale, à la première session que sera tenue après l'adoption de cette Constitution procédera à l'élection et à la composition des membres de ce bureau et à son organisation.

La création de ce bureau est ainsi prévue et il y est parfaitement pourvu. La Législature est tenue, de prendre des mesures à cette session pour organiser ce bureau. C'est alors seulement que nous aurons reconnu, que le bureau ne repond pas aux vues que nous nous proposons et à celles qui ont présidé à la rédaction de cet article de la Constitution; c'est alors seulement, dis-je, que nous sommes investis du pouvoir de l'établir.

M. King dit que son intention, que son désir a été d'appeler la sérieuse attention de tous les membres du Sénat sur cette question, et il espère que tous en comprennent la haute importance. On m'a blâmé d'avoir présenté cette résolution, mais je ne crois pas que ce blâme soit le moins du monde juste. Je désire que la question soit décidée une fois. Il n'existe en mon esprit aucune espèce de doute quant à la question de constitutionalité, et je me flatte de pouvoir convaincre le Sénat que la position que j'occupe est la seule bonne et la seule vraie. Si le bureau existe, nous avons évidemment le droit de l'abolir; mais s'il n'existe pas nous avons ce droit en tout temps, aujourd'hui comme plus tard.

J'aurais beaucoup à dire au sujet de l'impossibilité qu'il y aurait à mettre en pratique ce système d'améliorations intérieures; et n'y eût-il pas d'autre objection celle là est fatale. Le bureau doit être composé de quatre membres. Il pourrait arriver, et cette éventualité doit être regardée comme très probable, que le bureau fut également divisé au point de vue politique, c'est-à-dire composé de deux whigs et deux démocrates. Dans ce cas, animés de sentiments différents, avec des vues opposées, comment pourraient-ils jamais arriver à une conclusion ? Ils seraient deux contre deux et personne entre eux pour faire pencher la balance d'un côté ou de l'autre. Certes ce n'est pas là ce qui convient pour l'exécution des grands projets d'améliorations intérieures que nous espérons réaliser. Je remercie les senateurs qui se sont fait entendre d'avoir bien voulu exprimer leur opinion à ce sujet. Pour moi je n'ai pas l'ombre d'un doute que ce système puisse être mis en pratique, et que la Législature n'ait tout pouvoir en vertu de la Constitution de l'abolir entièrement.

M. Martin désire s'informer de ce que le comité à l'intention de faire.

M. Lacey fait la remarque, que si le président du comité des améliorations intérieures dit qu'il ne peut autrement arriver à son but, et si le comité ne désire pas dire ses raisons pour désirer l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics, il retirera le substitut qu'il a presenté. Tout ce que je demande, ce sont des informations, ce sont des lumières. Je ne désire pas voter sans connaître parfaitement la question.

M. King dit que le comité regarde comme impossibles la creation et l'effet de ce bureau : mais quant aux différentes raisons par lesquelles les membres ont éte guidés, il n'entreprendra pas de les dire.

M. Lacey retire alors son substitut et la prise en considération de la résolution est ajournée à lundi.

LUNDI, 28 février 1853.

M. Kittridge présente un bill ayant pour objet d'autoriser les habitants de Terrebonne à lever une taxe sur les esclaves et sur les propriétés foncières pour la construction d'un rail-road.

M. Kittridge demande une dispense des règles et que le bill soit mis à la discussion.

M. Martin est opposé à la suspension du réglement. Il est un des représentans de Terrebonne, et ses com-mettants ne lui ont donné aucune instruction à ce sujet.

Digitized by Google

M. Kittridge lit un procès-verbal des délibérations du Juri de Police de Terrebonne en faveur de la mesure qui fait l'objet du bill, et il explique la nature et les dispositions du bill.

M. Martin —Monsieur le président. Je suis opposé à une suspension des règlements dans le but de discuter le bill ; mais si ce point est décidé contre moi, j'aurai quelques observations à présenter pour expliquer ma position relativement à la mesure proposée.

La motion à l'effet de suspendre l'effet du réglement est rejetée.

M. Kenner présente un bill pour venir en aide à l'arpenteur-général. Il fait savoir que, par la loi, le traitement de l'arpenteur général est fixé à $600 par an, mais, l'année dernière, par suite d'une erreur, on a omis, dans la loi du budget général, d'autoriser le paiement de son traitement. Comme la Constitution défend qu'aucune somme d'argent ne soit tirée du trésor sans une affectation spéciale, cet officier public a toujours continué depuis à remplir les devoirs d'arpenteur-général, mais il n'a reçu que $150 pour le premier trimestre de l'année. La somme a été payée parce que l'auditeur supposait que le bill du budget général avait pourvu au paiement du salaire de l'arpenteur-général. Ce bill ne fixe pas le salaire, il met en œuvre simplement la disposition de la Constitution qui déclare qu'aucune somme d'argent ne sera payée si ce n'est en vertu d'une affectation spéciale. Le bill pourvoit au paiement de deux années de salaire, pour l'année 1852 et l'année 1853, ce qui est dû pour l'année 1853 devant être payé immédiatement.

M. Boatner pense que l'arpenteur-général n'a droit qu'à $1,050 au lieu de $1,200, qui est porté sur le bill.

M. Kenner répond que le bill porte $1,200 afin de légaliser le paiement de $150 pour le premier trimestre.

Le bill est adopté.

M. McCay demande l'appel d'un bill déjà adopté par la Chambre et dont l'objet est de rappeler la section du bill fixant le budget général, qui déclare que le surplus des fonds appartenant aux Ecoles doit être versé dans le trésor qui lui tient compte d'un intérêt de 6 pour cent par an.

M. Short a appris que sous l'empire de la section 16 de l'acte relatif aux livres des Ecoles, de grandes ventes ont eu lieu. Il désire savoir si l'Etat doit être affranchi du paiement des intérêts sur le produit de ces ventes.

M. Kenner explique que le montant actuellement au crédit de la caisse des Ecoles et provenant de la taxe annuelle et d'autres sources s'élève à $230,000. La somme accordée par la Législature à la caisse des Ecoles est $240,000. L'objet du bill est d'empêcher que les $40,000 d'excédant ne soient transférées de la caisse des Ecoles au trésor général, et d'affranchir l'Etat du paiement de l'intérêt, au moins jusqu'à ce qu'on ait pu faire une loi général à ce sujet.

M. McCay pense qu'il ne peut y avoir aucune objection raisonnable à ce bill. L'état actuel de nos finances est tel que nous devons empêcher que le trésor général n'emprunte aux fonds spéciaux. Le bill n'a pas d'autre objet. Il met un terme à ce système d'emprunt et maintient dans la caisse spéciale des écoles les fonds qui lui appartiennent en propre.

M. Short n'a pas d'objection au bill s'il ne doit pas soustraire l'Etat à l'obligation de payer les intérêts.

M. Kenner dit que cette loi ne s'occupe point des fonds provenant de la vente des terres, mais seulement de ceux qui résultent d'un excédant de taxe.

ABOLITION DU BUREAU DES TRAVAUX PUBLICS.

La résolution enjoignant au comité des améliorations intérieures de présenter un bill à l'effet d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics est appelée.

M. Martin fait la motion de déposer la résolution sur le bureau, puis la retire quelques instants après.

M. King dit qu'il est surpris de voir se manifester une tendance à trancher cette question d'une manière aussi sommaire et sans discussion, Que, dans la dernière luttte, les deux grands partis se sont emparés de la question des améliorations intérieures et l'ont placée en tête de leur programme. Des deux côtés, les candidats rivalisaient de zèle; c'était à qui se montrerait le plus fortement attaché aux améliorations intérieures de l'Etat.—Nous nous sommes réunis ici, sous les yeux du public, qui se préoccupe vivement de la manière dont nous allons traiter cette question des améliorations intérieures.—Les espérances que le peuple a eu le droit de conserver seront-elles réalisées ? c'est là un point qui dépend du sort réservé à la résolution dont il s'agit. Pour ces raisons, il espère que les sénateurs apporteront à l'examen de la question cette attention que son importance réclame.

La résolution a été combattue sur le motif que la Législature ne pouvait constitutionnellement abolir le bureau des travaux publics établi par la Constitution. Avant d'arriver à la question constitutionnelle, il examinera d'abord s'il serait à souhaiter que le bureau fût aboli. Si cette mesure n'est point à désirer, il sera inutile de discuter la question constitutionnelle. Si tout portait à désirer que le bureau fût aboli, s'il était nuisible aux intérêts du public, alors il espère que les sénateurs se rangeront de son avis, à moins que la Constitution ne contînt un ordre et qu'elle ne leur fît une obligation de voter contre la Constitution.

Il va montrer que l'on doit désirer de voir le bureau aboli

En premier lieu il croit que le bureau est un agent tout-à-fait impropre à exécuter les améliorations publiques de l'Etat.

Il consiste en quatre membres pris par voie d'élection, dans quatre districts différents de l'Etat, ayant chacun une voix. Ils peuvent être et probablement seront souvent divisés également. Il pense qu'un pareil bureau est incapable de rien faire et de rien établir. Comme corps negatif il pourrait être bon, mais il ne pourra jamais être d'aucune utilité comme corps actif.

Imaginez ce corps chargé de construire une maison. Deux sont en faveur de certains matériaux, leurs deux collègues en préfèrent d'autres. Ce partage se reproduit en faveur de deux plans différents, de deux styles d'architecture. Et pendant ce temps la besogne ne fera pas un pas. Dans un pareil état de choses les murs ne s'élèveraient jamais de terre.

On peut répondre qu'il nous est loisible de créer un sur-arbitre. Si nous le pouvions, l'objection ne pourrait plus se soutenir. Mais, malheureusement, la Constitution s'oppose à la création d'un sur-arbitre. C'est le bureau qui doit accomplir tous les devoirs qui lui sont dévolus. Prenez par exemple le pouvoir de nommer tous les officiers employés aux travaux publics, pouvoirs donnés par l'art 132, si les membres du bureau étaient également divisés au sujet d'une nomination, et qu'un sur-arbitre fût appelé à décider entre eux, la nomination serait, en réalité, le fait du sur-arbitre et non du bureau. Ce serait-là une violation palpable de la Constitution. De même pour tous les autres devoirs assignés au bureau et qui seraient accomplis par un sur-arbitre. L'existence d'un sur-arbitre est donc impossible et inconstitutionnelle.

Dans l'absence d'un sur-arbitre, le bureau devient un agent incapable d'effectuer les améliorations intérieures. Rendons la chose frappante. Nous avons le droit de supposer, que dis-je ? il est probable que, les membres devant être élus par districts, le bureau sera composé de deux whigs et de deux démocrates. Le premier acte qu'ils auraient à accomplir, serait la nomination des officiers chargés de conclure les travaux publics. Ce serait-là la pomme de discorde. Le bureau se diviserait en deux partis, dont chacun soutiendrait ses amis et ses adhérents politiques. Qui céderait, qui triompherait ? A en juger par l'acharnement des luttes de partis, c'est là une question qui n'arriverait jamais à une solution. Ainsi cette grande question des améliorations intérieures se trouverait arrêtée au premier pas.

Les mêmes difficultés se reproduiraient à chaque instant.

Mais s'ils étaient assez heureux pour échapper aux luttes politiques, ils viendraient se heurter à des rivalités sectionnelles qui seraient fatales à l'action du bureau.

Et s'ils pouvaient se soustraire à ces deux dangers, d'autres se présenteraient, ayant leur source dans les différences que mettent entre les hommes la différence de leur organisation intellectuelle, de leur éducation, de leurs préventions personnelles et de leurs préférences.

L'éducation peut porter un homme à préférer tel système ou telle chose ; elle portera un autre à combattre ce système ou cette chose.

Les préventions, les préférences particulières peuvent engager à faire passer une levée autour de l'habitation de tel individu ou de la faire passer à travers les terres de tel autre de la façon la plus vexatoire.

Digitized by Google

Mais supposez que le bureau s'élève au-dessus de toutes les causes d'erreur et de discussion, M. King soutient que ce bureau sera encore inutile.

Les devoirs assignés aux commissaires par la Constitution, le sont à tous collectivement et non pas à chacun d'eux individuellement.

Ce ne sont pas les hommes, c'est le bureau qui agit. Comment donc agira-t-il ? La Constitution exige qu'ils exercent un contrôle actif sur les travaux publics. Peut-on croire que le bureau va voyager et surveiller les travaux publics ? Pour sa part, il pense qu'il ne se hasarde pas beaucoup en disant que, d'abord, ce serait impossible ; ensuite qu'en supposant même que ce fût possible, le bureau ne remplirait jamais cette partie des devoirs qui lui sont tracés. Le bureau se réunirait probablement de loin en loin, à Bâton-Rouge, autour d'une table ; avec de bons cigarres et une bouteille de vin ; ils arriveraient à la sage conclusion que ce que la Législature a ordonné doit être exécuté et tous adresseraient des ordres nécessaires aux officiers inférieurs. Les relevés nécessaires les constructions, le contrôle effectif des travaux publics, tout cela serait accompli par les ingénieurs et les autres officiers nommés par les commissaires Mieux vaut pour l'Etat employer directement les ingénieurs et se dispenser du bureau.

Une autre objection à ce bureau, c'est qu'il exercerait un pouvoir qui empiéterait sur la puissance souveraine et législative du gouvernement.

Quelque mauvaises que seraient les nominations faites par eux, il n'y aurait aucun moyen pour l'Etat de s'en débarrasser, à moins d'abolir le bureau lui-même par un vote des trois cinquièmes des deux chambres. Il serait affligé de voir la Législature privée d'une partie si importante de ses pouvoirs.

Il considère que le bureau est non seulement impossible et inutile, mais qu'il serait fort coûteux. Il occasionnerait des dépenses qui ne s'élèveraient pas à moins de douze ou quinze mille piastres par an, sans profit correspondant En face de ces objections, il pense, qu'à moins que la constitution ne fasse un devoir impérieux de conserver le bureau, les Sénateurs doivent s'unir à lui pour tâcher de l'abolir.

Mais quelques Sénateurs ont prétendu que bien que ce bureau ne pût fonctionner, nous ne pourrions l'abolir par un vote des trois-cinquièmes, en vertu de l'article 134 de la Constitution.

L'article est ainsi conçu :

" ART. 134 L'assemblée générale aura le pouvoir, moyennant le concours des trois cinquièmes des membres élus à chaque chambre, d'abolir le bureau des Travaux Publics, quand elle jugera que ce bureau n'est plus nécessaire. "

Ce langage lui paraît clair, sans équivoque et suffisamment intelligible pour en autoriser l'abolition immédiate par le vote exigé.

On soutient que bien que les trois-cinquièmes de la Législature aient le droit d'abolir le bureau, ils ne peuvent le faire, avant qu'un acte ait été passé pour le mettre en opération ; que nous devons d'abord faire l'épreuve du système avant de pouvoir l'abolir. Ce langage ne s'appuie pas sur l'article 134 de la constitution. Si les membres de la Convention qui adoptèrent cet article l'avaient ainsi entendu, il eût été aussi facile pour eux d'exprimer cette idée que d'employer le langage dont il se sont servis.—Le fait que ce langage n'a pas été employé par eux est suffisant pour prouver que telle n'était pas leur intention.

Mais on avance que nous ne pouvons abolir ce qui est encore à créer, que le bureau n'étant pas en opération ne peut être aboli. M. King répond à ces arguments qu'il est clair d'après l'article 134 que, si le bureau a été établi par la constitution, la Législature peut l'abolir par un vote des trois-cinquièmes. Il pense qu'il est également certain que si le bureau doit être établi par la Législature, il est au pouvoir de la Législature de l'abolir. Que le pouvoir de créer renferme le pouvoir d'abolir, de telle sorte que ces messieurs peuvent prendre l'un ou l'autre côté du dilemme. Que l'on envisage la question sous l'une ou l'autre face —le droit de la Législature d'abolir le bureau est hors de question.

Mais il soutient que le bureau est clairement établi par la constitution. Le langage de l'article 160 de la constitution s'exprime ainsi : "Il y aura un bureau des travaux publics. Ce langage est aussi significatif que celui qui est employé pour établir l'existence des différentes branches du gouvernement, le département législatif, l'exécutif et le judiciaire. Par ce qu'il est du devoir de la Législature de pourvoir à l'élection et à l'entrée en place des personnes qui doivent composer ces différents départements, il serait aussi juste de soutenir que ces départements n'existent pas tant que la Législature ne les a pas établis, ou en d'autres termes, ne les a pas créés.

Il considère que le bureau est créé par la Constitution. Les devoirs que la Législature a plus tard à accomplir, c'est-à-dire de pourvoir à l'élection des personnes qui doivent composer le bureau, sont d'une nature administrative. La législature, en accomplissant ces devoirs en vertu de la Constitution, ne ferait que mettre en mouvement une machine déja construite. En envisageant ainsi la question, on ne peut contester à la Législature le droit d'abolir le bureau.

C'eût été une idée fort extraordinaire de la part des auteurs de la Constitution, s'ils avaient declaré à la Législature, qu'avant d'abolir le bureau, elle devait d'abord faire la vaine cérémonie de....

Ici M. Martin interrompt l'orateur et fait la remarque que le bureau ne peut pas être aboli avant qu'il ne soit en opération, excepte par un amendement a la Constitution, adopte de la manière prescrite par la Constitution pour les amendements.

M. King répond que, quoique les articles de la Constitution qui créent ce bureau puissent être amendés suivant le mode habituel, cependant l'article 134 a été adopté expressément en vue de ce bureau et pourvoit à un autre mode plus simple par lequel ce bureau peut être aboli, à savoir : par un vote des trois cinquièmes des membres de l'assemblée générale.

Evidemment, les auteurs de la Constitution n'avaient pas très grande confiance en leur œuvre, et comme effrayés par le monstre qu'ils avaient mis au jour, ils ont présenté ce moyen si simple de s'en débarrasser.

L'histoire de ce bureau était bien devinée. La proposition de le créer avait été faite à la Législature qui a precédé la Convention, et avait éprouvé une défaite complète.

M. Martin dit qu'il a été membre de la Législature à laquelle l'orateur fait allusion, et que M. King se trompe lorsqu'il assure que la proposition fut repoussée à une presque unanimité de votes Elle n'a été rejetée qu'a une très faible majorité.

M. King répond que dans le journal de cette session on trouvera la vraie histoire du sort éprouvé par cette résolution, si toutefois il est personne qui veuille se donner la peine de l'examiner ; et qu'on y trouvera aussi un rapport très habilement rédigé par le comité des améliorations intérieures contre l'établissement de ce bureau,

M. King dit ensuite qu'il est évidemment au pouvoir de la Législature d'abolir ce bureau par un vote des trois cinquièmes, et il ajoute que son expérience et ses études professionnelles le confirment encore plus dans cette opinion.

Il dit qu'on lui a souvent demandé quel système il proposerait de substituer. Il éprouve quelque difficulté à répondre à cette question, parce qu'il ignore jusqu'à quel point l'Etat a l'intention d'aider à ces améliorations intérieures. Pour mieux faire comprendre l'embarras où il se trouve, il va présenter la supposition suivante : Si un individu se rendait à Cincinnati ou à Pittsburg auprès d'un manufacturier de machines à vapeur, et qu'il y fit la commande d'un bateau à vapeur, sans spécifier la force qu'il doit avoir, les dimensions qui doivent lui être données; supposer que le manufacturier construisît une machine assez grande pour l'Eclipse, par exemple, et que le bateau pour lequel elle aurait été commandée se trouvât n'être pas plus grand qu'un de ces bateaux sur lesquels on traverse le fleuve; ou que même il fut si petit, que le poids seul de la machine dût le faire couler, tout le monde ne se récrierait-il pas contre semblable manière de faire les choses?

A moins que je ne sache, dit-il, quel système d'améliorations intérieures l'Etat a l'intention de mettre en opération, je ne puis me charger de construire à coup sûr une machine dans l'appréhension où je serais qu'elle ne fût trop forte ou trop lourde et ne pût pas être portée. Tel serait inévitablement le cas si j.

Digitized by Google

construisais une machine dans la prévision que nos améliorations intérieures seront activement, vigoureusement soutenues, et qu'au lieu de cela l'Etat ne me donnât pour recevoir ma machine qu'un bateau de pêcheurs ou une pirogue.

En pareille circonstance je suis donc en faveur d'une organisation telle de notre machine, qu'elle pût être ou agrandie ou diminuée suivant que l'exigera l'intérêt public. Je voudrais que, comme aux trains de chemins de fer, on pût ou ajouter ou retrancher des chars suivant le plus ou moins d'importance et d'activité des affaires.

Si le Sénat veut me prêter quelques minutes de plus d'attention, je dirai quelques mots des trois systèmes qui sont proposés pour nos améliorations intérieures à l'avenir.

L'un a été désigné ainsi: «Système des Arkansas» C'est celui qui, jusqu'à présent, semble réunir le plus de suffrages. Il propose :

De construire des levées au moyen des terres publiques ; en d'autres mots, de payer les frais de ces levées en scrips de terres. A première vue tout le monde fut frappé de ce plan qui semblait si bien conçu ; mais en l'examinant de plus près, je ne doute pas qu'on y trouve cet inconvénient : c'est qu'il faudra à toute force vendre ces terres à quelque prix que ce soit.

C'est une loi du commerce que lorsque le marché excède la demande, le prix doit baisser. Cela est vrai aussi pour la vente de terres et à plus forte raison pour la vente de terres qui ne donnent aucun profit. Cette même proposition est souvent formulée en des termes différents, à savoir: «forcer la demande, c'est baisser le prix.»

La demande des terres publiques appartenant à l'Etat est, si nous prenons pour base le passé, d'environ cent mille piastres par an qui, dépensées sur une ligne de quinze cents milles de levées, seraient une vraie bagatelle, une goutte d'eau dans la mer. Quiconque serait chargé de ces travaux devrait s'attendre à dépenser au moins cinq cent mille piastres par an, autrement ceux qu'il ferait construire ne produiraient aucun avantage visible.

Eh bien, monsieur, supposons que des commissaires nommés par l'Etat offrent des contrats pour l'érection de levées, évaluées au comptant, cinq cent mille piastres. Ils demanderaient qu'il leur fut soumis des propositions au plus bas prix par yarde cubique pour les terrassements, payables en scrips de terres évalués à une piastre et vingt-cinq sous l'acre. Comme il y aura probablement des demandes pour environ cent mille piastres de terres, il est possible que les contrats soient faits pour environ ce montant, c'est-à-dire au comptant à vingt sous par yarde cubique. Cela épuiserait le produit de toutes les terres à une piastre et quart par acre, et l'on ne trouverait plus personne qui voulut construire les levées au comptant et voulut accepter en paiement des terres à une piastre et quart par acre. Pour les prochaines levées évaluées encore à cent mille piastres, les contrats seront probablement de quarante sous par yarde cubique, payables en scrips de terres. Les suivantes seraient à soixante sous par yarde cubique, puis à quatre-vingts ou cent sous par yarde, le prix des levées augmentant toujours jusqu'à ce que toutes les terres publiques aussent été écoulées pour les frais des premières années, et sans qu'aucun travail bien important ait été accompli. De cette manière notre magnifique domaine serait vite épuisé, et les avantages qui nous reviendraient de notre sacrifice ne seraient ni satisfaisants ni permanents.

Je voudrais être certain que ce système pût réussir, mais ma raison me force à le condamner.

Une autre proposition est celle-ci: de continuer le système qui est maintenant en vigueur et qui consiste à vendre les terres à une piastre et quart par acre, et à appliquer le produit de cette vente, à mesure qu'elle se fait, à la construction des levées. Ce système nous donnerait probablement, pendant cinq ou six ans, un revenu annuel de soixante-quinze ou cent mille piastres. Après ce temps, les meilleures terres ayant été peu à peu vendues tous les ans, il ne resterait probablement plus de terres qui fussent de quelque valeur, et le revenu que nous puisons à cette source serait épuisé. Les terres qui resteraient à l'Etat n'auraient de valeur pour personne, si ce n'est pour ceux qui, par des entrées précédentes sur les livres, se sont assuré la clef des établissements et des plantations qui pourraient y être établis.

Le faible revenu sur lequel on pourrait compter par cette source, ne serait pas suffisant pour effectuer la moindre amélioration dans la condition des levées.

Ce système présente encore un désagrement qui est celui-ci: là où les terres ont été améliorées et leur valeur augmentée par conséquent de beaucoup, le bénéfice en reviendrait aux spéculateurs au lieu d'enrichir l'Etat. Je ne vois rien dans ce système qui puisse faire espérer la réalisation de tout ce que le peuple a le droit d'attendre de nos améliorations intérieures.

S'il m'était permis, je suggérerais un système qui a toute mon approbation et que je crois de nature à répondre à toutes les exigences présentes. C'est d'emprunter, en donnant garantie sur les terres publiques, une somme suffisante une fois pour construire les levées nécessaires à notre protection, et de payer cet emprunt par le produit de la vente des terres après que les Levées auront été achevées. Pour mettre à exécution ce système, il serait nécessaire de suspendre la vente des terres jusqu'après le temps où les levées seraient construites, et jusqu'à ce que la confiance publique eût sanctionné les mesures prises pour sa protection. Si ce plan est adopté, l'Etat bénéficiera lui-même de l'augmentation de valeur des terres; et des terres qui aujourd'hui n'ont aucune valeur, pourraient d'ici là valoir cinq ou dix piastres par acre.

Je crains par tout ce que j'ai vu et entendu autour de moi que ce plan ne soit pas reçu avec la faveur qu'il mérite. Je sais la répugnance qu'ont beaucoup de personnes à voir l'Etat s'engager dans une dette quelle qu'elle soit. J'ai toujours eu moi-même et j'ai souvent exprimé la même répugnance à voir l'Etat contracter de grandes obligations. Mais je considère que si jamais circonstances ont exigé qu'un Etat contractât une dette, ce sont certes celles où se trouve aujourd'hui la Louisiane

Le Delta du Nil n'est pas aussi étendu que le Delta du Mississipi, et cependant il est des époques mentionnées dans l'histoire, où ce Delta contenait une population de 15millions d'âmes. Il n'y a pas une seule époque rapportée dans l'histoire, à laquelle la population de ce Delta n'ait pas été de plus de deux millions. Ici, la vallée du Mississipi, à l'exclusion de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, ne contient pas une population de plus de 200 mille âmes. Rendre fertiles les terres de ce Delta, transformer les marais en champ fertiles où habitera une population active et industrieuse est un des projets les plus beaux, les plus grands qui aient jamais été conçus; et, réaliser ce but, c'est réaliser l'entreprise la plus importante à laquelle se soient jamais appliqués l'intelligence et l'industrie humaines. Un ingénieur de talent qui a examiné toute la ligne de nos levées a fait un rapport, dans lequel il déclare que des levées, assurant une complète sécurité, peuvent être construites de la ligne des Arkansas au Golfe du Mexique pour une somme de moins de quinze cent mille piastres. C'est là vraiment une somme insignifiante comparée à l'importance et à la grandeur de l'entreprise. Personne ici doute-t-il que le fonds de la vente des terres ne soit suffisant pour couvrir l'emprunt que je propose? Je n'ai entendu aucun Sénateur exprimer une opinion qui fut contraire à celle-ci, à savoir: que les terres publiques de l'état, une fois affranchies des dangers de l'inondation, ne vaillent beaucoup plus que la somme nécessaire pour en assurer l'entière protection. Je crois que par leurs ventes on peut compter en toute surcté sur huit ou même dix millions, somme suffisante non seulement pour payer l'emprunt proposé, mais même pour conserver à tout jamais les Levées en un parfait état. Il n'y a pas de terres au monde supérieures à nos terres en marais; nulles qui soient plus propres à nourrir et à entretenir une population nombreuse; nulles qui comme les nôtres, présentent un conduit naturel, un magnifique canal à chaque porte pour ainsi dire.

Mettons nous donc à l'œuvre! construisons des Levées larges et hautes, hautes comme des montagnes s'il est nécessaire! posons d'insurmontables barrières au courroux des flots, afin que chaque citoyen, chaque planteur puisse dormir tranquille et que ses songes ne soient pas troublés par de sombres images de désolation et de ravages! Nous ferons de la Louisiane alors l'état le plus riche, le plus grand, le plus populeux de toute l'Union!

Je voudrais pouvoir mieux faire comprendre aux

Digitized by Google

membres du Sénat qui m'écoutent, l'immense importance de cette question; je voudrais que tous réunis cherchassent un plan qui assurât à tout jamais la gloire et la prospérité de notre Etat !

Quant à la résolution d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics, je crois qu'elle est necessaire pour écarter de notrechemin un obstacle qui se dresseraitdevant nous dans tout système d'améliorations intérieures que nous pourrions adopter. J'espère donc, que les Sénateurs se joindront à moi dans les efforts que je fais pour débarasser l'Etat de ce fardeau, qui peut devenir si nuisible à ses plus chers intérêts !

M. Martin dit avoir quelques remarques à faire à ce sujet. Il n'a ni l'éloquence ni les talents de l'orateur qui dans son discours multiple, semble avoir abordé tous les sujets de législation. M. King, a fait porter ses remarques sur tout, excepté sur le point constitutionnel, seul en discussion devant le Sénat Il désire autant que le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, voir des fosses creusées et des levées construites, mais il a juré d'accomplir une chose déterminée, d'organiser le bureau des travaux publics; et si sa voix est écoutée ce sera fait. Il insiste sur la motion de référer la question au comité judiciaire avec instruction de présenter son rapport.

L'art. 130 de la Constitution s'exprime ainsi : « Il y aura un bureau des travaux publics, lequel se composera de quatre commissaires. » et l'art. 131 : « L'Assemblée Générale, à sa première session, après l'adoption de cette Constitution, devra pourvoir à l'élection des commissaires ainsi qu'à l'organisation du bureau. »

C'est cette disposition constitutionnelle que le sénateur d'Orléans propose de mettre à néant par un acte législatif. Quant à lui (M. Martin) il soutient que c'est un droit que n'a pas le Sénat, et, qu'à cet égard l'art. 141 le soutient dans cette position. Si le sénateur désire voir la Constitution amendée, qu'il le fasse en suivant les règles qu'à cet effet elle prescrit.

L'art. 130 dit « Il y aura un bureau des travaux publics » Tout dans cette discussion se résume donc à dire « ce bureau doit exister de par la Constitution. » Mais l'article suivant s'occupe de l'organisation de ce bureau, qui évidemment ne peut exister sans être organisé, et cependant le sénateur veut detruire ce qui n'existe pas encore, et propose en outre pour amender la Constitution une voie plus courte que celle qu'elle a tracée : A savoir par simple action législative.

M. Mc Cay.—Il n'y a là autre chose qu'une question d'interprétation de la Constitution, et nous devons pour interpréter nos devoirs, consulter les simples règles d'interprétations.

Une des plus simples et des plus ordinaires commande d'embrasser dans une seule interprétation les articles et les lois différents qui règlent un sujet. On doit s'efforcer de leur donner à tous le même sens et éviter autant que possible tout conflit et toute divergence. Qu'il me lise ces articles et essaye de déduire de là l'esprit de la Constitution. Le premier dit qu'il y aura un bureau des travaux publics, ce bureau existe-t-il ? Et pourrait-il exister, si la Législature s'ajournait sans régler le mode d'élection des commissaires, sans organiser le bureau ? Le préopinant dirait-il que oui ? Qu'il dise aussi alors où ce bureau siège, quels sont ses membres ? Le deuxième article est plus impératif encore. Il dit que l'Assemblée Générale à sa première session prendra des mesures pour l'organisation du bureau, et pour la nomination et la rétribution des quatre commissaires. Ce mandat a-t-il été rempli ? S'est on occupé de l'élection et de la rétribution des commissaires ? Et quand bien même elle serait vraie la proposition du sénateur :— « que la Législature peut à sa première session abolir le bureau des travaux publics par un vote des 3/5 ; » toujours est-il que la Législature manque à son devoir tel qu'il est tracé par la Constitution.

Quant à moi, le pouvoir que définit l'article 134 signifie qu'à tout événement il faut faire essai de ce bureau. Les dissertations du sénateur sur l'effet de ce système ne sont pas à leur place. Ce n'est pas là la question qui doit nous occuper. Ce n'est pas à nous de juger si la convention a eu tort ou raison en ordonnant la création de ce bureau; nous sommes ici uniquement pour exécuter sans détours le mandat qui nous est donné par la constitution. Les exemples que le sénateur a tiré de l'Eclipse et du ferry-boat sont bien choisis, mais je me borne à lui demander s'il est d'avis que nous pouvons renoncer à ce que demande la constitution et si nous devons abandonner le chemin qui nous est tracé dans l'espoir d'en découvrir un autre qui nous est inconnu.

De par la constitution, le devoir de cette Législature est d'organiser le bureau des travaux publics, d'essayer son utilité. L'interprétation que le sénateur donne à l'article 132 est fausse. Je n'y vois rien qui s'oppose à la nomination d'un tiers opinant, c'est-à-dire un officier qui décide les questions sur lesquelles bureau peut être également partagé. La grande difficulté repose, d'après ce sénateur, dans ce fait, que le bureau doit être composé de quatre membres, c'est-à-dire d'un nombre pair. Il pense aussi que l'opposition des intérêts et de l'esprit politique et sectionnel détrairn l'harmonie et enfantern, je suppose cela, des désordres permanents. Encore n'y a-t-il rien qui s'oppose à désigner une personne qui décide dans des cas spéciaux. Le bureau n'a pas le contrôle exclusif des améliorations intérieures. En le créant la Législature ne s'y soumet pas et ne perd aucun des droits et des pouvoirs qui lui sont propres. Elle peut légalement exercer son influence et son contrôle ou nommer quelqu'un pour le faire.

L'article de la constitution qui traite de l'établissement de ce bureau est pour moi de la même nature que celui de l'article 11 qui ordonne l'adoption d'une loi d'enrégistrement. Il est enjoint à la législature de le faire, mais elle n'a pas encore agi. Il n'y a entre les deux que cette différence ; la même majorité qui adopte la loi d'enrégistrement est suffisante pour la rappeler, mais quant au bureau des travaux publics la convention a voulu le protéger contre les fluctuation de l'opinion publique et a ordonné qu'une majorité des trois-cinquièmes de la législatue sera nécessaire pour l'abolir.

Pour ces motifs mon devoir m'ordonne d'être contraire à la résolution présentée.

M. Lacey dit que la résolution comprend deux questions : D'abord, la Législature a-t-elle le droit constitutionnel d'abolir à cette session le bureau des travaux publics ? puis, cette mesure est-elle bonne en elle-même ? Avant d'arriver à cette seconde question, il faut nécessairement résoudre la première ; avant de voir si la mesure est utile, il est indispensable que les Sénateurs s'assurent que la Constitution leur permet de prononcer à cette session l'abolition du bureau.

Relativement à la question constitutionnelle, je dois dire que je ne puis être de l'avis du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans qui a parlé le dernier. Il me paraît evident que le Bureau des travaux Publics a été créé et établi par la Constitution. L'art. 130 dit : Il y aura un Bureau des Travaux Publics, composé de cinq commissaires. Il me paraît clair et il doit paraître clair à tous les yeux, selon moi, que si les auteurs de la Constitution avaient voulu laisser à la Législature le soin de donner la vie au Bureau, ils eussent employé le mot créer au lieu de l'expression contenue dans l'art 130, expression semblable à celle qui est employée à propos de la branche exécutive de la Législature et du pouvoir judiciaire. Concluons donc que la Convention n'a point voulu donner à la Législature le pouvoir de créer le Bureau ; mais qu'elle le crée elle-même, qu'elle l'a mis au jour de son propre fait. Elle n'a fait que conférer à la Législature le droit de pourvoir à la composition du Bureau ; ce n'est là qu'une fonction administrative qu'elle lui a assignée. La Constitution, émane, on l'admettra, d'un pouvoir supérieur à la Législature. L'existence du Bureau est l'œuvre de la Constitution et ne dépend en aucune façon de l'action éventuelle de la Législature. J'admets que les termes de la Constitution eussent pu être plus explicites; mais je trouve que le sens en est suffisamment clair, et que nous en pouvons tirer avec certitude la conclusion que le Bureau des Travaux Publics a pris naissance du moment où le peuple a adopté l'art. 130 de la Constitution. Mais on insiste et l'on dit qu'avant qu'une chose soit abolie, il faut qu'elle soit créée. Mais nous pouvons nous refuser à créer ; nous en avons certainement le droit. Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. McCay) pense que nous sommes tenus d'établir ce Bureau Mais quand trois cinquièmes de la Législature sont opposés à ce Bureau, tel qu'il est indiqué par la Constitution, quand trois cinquièmes pensent qu'il ne pourra fonctionner, qu'il n'en peut résulter que du mal, peut-on supposer que nous sommes obligés de l'établir dans le seul but de le renverser ; que nous devons lui donner la vie seulement pour le détruire?

Digitized by Google

M. Martin dit qu'il ne sache pas que les trois cinquièmes de la Législature soient opposés à ce Bureau. Le sénateur prend pour concédés des faits qui sont loin d'être positifs.

M. Lacey.—Est-ce la première fois que le sénateur entend avancer ce fait?

M. Martin.—Le sénateur est le premier que j'aie entendu alléguer le fait. Il ne peut baser son raisonnement sur un état de choses qui n'existe pas.

M. Lacey.—Je ne demande pas mieux que de démontrer au sénateur qu'en supposant que les trois cinquièmes de la Législature ne soient pas opposés à ce Bureau, j'ai le droit d'admettre que tel est le fait, et de prendre cette supposition comme base d'un raisonnement. Rien de plus commun que ce mode d'argumentation. Est-ce là une chose que le sénateur ignorait

Je le répète donc, M. le président, je suppose que trois cinquièmes de la Législature soient hostiles à ce Bureau. Eh bien, je dis que la Constitution ne peut rendre obligatoire une vaine cérémonie; ne peut nous astreindre à passer des lois pour organiser ce bureau, quand notre intention bien arrêtée est de détruire, immédiatement après, notre propre ouvrage, à l'aide de cette disposition de la Constitution qui nous en donne le droit. Si le Bureau est un agent si impropre à l'exécution des grands travaux que le peuple appelle de ses vœux, s'il est si impopulaire qu'une grande majorité de la Législature lui soit hostile, si, par son organisation, il ne doit que ralentir la marche des améliorations intérieures, est-il raisonnable de supposer que nous sommes tenus de fonder un pareil Bureau et de le maintenir, pendant une année; (car je présume que nous ne pourrions défaire, à cette session, l'ouvrage de nos propres mains,) de le maintenir, dis-je, pendant un an, simplement pour l'abolir lorsque nous nous réunirons de nouveau. Une pareille idée est absurde. Tel peut être la lettre de la loi, mais tel, à coup sûr, n'en est pas l'esprit; telle n'en est pas l'intention. Le sens de la Constitution est évidemment que, si les trois-cinquièmes de la Législature sont d'avis que le Bureau ne peut fonctionner, que son existence ne peut être utile, qu'elle doit être nuisible au contraire, ils peuvent se refuser à l'organiser. Telle est la manière dont j'envisage la question. Je suis forcé d'avouer à la conclusion que nous avons le pouvoir d'abolir le Bureau, parce que ce Bureau a été créé du fait même de la Constitution. Cependant je ne suis pas encore disposé à voter pour qu'il soit aboli. Il faut auparavant que je sois plus éclairé sur la question ou que le comité des améliorations présente un rapport plus circonstancié.

M. Martin—Je ne puis me ranger de l'avis de ces messieurs. Il faut, je le répète, donner la vie à ce Bureau avant de songer à l'abolir. Malgré la haute opinion que j'ai de la capacité des membres qui composent le comité des améliorations intérieures, ma confiance en leurs lumières ne va pas jusqu'à me faire sacrifier mes convictions à leurs opinions.

M. King, dit que comme la question constitutionnelle semble être la pierre d'achoppement pour quelques sénateurs, il désire voir la résolution renvoyée de nouveau au comité des améliorations intérieures,

M. Kenner—Je n'ai pas l'intention de faire un examen approfondi de la question ou de faire une réplique dans les formes, aux observations qui ont été présentées. Je serai aussi bref que possible. La Législature, à mon avis, a le droit de rappeler, par un vote des trois cinquièmes, la clause de la Constitution qui établit le Bureau des Travaux Publics. Voici le langage de la Constitution: «Il y aura un Bureau des Travaux Publics.» Entre ces termes et ceux qui établissent la place de gouverneur ou créent toute autre fonction, il n'y a aucune différence dans la Constitution. Mais lorsque je viens à me demander s'il est bon d'abolir le Bureau des Travaux Publics, alors se s'offre une question sur laquelle des doutes se présentent à mon esprit. Qu'allons-nous faire? Dans quel but nous sommes-nous réunis ici? Nous avons une grande mission à accomplir. Quelle est-elle? Nous avons à organiser un Bureau d'améliorations intérieures.

Jusqu'ici nous n'avons qu'un ingénieur civil nommé par le Gouverneur avec le consentement du Sénat. On lui a livré la surintendance de nos améliorations intérieures. Par conséquent, c'est la Législature qui, en fait, élit le bureau des travaux publics.—Et à quoi revient ce système.—Les membres émanent de sources différentes; ils représentent par conséquent des idées, des intérêts différents, selon la différence des localités; l'un veut faire fouiller tel bayou, l'autre réparer telle levée, un autre demande qu'on lui bâtisse un pont. Qu'arrive-t-il? La Législature s'assemble; un membre se lève et demande qu'il soit enjoint à l'ingénieur civil de se rendre à tel ou tel bayou et de le fouiller. Je donne mon vote à sa proposition à la condition qu'il vote en faveur d'une proposition de la même nature que j'ai à présenter.—Bien entendu que je suis convaincu d'avance que la mesure ne serait pas proposée si elle n'était pas nécessaire; c'est pourquoi je l'appuie Qu'en résulte-t-il? Que l'on consulte l'ingénieur civil et l'on verra qu'on lui a donné de la besogne pour 15 ans. Mais sous l'empire de ce système, qui se trouve être bureau des travaux publics? Tout simplement les deux chambres de la Législature. A coup sûr dans ces deux assemblées il peut se trouver des hommes de talents des hommes éclairés; mais ces hommes n'ont pas été élus pour leurs connaissances en fait d'améliorations intérieures, ils l'ont été parce qu'ils étaient whigs ou démocrates.

Mais, monsieur le président, on jette les hauts cris et l'on dit: «Vous arrêtez le char des améliorations intérieures.» Où se trouve-t-il, ce char? Qui l'a vu? Prenez le rapport de l'ingénieur; examinez-le, et puis dites où est ce char que vous nous accusez de vouloir arrêter. Ce soir, ce n'est rien de plus, rien de moins que 106 nègres et trois vieux bateaux à vapeur. Veuillez écouter un peu ce que dit le rapport de l'ingénieur de l'Etat.

Le rapport de mon prédécesseur que je vous transmets fournira un état complet des opérations de cette branche du service publié jusqu'au 1er décembre, époque à laquelle j'entrai en fonctions, et trouvai que les forces dont l'Etat pouvait disposer consistaient en 96 nègres réunis sur le seul pont de Lockfort et activement employés aux écluses des canaux de Barataria et de Lafourche. Il avait été nécessaire de les appeler tous sur ce point par suite de la difficulté de s'y procurer des travailleurs blanc et de la nécessité absolue de terminer avant le montage des eaux, les premiers murs et les portes les plus rapprochées du Bayou Lafourche.

» J'ai trouvé les bateaux dans la condition suivante: l'Agnes No 2 était à l'ancre près de l'embouchure du Bayou Lafourche ayant à bord le capitaine M. Mc Halton, laissé là, pour le surveiller, et quatre travailleurs appartenant à l'Etat. Ce bateau est très vieux, c'est certainement le plus ancien de tous ceux qui sont employés. Une partie de sa coque date de onze ans. Ce bateau est maintenant pourri en plusieurs endroits et demande une active surveillance pour être maintenu à flot. Il est pour ainsi dire hors de service. »

Le général Walker est au même endroit, à la charge du capitaine Blakstone, avec trois des travailleurs appartenant à l'Etat. Ce bateau ne présente aucune condition de sureté ; ses bordages de fond sont en très mauvais état de l'avant à l'arrière.

«Le Florida, mouillé à Tigerville, dans le Bayou Black avec trois travailleurs de l'Etat à bord a une excellente coque ; mais par suite de l'inefficacité de certaines pièces de sa machine, il ne peut rendre que peu de service. On pourrait en faire un bateau de bon usage en faisant une forte dépense.»

«Les forces totales de l'Etat consistent donc en 106 nègres, et, sur ce nombre, il y en a au moins deux trop vieux ou trop maladifs, pour être d'une grande utilité. Il y en a aussi une quinzaine qui travaillent depuis plusieurs années, sont assez vieux, mais peuvent encore rendre quelque service.»

Vous avez là le système aujourd'hui en vigueur.

M. Lacey—Tel n'est pas mon système.

M. Kenner—Je pense à ce que le sénateur (M. King) propose. Certes, ce sénateur est un avocat distingué, mais je vais lui prouver qu'en fait de levées, son savoir est à peu près équivalant à celui que je possède en fait de jurisprudence. Il a parlé de la popularité du système de l'Arkansas, en admettant en même temps l'inefficacité de ce système. Eh bien! M. l'orateur, il n'y a pour ainsi dire, pas un seul planteur intelligent dans l'Etat qui ne sache que le système de l'Arkansas s'il était appliqué ici, ne pourrait fonctionner avec avantage. Mais ceci soit dit entre parenthèses. Je ne m'adresse pas à ces messieurs de la ville ou aux avocats qui certainement ont de profondes connaissances sur d'autres matières,, mais qui ne possèdent probablement de notions sur les améliorations intérieures que celles qui sont relatives au pesage des tuyaux à gaz et des curb-stones et au recurage de sales ruisseaux. J'en appelle aux membres de la campagne et je leur demande s'ils ont jamais su que rien d'important ait été exécuté par les 106 nègres et les trois vieux bateaux qui composent aujourd'hui les forces de l'Etat. Je ne prétends pas dire que l'ingénieur n'a pas rempli ses devoirs, mais le système actuel a produit si peu de bien, et en promet si peu pour l'avenir, que rien ne peut justifier la persistance que l'on met à le soutenir. C'est là un fait constaté depuis plusieurs années. A la dernière législature on a tenté d'abolir le système actuel et d'établir un bureau des travaux publics. Cette tentative pour quelques raisons qu'il est inutile de mentionner, a avorté. La convention s'est alors réunie. Qu'avait-elle à faire ? On proclamait unanimement que le système actuel était défectueux. Quinze ou vingt ans d'expérience en avait démontré l'inefficacité ; il était évident qu'il fallait substituer quelque chose de nouveau.

Digitized by Google

La Législature avait sur les améliorations intérieures un pouvoir qu'il fallait lui enlever, attendu qu'aucun de ses membres n'était élu en vue de cet objet. C'est là le motif qui a fait établir le bureau des travaux publics. On dit que des préventions locales, que l'esprit de sectionnalité exercera une influence sur ce bureau et empêchera l'harmonie de ses délibérations. Se méfierait-on du peuple ? Le croit-on incompétent pour élire des hommes appelés à remplir des fonctions spéciales ? N'exerce-t-il pas son choix pour les autres branches du gouvernement ? Eh quoi, monsieur le président, nous sommes sur le point d'élire nos juges (les fonctions judiciaires exigent plus que toutes les autres de l'indépendance), et nous ne pourrions pas nous fier au peuple lorsqu'il s'agit de nommer les membres du bureau des travaux publics ? Tout ce que nous demandons, c'est l'abandon du système actuel où l'on voit chacun se précipiter dans la mêlée et tirer à soi autant qu'il peut ; nous demandons que ces intérêts soient remis entre les mains de quatre hommes dont l'unique devoir sera de s'occuper des améliorations intérieures.

Il n'est point de question qui intéresse le peuple de la Basse Louisiane plus que celle de l'emploi des fonds spéciaux des levées. Si nous adoptons le système de l'Arkansas dont a parlé le sénateur, la Basse Louisiane deviendra un marais inhabitable, tandis que la Haute Louisiane sera cultivée et fleurie comme un jardin. Tel sera le résultat où nous aura conduits l'adoption d'un système erroné.

Passons au système proposé par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King). Je dois dire que j'ignore en quoi il consiste. Le sait-il lui-même ? Le connaissez-vous, M. le président ? Où est son bill ? Je ne voterai certainement pas l'abolition d'un système établi par la Constitution, sur un simple ipse dixit d'aucun des membres du Sénat, sur le discours d'un homme surtout, quand, sur cette question, cet homme est un avocat. Eh quoi, monsieur l'orateur, un membre nous a dit qu'avec ce système chaque homme aurait un canal à sa porte.

M. King—Je n'a pas dit cela, j'ai dit que maintenant nos bayous et nos rivières forment comme un canal qui coule devant chaque porte.

M. Kenner—Alors, monsieur, il propose et soutient un système immense de Levées Peut être, je ne pourrai répéter les éloquentes paroles du sénateur; du moins je puis rappeler en substance les remarques qu'il a faites. Il est en faveur d'un immense système de Levées, fussent-elles hautes comme des montagnes, par lequel les eaux du Mississippi seraient contenues dans son lit, et ne porteraient plus à l'avenir le ravage et la désolation sur les terres si fertiles qui s'étendent le long de son cours. Mais où devons nous prendre l'argent nécessaire pour construire ces Levées ? Un Sénateur, à ma gauche, dit: (« il faut l'emprunter !») Emprunter, monsieur, est un mot que je déteste. Si vous comptez bâtir vos Levées, en empruntant de l'argent que ne nous envoyez vous une fois aux capitalistes de l'Europe, comme bûcherons et comme manœuvres ? Et même si vous le faisiez, la dépense serait parfaitement inutile.

Nos Levées actuelles sont assez bonnes. Elles n'ont pas besoin d'être améliorées. Le seul danger qu'elles présentent c'est qu'elles se cavent ; que l'eau les mine et que plus tard la crevasse se déclare. Autant vaudrait essayer d'arrêter le cours du soleil comme autre fois Josué, que de vouloir empêcher au prix de quelque somme d'argent que ce soit ce travail incessant de l'eau contre nos Levées.

Je répète, monsieur, que les avocats comprennent peu notre système de Levées. Les planteurs, qui tous les jours s'entretiennent de cette question dont l'importance pour eux est si grande, qui l'examinent, qui l'étudient sur toutes ses faces et à tous les points de vue possibles, savent bien que nos Levées sont aussi bonnes maintenant, qu'on puisse jamais les faire. Je le dis encore, je ne puis voter pour l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics, jusqu'à ce que je sache bien ce que l'on a l'intention d'y substituer. Si le Sénateur veut se placer à son bureau, mettre ses vues par écrit, les insérer dans un bill, je voterai avec lui si je reconnais que son bill présente la moindre amélioration.

Dans le principe, j'étais opposé à cet article de la Constitution; et dans la Convention, je m'y serais opposé si j'avais eu le droit de vote. Mais, puisque cet article a été incorporé dans la Constitution, puisque le moyen qu'il prescrit est si grandement supérieur à tous les anciens systèmes; je suis decidé à le soutenir aussi longtemps qu'il ne nous sera rien présenté de plus efficace, de meilleur que celui-là.

Je ne desire pas plus long temps occuper l'attention du Sénat; je voudrais seulement ajouter quelques observations en réponse au senateur qui s'est fait entendre le dernier. Il avoue que les avocats ne s'entendent guère aux questions d'améliorations intérieures e aux systèmes de levées, à moins qu'ils ne vivent à la campagne ou sur les bords du fleuve. Je veux cependant supposer que le fait seul que l'on est avocat ne rend pas un homme inhabile à juger de ces questions. Je veux admettre aussi que le sénateur à qui je réponds soit un peu, beaucoup même, en avance des autres. Eh bien, j'ai attentivement examiné les rapports qui ont été présentés à la Législature ; je suis allé au sein des différents comités, j'y ai trouvé du talent, de la science en theorie, accumulés là depuis trois ans. J'y ai trouvé des relevés de toutes sortes, des statistiques de profondeur, de mesures, enfin tout ce qu'on peut imaginer dans ce genre, et pourtant au milieu de toute cette masse d'informations je n'ai rien trouvé qui pût être mis en pratique ou rédigé en système. Dans la partie du pays où je réside les vieux planteurs qui ont pour les guider l'expérience de longues années (et l'expérience, messieurs, en apprend beaucoup plus que toutes les sciences réunies), les vieux planteurs, dis-je, apprennent ce qu'ils savent en observant la crue et la baisse du fleuve en en etudiant l'effet sur nos levées. Lorsqu'ils s'aperçoivent qu'une de ces montagnes va ceder, ils regardent les marques sur les arbres et ils savent par là l'étendue et la hauteur des travaux qui doivent être faits.

Mon seul but en prenant la parole a été que le Sénat dispose maintenant, aujourd'hui même, de cette résolution.

Il existe parmi les avocats une différence d'opinions quant au pouvoir que possède la Législature, en vertu de la Constitution, d'abolir le Bureau des Travaux Publics. J'ignore quelle etait l'opinion de la Convention; mais ce que je sais, c'est que la Constitution qui contient cet article a été soumise au peuple qui l'a approuvée. La signification de cet article doit être cherchée dans les termes mêmes de la Constitution.

Je ne desire voir introduire dans cette question aucun sentiment de jalousie ou de mauvais vouloir, aucun esprit de sectionnalite. Les effets d'une inondation dans les paroisses les plus éloignées se font sentir jusque dans la Nouvelle-Orléans, comme la prospérité de la ville beneficie aux paroisses les plus éloignées. Je voudrais voir régner la plus grande harmonie et, s'il est possible, je voudrais qu'au lieu de discussions et de débats il y eût parmi nous unanimité A mon sens, le but de la convention a été de mettre un terme à l'ancien état de choses, au «votez pour mon bayou je voterai pour le votre.» La création de ce Bureau n'entrait pas dans mes idées, mais puisque c'est la Convention qui l'a établi après de longues délibérations et de longs travaux, je suis disposé à en faire loyalement et franchement l'épreuve.

Digitized by Google

M. King.—Je remercie le sénateur de l'Ascension d'avoir bien voulu exprimer ses vues relativement au pouvoir de la Législature, d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics ; mais je suis bien peiné du caractère de personnalité blessante qu'il a donné à ses observations. Il m'a accusé vertement de n'avoir aucune connaissance de la question sur laquelle je viens d'exprimer mes vues devant le Sénat ; il m'a dit que je ne pouvais rien savoir au sujet d'améliorations intérieures, parce que la profession que j'exerce n'est pas la même que celle de quelques-uns des sénateurs qui siègent ici.

Et maintenant, monsieur le président, si ce détail peut être agréable au sénateur, je lui dirai que je suis tout autant un planteur qu'un avocat, quoique peut-être je me targue moins que d'autres de ces titres. Mais plus encore que cela, le poste même que j'occupe a donné lieu à des attaques, comme si l'on ne pouvait rien attendre de bon de Nazareth ; il m'a été dit qu'un sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans ne peut rien savoir au sujet des améliorations intérieures, en dehors du cercle éternellement le même de la pose des tuyaux du gaz et du nettoyage des fossés bourbeux de la ville ! On m'a accusé d'ignorance, on a voulu ridiculiser un projet dont je n'avais tracé qu'imparfaitement l'esquisse. On m'a accusé encore de favoriser le système des Arkansas, en même temps qu'on m'accusait dans la même phrase d'y être opposé !

Ce système, Monsieur, n'est pas le mien, et je ne le recommande aucunement. J'ai dit seulement ce que je savais être un fait, à savoir : que de tous les systèmes qui ont été proposés, c'est celui qui réunit le plus de suffrages. Les termes mêmes dont je me suis servi ont été dénaturés. Ce que je voulais dire que métaphoriquement a été pris à la lettre, et la figure que j'employais a été traduite en un exposé de faits. Je n'ai pas dit, comme l'a donné à entendre le sénateur, que je désirais voir construire des levées aussi hautes que des montagnes ; j'ai simplement fait la remarque que sous le système que je proposais, nous pourrions construire des levées aussi hautes que des montagnes, s'il était nécessaire, depuis la ligne des Arkansas jusqu'au golfe du Mexique, afin de contenir les eaux du Mississippi dans leur lit naturel et d'empêcher qu'elles ne viennent jusqu'aux portes de nos planteurs.

En terminant, je dois dire que mon opinion est qu'il existe quelque different au sujet de la question constitutionnelle suivante, à savoir : si la question toute entière ne devrait pas être plustôt référée de nouveau au comité des amcliorations intérieures avec instruction de présenter un substitut.

M Lacey.—Je désirerais aussi qu'un rapport fut fait par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, sur les différentes raisons qui l'ont induit à penser que le bureau des travaux publics devait être aboli. Le sénateur s'est longtemps appesanti sur cette question ; il a prouvé (ou il a cru le faire) qu'il était dangereux, nuisible même de créer ce bureau ; il a démontré que ce serait là donner lieu, immédiatement à des discussions politiques d'un caractère tout sectionnel ; que ce projet serait dispendieux, impraticable, et serait plutôt un obstacle qu'un progrès à nos améliorations intérieures.

Pour moi, je ne soutiens aucunement le système actuel, comme voudrait le faire entendre le sénateur de l'Ascension. Je suis loin de defendre le système « des 106 nègres et du vieux bateau l'Agnès, » sur lequel a insisté en termes si emphatiques mon honorable collègue. Je ne veux en aucune manière être tenu responsable de ce système. C'est tout récemment seulement que je fais partie de cet honorable corps et comme le sénateur de l'Ascension, je n'ai pas l'honneur d'avoir été ici depuis plusieurs années. Ce système ridicule, absurde, odieux, doit donc plutôt lui être attribué qu'à moi. Je ne soutiens pas du tout ce système. Mon concours est acquis au plan auquel a fait allusion le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M King) que je crois comprendre.

Mais soit que le Sénat adopte le système de l'Arkansas ou tout autre, mon désir est d'écarter les obstacles qui, aujourd'hui, arrêtent « le charf » des améliorations intérieures. Et, lorsque je dis ce mot, je n'entend pas parler du vieux bateau l'Agnès, mais du char que les amis politiques du sénateur de l'Ascension (M. Kenner) ont construit dans la convention et ont ensuite abandonné à la direction du parti démocrate.

Comme la question constitutionnelle a été discutée, je dirai que j'ai la plus grande confiance dans l'opinion du sénateur (M. Kenner) sur un point de droit, bien qu'il ait pensé que des avocats étaient incompétents en fait de digues et de levées.

Je répète que, dans mon opinion cette législature a le pouvoir d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics, parce que ce pouvoir est expressément concédé par un des articles de la constitution, et parce que ce bureau existe bien reellement maintenant, bien que les membres n'en aient pas été élus.

M. Mc Cay. Je prie l'orateur de répondre à une question. En supposant que la Législature ajourne sans s'occuper de l'élection des membres du bureau, celui-ci serait-il en exsstence ; et si tel est le cas, où sera-t-il ?

M. Lacey. Mais je vais plus loin encore. Je dirai que, même si le bureau n'est pas en existence, que même s'il n'était pas créé par la constitution, il n'y aurait pas de nécessité à l'établir si nous sommes déterminés à l'abolir immédiatement après. Certainement la constitution n'exige pas que nous perdions aussi follement notre temps. Si les trois-cinquièmes de la Législature sont opposés à l'existence du bureau, ils peuvent constitutionnellement se refuser à l'organiser. L'existence du bureau dépend des idées et des desirs de cette proportion des membres de la Législature.

J'espère donc que les Senateurs abandonneront ces objections constitutionnelles et resteront convaincus qu'ils ont le pouvoir d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics ; et que, s'ils arrivent à cette conclusion, ils doivent le faire sans délai. En même temps ils pourront se réunir au comité et réclamer un système meilleur et qui permette d'exécuter nos grandes idées et nos grands projets d'ameliorations intérieures.

M. Kenner —Je désire parler un moment sur une question personnelle. Le Sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orleans, (M King) a dit qu'il regrettait le caractère de personnalité qu'a pris ce debat. Quant à moi telle n'a jamais été mon intention. J'ai, au contraire, exprimé l opinion la plus haute, la plus flatteuse sur le Sénateur comme juriconsulte et comme avocat. Je sais, ou au moins, je suppose que sa vie a été consacrée à l'étude des livres et à l'exercice de sa profession.

Je pense, par conséquent que la seule source où il a puise des connaissances sur les améliorations intérieures, consiste dans les observations qu'il a faites sur la pose des tuyeaux de gaz et des earb. stones et sur le nettoyage des ruisseaux, en allant et venant de son bureau a la cour.

Je prie mes collègues de remarquer avec quelle bienveillance j'avais traité le sénateur quand il s'est levé et a prononcé ce discours en quatre points dans lequel il m'accuse de l'avoir attaqué personnellement et dans lequel il s'est présenté en martyr. Chacun sait combien cette position est faite pour attirer les sympathies d'une audience. Je lui ai permis de continuer, je ne l'ai pas interrompu ; bien au contraire, je l'ai ecouté et je l'ai laisse prendre tout l'avantage qui devait en résulter pour lui ; tandis que j'aurais pu, dès son debut, prendre la parole et nier que j'eusse fait aucune allusion personnelle. Cela aurait mis un terme a la question. Mais j'ai preferé laisser le sénateur parler à son aise, et recueillir le bénéfice qui pouvait en résulter pour lui.

Après ces réflexions, j'espère que le sénateur ne dira pas que mes remarques avaient un caractère de personnalité à son égard.

En réponse au senateur de Madison (M. Short,) je dois dire que je suis aussi opposé qu'il l'est lui-même a l'esprit de sectionnalite en pareilles matières. Pour moi, le système de levées est d'une importance vitale pour la prospérité de l'Etat ; mais quand je vois des senateurs sans expérience sur cette matière la discuter en homme qui la possèdent à fond, je dois dire que je me prends à craindre qu'on n'adopte quelque mesure qui entraine un résultat fatal. J'ai dit que mon espoir était de ne pas voir adopter des mesures à l'aide desquelles la basse Louisiane serait convertie en un marais inhabitable, et la haute Louisiane en un jardin fertile. Voilà ce que j'ai dit, et certes il n'y a rien là qui soit dicté par l'esprit de sectionnalité.

Un autre sénateur (M Lacey) m'a rendu responsable de notre système de «bateaux vermoulus.» Ne sait-il donc pas que j'ai siégé pendant plusieurs années dans ce sénat, et que j'ai fait partie de ceux qui ont fait des pieds et des mains, et cela sans succès, quoique j'aie déployé toute l'énergie dont j'étais capable. Et voilà que le sénateur me rend responsable de ce système, et prétend en faire retomber sur moi le blâme.

Digitized by Google

M. McCay.—Le sénateur d'Est Bâton Rouge (M. Lacey) n'a pas répondu à la question que je lui avais posée. Je désire savoir si, dans le cas où la Législature s'ajournerait sans organiser le bureau des travaux publics, ce bureau aurait une existence.

M. Lacey.—Le bureau aurait une existence constitutionnelle, et ce serait une fiction légale séparée et distincte des personnes qui doivent être élues pour rendre cette existence effective. Comme l'enfant dans le sein de sa mère, il aurait la vie, mais ne posséderait aucun pouvoir pour agir ; il posséderait les faibles mouvements d'un être vivant qui n'a pas encore vu le jour.

La résolution est de nouveau référée au comité des améliorations intérieures.

M. Short présente un bill relatif à l'organisation du judiciaire.

M. Wickliffe désire savoir si le bill est l'œuvre propre du sénateur ou s'il émane du comité. Le sénateur en réclame-t-il la paternité ?

M. Short dit qu'il ne sait rien de cette paternité.—Il ignore même que les bills viennent au monde de cette manière. Il sait seulement que quelque chose de semblable a passé à la Chambre, et que cela cadre mieux avec ses propres vues qu'aucun autre système qu'il ait été à même d'observer jusqu'à présent.—Il a voulu y appeler l'attention du Sénat, c'est là toute la paternité qu'il veuille admettre.

M. Wickliffe retire toute objection à l'introduction du bill.

M. Short présente plusieurs autres bills relatifs au judiciaire.

M. Wickliffe désire savoir si aucun temps a été fixé pour la prise en considération des bills du comité.

M. Lacey dit que tous les bills seront bientôt complétes

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il est charmé d'apprendre que le comité a l'intention de faire un rapport sur ce sujet.

Bill du recensement.

Mr Derbès fait la motion de prendre en considération le bill du recensement.

M. Griffin propose que toute cette matière soit référée à un comité composé des membres de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Rivers dit qu'il espère qu'on n'adoptera pas pour ce bill la marche qu'on a déjà suivie.

M. Derbès espère bien que oui.—Ces messieurs de l'opposition avaient été les premiers à faire de ce sujet une affaire de parti, et après cela en avaient accusé les démocrates. Mais nous avons de bonnes raisons pour justifier la marche que nous avons suivie. Sous l'empire du bill, dans sa forme actuelle, la ville n'aurait jamais une entière représentation à la Législature. Si quelques sénateurs pensent que nous sommes influencés par des considérations de parti dans le changement que nous nous proposons, je leur dirai que dans les quatre districts de la ville il y a trois recorders democrates et un whig et la même proportion d'assesseurs.—Quel benéfice tirerait le parti de la substitution des assesseurs aux recorders. Les assesseurs, s'ils étaient assignés, feraient de l'argent de cette affaire au moyen d'assistants, tandis que le peuple sait que les recorders ne peuvent rien recevoir. Telles sont quelques-une des raisons qui nous déterminent à demander que le pouvoir de faire le recensement soit confié plutôt qu'aux recorders et aux assesseurs et à leurs deputés.

M. Wickliffe votera pour la motion du sénateur des Avoyelles, si celui-ci veut l'amender de manière à ce que le sujet soit référé à un comité spécial de trois membres, mais il objecte à un comité composé exclusivent de la délégation de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Griffin accepte l'amendement et la motion est adoptée.

Le Président nomme MM. King Mc Cay et Burthe pour composer le comité.

Ordre du jour.

Le bill pour amender l'acte de 1846 relatif aux corporations, est appelé.

L'impression en est ordonnée.

M. Wicliffe fait la motion de mettre ce bill à l'ordre spécial du jour pour vendredi prochain, attendu qu'il ne pourrait être pris en considération avant d'être imprimé.

M. King dit qu'il serait inutile de faire imprimer le bill vu qu'il a l'intention de demander qu'on en efface une partie, ce qui laisserait la loi telle qu'elle existe.

M. Wicliffe ne voit pas pourquoi le bill ne serait pas imprimé, et pourquoi le Sénat serait obligé de le discuter maintenant parce que le préopinant à l'intention d'y proposer un amendement—Le bill pourrait avoir quelque chose de bon et le Sénat désirerait avoir l'occasion de l'examiner en détail.

M. King dit que la raison pour laquelle il a l'intention de faire la motion dont il a parlé, c'est qu'il s'est convaincu que la loi générale couvre toutes les dispositions du bill et que par conséquent celui-ci est inutile.

M. Wickliffe pensait aussi, lorsque le bill a été présenté par son auteur qu'il était inutile.-Néanmoins il préférerait le voir renvoyer à un comité.

Le bill est définitivement ajourné.

Le bill pour organiser le Département du secrétaire d'Etat est pris en considération.

M. Martin dit que la même objection existe contre ce bill que contre les autres d'une même nature—ils sont tous inutiles. Il existe des lois sur ces matières et il n'est pas nécessaire de surcharger nos codes de nouveaux décrets.

M. Lacey donne à l'égard de ce bill la même explication qu'à l'egard des autres. Ils sont tous présentés par excès de précaution afin de faire disparaître les doutes qui existent dans l'esprit d'un grand nombre de personnes quant à l'efficacité des lois actuelles sous l'empire de la nouvelle Constitution.—Il vaut mieux dit-il être du côté le plus sûr, et il a été soutenu par le comité judiciaire en rédigeant et en présentant ces bills.—On suppose généralement, ajoute-t-il, qu'en vertu d'un des articles de la nouvelle Constitution toutes les places puqliques de l'Etat sont vacantes.

M. Wickliffe désirerait savoir à quel article de la Constitution son collègue fait allusion.—Est ce à celui ci (il lit l'article.)

M. Lacey—Oui Monsieur.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il comprend parfaitement le sens de l'article mais que néanmoins, il votera pour le bill.

M. Martin ne voit pas qu'il y ait le moindre sujet de doute. La place de secrétaire d'Etat est une place constitutionnelle, l'auteur du bill a déjà consenti à ce qu'il fut référé au comité de Finances, et ce comité a fait un rapport adverse. Quant à lui (M. Martin) il ne désire pas voir référer ce bill au comité dont M. Raney est rapporteur par ce qu'il suit que la question est préjugée par ce dernier. Il ne peut donc pas pour le moment suggérer aucun comité convenable à qui référer ce bill Il est dit-il naturellement un homme prudent mais il a éprouré qu'un excès de prudence est quelque fois plus nuisible qu'utile.

M. King est opposé au bill comme étant inutile et superflu.

M. Lacey dit qu'il faut cependant pourvoir au dépouillement des votes et aux retours d'élection de ces officiers—Il faudrait adopter au moins cette partie du bill.

M. Martin n'y voit aucune raison. Une élection a eu lieu en décembre dernier, et les officiers de l'Etat ont été élus. Il croit que les lois actuelles pourvoient suffisamment au dépouillement des votes et aux retours à faire des résultats.

M. Lacey—Le préopinant se trompe : il n'y a pas de loi sur ces matières.

M. Martin—Comment donc et par quelle autorite l'a-t-on fait dans cette circonstance ?

M. Lacey—L'élection a eu lieu, et nous en avons accepté les resultats sans aucune autorité légale. Je désire maintenant suppléer à cette omission.

M. Martin—Si le sénateur ne veut pas autre chose que faire passer sa section du bill, qui pourvoit au dépouillement des votes, je retire mes objections.

ELECTION DE L'IMPRIMEUR D'ETAT.

Le bill pour amender l'acte de 1846, relatif à l'élection d'un imprimeur d'Etat, est ensuite pris en considération.

M. Lacey explique le but du Comité Judiciaire en présentant le bill et l'amendement. Par l'acte de 1846, un imprimeur d'Etat doit être élu à chaque session regulière de la Législature, et par le même acte l'imprimeur doit rester en fonctions pendant deux ans Conformément à cet acte, la Législature à sa présente session a élu un imprimeur qui doit rester en fonction pendant deux ans. D'après le bill présenté par le sénateur de Concordia [M. Rivers,] l'imprimeur ne resterait en fonctions que pendant l'une des deux années, pour lesquelles il a été constitutionnellement et également élu. L'amendement proposé par le comité fixe la prochaine élection à la session de 1855, et les élections subséquentes de deux en deux ans. Quant à l'opportunité d'élire, en 1855, un imprimeur pour deux ans, le comité ne prétend pas s'engager sur ce point ; mais comme il a trouvé une loi en force, en vertu de laquelle, le présent imprimeur a été élu, qui ordonne en même temps qu'un imprimeur sera élu à chaque session régulière, le comité s'est cru obligé de rectifier cette contradiction et de faire disparaître cette absurdité de nos Codes.

Digitized by Google

M. Martin dit qu'il lui semble que si ce bill est adopté, ce serait dans le fait élire un imprimeur pour la prochaine Législature. Il lui semble que la présente Législature devrait à celle qui doit lui succéder autant d'égards et considération qu'elle même en a reçu de celle qui l'a précédée

M. Rivers dit que le but de son bill est de rendre la loi conforme à la Constitution. Sous l'empire de l'ancienne loi, l'imprimeur était élu pour deux ans. Les sessions de la Législature étaient alors biennales Le bill présenté par lui (M Rivers) a pour effet de faire expirer le terme d'office de l'imprimeur, avec celui de la Législature qui l'a nommé, de manière que chaque Législature nommera son propre imprimeur. Si M. La Sère, par son élection sous l'empire de la loi de 1846, est en possession d'un droit acquis, de remplir son emploi pendant deux ans, il en est de même de M. Weisse qui a été élu l'an dernier, en vertu de la même loi. Il a été heureux d'entendre de la part de M. Lacey même qu'un pareil droit peut exister. S'il insiste sur ce principe, il doit admettre aussi que M. Weisse a un droit acquis pour deux ans ; il a été élu de la même manière que M. La Sère, en vertu de la même loi, et, si M. La Sère a un droit acquis à l'emploi pour l'année prochaine, M. Weisse en a aussi un pour cette année.

M. Lacey—Lorsque la présente législature, au début de la session, a élu un imprimeur d'Etat pour le terme de deux ans, elle l'a investi d'un droit acquis a cet emploi pour ce laps de temps, et la personne élue a par conséquent le droit d'occuper la place pendant deux ans. Tout acte ayant pour but de le dépouiller de ce droit serait inconstitutionnel et nul ; conséquemment le comité a cru de son devoir de recommander la passation d'un acte qui confirmerait le droit de l'imprimeur acquis en vertu de la loi, en vertu de laquelle il a été nommé, d'occuper la place pendant deux ans D'après la loi, telle qu'elle existe, la prochaine législature pourrait nommer un autre imprimeur et nous en aurions alors deux. L'officier actuellement en fonctions a le droit d'occuper la place pendant deux ans, et celui qui serait élu l'année prochaine aurait droit à la place en vertu de son élection. Si l'amendement du sénateur de Concordia [M Rivers] est adopté, nous aurons deux imprimeurs d'Etat. Le bill n'a pas été introduit dans un but politique, mais afin de parer à la difficulté qui existe actuellement. Ce bill pourvoit à ce que la prochaine élection d'imprimeur d'Etat aura lieu en 1855, époque à laquelle le terme d'office de M. La Sère aura cessé. Le sénat pourra rendre l'élection annuelle ou biennale à son choix. Le bill rapporté par le comité est nécessaire afin d'empêcher la confusion, de détruire la possibilité d'avoir à la fois deux imprimeurs. et afin d'assurer à l'imprimeur actuel son terme légal de deux ans.

M. Martin—L'imprimeur actuel a été élu en vertu de la même loi que son prédécesseur. La loi exigeait qu'une élection eut lieu à chaque session régulière de la législature. La présente législature n'a pas plus de droit d'imposer un imprimeur à celle qui doit lui succéder que celle qui l'a précédée n'avait le droit de lui en imposer un à elle-même.

M. King—La question qui se présente est de savoir si la session actuelle est une session régulière. Si cela est, nous étions obligés par la loi de 1846 de nommer un imprimeur— Maintenant se présente la question de savoir pour quel terme l'imprimeur élu conservera sa place. La réponse à cette question se trouve dans la loi qui dit que l'imprimeur sera élu pour deux ans.

M. Rivers—La prochaine session serait-elle une session régulière ?

M. King—Oui, monsieur.

M. Rivers—Alors, d'après le même principe, nous serons obligés l'année prochaine de nommer un autre imprimeur.

M. King—Le bill n'a pas d'autre but que d'obvier à cette difficulté.

M. Rivers—Les préopinants disent que, parceque la loi de 1846 fixe à deux ans la durée des fonctions de l'imprimeur d'Etat, M. La Sère continuera ses fonctions pendant la première session de la prochaine législature. Mais M. Weisse a aussi été élu à une session régulière de la législature en vertu de la même loi; conséquemment il est actuellement imprimeur de l'Etat, si le principe avancé par ces messieurs de l'opposition est correct. Il doit avoir à la place un droit acquis que la législature n'a pu ignorer ni détruire.

M. King dit qu'il répondra avec plaisir à l'argument du préopinant. L'erreur qu'il commet consiste à supposer qu'il puisse exister un contrat entre l'Etat et ses officiers. Nous avons vu élire un gouverneur et des officiers nouveaux pour prendre la place des anciens, et nous avons vu ceux-ci, dont le terme d'office n'était pas expiré, céder la place aux autres. Si ces anciens officiers avaient eu un droit acquis, la nouvelle Constitution elle-même n'aurait pu autoriser ce qui s'est fait. Ils eussent été protégés dans leurs droits par la Constitution des Etats-Unis qui dit que les obligations résultant des contrats ne peuvent être violées. Mais il n'existe rien de tel qu'un contrat entre l'Etat et ses officiers. La nouvelle Constitution a pour ainsi dire donné congé à l'imprimeur d'Etat en faisant de la présente session une session régulière, d'après le même principe qui a rendu vacante la place du gouverneur Walker.

M. Rivers—Le sénateur pense-t-il que cet acte serait obligatoire pour la prochaine Législature ?

M. King—Comme toute nos lois celle-ci serait sujette à être modifiée ou rappelée. Mais il n'en peut résulter aucun mal.

M. Kenner—Si la prochaine Législature peut rappeler la loi, pourquoi ne pas lui laisser élire son propre imprimeur. Chacun sait que cette Législature n'a pas eu l'intention d'élire un imprimeur pour deux ans. Je me rappelle parfaitement que, lorsque l'élection fut faite, l'officier présidant le Sénat annonça que M. La Sère avait été élu imprimeur d'Etat pour deux ans; sur la représentation qui lui fut faite de son erreur, il se reprit immédiatement, et annonça tout simplement que M. La Sère avait été élu imprimeur d'Etat.

Maintenant, si ces messieurs admettent que, sous l'empire de la loi actuelle, ils ne peuvent garder M. La Sère en place pour deux ans, pourquoi ne pas le déclarer ? S'ils pouvaient ainsi le garder, il n'y aurait aucune nécessité pour ce bill. Mais ils savent très-bien qu'ils ne peuvent pas le faire avec la loi telle qu'elle est. S'ils croient qu'ils le peuvent, eh bien alors, qu'ils fassent la motion de déposer ce bill sur le bureau, et ils atteindront leur but. Mais, que veulent-ils faire ? Je vais vous le dire. Ils veulent lier la prochaine Législature en lui imposant leur propre imprimeur. Ils veulent maintenir M. La Sère en place pour deux ans, lorsqu'il n'a été élu que pour un an.

M King—Le préopinant nous a demandé quel est notre but. Mais il me semble qu'il est évident. Nous voulons faire disparaître de la loi une absurdité flagrante. La loi de 1846, actuellement en vigueur, dit qu'un imprimeur d'Etat sera élu à chaque session régulière de la Législature, et, en même temps, elle dit qu'il tiendra la place pendant deux ans Le sénateur rapporte correctement ce qui s'est passé lorsque M. La Sère a été élu à cette session. D'abord, il a été proclamé élu pour deux ans, puis, tout simplement élu. Par conséquent, il est élu pour le terme légal et constitutionnel. Quel est ce terme légal ? Evidemment deux ans d'après la loi. Ayant ainsi expliqué notre but, je demande la question préalable.

M Rivers—Voilà certainement quelque chose de très aimable de la part du sénateur qui vient de parler.

M. King.—A la demande de plusieurs collègues, je retire ma motion pour la question préalable.

Digitized by Google

M. Rivers.—Le bill proposé par moi a été référé au comité judicaire. Ce comité, par l'organe de son président, fait un rapport favorable ; puis, tout à coup, une lumière nouvelle se fait pour ce même président; une nouvelle idée lui vient. Il découvre subitement que le bill ne lui convient pas, et le fait référer de nouveau Le but du bill était de donner à la prochaine Législature le pouvoir, comme elle avait le droit, d'élire un imprimeur. Dans le cours ordinaire des choses, la prochaine Législature pouvait différer d'opinion avec la présente, sur qui conviendrait mieux comme imprimeur d'Etat. Elle pourrait préférer quelqu'un de la campagne, et, quant à lui (M. Rivers), il est disposé à laisser à la prochaine Législature son libre arbitre sur cette matière. L'amendement du comité lui enlève ce pouvoir et impose l'imprimeur de la Législature actuelle à celle qui doit lui succéder. J'en appelle aux membres démocrates de la campagne ; sont-ils disposés à se soumettre à cette restriction? S'ils le sont, alors qu'il en soit ainsi, car ils ont le pouvoir entre leurs mains.

M. Martin.—Le bill primitif proposait tout simplement que chaque Législature aurait le droit de nommer son propre imprimeur, ainsi que le veut l'esprit de la loi.

M. Short.—Avant que la question soit mise aux voix, j'aimerais à dire quelques mots sur ce sujet. Lorsque le présent imprimeur d'Etat a été élu, il a dû l'être pour quelque terme spécifié. Ce terme est fixé par la loi en vertu de laquelle il a été élu. La loi dit que l'imprimeur sera élu pour deux ans; conséquemment l'imprimeur actuel a été élu pour ce temps. Cet officier l'a ainsi cru lui même ; il a fourni son cautionnement de remplir ses devoirs conformément aux dispositions de cette loi et pour le temps fixé par elle, et ses droits ne peuvent être atteints par aucun acte de l'assemblée générale. J'en suis venu à conclure que chaque corps législatif a le droit de choisir ses propres officiers. La présente Législature ayant été créée par la nouvelles Constitution, a nécessairement ce droit, et les officiers de la dernière Législature doivent partager le sort de tous les anciens officiers. Ils ont été déplacés par l'adoption de la nouvelle Constitution, et bien des questions embarrassantes surgissent d'un changement de loi fondamentale. On prend souvent une loi pour un contrat, et un contrat pour une loi.—Ceci est purement une question de droit.—Sous la Constitution de 1845, l'assemblée générale se réunissait une fois tous les deux ans. Un grand changement politique, en outre, pouvait survenir dans ces deux années. La prochaine Législature pourrait désirer nommer ses propres officiers, et elle en aurait le droit. La Législature, sous la Constitution de 1845, était un corps ayant une existence continue. Ce corps a été annihilé par l'adoption de la Constitution de 1852. Cette Législature-ci n'expire pas cette année, quoique les membres de l'une de ses branches finissent leurs fonctions. Où est donc la nécessité de déplacer M. La Sère à la prochaine session ? Les mêmes raisons existent-elles dans ce cas-ci que dans celui de M. Weisse ? Au contraire, la position de M. Weisse est bien différente. Le corps qui l'avait nommé a cessé d'exister par l'adoption de la nouvelle Constitution. Mais voici un nouvel officier sous l'empire de la Constitution de 1852. Les membres de la Chambre sont nommés pour deux ans, et, parmi les sénateurs, il y en a de nommés pour deux, et d'autres pour quatre ans.

M. Wickliffe.—Le sénateur se rappellera que lui et moi cessons nos fonctions en novembre prochain.

M. Short.—Le sénateur n'a pas besoin de me rafraîchir la mémoire sur ce point ; je me souviens très bien que le terme le plus court m'est échu.

Etant arrivé à la conclusion que cette Législature avait le droit de nommer un imprimeur, il se présente la question de savoir pour quel terme avait-elle ce droit ? Etait-ce pour un ou deux ans ; évidemment pour deux ans, le terme fixé par la loi.

Et qu'y a-t-il en cela de si blâmable, et qui puisse justifier les observations qui ont été faites par les sénateurs du parti opposé ? Si j'avais cru que M. Weisse eût le droit de conserver son emploi; je n'eusse jamais consenti à une nouvelle élection. Mais l'imprimeur actuel a, comme je l'ai dit, fourni un cautionnement pour la fidèle exécution de ses devoirs pendant le temps pour lequel il a été élu. Si un changement s'opère dans la composition de la prochaine Législature—quoique j'espère que nous ne changerons pas aussi rapidement que les couleurs de l'arc-en-ciel—si la majorité de la Législature appartient au parti opposé, et qu'il lui plaise de déplacer l'imprimeur, seulement parce qu'elle en aurait le pouvoir, elle commettrait un acte d'injustice.

M. Martin.—Où est la nécessité de passer ce bill ?

M. Short.—Où est la nécessité de le rejeter. Si nous laissons subsister la loi dans sa teneur actuelle, nous verrons continuellement le terme de service d'un imprimeur empiéter sur celui d'un autre, puisque la loi dit à chaque session régulière un imprimeur sera nommé qui gardera la place pendant deux ans.

M. Martin.—La première session n'est-elle pas une session régulière ?

M. Short.—Oui, et la loi dit qu'une élection aura lieu à chaque session régulière de sorte qu'après deux ans, nous aurions deux imprimeurs d'Etat.—Je désire faire disparaître cette absurdité de la loi.

M. Todd demande lecture du bill.

Le secrétaire en donne lecture.

M. Todd.—Les Sénateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans et de Carroll (MM. King et Short), voudraient nous faire croire que ce bill a pour but de rendre les choses conformes à la loi et à la Constitution; je crois dire que je diffère d'opinion avec eux. Ce bill n'est pas conforme à la Constitution actuelle; l'acte de 1846 a été passé lorsque les sessions de la Législature étaient biennales maintenant qu'elles sont annuelles, et par analogie, nous devrions croire que tous les ans, c'est à dire à chaque session régulière, un nouvel imprimeur d'Etat doit être élu

Le sénateur de Carroll [M. Short], a dit aussi que M. Weisse a cessé d'occuper la place parce que la Législature qui l'avait élu était dissoute, et que M. La Sère doit être maintenu, parce que cette Législature-ci ne se dissout pas. Mais elle se dissout. Est-ce que tous les membres de la Chambre et une partie des membres du Sénat ne finissent pas leur terme cette année même ? Il n'y a pas plus de raison pour l'imprimeur que pour tout autre officier de rester en fonctions pendant deux ans. Il serait injuste et discourtois envers la prochaine Législature de lui imposer un imprimeur de notre choix. Le sénateur admet que la prochaine Législature pourra rappeler cette loi si elle passe. Pourquoi donc passer une loi illusoire J'espère que l'amendement proposé par le sénateur de Concordia [M. Rivers], sera adopté.

M, King—Le préopinant semble supposer que parce que la prochaine Législature peut rappeler la loi nous ne devrions pas la passer. Voilà un argument bien fallacieux. D'après ce principe, nous ferions tout aussi bien de plier bagage et de nous en retourner chez nous, parce que chaque acte que nous passerons qui ne contient pas un contrat est susceptible d'être rappelé—Puisque je me suis levé, j'en profiterai pour expliquer les raisons qui m'ont decidé à demander, il y a quelques instants, la question préalable.—Un sénateur a fait la motion de déposer sur le bureau le substitut du comité. Une pareille motion ne coupe-t-elle pas court au débat, aussi bien que la question préalable.

J'ai donc pensé que je pouvais avec la même convenance demander la question préalable et je ne crois pas, vu les circonstances, avoir été si peu aimable. Les sénateurs peuvent proposer cinquante amendements qui seront tous rejetés et nous en viendrons enfin à la question principale. Je n'ai pas eu l'intention de manquer de courtoisie envers mes collègues. Je voulais seulement économiser le temps du Sénat. J'espère que messieurs les sénateurs apprécieront ce que je viens de dire, et n'essaieront pas d'embarrasser notre marche en proposant des amendements inutiles.

M. Kenner—C'est-à-dire en bon anglais que nous membres de l'opposition, ne devons faire aucune objection à ce qui sera proposé par vous, parceque nous sommes en minorité.

M. King—Vous avez été les premiers à vous servir du baillon, et nous avons cru pouvoir user de représailles.

M. Kenner fait la motion de déposer tout le sujet sur le bureau.

M. Martin appelle l'attention du sénat sur ce que dit le manuel de Jefferson concernant la question préalable [ici M. Martin lit un extrait du manuel de Jefferson dans lequel il est dit que la question préalable a pour but d'arrêter un débat qui prend un cours personnel ou contraire aux intérêts de l'Etat.]

Digitized by Google

Je suppose, a-t-on dit-il, que l'Etat ne souffrirait pas d'aucun amendement que nous pourrions proposer au bill en discussion ou d'aucun argument que nous pourrions avancer, quoique les intérêts de M. LaSère pourraient très bien en souffrir. Je crois que j'ai eu raison lorsque j'ai qualifié la motion comme étant l'exercice d'une force brutale.

M. Kenner fait la motion d'effacer 1855 et d'insérer 1854, comme époque à laquelle serait fixée l'élection d'un imprimeur d'Etat, de manière à laisser à la prochaine Législature la chance de nommer son propre imprimeur. Il dit qu'il est opposé à ce qu'on impose quoique ce soit à une Législature future.

Le sénateur d'Orléans [M. King] dit que la loi peut être rappelée; à quoi servirait de la passer? Si les whigs ont une majorité l'année prochaine, le sénateur peut être sûr qu'ils ne manqueront pas de rappeler la loi, lorsque le terme d'office de l'imprimeur serait expiré. Mais si les démocrates se maintiennent au pouvoir, ils trouveront un imprimeur tout fait. Les démocrates ne sont-ils pas disposés à s'en fier à leurs amis? Il ne pense pas obtenir de réponse à cette question dans l'enceinte de cette Chambre, mais il s'adresse, dit-il, à un echo du dehors, à une puissance plus grande que celle du sénateur distingué de la Nouvelle-Orleans, qui a pris l'initiative dans cette matière.

M. Wickliffe soulève un point d'ordre. La question contenue dans l'amendement du sénateur de l'Ascension a déjà été decidée par un vote du Sénat sur la motion d'amender le bill en fixant l'élection à la prochaine session.

M. Rivers.—Je ne puis croire que le sénateur parle sérieusement.

M Wickliffe.—Certainement que je parle sérieusement.—La question n'a-t-elle pas été décidée; l'amendement proposé par le sénateur de l'Assomption ne consistait-il pas à renvoyer l'élection à la prochaine session? — Cette session n'arrive-t-elle pas en 1854. La motion du sénateur de l'Ascension ne revient-elle pas à la même chose? Je ne veux pas voir ainsi consumer le temps du Sénat en votes oiseux sur les mêmes questions.

Le président décide que l'amendement est à l'ordre.

L'appel nominal, étant demandé, l'amendement est rejeté, et le bill passe à sa troisième lecture.

AJOURNEMENT.

La résolution de M. Martin à l'effet d'ajourner sine die est appelée. Sur motion de M. McCay, la prise en consideration de cette résolution est renvoyée au 4me jeudi de mars.

JEUDI, 3 mars 1853.

M. Rivers fait savoir qu'il s'est adressé au surintendant des écoles publiques à l'effet d'obtenir certains renseignemens, mais que ce fonctionnaire a refusé de les lui donner. C'est là un département auquel tous les sénateurs ont continuellement à faire, et si le surintendant refuse de donner les renseignemens qu'on lui demande, il faut l'y contraindre. En conséquence, il présente une résolution enjoignant au surintendant de l'éducation publique de soumettre au Senat un état des divers montants auxquels ont droit les différentes écoles de district de la paroisse Concordia dans le fonds général des écoles.

La résolution est adoptée.

M. Théveret, du comité de commerce, présente un rapport sur la pétition de la compagnie des moulins à riz de la Louisiane.

M. King, du comité des améliorations intérieures, présente un rapport.

Le bill à l'effet d'accorder aux personnes qui se sont établies sur les terres marécageuses des paroisses de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge une extension de temps pour le paiement de ces terres, vient devant le Sénat.

M. Short dit que pour les raisons contenues dans le rapport qui a été précédemment mis sous les yeux du Sénat, il s'opposera à l'adoption du bill. Un bill a été passé au Sénat — aussi à la Chambre basse, à ce qu'il croit, mais il ne peut l'assurer — qui a pour objet de clore les opérations du Bureau des terres publiques.

M. Martin.—Le sénateur se trompe. Les influences du dehors ont empêché l'adoption du bill.

M. Short.—Que le bill ait passé à la Chambre ou non, je crois fournir des raisons qui suffisent pour nous faire rejeter aujourd'hui ou à n'importe quelle époque, le projet qui nous est soumis.

On m'accordera, je pense, que nous ne sommes autorisés à disposer des terres marécageuses qu'en vue des objets pour lesquelles ces terres ont été concédées à l'Etat. Ces objets sont la construction de levées et le dessèchement des terres. Or, donner un droit de préemption et accorder un crédit de douze mois pour le paiement de ces terres, c'est aller beaucoup trop loin en fait de libéralité. Nous avons déjà accordé une extension de douze mois à ceux qui étaient incapables de payer; on ne peut prétendre à un nouveau sursis. Je suis opposé à ce sursis pour une autre raison. Il contrarierait le plan que j'ai l'intention de proposer et qui consisterait à appliquer le produit de la vente des terres marécageuses à l'érection de levées. Nous remplirions ainsi l'objet pour lequel la concession de ces terres a été faite. Il est très important d'adopter quelque plan de cette nature à la session actuelle. J'expliquerai mon plan en quelques mots. Les terres devront être arpentées, classées et mises en vente. Le produit de ces ventes devra être appliqué à la construction de levées. Il y a en ce moment 9,300,000 acres de ces terres qui restent à vendre. Supposez que 500,000 acres soient annuellement mis en vente, et qu'en usant d'économie on puisse appliquer chaque année une somme de $500,000 aux travaux de levées. Nous aurons ainsi retiré des eaux et mis dans le marché une plus grande quantité de terres en même temps que nous aurons augmenté la valeur des terres en général. Ce plan nous fourni le moyen de tirer le plus grand parti de ces terres.

Je vous le demande, voulez-vous, par une législation partielle que vous établirez pour telle ou telle paroisse, gaspiller toutes ces terres? Aussitôt que nous aurons adopté cet acte, attendez-vous à en voir présenter un autre pour accorder un sursis dans une autre paroisse, de même pour une troisième, jusqu'à ce que nous ne sachions plus où nous arrêter. Il faut se rappeler aussi que ces droits de préemption reposent toujours sur les meilleures terres; que les préempteurs font invariablement le meilleur choix qu'ils peuvent. Ainsi nous perdrions toute chance de former un fonds utile pour la construction des levées.

Les plus grands obstacles à la prospérité de cet Etat viennent des inondations. Il nous faut dépenser de l'argent d'abord pour la grande levée, puis pour d'autres levées, et les fonds se trouvent épuisés. Après tout cela on nous demande d'étendre les droits de préemption en faveur d'hommes qui ont pris les meilleures terres et n'ont laissé à l'Etat pour construire les levées que les terres les plus pauvres, opération qui ressemble à celle d'enlever la crème et de ne laisser que le petit lait. J'espère que tous les sénateurs repousseront une législation partielle telle que l'on nous propose. J'espère que, pour les raisons contenues dans le rapport, le bill ne sera pas adopté.

M. Lacey est surpris de voir tant d'opposition soulevée par une proposition aussi juste, aussi équitable que celle qui fait l'objet du bill. On n'a avancé aucun argument contre la convenance qu'il y aurait à accorder le sursis demandé.— Les détenteurs de ces terres sont dans une impossibilité absolue de payer en ce moment. La seule question est celle-ci: La Louisiane veut-elle agir comme un créancier intelligent, accorder à ces pauvres gens quelque temps pour payer la terre sur laquelle ils vivent, ou préférera-t-elle le rôle de Shylock? exigera-t-elle la dernière goutte de sang, l'execution du contrat dans ce qu'il a de plus rigoureux, chasser ces malheureux de la maison et de la terre qu'ils occupent et les livrer à des spéculateurs avides et rapaces? Telle est la question, quelque effort que l'on fasse pour la déguiser.

Il soumettra le bill sans plus d'observations et en confiera le sort à la générosité, à l'indulgence du Sénat.

M. Hodge dit qu'en sa qualité de membre du comité auquel ce bill a été renvoyé, et qui a fait un rapport défavorable, il donnera les motifs qui l'ont dirigé. Le bill fait plus que de proposer des amendements à l'acte de 1852 qui accordait un crédit d'une année aux personnes établies sur les terres publiques qui s'étaient fait inscrire, avant le 17 de mars de cette année, en tant que les paroisses d'Est-Bâton-Rouge et de Livingston étaient concernées. Or, en examinant la seconde section de cet acte l'on verra que la proposition du sénateur a pour but de soustraire à la règle posée par l'acte de 1852 certaines paroisses que le sénateur a l'honneur de représenter, et d'ajouter pour ces personnes, une année au sursis qui a déjà été accordé. En d'autres termes, il veut que le paiement du prix de ces terres ne soit exigible que le 17 mars 1854, au lieu de l'être le 17 mars 1852. La raison qu'il avance c'est que, si la Louisiane s'y refusait, elle agirait en créancier impitoyable, qu'elle renouvellerait Shylock, en exigeant l'accomplissement rigoureux du contrat. Peut-on lui reprocher d'être impitoyable, lorsqu'elle a déjà accordé un crédit d'une année auquel ces hommes n'avaient aucun droit ? Pourquoi les paroisses de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge seraient-elles traitées plus favorablement qu'aucune autre paroisse de l'Etat ? De quel droit le sénateur réclame-t-il pour elles des avantages dont ne jouissent pas les autres paroisses ? Pourquoi seraient-elles l'objet d'une faveur spéciale ? Peut-être l'honorable sénateur ne demande-t-il pas mieux que d'effacer le nom de ces deux paroisses et d'étendre la proposition à tout l'Etat.— La question se réduit donc à savoir, s'il est juste et convenable d'accorder deux années de crédit au lieu d'une aux personnes qui se sont établies sur les terres marécageuses. Mais, je suis, dit M. Hodge, opposé à cette nouvelle extension. L'acte de 1852 accorde un credit d'une année. L'acte du Congrès exige que le produit de ces terres soit appliqué à un système général de levées. Ces fonds ne sauraient être distraits de cet objet spécial.—Ce n'est qu'en leur conservant cette destination particulière que nous pourrons réaliser nos vastes plans d'améliorations intérieures. Mais si l'honorable sénateur insiste sur l'adoption de ce bill, je proposerai d'effacer les noms des paroisses de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, attendu que, dans mon opinion, mes constituants ont autant de droits aux libéralités du Sénat que ceux des sénateurs d'Est-Bâton-Rouge et de Livingston.

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe a écouté avec la plus grande attention les objections que l'on a fait valoir contre le bill, et il pense qu'elles se réduiront à bien peu. Il n'a rien entendu dans tout ce qui a été avancé contre le bill, qui fut de nature à faire repousser la demande qui est présentée. Le montant dont il s'agit est peu de chose pour l'Etat. L'encaissement peut en être retardé pendant un espace de temps sans que ce retard arrête l'établissement d'un système général de Levées. Cette faible somme ajouterait bien peu au fond spécial des terres et levées, tandis qu'elle serait d'une immense importance pour ces pauvres gens ; le paiement immédiat, c'est les soumettre à d'énormes sacrifices. Pour sa part, c'est de grand cœur qu'il votera en faveur du bill.

M. Hodge désire expliquer les raisons qui l'ont porté à s'opposer au bill. C'est le principe qu'il combat: le bill propose d'étendre d'un an ou deux le terme au bout duquel ceux qui occupent ou exploitent des terres en marais dans les paroisses d'Est Baton Rouge et de Livingston devront les payer. Si, conformément aux recommandations de ce bill, nous étendons ce terme d'une année, ne pouvons-nous aussi l'étendre de cinq ans ?

On a avancé cet argument :—que cette extension du terme serait à l'avantage de certaines personnes ! Si notre but en passant des lois est d'avantager en particulier tel ou tel citoyen, où nous arrêterons-nous dans cette voie ? Si nous faisons des lois pour avantager telle ou telle classe de nos citoyens, toutes les fois que la demande nous en est faite ; si nous accordons un crédit additionnel d'un an ou deux seulement parce que cette extension de temps serait avantageuse à ceux en faveur de qui elle est faite, pourquoi ne pas dire une fois que nous devons donner cent acres de terre à chaque pauvre de l'Etat ou leur donner toute autre chose qu'ils pourraient demander ?

Je le répète, je suis opposé au principe établi par ce bill Je ne vois pas en vertu de quelle règle aucune partie de notre population aurait plus de droit qu'une autre à des faveurs de ce genre. L'Etat est possesseur de propriétés et si l'on fait un emprunt sur ses terres, on pourrait tout aussi bien, d'après ce principe, emprunter sur les ouvriers, sur les bateaux de l'Etat. Cet emprunt ne serait pas autre chose que ce que l'on fait aujourd'hui en demandant un plus long terme pour payer ces terres.

Si nous adoptons une fois ce principe, si nous établissons un précédent aussi dangereux, qui peut dire à quoi nous serons plus tard amenés !

M. Hodge fait alors la motion d'effacer les mots:—«dans les paroisses de Livingston et d'Est Bâton Rouge »

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il s'opposera à cet amendement.

M. Rivers fait la remarque que le seul effet de l'amendement sera d'accorder cette extension additionnelle à tous ceux qui occupent des terres publiques dans tout l'Etat.

M. Lacey—Le sénateur soutiendrait-il un bill général ?

Plusieurs membres répondent oui !

Quelques sénateurs prennent tour-à-tour la parole.

Après eux, M. Hodge se lève encore et dit que si ce bill doit être adopté, il désire que l'Etat tout entier voie bien la position prise par l'autre côté du Sénat, il veut dire par la majorité des sénateurs. Si le sénateur de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge est déterminé à n'appuyer en particulier que les prétentions de ces deux seules paroisses, lui, (M. Hodge) s'y opposera de toutes ses forces. Il ajoute : je ne puis consentir à l'adoption d'une mesure qui ne bénéficierait qu'aux seules paroisses du sénateur

M. Wickliffe—Si le sénateur avait observé plus attentativement, il aurait vu que du côté du Sénat où il se trouve plusieurs membres ont voté en faveur de ce qu'il semble, lui, considérer comme le nec-plus-ultra de l'injustice; il aurait vu que l'intention et que le désir de faire adopter ce bill ne sont pas, comme il le dit, limités à nous seuls.

M Hodge—J'ai dit : «à la majorité des sénateurs.»

M. Wickliffe—De ce côté-ci du Sénat.

M Hodge—J'avais dit d'abord «de l'autre coté du Sénat;» mais je me suis repris et j'ai dit «la majorité des sénateurs »

M Short—J'ai de fortes objections contre ce bill, même avec l'amendement proposé. Celles que j'avais d'abord contre le bill ont été encore augmentees par l'amendement qui en fait encore plus sortir les funestes dispositions.

Le bill proposait d'abord d'appliquer une partie du fonds des levées à un autre usage qu'à celui auquel il est destiné ou plutôt d'en réduire le montant pendant un certain temps. L'amendement aurait un bien plus mauvais effet encore. Je suis opposé à tout système en vertu duquel le produit de la vente des terres publiques serait affecté à aucun autre usage qu'à la construction des levées, et employé dans un but politique et en vue d'élections.

Le bill passe enfin avec l'amendement.

M. Martin fait la motion de prendre en considération le bill autorisant les citoyens de la paroisse de Terrebonne à se taxer eux-mêmes pour les améliorations intérieures.

M. Martin.—Je suis maintenant et j'ai toujours été opposé a ce que la Législature prit aucune action au sujet de ce bill, pour cette raison : que j'apprends du représentant de Terrebonne qu'il y a quelques jours, il a présenté à la Chambre un mémoire du jury de police relativement à cette même question qui fait l'objet du bill, et que ce mémoire a été référé à un comité.

Les circonstances étant telles, je crois que c'est de la part des sénateurs du district dont la paroisse de Terrebonne forme une partie, un acte discourtois envers le représentant direct des intérêts de la paroisse de Terrebonne, que de chercher à obtenir que le Sénat agisse le premier sur un bill de cette nature. Le membre de la Chambre basse, délégué par la paroisse de Terrebonne, doit être par nous considéré comme le représentant direct et fidèle des intérêts et des vœux de ses constituants.

Je suis encore informé par le même représentant que, dans son opinion, ce mémoire du jury de police n'est pas l'expression du vœu de ses constituants, et qu'il a pris la résolution de se rendre de nouveau au milieu d'eux dans le but d'avoir des indications précises à ce sujet. J'ai l'intime conviction que ce représentant ne faillira pas à son devoir.

Je ne suis pas sûr que le peuple de cette paroisse veuille ainsi se taxer lui-même ; au contraire, je doute fort qu'une majorité des contribuables de Terrebonne soit de l'avis du jury de police. Le jury de police n'a pas soumis au peuple de cette paroisse la question de taxation pour la construction de chemins de fer. Je désire être bien sûr que le vœu de la majorité des contribuables de Terrebonne soit que ce bill devienne loi. Jusqu'à ce que j'en sois sûr je ne puis voter dans ce sens.

Digitized by Google

Mon opinion étant que les seuls biens qui bénéficient de la construction des chemins de fer sont les propriétés foncières, je suis d'avis que ces propriétés seules doivent être taxées pour les améliorations intérieures.

Je me flatte de déployer toujous dans cet honorable corps le même sèle pour les intérêts de mes constituants, et je crois pouvoir le faire tout aussi bien que mon collègue. Mais, en même temps, que je suis disposé à deployer toute l'activité, tout le zèle possibles, je ne perdrai jamais de vue les égards que je dois aux membres de la Chambre basse, représentant une paroisse du District qui m'a nommé.

Pour ces raisons, je demande donc du Sénat de ne prendre maintenant aucune determination au sujet de ce bill ; mais de le déposer sur le bureau sujet à l'appel, alors seulement que le représentant de la paroisse de Terrebonne aura eu le temps de prendre toutes les informations qu'il désire, et qu'il ait pu s'assurer du vœu de la majorité de ses constituants, et alors seulement que j'aurai eu moi-même le temps d'obtenir des informations.

M. Kittridge—Je vais expliquer le but de cet amendement. En premier lieu, monsieur, le rail road du Nord des Opelousas parcourt une partie de cette paroisse de Terrebonne, et une loi générale autorise l'imposition d'une taxe sur les proprietés foncières seulement, pourvu qu'une majorité du vote populaire se prononce en faveur de cette mesure. L'amendement qu'on nous propose ne change rien, n'ôte rien, n'ajoute rien au principe exposé dans cette loi, c'est-à-dire le droit accordé à une majorité de taxer, la minorité aussi bien qu'elle-même.

Il ne s'en suit pas du tout que le peuple de Terrebonne s'imposera aucune taxe pour les améliorations intérieures, si l'amendement est adopté par la Législature. Mais on considère que la loi actuelle est injuste et oppressive et l'on desire qu'elle soit changée.

On me demandera peut-être qui veut ce changement ? Qui ? les propriétaires d'esclaves eux-mêmes. Au nombre des membres du juri de police qui a rédigé ces résolutions et a demandé cet amendement, je vois quatre de nos plus riches planteurs et plusieurs autres très influents.

Ces planteurs resident dans différentes parties de la paroisse ; on ne dira donc pas que ce n'est qu'une expression partielle de l'opinion publique.

En corrobation de l'opinion exprimee par le peuple de Terrebonne que la loi actuelle est injuste et oppressive, je citerai la paroisse de Lafourche-Intérieure où la question de taxation a été soumise en novembre dernier au vote populaire. Le vote en faveur de la taxation a été de cinquante dans la paroisse toute entière; devinez-vous pourquoi ? Parce qu'on considérait qu'il était injuste de taxer les petits propriétaires de terres, tandis qu'une immense quantité de propriétés consistant en nègres, appartenant aux plus riches propriétaires, n'étaient pas taxées.

M. le président. — Pour moi je suis d'avis qu'ils avaient raison Mais l'on me répète que ce sont les terres surtout qui profitent et augmentent en valeur par l'établissement de chemins de fer.

Je dois dire encore que je ne saurais partager cet avis. Sans doute les terres augmentent en valeur, mais l'avantage est beaucoup plus considérable pour les terres qui sont bien cultivées et travaillées par un grand nombre de nègres. C'est en transportant au marché le produit du travail de ses nègres qu'un propriétaire accroit la valeur de sa propriété. M. le président, j'ai eu moi-même quelque experience de cette question dans cette même paroisse de Terrebonne. J'étais co-propriétaire d'une sucrerie et le prix du transport d'un boucaut de sucre à la Nouvelle-Orléans, était de $3 1|4 à $3 1|2 par boucaut.

Je suppose maintenant que les citoyens de cette paroisse se décident à souscrire pour la construction d'un chemin de fer et qu'ils obtiennent le transport de leur sucre à la Nouvelle-Orléans, à $1|2 par boucaut. Alors, monsieur, sur une récolte de 500 boucauts de sucre, il y aurait une économie de $1,000.

Pour ces raisons, M. le président, je suis d'avis que nous devons autoriser la paroisse de Terrebonne à faire elle-même l'assessement des propriétés taxables pour les souscriptions aux chemins de fer ou autres améliorations intérieures, si, dans leur sagesse, ils jugent convenable de le faire.

M. King fait la remarque que le bill n'est pas rédigé dans la forme constitutionnelle, attendu qu'il ne cite pas en entier la section de l'acte antérieur qu'il propose d'amender.

M. Wickliffe ne pense pas que le bill soit devant le Sénat pour être discuté maintenant et que par conséquent le débat est hors de saison.

M. Martin dit que son seul but en appelant ce bill était d'en faire ajourner la prise en considération. Il désire être présent lorsque cela aura lieu, et comme il est forcé de s'absenter pour quelques jours, il voudrait être sûr que le bill ne sera pas discuté pendant son absence. Mon collègue, ajoute-t-il, prétend représenter la paroisse de Terrebonne en opposition à celui qui en est le représentant direct. Je représente tout aussi bien que mon collègue cette paroisse. Je connais tout aussi bien que lui les intérêts de la paroisse de Terrebonne et je ferai tout ce qui est en mon pouvoir pour les protéger et les défendre.

M. Kittridge. — Le sénateur semble croire que je n'ai pas le droit de parler au nom des citoyens de Terrebonne. Il devrait cependant savoir qu'ils ont voté pour moi et en très grand nombre.

M. Martin. — Je n'ai rien dit de pareil.

LES COURS DANS LA PAROISSE D'ORLEANS

Le bill pourvoyant à l'établissement des Cours de District dans la paroisse d'Orléans est pris en considération.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de l'amender en effaçant le chiffre 6 et en lui substituant le chiffre 5 pour le nombre des Cours qui devront être établies.

M. McCay dit que sous la Constitution de 1845, cinq Cours ont été établies dans la paroisse d'Orléans et l'on n'a pas trouvé que ce nombre fut trop grand pour l'immense quantité d'affaires qui y sont continuellement portées. Depuis lors la ville de Lafayette a été annexée et cette annexion a nécessairement ajouté aux affaires règulières de ces Cours toutes celles qui peuvent surgir au milieu d'une population de 15,000 âmes. Si ces messieurs pouvaient être quelques semaines seulement à la Nouvelle-Orléans et qu'ils pussent voir par eux-mêmes quelle immense quantité d'affaires sont continuellement devant ces Cours, s'ils les voyaient par eux-mêmes au milieu de l'été, après un terme excessivement laborieux, ils arriveraient bien certainement à la conclusion que la tâche est déjà trop forte et ils ne penseraient plus à la surcharger encore, ils ne penseraient plus à ajouter encore à la tâche de juges déjà accablés, épuisés.

La ville de Lafayette est maintenant annexée à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Le nombre ordinaire des affaires dans cette dernière ville était de 1,000 par an et cela est à ajouter à la juridiction des Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Mes collègues comprendront enfin, je l'espère, qu'une 6me Cour est absolument indispensable pour ce surcroit d'affaires.

M. Wickliffe dit que les circonstances étant telles et en consideration des explications données par le Sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, il n'insistera plus sur son amendement. Néanmoins il pense toujours que toutes les affaires de la paroisse d'Orléans pourraient être décidées par cinq juges. Je ne vois pas, ajoute-t-il, pourquoi nous en nommerions six. Nous devons toujours chercher à diminuer le plus possible nos dépenses, et chacun sait que déjà les dépenses du département judiciaire sont énormes. Je voudrais diminuer les dépenses de l'Etat et c'est pourquoi j'avais fait la motion de ne nommer que cinq juges au lieu de six.

M. King dit que la paroisse d'Orléans ne demandait pas une augmentation du nombre des Cours; tout ce qu'elle désire obtenir c'est ce que la loi a déjà accordé. Personne n'ignore que jusqu'aujourd'hui les Cours y étaient forcées de siéger presque continuellement. Deux étaient en session pendant l'année entière et les autres n'avaient qu'un court recès pendant l'été. Si vous ajoutez à leur besogne déjà écrasante le surcroit que doit nécessairement apporter l'annexion d'une ville qui compte 15,000 habitans, si vous faites passer encore devant ces cinq Cours toutes les affaires qui peuvent survenir au milieu de cette population, et qui au dire du sénateur qui représente directement le quatrième district s'élèvent à environ mille par an, ce serait assurément surcharger le char de la justice et en entraver la marche. Je ne pense pas que l'on désire ce résultat. J'espère donc qu'on accordera à la paroisse d'Orléans ce que les personnes qui y résident savent être indispensable pour ses intérêts et pour la prompte et sûre administration de la justice.

Digitized by Google

M. McCay dit qu'il a quelques observations à présenter. Il désire informer le Sénat que les 19|20mes des affaires décidées par les cours du 3me District judiciaire seraient rejetées sur les cours de la paroisse d'Orléans, par l'annexion de Lafayette. Une sixième Cour est donc absolument indispensable, et, en la demandant, la paroisse d'Orléans ne demande rien d'exorbitant; elle ne demande rien que ce qui a déjà existé, rien que ce que l'acte de consolidation a rendu absolument indispensable. Il espère que de même que les membres de la ville sont disposés à accéder à tout ce que suggéreront les sénateurs de la campagne relativement à l'organisation du département judiciaire dans les paroisses; de même ces derniers doivent se montrer aussi bien disposés envers les sénateurs de la ville et marcher avec eux, lorsque ceux-ci proposent ce qui n'est que juste et raisonnable.

M. Burthe désire informer le sénateur d'Ouest-Feliciana [M. Wickliffe], que 300 affaires criminelles seulement ont été portées de Jefferson. Le nombre des affaires civiles a été nécessairement beaucoup plus grand. Comment tout ce travail additionnel peut-il être fait si ce n'est par une augmentation du nombre des juges. Il ne croit pas que toutes les affaires d'Orléans puissent être décidées par moins de six Cours.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il retirera volontiers son amendement.

M. Hodge—Monsieur l'Orateur, je renouvelle l'amendement. Je désire que l'on comprenne bien que je n'ai aucune prévention contre la Nouvelle-Orléans. Au contraire, je désire aider, autant qu'il est en mon pouvoir, à sa prospérité. Mais, on ne peut s'y tromper, le peuple a signifié d'une manière évidente qu'il veut qu'à l'avenir l'administration de la justice soit plus économique. Lors donc qu'on me demande mon concours à une mesure qui est de nature à augmenter les dépenses de l'Etat, je veux que l'on me démontre la nécessité absolue de cette mesure. Vous avez déjà cinq Cours dans la paroisse d'Orléans, et maintenant vous en demandez six, tandis qu'il n'y aura que ce nombre pour tout le reste de l'Etat, d'après le projet qui est devant le Sénat. Les Cours de District pour la paroisse d'Orléans, coûtent déjà $21,000; les Cours pour tout le reste de l'Etat coûtent à peu près la même somme; de sorte que la paroisse d'Orléans doit avoir, à elle seule, autant d'importance que toutes les autres paroisses réunies. Il est vrai qu'une grande partie des affaires de Lafayette doivent maintenant échoir aux Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans; mais je crois que les cinq Cours de cette ville peuvent suffire à cet accroissement de besogne. Je ne voterai certainement pas pour une sixième Cour, tant que l'on ne m'aura pas prouvé qu'elle est d'une absolue nécessité. Pourquoi ne nous a-t-on pas fourni la preuve de cette nécessité? Jusqu'à présent on s'est contenté de nous dire que les juges des Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans ont plus de besogne qu'ils n'en peuvent faire. Je ne crains pas de dire que dans mon District, le dix-septième District judiciaire, on dépêche plus d'affaires que dans aucune Cour de District de la Nouvelle-Orléans, en exceptant toutefois la Cour du Premier District, présidée par le juge Larue.

Eh! quoi donc, M. le président, mes collègues ignorent-ils que le peuple a manifesté la volonté de voir les dépenses réduites? Ne savent-ils pas que c'est ce désir qui a été l'une des principales causes qui ont fait convoquer une convention chargée de remanier notre charte constitutionnelle? Ne savent-ils pas que d'un bout à l'autre de l'Etat, et pendant des années on n'a, pour ainsi dire, entendu qu'un seul cri: «économie, réductions!» Ignorent-ils que le système judiciaire, tel qu'il existe aujourd'hui, est une plaie, et que le peuple demande que l'on allége le fardeau que ce système fait peser sur lui; et, s'ils savent tout cela, s'ils connaissent le désir du peuple de voir établir un système économique, comment donc peuvent-ils nous recommander une mesure dont l'effet immédiat serait d'augmenter les dépenses et conséquemment les taxes. Pourquoi ne nous montre-t-il pas le dossier, la liste des affaires qui sont enrégistrées sur les livres des différentes Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans? Je répète, monsieur l'Orateur, que, dans mon opinion, les juges des Cour de la Nouvelle-Orléans n'ont pas plus de besogne qu'ils ne peuvent en faire. Dernièrement j'étais à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et, pendant mon séjour dans cette ville, j'ai fait des recherches à ce sujet pour pouvoir juger en connaissance de cause, au cas où il se présenterait une proposition semblable à celle qui nous occupe. Il est résulté pour moi de ces recherches, que les affaires légales avaient beaucoup diminuées à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et que les frais perçus cette année étaient à-peu-près la moitié de ce qu'ils avaient été, il y a quelques années. Je le répète, monsieur, je veux avoir la preuve qu'il n'y a urgence à créer une sixième Cour. Je veux connaître le nombre des affaires dans chaque cour; mais, si mes collégues veulent en venir aux preuves, avant de décider la question, je suis sûr qu'ils verront qu'il y a plus d'affaires dans la Cour du 17me District Judiciaire que dans aucune des Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans, à l'exception d'une seule.

M. McCay—Combien d'affaires le juge de cette cour a-t-il eu en une année?

M. Hodge—Je ne puis dire au juste; mais je sais que, pour la paroisse de Caddo seule, il en a eu 750, et il y a quatre autres paroisses dans son ressort. Il faut qu'il voyage à travers de quatre paroisses, qu'il siége dans chacune d'elles, de cette sorte que tout son temps est pris.

Les Cours à la Nouvelle-Orléans ouvrent à 10 heures et ajournent à 3. Dans les campagnes, la Cour s'ouvre de meilleure heure, et souvent siége jusqu'à une heure avancée de la nuit. Je termine en répétant que si l'on veut nous faire adopter une mesure dont l'effet est d'augmenter les dépenses, les partisans de la mesure doivent établir, par des preuves irrécusables, que le besoin dn cette mesure se fait impérieusement sentir.

M. King—J'espère que je puis satisfaire mon collègue quant aux renseignements qu'il demande, pourvu toutefois qu'il veuille s'en rapporter au témoignage universel des membres de la ville. Peut-être ce témoignage ne sera-t-il pas considéré suffisant par mon collègue? Peut-être exigera-t-il que nous soyons assermentés avant qu'il reçoive notre témoignage. Quant à moi, je ne ferai pas à l'honorable Sénateur l'injure d'exiger de lui un serment comme garantie de sa véracité, lorsqu'il nous dit qu'il y a eu, en une année, 750 affaires enrégistrées dans la paroisse de Caddo, quoique ce nombre me semble bien considérable, mais passons. Nous avons dit aux membres de la campagne: établissez vos Cours comme vous l'entendez, et nous vous donnerons notre appui. Quant à la Nouvelle-Orléans, elle ne demande que ce qu'elle a toujours eu; tout ce qu'elle demande, c'est que le nombre de ses cours ne soit pas réduit. Quand elle borne là ses prétentions, quand elle ne songe pas à contrarier nos vues, je ne vois pas comment vous pourriez hésiter à accéder à sa demande. Quelques membres semblent penser que nous voulons faire augmenter le nombre de nos Cours. C'est-là une erreur. Nous ne demanderons qu'à garder le nombre que nous avons toujours eu. Sous un nom différent, la sixième Cour ne fera que remplacer la Cour qui existait à Lafayette avant l'acte de Consolidation. Les dix-neuf-vingtièmes des affaires de cette cour sont fournis par la Nouvelle-Orléans, et mes collègues n'exigent pas un certificat....

M. Hodge—L'honorable sénateur se trompe étrangement sur le sens de mes paroles. Je n'ai jamais voulu faire entendre que je mets en doute la parole des membres de la ville, je faisais remarquer que jusqu'à présent on n'avait pas donné le chiffre précis des affaires enregistrées dans les Cours de la Nouvelle Orléans. Je n'ai certainement pas songé à me rendre coupable d'un manque de convenance tel que l'honorable sénateur semble me reprocher.

M. King—Je suis heureux d'entendre cette explication de la bouche du sénateur.

M. Hodge—J'ai compris que le sénateur de la Nouvelle Orléans, (M. McCay) avait avancé que les affaires qui sont aujourd'hui du ressort de la Cour de Lafayette retomberaient, pour les dix-neuf vingtièmes, sur les Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et que le nombre des affaires dans cette Cour s'élève à 1000 par an.

Digitized by Google

Mais je n'ai pas encore appris le nombre des affaires dans les cinq Cours de la Nouvelle Orléans. Voilà ce que j'ai voulu dire.

M. King—Si l'honorable sénateur désirait des renseignements sur ce point. il ne pouvait s'adresser à deux personnes plus capables de lui en donner que le général Lewis, qui a été pendant plusieurs années shérif de la paroisse d'Orléans, et moi-même, je suis sûr que le général Lewis dira avec moi que dans l'une de ses Cours le nombre des affaires s'élève à 1200 par an et qu'il n'en est pas une où il soit beaucoup au-dessous de 1000. Elles ont toutes une juridiction concurrente ; mais dans quelques-unes, certaines catégories d'affaires ont un rang de préférence sur le registre. De cette manière les affaires sont divisées à peu près également entre les différentes Cours, à l'exception de la première Cour de District qui a un peu moins d'affaires civiles mais qui en a encore un grand nombre. La personne dont le sénateur de Caddo tient que les affaires judiciaires ont diminué a voulu probablement dire que la profession était moins lucrative, non pas que le nombre des affaires était moindre. Elles ont diminué, quant au montant en litige, mais non quant au nombre. Cette décroissance est dûe à ce fait, que, la crise de 37 et de 38, a produit un nombre considérable de procès, une foule d'affaires de faillite considérables, qui, jusqu'à ces derniers temps, n'étaient pas encore épuisées. Cependant les affaires de cette nature sont maintenant terminées. Je déduis de mes propres observations que le nombre des affaires s'est accru, bien que les montants en dispute aient, sans aucun doute, diminué Mais les affaires peu considérables sont autant de trop que celles qui le sont plus, et réclament de la part de la Cour une attention tout aussi grande.

M. Hodge—Je demande au sénateur quel est le tems pendant lequel les Cours de la Nouvelle Orléans sont dans l'habitude de siéger.

M. King—Elles siégent de six heures à trois, excepté dans le cas d'affaires soumises au juri. Elles siegent alors, jusqu'à une heure très avancée de la soirée. Le juge Reynolds siége très souvent toute l'après-diner. Pendant l'été ces Cours s'ouvrent à neuf heures et ajournent à trois.

Eh bien,monsieur,lorsque nous démontrons que dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans seule, il se plaide plus de deux fois autant d'affaires que dans tout le reste de l'Etat, quand nous montrons que les juges ont déjà devant eux autant de besogne qu'ils peuvent en faire, et qu'on veut leur imposer un surcroît d'à-peu-près mille affaires venant de Lafayette, nous pensons démontrer la nécessité de l'établisssement de cette cour de District. Le sénat connait la proportion de la taxe payée par la Nouvelle Orléans. Ce n'est pas tout-à-fait, mais c'est presque la moitié de la taxe totale de l'Etat, quarante pour cent comme dit le sénateur de Concordia. Je le dis aussi, messieurs, et cependant vous voulez nous refuser ce qui est absolument nécessaire et ce qui n'élèvera pas les dépenses de notre système judiciaire au-delà de $21,000 par an.

M. Wickliffe.—Suivant l'arithmétique de Pike: quatre fois six font vingt-quatre, et les salaires de six juges à $4,000 chacun feront $24,000.

M. King.—Le bill propose un salaire de $3,500.

M. Wickliffe lit un passage d'un bill qui propose $4,000. Il fait observer que d'après ce bill il n'y aurait que huit districts pour tout l'Etat, en dehors de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. King —Le Sénateur se trompe de bill. Ce n'est pas celui que je soutiens. Il dit que la proposition est de donner seulement huit juges de district à la Campagne. Si telle est la proposition, la faute n'en est point à la délégation de la ville. Nous avons toujours dit aux membres de la campagne : " Agissez comme vous l'entendrez relativement à l'établissement du judiciaire dans les campagnes, tout ce que vous proposerez de raisonnable, nous l'accepterons. " Nous savons seulement que nous payons la plus grande partie des salaires. On a proposé vingt-sept juges de district, on demande actuellement une Cour des preuves pour chaque paroisse. Et nous, monsieur, nous ne demandons pas de Cour des Preuves, nous ne demandons pas d'autres cours que celles que nous possédons déjà, si nous basions nos réclamations sur l'importance des affaires de la ville, nous pourrions demander une part beaucoup plus considérable, mais nous ne le faisons pas, et toute l'augmentation que nous réclamons est un leger accroissement de salaire pour le juge de la Sixième Cour. En pareilles circonstances, nous sommes il me semble, très modérés dans nos désirs, en remarquant surtout que le bill a été rapporté par le comité pendant l'absence des membres qui composent la délégation de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Hodge.—Le Comite Judiciaire n'a jamais présenté de rapport favorable à la création de six cours de District à la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. King.—Le Sénateur d'Est Baton Rouge veut-il bien préciser les faits.

M. Lacey.—Le rapport du comité judiciaire est sur le bureau du secrétaire. Il est en faveur d'une sixième cour.

M. King.—Je dois croire que le bill imprimé est celui que le comité a rapporté. Ce bill a été préparé par le barreau de la Nouvelle-Orléans qui l'a unanimement approuvé. Comme l'expression de l'opinion publique, comme l'expression des vœux d'une partie de la communauté plus particulièrement interressée à la question, ce bill a certainement droit au respect des membres de la campagne. S'ils étaient aussi unanimes à propos d'une mesure spéciale, il faudrait qu'il contint, pour provoquer notre opposition, quelque disposition bien contraire aux interêts de la Nouvelle-Orléans. J'espère qu'il n'y a pas ici de disposition à traiter la Nlle-Orléans en étrangère à notre sol, ou à lui refuser ce que ses intérêts réclament. Cette mesure est pour elle d'une indispensable nécessité, et j'espère qu'elle ne sera pas rejetée. Si les Sénateurs de la campagne présentent quelque projet avec une semblable unanimité, je serais le dernier à m'y opposer.

M. Wickliffe.—Avant que le senateur ne reprenne son siège, je voudrais lui poser une question.

Il dit que la paroisse d'Orléans paie 40 pour cent de taxes....

M. King.—J'ai avancé ce fait d'après l'autorité du sénateur de Concordia (M. Rivers).

M. Wicliffe.—La proportion est réellement un peu moindre. Je désirerais que le sénateur mit en regard ce que la ville paie et ce qu'elle reçoit.

M. King.—Je ne suis pas prêt maintenant à satisfaire sur ce point mon collègue.

M. McCay.—Je pense que le sénateur, M. Hodge, ne désire pas trouver de preuves en faveur de cette mesure. Pour moi, personnellement, j'ai tout lieu de penser que dans les campagnes les juges ne siègent pas huit mois dans l'année. Ils n'ont bien certainement pas autant à faire que les juges de la ville. La population n'est pas considérable dans les districts des campagnes, et la quantité des procès ne peut pas y être aussi grande qu'en ville. En conséquence, pour ce qui concerne le nombre des affaires et l'étendue de la population, je n'ai aucune objection à soutenir la comparaison avec ce 17me district qu'on nous présente comme si redoutable. Quant au nombre des affaires à la Cour commerciale, je ne suis pas assez heureux pour pouvoir presenter au sénateur un certificat qui le satisfasse ; mais, d'après les renseignements qui viennent du greffier, je puis les estimer à 1,300.

Dans la seconde Cour, les affaires des preuves ont la préférence, et pour les affaires ordinaires cette Cour a juridiction concurrente. Je ne sais pas le nombre des affaires qui s'y enregistrent, mais je puis dire, qu'appelé par mes affaires à m'y trouver souvent, je n'ai pour ainsi dire jamais vu le juge Lee hors de son siège.

La cinquième Cour est présidée par le juge Buchanan, qui règle plus d'affaires et les décide correctement, plus qu'aucun autre juge de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Mais voyez donc, Monsieur, les Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans occupées huit mois de l'année, tandis qu'elles ne le sont que quatre à la campagne. Ajoutez à cela les ordres interlocutoires, les affaires où s'exerce la récusation pendant les quatre mois d'été. Considérez en outre les 300 affaires criminelles et les mille affaires civiles qui prennent naissance à Lafayette, et vous pourrez vous faire une idée du travail que nos juges auront à accomplir. Nous n'avons pas, il est vrai, des certificats à l'appui de tout cela ; mais nous savons que le barreau tout entier de la Nouvelle-Orléans, M. J. P. Benjamin en tête, reconnait la nécessité de six Cours et en demande la création à la Législature.

C'est là une chose qui touche l'intérêt, non pas de la ville seule, mais de l'Etat tout entier. Que quelqu'un des sénateurs aille à la ville pour trouver une affaire de faillite ou une affaire quelconque, qu'elle soit, où la trouvera-t-il ? Si c'est une affaire de Cour des Preuves, il s'adressera à la Cour où ce genre d'affaires a droit à une préférence ; s'il s'agit d'une affaire de faillite, ce sera à une autre ; si c'est une affaire criminelle, il se présentera à la première Cour ; si c'est une affaire commerciale, ce sera à la Quatrième. Il est donc clair que tout homme qui a des rapports d'affaires avec la Nouvelle-Orléans, a intérêt au système adopté pour l'organisation de son droit judiciaire. Je ne prétends pas dire que les juges y siégent depuis le point du jour jusqu'à la nuit close, mais je dis qu'ils y siègent pendant un temps raisonnable, depuis dix heures jusqu'à trois, et plus longtemps pendant le tiers de l'année.

Digitized by Google

Et maintenant, Monsieur, si c'est là une matière qui interesse l'Etat tout entier ; si le barreau tout entier en réclame l'accomplissement et en declare l'indispensable nécessité, je ne crains pas de dire que le sénateur est malvenu à demander un misérable certificat qu'on ne doit pas nous attendre à avoir constamment en poche, afin de convaincre le sénateur de l'utilité de cette loi.

Je soutiens, Monsieur, que six Cours sont aujourd'hui necessaires dans la paroisse d'Orléans. Car, sur 1700 cas autrefois plaidés devant les tribunaux de cette paroisse, il n'en reste que six cents ; le reste a été porté devant les Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et en outre, les 19|20 de 300 affaires criminelles ont été ajoutés à la liste des affaires de la Première Cour de District.

De là la nécessité d'une sixième Cour.

Je me souviens, à ce propos, de ce qui se passa à la dernière Convention. La paroisse de Jefferson fut séparée du district sénatorial auquel elle appartenait autrefois, et unie à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Mais, chose étrange, il ne fut fait à la representation sénatoriale de la Nouvelle-Orléans aucune addition correspondant à cet accroissement de population. Le district, qui perdit en population, ne subit aucune diminution dans sa représentation ; le district, dont la population fut accrue, ne gagna point en representation, bien que la population fut plus nombreuse dans la portion détachée que dans tout le reste du district. On semble penser qu'en demandant cette sixième Cour c'est un gain que nous voulons faire. Loin de là. D'après la loi qui est sous mes yeux, il y avait dix-sept Cours : Jefferson constituait le troisième judiciaire ; la Nouvelle-Orléans, avec ses cinq Cours, formait le premier. Cette sixième Cour ne constituerait pas un accroissement, car la plus grande partie de Jefferson a été incorporée à la Nouvelle-Orléans par l'acte de consolidation.

Je suis autant que n'importe qui en faveur d'un système de réduction et d'economie dans l'administration des affaires publiques; mais que l'on y réflechisse. Le sénateur de Concordia a dit que la ville paie 40 pour cent de la taxe totale. Il a raison. Un des bills propose d'etablir pour les campagnes un nombre de juges proportionnel à la quantité pour laquelle elles sont taxées. Je n'ai pas le désir de réduire les traitements des juges de la campagne ou d'augmenter ceux des juges de la ville, simplement parce qu'ils sont de la ville. Si les juges des campagnes ont plus à faire, donnez-leur des salaires plus élevés ; donnez-leur $3,500, $4,000 : mais ces messieurs demandent beaucoup plus que nous. Ils veulent avoir un juge par chaque paroisse.

M. Hodge.—Ce n'est pas moi qui veux cela.

M. McCay. — Je parle d'un bill qui le propose ; sans cela la depense totale du judiciaire s'elèverait à $55,000. dont $21,000 s'appliquerait à la ville et le reste aux campagnes. En procédant sur la base des contributions, il serait impossible de concevoir une proposition plus équitable.

J'espère que sur cette question les sénateurs ne vont pas se diviser en sénateurs de la campagne et en sénateurs de la ville. J'espère qu'ils la discuteront comme sénateurs de l'Etat de la Louisiane, et qu'ils n'exigeront point un certificat pour prouver la verite de toutes les assertions qui pourront être produites. Quant à moi, je ne suis point dans l'habitude de voyager avec un certificat dans ma poche. Remettons-nous en à la parole les uns des autres ; je suis prêt à ajouter foi à tout ce que pourra avancer le sénateur du dix-septième district ; mais qu'on ne dise pas ici telle paroisse paie tant et telle autre paroisse paie tant.

M. Wickliffe — Je ne suis pas celui qui a jeté la première pierre. Le sénateur dit que cette proposition est équitablement basée sur le montant des taxes payées par chaque section. Et quoi, monsieur, les allocations faites l'année dernière à la ville se sont élevées à $69,000, et aujourd'hui la ville s'écrie : « Nous payons une grande partie de la taxe et en conséquence nous devons obtenir ce que nous demandons. »

M. King. — Notre demande n'est pas basée là-dessus, mais bien sur la nécessité.

M. Wickliffe. — Je suis heureux d'entendre le sénateur se retracter.

M. Hodge. — Je suis peiné de voir que le sénateur, M. McCay, ne puisse rien trouver de mieux à exprimer que son irritation à propos d'une petite remarque qu'il m'est arrivé de faire dans le cours des debats. Quand ce sénateur me connaîtra mieux, il verra que je suis incapable de rien dire intentionnellement qui soit contraire à la courtoisie due à un collègue. Il est evident qu'il s'est entièrement mépris sur les remarques que j'ai faites à cette occasion et qu'il les a mal interprêtées. Je voulais seulement connaître le chiffre des affaires entrées dans les differentes Cours. J'ai prete une oreille attentive aux remarques des sénateurs qui me sont opposes, je n'ai pas acquis encore les renseignements que je desirais. Si les sénateurs avaient prêté la même attention, ils auraient reconnu que la question d'economie sur lesquelles je me suis principalement arrêté n'a point encore ete abordee. Les senateurs peuvent sourire d'incrédulité. Mais en affirmant que je n'avais aucune intention bleasante, j'ai fait tout ce que je croyais necessaire, et je ne ferai rien de plus. S'ils ne sont pas satisfaits j en suis désole, c'est à ces messieurs a agir comme ils l'entendront.

Je répète maintenant ce que j'ai dit précédemment. Je ne vois pas de raison pour établir une sixième cour de district dans la paroisse d'Orléans. Je n'ai rien entendu qui fut de nature à me convaincre que les juges ne peuvent suffire à la besogne. Au contraire, je crois qu'ils peuvent très bien expedier toutes les affaires qui leur sont soumises. En présence de ce fait je ne puis consentir à appuyer aucune mesure qui a pour effet d'augmenter vos depenses, au moment où leur reduction est impérieusement demandee par le peuple de l'Etat. Qu'on me demontre cependant la necessité de la mesure, et je la soutiendrai. Mais je sais que les juges ne siegent pas toute la journee à la Nouvelle Orléans. Dans mon district, je sais qu'ils siegent souvent très tard pendant la nuit, et que pendant quatre mois de l'année, pour ne pas dire cinq, désireux que je suis de me limiter au chiffre le plus bas, le juge a à voyager dans les paroisses de Bossier et de Claiborne, et dans les autres qui composent le District, qu'il est obligé de le faire quatre fois l'an, allant à cheval, sur de mauvais chemins, à travers un pays sauvage et non defriche, traversant des marais, des lagons et des prairies. Eh bien, monsieur, je dis sans crainte d'être dementi par les faits, que les juges de la ville n'ont pas autant de travail que ceux de la campagne. J'en appelle aux registres des Cours, et, si les senateurs le desirent, ils peuvent produire en preuve les certificats des greffiers. Mais examinons combien d'heures siégent les juges de la Nouvelle Orléans. C'est là la veritable pierre de touche. Nous savons tous qu'il y a des affaires de peu d'importance que les juges peuvent décider au nombre de trente ou quarante dans un jour et qu'il y en a d'autres qui peuvent leur demander une semaine. Il en résulte que le nombre des affaires decidees n'est pas une bonne base d'appreciation du travail des juges. La base véritable est le nombre d'heures pendant lesquelles le juge reste sur son siége. Je ne suis pas opposé à vos Cours Mes remarques n'ont été faites avec aucune intention offensante ; j'ai protesté de cela assez souvent, et je le fais pour la dernière fois.

Vous êtes venus comme représentans de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Vous êtes venus pour représenter l'intérêt de vos constituants, et vous le faites parfaitement, mais vous semblez croire que quand cela est accompli, vous n'avez plus rien à faire, que l'intérêt de la campagne est tout-à-fait etranger à celui de la ville. Je pense avec le Sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans, (M. Mc Cay) que nous devons agir comme Sénateur de la Louisiane, et non dans l'intérêt particulier d'une section, et je me flatte que personne dans cette enceinte n'est plus que moi dégagé de l'esprit sectionnel. Quand j'ai été en ville, j'ai pris des informations sur ce sujet, et j'ai formé mon opinion en conséquence. Je désirai connaître le nombre d'affaires qui sont portées devant les cours de la Nlle-Orléans, espérant qu'on ne dirait pas ici : " passez-nous la casse et nous vous passerons le séné. " Oh non ! nous ne pouvons ainsi diviser nos intérêts, nous devons réunir nos efforts et travailler en commun.—Essayez cinq juges cette année, et voyez si ce nombre peut vous suffire. Si vous revenez à la session prochaine nous dire que ce nombre de cours n'est pas suffisant pour expédier vos affaires, nous vous en donnerons une de plus.

Digitized by Google

M. Lacey.—Je pense, Monsieur le Président, que nous devrions décider cette question sans être mus par des considérations sectionnelles. Je ne puis penser qu'il soit nécessaire de calculer la proportion de taxes payée par chaque paroisse ou par chaque section particulière de l'Etat. Cette considération n'a rien à faire avec la question qui nous occupe. Quant à moi je suis disposé à donner à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans autant de juges que ses interêts le demandent et à augmenter leur salaire de manière à assurer le concours des hommes de talent. Je diffère d'opinion à ce sujet avec le Sénateur de Caddo, (M. Hodge). Je ne pense pas que notre principal désir doive être de diminuer les dépenses du judiciaire et de le faire reposer sur la base la plus économique. Ce que nous devons vouloir d'abord, c'est d'assurer une prompte terminaison des affaires plaidées devant nos cours, et, dans ce cas particulier, je diffère d'opinion avec le Sénateur. Je crois que les interêts de la Nlle-Orléans réclament six juges. Celà m'est démontré par les résolutions unanimement adoptées par le barreau tout entier de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et aussi bien par ceux de ses membres qui tiennent le premier rang que par ceux qui sont dans une position inférieure. Quand je vois cette disposition de la part d'une population qui paie une grande partie de nos taxes, et qui doit elle-même contribuer à l'augmentation de dépenses resultant d'une autre cour, je ne puis faire autrement que de conclure que c'est nécessaire. Pourrais-je agir autrement ? Lorsque tout le barreau de la ville déclare unanimement que c'est nécessaire, puis-je refuser de le croire ? Non. Ce sont les meilleurs juges de la question. Je suis donc d'avis de donner à la paroisse d'Orléans tout ce que propose le bill maintenant soumis au Sénat.

Les senateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans m'ont dit que c'était nécessaire, le barreau m'en a dit autant. Je suis, par conséquent, obligé de croire que six Cours sont indispensables pour l'expédition des affaires legales de la ville. Quant à moi, c'est là une évidence qui vaut bien le certificat demandé par le sénateur de Caddo [M. Hodge.]

M. Hodge—Ce n'est pas vrai.

M. Lacey—J'entends ce qu'a demandé le sénateur, Puisqu'il est si méticuleux, je dirais la chose que le sénateur a demandée. Lorsque le bill était devant la Chambre, les opinions furent partagées. L'un des membres pensait que cinq Cours étaient suffisantes. J'étais, avec d'autres, d'une opinion différente. J'appuyai en conséquence la proposition de six Cours. Pour m'éclairer sur ce sujet, j'envoyai une dépêche à MM. Benjamin et Micou. Je n'ai pas reçu la reponse de ces messieurs; mais je me suis adressé à M. Hiestand, président du comité judiciaire, qui m'a fourni des renseignements qui me suffisent. En une année 1,276 affaires ont été entrées dans la Première Cour de District. Quelle est la Cour qui peut suffire à 1,276 affaires par an, si ce n'est peut-être celle devant laquelle plaide le sénateur de Caddo ? Dans la Seconde le chiffre est de 819, dans la Troisième 1,004, dans la Quatrième 890, dans la Cinquième 1,014. En supposant que les Cours siégent chaque jour, excepte le dimanche, il faut qu'elles décident trois affaires par jour, pour expédier en une année les affaires de la Cour qui en compte le moins. Une affaire ne consiste pas simplement dans la question du fond. Quand on réfléchit aux exceptions, sur différentes questions évidentes qui surgissent dans une affaire, on doit convenir que c'est beaucoup de decider trois affaires par jour. L'acte de consolidation de la ville a jeté sur la Nouvelle-Orléans un surcroit de population de 26,000; c'est dans le ressort de la Nouvelle-Orléans que doivent se porter les affaires correspondant à cette population. En face de ce surcroit d'affaires, vous refusez d'augmenter le nombre de nos juges, déjà écrasés de travail ! Il est possible que nos Cours ajournent quelque fois à 3 heures, mais combien de fois siégent-elles à une heure avancée de la soirée ? et il y a compensation. Mais les régistres sont là, et leur témoignage ne peut être refuté.

Monsieur l'Orateur, je ne me laisse avaugler par aucun sentiment. Je vois la Nouvelle-Orléans du même œil qu'aucune autre partie de l'Etat, et je ne me laisserai jamais entrainer par des préocupations de localité.

M. Wickliffe—Le sénateur veut-il dire que je subis cette influence?

M. Lacey—Mon langage est clair. Je dis que je ne le suis pas. Si le sénateur pense qu'il l'est, il peut s'appliquer mes paroles. Je ne suis pas responsable de l'application qui peut en être faite.

M. Wickliffe—Je n'ai qu'une chose à dire ; c'est que quand j'entends un sénateur proclamer si haut son indépendance, je ne puis m'empêcher géneralement de la soupçonner.

M. Lacey—Ce soupçon n'est pas moins fondé que les mille autres auxquels est en proie l'esprit du sénateur. Cependant, je dois dire que je ne pense pas que mes paroles puissent s'appliquer ni au sénateur de Caddo, ni à celui d'Ouest Féliciana. Je les crois tous deux animés de sentiments patriotiques, je crois que tous deux veulent le bien de l'Etat.

M. Hodge—Je suis heureux d'avoir eu les renseignements que je désirais. Il en résulte que le nombre moyen des affaires dans chaque Cour de la Nlle-Orléans ne s'élève pas annuellement à 1000. Je sais que l'on dit qu'il leur reste peu de temps libre; mais le nombre d'affaires décidées chaque jour par eux est, en moyenne, seulement trois Quelques affaires, je le sais occupent une semaine ; mais j'en ai vu décider 40 en un jour. Aussi je crois que le surcroit d'affaires provenant de Lafayette, peut-être sans inconvénient, réparti entre les différentes Cours de la Nelle-Orléans.

M. Burthe—Que ferez-vous des affaires criminelles.

M. Hodge—On les donnera à la Cour criminelle. A propos de M. Micou, dont on a parlé, je dirai que dernièrement j'étais à son bureau, et que là je rencontrai un jeune avocat, M. Lacey, je crois, qui me dit que la profession était moins lucrative de près de moitié. J'ai vu ce fait signalé dernièrement dans les papiers publics, comme offrant un symptôme d'amélioration pour la ville. Mes collègues peuvent l'avoir vu et remarque comme moi. J'insiste donc sur mon amendement.

M. McCay—Le sénateur a-t-il dit qu'il avait causé de ce sujet avec un membre distingué du barreau ?

M. Hodge—Je n'ai pas dit cela. J'ai dit que j'avais causé avec M. Lacey. Ils est probablement aussi bien en mesure que tout autre de donner de bons renseignements.

La discussion se poursuit sans offrir d'intérêt, après quoi le Sénat s'ajourne.

VENDREDI, 4 mars.

M. Derbès, du comité spécial auquel avait été référée la communication de Newton Richards et autres, lit un rapport. Il pense que la session est trop avancée pour que la Legislature tranche cette question, mais qu'il serait bon de soumettre au peuple la question du transfert du siége du gouvernement comme amendement à la question. Le comité a préparé à cet effet un bill qui est annexe au rapport.

M. Lacey présente sur la même question un rapport au nom de la minorité.

M. King présente le mémoire de M. Jacob Barker au sujet du bill qui prohibe la circulation de petits billets. Il en propose le renvoi au comité des banques.

M. Wickliffe s'oppose au renvoi.

M. Palfrey dit que le comité est déjà en possession de tous les renseignemens relatifs à ce sujet qui pourraient être fournis par le mémoire, et qu'il ne voit pas la nécessité d'imposer au comite ce surcroit de travail. Il fait la motion de déposer le mémoire sur le bureau.

M. King. — Je ne voudrais pas que l'on croie que, j'endosse tout ce qui est contenu dans le mémoire ; mais je pense que nous devons le traiter avec déférence. C'est la pétition d'un homme qui croit qu'un certain acte, maintenant devant la Législature, est de nature à lui porter préjudice, et comme ces matières sont du ressort du comité des banques, je ne vois pas comment on pourrait se refuser à lui renvoyer le mémoire. Je crois qu'il est de notre devoir de prendre en considération la pétition de tout individu qui se prétend lié par l'effet de nos actes. La pétition contient certaines idées fort judicieuses, et j'espère que le sénateur de Ste-Mary voudra bien retirer sa motion de dépôt.

Digitized by Google

M. Palfrey.—Le comité est déjà en possession de tous les faits relatifs à la question, et un bill a déjà été passé à ce sujet. Le comité doit aussi présenter bientôt une loi générale qui pourvoiera à l'extinction de cette circulation, qui est considérée comme un des fléaux du jour. Néanmoins, je retirerai ma motion.

M. Wickliffe—Je la présenterai en mon nom. L'honorable sénateur dit que le mémoire contient quelques idées judicieuses. Mais ce mémoire n'a rien à apprendre au comité. Ce comité a devant lui une loi générale sur la question des banquee libres, qui sera bientôt présentée. M. Jacob Barker ne pourra pas trouver sa place dans le système établi par cette loi. Pour qu'il pût le faire, il lui faudrait quelque chose de plus que cette vieille réputation sans tache que M Barker prétend être la seule condition necessaire pour faire la banque. Ce n'est pas manquer de déférence envers M. Barker que de déposer son mémoire sur le bureau, c'est déclarer tout simplement que le comité n'a pas besoin de nouveaux éclaircissements sur cette question.

Le mémoire est déposé sur le bureau.

QUESTION JUDICIAIRE.

Le rapport du Comité Judiciaire, organisant le système judiciaire pour l'Etat, la paroisse d'Orléans exceptée, est présenté au Sénat.

M. Hodge.—Je saisirai cette occasion d'expliquer mes vues à ce sujet. Je crois, monsieur l'Orateur, que le peuple de cet Etat désire, à l'heure qu'il est, l'établissement de Cours des Preuves. Le seul moyen de satisfaire à ce vœu, c'est d'étendre les districts de manière qu'il n'y en ait que sept ou neuf dans l'Etat, non compris la paroisse d'Orléans. De cette façon, on pourra établir une Cour des Preuves pour chaque paroisse. Les juges de ces cours devraient, selon moi, être payés des fonds des paroisses elles-mêmes, ce qui donnerait le moyen de proportionner le traitement à la besogne. Il y a des paroisses étendues où la place serait fort laborieuse : Ce serait aux juris de paroisse à rétribuer les juges en consequence. Comme la besogne est plus ou moins grande selon les paroisses, il ne serait pas juste que les traitements fussent uniformes. Dans quelques paroisses, le nombre des affaires s'élèverait à 1000 ou 1200 par an, et tout le temps du juge se trouverait pris; dans d'autres, elles n'atteindraient pas le dixième ou le vingtième de ce nombre. Le salaire, pour être équitable, devrait varier dans la même proportion. Je crois ne pas me tromper en disant que ce système a été adopté par l'Etat du Mississipi et qu'on s'en est généralement bien trouvé. Les juges de comté y sont payés par les comtes, et ce sont les habitants de chaque comté qui fixent le montant du salaire, qui est payé à l'aide d'une taxe perçue dans chaque comté.—De cette manière, chaque comté supporte les frais de sa cour; et le trésor de l'Etat se trouve soulagé d'une grande portion des depenses du judiciaire. Avec sept districts, non compris la Nouvelle-Orléans, les frais du judiciaire ne s'éleveraient en tout qu'à environ 45,000 ou 50,000 piastres.

De plus, monsieur l'orateur, nous pourrions donner aux greffiers dans les campagnes, les fonctions de recorders de paroisse. Leurs places deviendraient alors fort lucratives. Par là nous diminuerions considérablement les charges qui pèsent sur le peuple. Car le même individu, se trouvant à la fois recorder et greffier, pourra se contenter de la moitie des droits qui sont aujourd'hui perçus par les greffiers.—Une raison qui milite puissamment en faveur de l'établissement de Cours des Preuves, c'est que le peuple le demande. L'une des causes qui ont amené l'adoption de la convention a été le besoin d'un changement dans le système actuel qui, de l'aveu général, fonctionnait mal. On sentait la necessité absolue d'une place qui fournit les moyens d'accélérer la liquidation et l'administration des successions, si lentes sous le système actuel, système pire que celui des juges des paroisses, qui était devenu, à juste titre, si odieux. Le fait est qu'il est impossible à une cour de donner à toutes les affaires le degré d'attention convenable, lorsque sa juridiction embrasse toutes les questions civiles. Mais, lorsque chaque paroisse est pourvue d'une cour des preuves la tâche est comparativement facile. L'intérêt de l'Etat reclame la creation d'une cour de ce genre. Si nous avons 28 districts comme il est proposé par l'un des bills il nous faudra donner aux juges $2,500 ou $3,000 chacun ce qui créerait une dépense beaucoup trop forte. De plus il faudra pourvoir à l'établissement d'avocats de district, et il nous serait impossible de décider un avocat qui se respecte à accepter cette place avec les faibles traitements que nous pourrions offrir Je crois, monsieur, que les quatre-vingt-dix-neuf centièmes du peuple de la Louisiane sont en faveur des cours des Preuves, c'est ce qui me fait appuyer le système.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

QUESTION JUDICIAIRE.

Le bill organisant les Cours de District dans la paroisse d'Orléans est pris en consideration.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de l'amender en substituant $3,000 à $3,500.

M. Wickliffe. — La raison pour laquelle je propose cet amendement est que je désire diminuer les dépenses du judiciaire. Dira-t-on que $3,000 ne sont pas suffisantes lorsqu'il y aura six juges. Je dis, monsieur, qu'à $3,000 nous pouvons avoir des juges du plus grand talent.

M. King. — J'en appelle à la justice du Sénat. La justice, voilà tout ce que nous demandons. Les salaires qui doivent être payes dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans ont été l'occasion de nombreux debats législatifs ; et pourtant je vois qu'invariablement le salaire des juges de la ville a été plus élevé que celui des juges de paroisses.

Dans le principe le plus faible salaire accordé aux juges fut de $5,000 par an, et le juge Maurian, je crois, recevait $7,500. Plus tard, ils furent réduits à $4,000, et depuis, par des réductions successives, ils ont été amenés, bien moins parce que la raison le prescrivait, que parce que les majorites entre les mains desquelles était la question, l'ont voulu ainsi, ils ont, dis-je, été reduits à $3,500. Nous ne demandons donc aucune augmentation. Je dois dire cependant que, selon moi, $3,500 sont un bien faible salaire pour un juge à la Nouvelle-Orléans. J'ai cru qu'on nous accorderait ce chiffre parce qu'il était juste.

Je pensais qu'il était bien entendu que nous ne demandions aucune augmentation soit du nombre des juges, soit de leurs salaires ; tout ce que nous demandons c'est que les choses restent comme elles sont. Mon collegue a dit qu'aucun sénateur ne peut soutenir que $3,000 ne soient pas suffisantes pour nous assurer les services d'hommes de talent. Je suis surpris que pareille assertion vienne de lui et certes je ne m'y attendais pas. Personne n'ignore qu'un avocat qui a une nombreuse clientelle, bien établie, ne l'abandonnera pas pour une somme aussi mesquine, et ce serait folie que l'attendre de lui. Nous, membres de la ville, nous sommes abstenus d'exprimer aucune opinion au sujet de ce qui convenait le mieux pour les paroisses ; nous nous sommes reposés entièrement sur nos collègues des paroisses du soin de tout arranger comme ils le jugeraient convenable. S'ils demandent $3,000, nous leur accorderons, s'ils demandent $3,500, eh bien, nous les leur accorderons aussi. Mais quand il s'agit de la ville, où nous savons que 3,500 est un salaire trop faible, qu'ils aient au moins quelque égard pour l'opinion que nous émettons.

Voulez-vous réduire tellement le salaire des juges que la place devienne une dérision? J'espère que vous ne voudrez pas nous pousser à cela. Nous savons qu'à la Nouvelle Orléans 3,500 piastres sont à peine suffisantes pour subvenir à tous les besoins de la vie, nous savons qu'un homme qui a de la famille, quelque économiquement qu'il vive, dépense au moins cette somme. Les circonstances étant telles, à quoi voulez-vous prétendre ? Prenez un homme de talent et d'études, qui soit un ornement pour sa profession, et qui puisse le devenir pour le tribunal où il siégera, faites en un juge : qu'arrivera-t-il ? Il faudra qu'il travaille pendant presque toute l'année, n'ayant un recès que de deux ou trois semaines au plus, qu'il soit constamment occupé à juger, à écrire des décisions, à lancer des ordres, qu'il travaille de mois en mois comme un mercenaire, comme une bête de somme, qu'il renonce à tout espoir de fortune, à toute ambition pour l'avenir, et pour tout cela il recevra quoi ? la plus maigre des pitances.

Digitized by Google

Tel est, le tableau fidèle de ce que serait la vie d'un juge à la Nouvelle Orléans. J'espère sincèrement que le sénat ne perdra pas de vue ces considérations et qu'il accordera le salaire que nous demandons. Même aujourd'hui le salaire est si faible que deux de nos juges ont refusé de se porter candidats à une réélection.

M. Wickliffe—Qui ?

M. King—Le juge Kennedy et le juge Buchanan, qui maintenant sont candidats à la Cour Suprême. Les salaires sont maintenant réduits à un point tel qu'au delà il nous sera impossible de nous procurer des juges capables.

M. Mouton—Combien sont-ils payés maintenant.

M. King—3,500 piastres.

M. Wickliffe—A la manière dont avait préludé le sénateur, à son air d'inquiétude, j'ai cru que j'avais commis une monstruosité en demandant qu'on substituât 3,000 à 3,500 piastres. Le sénateur dit qu'on ne demande aucune augmentation : moi je soutiens que oui, M. le président. On demande six juges au lieu de cinq, tandis que plusieurs d'entre nous ne demandent que 9 juges pour les paroisses.

Mais le sénateur n'a pas répondu à ce que j'ai dit, que $3000 sont un salaire suffisant. Il dit que ces juges ont une rude besogne, qu'ils travaillent tous les jours. N'a-t-il pas entendu ce qu'on a dit :—qu'ils siégeaient de 9 à 3 heures? Ne sait-il pas que sous l'empire de ce nouveau bill, ils n'auront à siéger que six mois dans l'année. Si les juges de la Nouvelle-Orléans veulent dépêcher les affaires aussi promptement que les juges des paroisses, ils peuvent terminer en six mois.

Le sénateur dit que $3000 ne sont pas suffisantes. Je crois cependant lui avoir entendu dire qu'en ce moment nous avons les meilleurs juges qu'il soit possible d'avoir.

M. King—Non, monsieur.

M. Wickliffe—Eh bien, alors, que nos juges étaient un ornement pour le pays. Que propose-t-on maintenant ! $3000 par an, pour trois affaires par jour. Que le sénateur fasse lui-même son calcul. Il dit que cette somme n'est pas suffisante pour payer les dépenses ordinaires de la vie. La vie est-elle donc si chère à la Nouvelle-Orléans ? Est-il personne dans les paroisses qui ne puisse vivre amplement avec cela. Nous voyons là des juges qui travaillent du matin au soir, qui vont d'une paroisse à l'autre et remplissent les plus rudes travaux. En est-il de même à la Nouvelle-Orléans. J'ose affirmer qu'en moyenne, les juges n'y siégent pas plus de deux heures pendant toute l'année. Je ne vois aucune raison pour qu'on leur accorde $3,500.

M. Derbès—Le sénateur semble oublier un fait important, que les juges sont maintenant éligibles par le peuple. Les élections populaires causent toujours de grands frais aux candidats dans les villes. Il faut se faire annoncer, il faut faire des frais d'impression, souscrire a tout ce qu'on leur demande ; car s'ils ne le font pas, ils sont ruinés. Tous ces inconvénients se répètent à chaque élection par le peuple. Je ne veux pas dire qu'ils achètent des votes, aucun candidat ne pourrait avoir recours à semblable ressource ; mais il est des conséquences auxquelles les soumet leur position, il est des dettes qu'il faut contracter et payer.

M. Wickliffe —Jusqu'aujourd'hui je ne savais pas que nous fussions ici faisant des lois pour aider à la réelection de personne. Je croyais que notre seul but était d'établir un judiciaire indépendant et j'ai présenté mon amendement parce que je pensais que trois mille piastres étaient suffisantes. En réponse aux arguments du sénateur, je dirai la conviction que j'ai que si un juge remplit convenablement son devoir, il n'a besoin d'aucun autre secours que cette recommandation. Cette opinion est basée sur le fait que dans le Mississipi, Etat radicalement démocrate, le juge Starkey, whig, a toujours été élu. La question, telle qu'elle nous est proposée, est simplement celle-ci : On voudrait que nous payions des juges, non seulement pour les services par eux rendus dans la magistrature, mais aussi pour qu'ils puissent faire les frais d'une réelection.

Je le répète, monsieur, je croyais que nous n'étions ici que pour établir un système indépendant de législation, je croyais que c'est un principe démocratique que des juges nommés par le peuple seront aussi capables, aussi indépendants que des juges nommés par l'Exécutif. Après les explications données par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, je tiens plus que jamais à mon amendement.

M. Mouton.—Je n'ai nullement l'intention de faire un discours sur cette question, mais je demande seulement pour quelques instants l'attention du Sénat pendant que je vais soumettre quelques observations. Je pense, avec le sénateur qui vient de reprendre son siége, que notre but doit être d'établir un judiciaire indépendant ; c'est pour cette raison que je suis disposé à voter aux juges de la ville un salaire d'au moins $3,000. Pous nous assurer des juges indépendants, il est indispensable que nous leur payions un salaire en rapport avec la besogne qu'ils ont à remplir. Je ne connais pas les devoirs qu'ont à remplir les juges de la Nouvelle-Orléans, mais je sais quels sont ceux des juges de la campagne et s'ils sont les mêmes, je n'hésite pas à dire et à répéter que $3,500 ne sont pas trop. On ne peut espérer que de bons avocats, que des hommes qui sont l'ornement de leur profession, consentent à l'abandonner pour une aussi faible somme que $3,000.

Les dépenses des juges de la ville doivent nécessairement être plus fortes que celles des juges de la campagne. Ils ont à payer des loyers plus élevés, à acheter tous les jours leurs provisions, tandis qu'à la campagne les juges n'ont pas ces dépenses. Je partage l'opinion du sénateur qui s'est fait entendre le premier sur cette question (M. King), que si nous diminuons les salaires, nous ne pourrons pas obtenir que des hommes de talent consentent à siéger dans nos Cours. Ce résultat est cependant le premier, le plus important que nous devions nous proposer. Je ne crois pas que $3,500 soient trop et je voterai pour cette somme.

M. Hodge—Avant que le Sénat aille aux voix, je désirerais exposer les raisons qui ont déterminé mon vote. Je suis obligé de voter contre l'amendement, parce que, selon moi, si la place est bien remplie, $3,500 ne sont pas un salaire trop élevé. Le but qu'a en vue le sénateur d'Ouest-Féliciana [M. Wickliffe], dans son desir de réduire les dépenses, serait cependant atteint par la création de cinq Cours pour la Nouvelle-Orléans, au lieu de six. J'espère donc que l'un des membres qui ont voté pour le nombre six demandera une reconsidération de la question.

La motion d'effacer $3,500 et d'y substituer $3,000 est perdue.

M. Palfrey demande la reconsidération de la section du bill. La motion est rejetée.

M. King propose un amendement.

M. Hodge présente un PROVISO à l'effet de laisser le traitement du juge de la Seconde Cour de District à la charge du trésor de la ville. Il dit :

« Les raisons qui me décident à présenter ce PROVISO sont celles que j'ai exprimées ce matin. Je vois que la Seconde Cour de District correspond à une Cour des Preuves et, pour cette raison, je pense que le salaire devrait être payé par le trésor de la ville. Si les membres de la Nouvelle-Orléans le désirent, je ne demande pas mieux que d'y voir établir une Cour des Preuves, et que le traitement du juge soit payé par la ville. Si ce système est adopté, il est juste et convenable que la Nouvelle-Orléans fasse les frais de son propre juge des Preuves. Je crois que c'est le seul système juste et praticable; en conséquence je présente le proviso.

M. King.—La proposition du sénateur créerait cette anomalie : la Nouvelle-Orléans aura à supporter le traitement de son juge, tandis que si le bill du sénateur venait à être rejeté, les juges dans le reste de l'Etat seraient aux frais du trésor de l'Etat ; étrange résultat auquel, je pense, le sénateur ne voudrait pas nous conduire.

M. Hodge.—Si le Sénat n'adopte pas le système dans son ensemble, le proviso pourra être effacé.

M. Wickliffe propose d'ajourner la discussion sur le bill

M. King.—Je ne vois pas de raison qui puisse militer contre un pareil bill, je ne vois pas non plus pourquoi nous ajournerions ainsi les affaires ; si la discussion du bill est ajournée, il n'y aura que bien peu de temps laissé entre la passation du bill et l'élection.

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe.—J'oserai dire qu'il n'y a personne ici qui soit plus disposé que le sénateur à renvoyer les affaires, lorsqu'il y trouve sa convenance. Je n'ai pas envie de voter dans les ténèbres. Je veux savoir quel sera le système adopté pour les campagnes. Je pense que le peuple demande une réforme et un système plus économique, et jusqu'à ce qu'un système ait été arrêté pour les campagnes, je ne veux, par aucun de mes actes, me mettre à la merci de la délégation de la ville.

M. McCay.—Je voterai pour le renvoi par les motifs qui ont été avancés par le sénateur. Je veux voir adopter un système général, et j'ai une confiance illimitée dans les sénateurs de la campagne. Je pense qu'il nous accorderont tout ce qui est juste.

Le Sénat s'ajourne après quelques débats ultérieurs.

MARDI 1er MARS.

Le bill incorporant l'Association des vétérans de couleur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, est appelé.

M. Short dit qu'il espère que le bill sera renvoyé. Il désire avoir du temps pour l'examiner attentivement. Il a la plus grande estime pour ces vieux braves, quelle que soit leur couleur, qui ont exposé leur vie pour défendre leur pays; mais avant de créer une corporation telle que celle-ci, qui pourrait avoir une influence dangereuse, le Sénat doit hésiter et s'assurer qu'aucun mal ne saurait en résulter. Il pense que la question devrait être renvoyée de nouveau au comité.

M. Martin ne voit pas l'objection que l'on peut avoir au bill. Il permet l'existence de cette association simplement pour des objets de charité. A quel comité le sénateur entend-il que le bill doit être renvoyé ?

M. Short.—Au comité des corporations.

M. Martin.—Le bill a déjà été renvoyé au comité de la milice. Ce comité a rapporté en faveur du bill, et je crois que ce comité est aussi capable qu'aucun autre d'arriver à une décision correcte. Je suis propriétaire d'esclaves moi-même, et je ne vois aucun danger à accorder une charte d'incorporation à ces hommes de couleur qui ont combattu pour notre pays, et c'est un plaisir pour moi aussi bien qu'un devoir, d'accéder à leur demande.

M. Short ne doute pas que le comité de la milice et que le sénateur de l'Assomption ne soient parfaitement capables de former une juste opinion sur ce sujet comme sur n'importe quel autre, quelque grave qu'il soit. L'opinion du sénateur est d'un grand poids pour lui ; car il est propriétaire d'esclaves, et, comme tel, il est de son intérêt de veiller d'un œil jaloux à toutes les mesures qui se rattachent à la question de l'esclavage. Son seul désir est que la discussion du bill soit ajournée pendant quelque temps pour donner au Sénat le temps d'y réfléchir. Si alors on arrive à la conclusion qu'il est prudent de permettre des associations de cette nature, la loi fournit un moyen de l'établir. Les parties intéressées peuvent s'appliquer les dispositions de la loi générale qui existe actuellement. Mais il pense que c'est la première fois qu'une charte d'incorporation pour une pareille association a été demandée dans un état du Sud.

M. Lewis dit que les noms qui sont au bas de la pétition appartiennent à des hommes qui lui sont tous connus. Ce sont tous des hommes âgés, qui ont bien servi leur pays. Il n'en reste plus que de rares débris et ils demandent simplement que la Législature leur permette de former une association ayant pour objet l'assistance mutuelle, de s'associer pour le peu de temps qui leur reste à vivre. Si les sénateurs désirent de plus amples renseignements sur ce sujet, il n'a pas d'objection à ce que le bill soit déposé pour quelque temps sur le bureau ; mais il ne voit aucune raison qui doive faire rejeter la demande des pétitionnaires. Ils jouissent du respect de la population au milieu de laquelle ils vivent ; ils ont toujours été traités avec déférence, ont paru dans plusieurs solennités publiques, et sont plutôt des objets de vénération que de suspicion.

M. Hodge espère que le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. Lewis) voudra bien expliquer l'objet du bill. Il a entendu parler d'un but de bienfaisance, mais il n'en résulte pas une nécessité d'incorporer en association ces vieux soldats, ces vétérans mutilés par les combats, car c'est là, pense le sénateur, la phrase d'usage.

M. King fait remarquer que plus d'une fois il a eu l'occasion d'appeler l'attention du Sénat, sur le mal qu'il y avait à accorder des chartes spéciales dans les cas où la loi générale est applicable. La loi générale indique la manière d'établir une corporation aussi bien que nous pourrions le faire. Cette loi a été adoptée justement dans le but de prévenir les demandes du genre de celles qui nous occupent. Nous devrions éviter de passer de pareils bills ne fût-ce que pour une raison d'économie. Chacun de ces bills avant de passer à travers les diverses épreuves qu'il aurait à subir, coûterait probablement $500, tandis que les parties intéressées pourrait aller devant un notaire et avoir toute leur affaire réglée pour deux piastres et demie.

Le bill pour venir au secours de est mis devant le Sénat.

M. Hodge combat le bill. Si nous admettons un pareil système de législation, Dieu sait où nous nous arrêterons. Dans l'opinion de l'orateur la Legislature n'a pas le droit de faire ces libéralités. On peut dire qu'un précédent existe en faveur de la proposition. Cet argument n'a pas de poids pour lui. Un précédent, n'est autre chose que la preuve qu'une affaire a été examinée et décidée par un tribunal compétent; mais qui peut dire que, quand un président viole la loi, viole la Constitution, nous devons nous y conformer ? Un pareil précédent ne serait pas un précédent pour nous. On doit le condamner, le rejeter, au lieu de perpétuer le mal. Il doit prémunir sérieusement le Sénat contre ce genre de législation, qui s'est glissé parmi nous. Il les adjure de ne pas se laisser entraîner à faire des allocations de ce genre, au mépris de la Constitution de l'Etat. Il déclare aujourd'hui qu'il votera toujours pour les propositions de ce genre, qu'il croit contraires à la Constitution. Il ne regarde pas un précédent formé par la Législature de 1840, comme devant nécessairement faire autorité pour la Législature de 1853. Parce que la Législature a eu tort, ce n'est pas une raison pour que nous ayons une foule de demandes également mal fondées. Il n'est pas d'humeur à encourager les prétentions de tout solliteur qui viendra implorer la charité de l'Etat. Mais on répondra avec indignation que cette personne n'a pas demandé la charité ! Alors elle n'a aucun titre à ce qu'elle demande.

L'Etat n'y est tenu ni légalement ni moralement, et l'on n'a aucun droit de le demander si ce n'est à titre de donation charitable Je m'opposerai donc à ce bill et je fais la motion qu'il soit déposé indéfiniment sur le bureau.

La motion est adoptée.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

BILL DE RECENSEMENT.

Le bill de la Chambre pourvoyant à la manière dont devra être fait le recensement de l'Etat est pris en considération.

Un amendement est proposé exceptant de ce bill la paroisse d'Orléans.

M. Derbès dit que la raison pour laquelle cet amendement est demandé est que les assesseurs à la Nouvelle-Orléans ont déjà trop de besogne; que par conséquent ils ne pourraient pas faire convenablement l'ouvrage et de plus ils se plaignent que leur salaire est trop modique.

M. Kenner dit que le grand nombre de personnes dont le recensement devra être pris dans la ville rendra le salaire suffisant. Loin d'être trop faible, il y aurait au contraire de bonnes raisons pour qu'on le réduisit maintenant dans la ville de la Nouvelle où en une heure de promenade à pied on rencontre plus de monde que dans une course d'une heure à cheval dans les paroisses. Que dis-je, d'une heure ? d'une semaine peut-être.

La discussion continue quelque temps, puis la section qui autorise les assesseurs à faire le recensement dans tout l'Etat est adoptée.

M. McCay demande une reconsidération.

M. Kenner dit que s'il y a dans ce bill quelque intention cachée dont tous les membres n'aient pas connaissance, il espère qu'on en fera franchement la déclaration. Une chose est certaine, c'est que les assesseurs ont à remplir un devoir important. Il est aussi de plus haute importance pour la Nouvelle-Orléans que le recensement soit fait au commencement du printemps lorsqu'il y a une population complète. J'espère donc que les membres de la ville comprendront combien il serait impolitique de s'opposer à la prompte passation de ce bill. Les assesseurs sont nommés par le peuple dans le but de se rendre de maison en maison et de dresser un tableau d'assessement de toutes les propriétés. Pour cette raison, ils doivent plus qu'aucun autre officier, être en rapport d'intimité ou du moins de connaissance avec la plus grande partie de la population. Pourquoi donc quelques membres hesitent-ils alors à s'en rapporter aux assesseurs ?

Digitized by Google

Qu'ils ne soient plus chargés alors du recensement et que leur tache soit assignée aux juges de paix, aux juges inférieurs, car les recorders ne sont rien que cela. Un des sénateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans a dit qu'il n'y a que trois assesseurs pour la ville et que ce nombre n'est pas suffisant pour la besogne qu'il y a à faire. Ne sait-il pas qu'en vertu de ce bill ils sont autorisés à se donner des assistants ? Si aucun d'eux est trop vieux ou incapable de faire l'ouvrage qui lui est assigné par le bill (et je crois avoir compris qu'un d'entre ceux qui sont ici s'est représenté comme tel) il peut se nommer des députés qui feront l'ouvrage pour lui. Il peut en prendre autant qu'il lui plaira, pourvu que le salaire n'excède pas 2 sous par tête. Je le répète, il doit y avoir quelque intention cachée sous cette opposition que l'on fait au bill.

M. McCay dit qu'il ne voit pas qu'elle objection on pourrait avoir à confier cette tâche aux recorders. Ils sont bien connus par toute la Nouvelle-Orléans, et ont été choisis par le peuple comme bons et fidèles serviteurs, aussi bien que les assesseurs. Je ne veux pas dire que parce que ces officiers sont nommés par le peuple ils soient plus capables que d'autres de faire le recensement. Moi, par exemple, je suis sûr de nommer un aussi bon portier que le Sénat lui-même pourrait en choisir un. Je ne veux pas dire non plus que les recorders, parce qu'ils sont des juges inférieurs, soient moins capables que d'autres. Ce sont des hommes respectables et intelligents, inférieurs à personne quoique peut-être on puisse sourire à leur titre de juges inférieurs, et le peuple ne pourra jamais souffrir, si c'est à eux qu'est déféré le soin de faire le recensement.

M Hodge, j'apprends que sous la Constitution de 1845, les assesseurs ont fait le recensement de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Il n'y avait alors que trois assesseurs et ils ont trouvé moyen de faire seuls tout l'ouvrage, sans même se faire aider de députés, ainsi que les assesseurs actuels y sont autorisés par ce bill. Pour plusieurs raisons, c'est à ces officiers qu'on doit confier le soin de faire le recensement. Plus que personne ils doivent connaître la population et être connus par elle. Ils voient presque tout ce qu'il y a de monde en ville, du moins tous ceux qui sont âgés de 21 ans, et qui sont électeurs ainsi que tous les propriétaires. Plus que personne ils peuvent donc faire le recensement. Le bill n'impose pas plus de travail aux assesseurs qu'ils n'en avaient en 1847.

J'ai dit déjà que sous la loi de 1847 ces officiers ont fait seuls toute la besogne qui leur était assignée. Pourquoi changerait-on ce système aujourd'hui ? Pourquoi attribuer aux recorders ce qui a toujours été fait par les assesseurs ? On ne peut pas dire que les recorders soient ou plus intelligents ou plus capables que les assesseurs, qu'ils connaissent plus de monde, en un mot qu'ils peuvent mieux remplir cette tâche. Il y a quatre recorders et trois assesseurs seulement; mais la loi autorise ces derniers à s'adjoindre des députés.

Je ne vois rien qui motive le changement qu'on nous propose ; j'espère donc que l'amendement ne sera pas adopté.

M. McCay dit qu'il a déjà conversé avec deux assesseurs sur cette question et tous les deux lui ont dit qu'il leur est impossible de faire ce travail.

M. Kenner—Si la demande de réconsidération est entendue et adoptee, je proposerai un amendement portant que le peuple devra élire les officiers chargés de faire le recensement. Nous verrions alors quel est le but de ceux qui insistent tant aujourd'hui sur cette question.

Lorsqu'ils ont besoin des suffrages du peuple, ils l'appellent «cher peuple» et maintenant ils veulent ôter aux assesseurs nommés par lui, le privilège de faire le recensement pour le donner à des juges ou à des recorders. Je le répète en toute sincérité, le fait que les assesseurs sont nommés par le peuple autorise la législature à avoir en eux assez de confiance pour s'en remettre à eux du soin de faire le recensement. Si le but qu'on se propose est de donner des emplois aux favoris de quatre ou cinq juges, je voudrais qu'on le dise hautement. Mais il est evident que l'on veut leur donner une occasion de gagner de l'argent. Pour moi je ne puis ni ne veux approuver jamais pareille manière d'agir.

La section est prise de nouveau en considération.

M. McCay présente un substitut autorisant le recorder de chaque district à nommer deux personnes capables pour faire le recensement.

M. Lacey fait la motion de référer la section et le substitut à un comité composé de la délégation de la Nouvelle Orléans.

M. Kenner fait la motion qu'ils soient référés à un comité général du Sénat. Il répète sa question : qu'est-ce donc que l'on désire ?

M. Lacey insiste pour que la décision de cette question soit laissée à la delégation de la Nouvlle-Orléans.

M. Palfrey pense que le mieux est de référer le tout au peuple qui fera connaître sa decision par la voie du scrutin.

M. Kenner désire que le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey) dise une fois pour toutes s'il désire que le pouvoir de faire le recensement soit ôté aux assesseurs et donné aux recorders. Est-ce bien de le faire quand les assesseurs ont été élus par le peuple qui, par là, a exprime toute la confiance qu'il avait en eux ?

M. Derbès dit que ce ne serait pas la première fois que la Législature aurait accordé aux recorders des pouvoirs en dehors du cercle ordinaire de leurs attributions. Ils sont autorisés par exemple à corriger les erreurs qui peuvent exister sur les tableaux d'assessement. Les recorders, aussi bien que les assesseurs sont élus par le peuple qui a témoigné de la sorte sa confiance en eux. Il peut être vrai qu'ils ne soient que des juges très inférieurs ; mais il faut probablement plus de votes pour élire un d'entre eux qu'il n'en a fallu pour elire le senateur de l'Ascension.

M. Hodge.—Je ne sanctionnerai jamais par mon vote la différence qu'établirait entre la ville et la campagne le substitut propose par le sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans (M. McCay) je ne vois pas de bonne raison pour laquelle elle serait établie. Je vois que par l'acte de 1847, le recensement fait en vertu de l'ancienne Constitution l'a été par les assesseurs. On ne disait pas alors qu'ils n'étaient pas capables, qu'ils ne pouvaient pas faire ce travail— loin de là ils l'ont fait et jamais aucune plainte ne s'est élevée. Aucun sénateur n'a donné de raisons satisfaisantes pour que nous changions maintenant ce système ; aucun d'eux ne m'a convaincu qu'il fallut dépouiller les assesseurs pour investir les recorders du pouvoir de faire le recensement. Nous n'avons pas de recorders a la campagne ; mais nous avons des assesseurs. Ils font notre recensement, pourquoi ne feraient-ils pas tout aussi bien le vôtre ? Sont-ils moins capables dans un endroit que dans un autre ? Pourquoi le bill ferait-il une exception spéciale en faveur de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans ? Pourquoi faire ainsi des lois uniquement favorables à la paroisse d'Orléans ? Je ne suis aucunement jaloux de la ville :—au contraire, je vois avec plaisir son accroissement de prospérité ; mais je ne vois pas pour quelle raison ce qui convient à la campagne ne conviendrait pas à la ville. M. le président que l'on cherche avec attention, que l'on consulte nos annales et je défie qu'on trouve un seul exemple d'une exeption pareille à celle qu'on propose aujourd'hui.

Ceux qui ont le plus insisté sur cette question n'ont pas osé dire que les assesseurs ne sont pas capables. Ils n'ont pas osé jeter cette assertion à la face du peuple qui a nommé ces officiers. Les assesseurs ont fait ce travail en 1847 ; mais on dit qu'ils ne le peuvent pas maintenant, et l'on feint de ne pas nous entendre lorsque nous répétons qu'ils ont le droit de se nommer des assistants.

Monsieur le Président, je soupçonne qu'il y a quelque chose de caché là dessous. Si ce sont des intérêts particuliers qui portent certains Sénateurs à agir de la sorte, qu'ils le disent ouvertement. Que les membres de la campagne sachent bien une fois pour toutes qu'ils doivent se soumettre à une législation spéciale qui leur est imposée dans un but politique. S'il en est ainsi, qu'on le dise donc.

Digitized by Google

Il est temps, monsieur, que nous mettions un terme à ce système ; que la ville se tienne pour satisfaite d'être mise sur ce pied d'égalité avec la campagne, qu'elle accepte la même législation. Je consens à tout ce qui doit augmenter la prospérité de la ville ; mais je ne me soumettrai pas plus longtemps à ces eternelles exceptions en faveur de la paroisse d'Orléans.

M. Short.—J'ignore quelles raisons ont porté le Sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans, (M. Mc Cay) à présenter ce substitut. J'ai voté en faveur de la réconsidération parce que je croyais que le Sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans, connaissant l'opinion et les devoirs du peuple de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et bien au fait des circonstances, présenterait quelque chose de mieux. Il a voté ainsi pour connaître les raisons qui ont influence le Sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Si quelques Sénateurs pensent qu'il y a quelque chose de caché sous ce projet, je puis assurer, pour ce qui me concerne, qu'il n'y a absolument rien. Je n'ai connaissance de rien au delà de ce que j'ai dit.

On nous a imputé aussi des motifs politiques. De cela aussi, je ne sais absolument rien. Je ne suis pas le mouvement des partis. Je n'ai jamais été qu'une fois à une convention de parti. Tous ceux qui me connaissent savent qu'en aucune circonstance je ne donnerais jamais un vote que je ne puisse motiver d'une manière satisfaisante. Je voterai pour que la question fut référée à un Comité, mais s'il est présenté aucun substitut qui ne soit pas bâsé sur des bonnes raisons je m'y opposerai.

M. Hodge explique les raisons qui l'on porté à parler de cette question comme d'une manœuvre de parti. J'avais vu que lorsque le vote a été pris, les deux partis ont été divises entièrement. J'avais vu aussi que le parti dont je suis membre était en faveur de la section, telle qu'elle existait d'abord et tel qu'il avait été envoyé de la Chambre, et s'etait opposé presque unanimement à ce qu'on fit aucune exception en faveur de la paroisse d'Orléans, sur la motion de réconsidération, les deux partis se sont encore partagés. Toutes ces choses m'ont fait penser et dire ce que j'ai avancé. Voyez les votes, voyez le procès verbal et vous verrez que la lutte a toujours été de parti à parti.

M. Martin dit qu'il ne voit pas quel but politique pourrait être accompli par là. Les recorders sont tous démocrates, les assesseurs sont aussi démocrates, consequemment on ne gagnera rien à faire passer ce pouvoir des mains des uns a celles des autres. Le bill de consolidation adopté à la dernière session de la Législature a donné au peuple l'élection des assesseurs. On ne fit point de cette élection une question de parti. Il pense avec le sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge, qu'il ne doit exister aucune rivalité entre la ville et les campagnes. Ces deux sections de l'Etat devraient se prêter un mutuel secours.

M. Rivers.—Si le Senateur d'Est Bâton Rouge insiste sur sa motion de renvoi, il proposera de renvoyer la question à un comité du Sénat tout entier. Il dira prochainement son opinion sur ce qui se passe. Il approuve sincèrement les observations présentées par le Sénateur de Caddo. Il pense qu'on cherche à établir une distinction dangereuse entre la ville et la campagne. Le Sénateur (M. Hodge) a montré qu'en 1847 les assesseurs avaient été chargés du recensement. Pourquoi ne seraient-ils pas aussi compétents aujourd'hui ? Il faut qu'il y ait au fond de tout ceci un but politique. Les Sénateurs de la campagne devraient surveiller ces mouvements avec méfiance. Si la ville réussit aujourd'hui à lui faire adopter des mesures dictées par des interêts politiques, lorsqu'elle aura obtenu le transfert du gouvernement, elle la fera voter pour des interêts locaux.

M. Lenner.—Le Comité (la délégation de la Nlle-Orléans) pourra-t-il faire un rapport demain ?

M. McCay dit que, quant à lui, il ne fera pas de rapport jusqu'à ce qu'il ait eu les renseignemens statistiques nécessaires, qui doivent venir de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Kenner est peiné de voir que le sénateur a présenté une motion sans avoir les renseignements voulus.

M. Rivers insiste sur sa motion de renvoyer le sujet au Comité du Sénat tout entier, et demande que la question soit mise aux voix.

La question est mise aux voix et la proposition est rejetée.

M. Rivers.—Voici, monsieur l'Orateur, ce que le Sénat vient de décider : Que le Sénat tout entier, y compris la délegation de la Nouvelle-Orléans, n'est pas capable de decider cette question aussi bien que la delegation de la Nouvelle-Orléans seule.

M. Derbès dit qu'il n'en est pas ainsi : c'est la coutume générale, comme le senateur le sait, de renvoyer les differentes questions aux comités qui, dans l'opinion du Sénat, étaient le plus à même de les examiner. Le sénateur a dit aussi que nous voulions faire de cette question une question de parti. C'est encore là une erreur. Ce sont, au contraire, ses amis politiques qui sont dans l'habitude de faire de tout une question de parti en votant comme un seul homme, et puis ils renvoient au parti démocratique ce reproche. Ce n'est pas la première fois que ce fait s'est produit. Cette marche a été suivie déjà plusieurs fois quand il y avait des doutes parmi les démocrates mais quand il n'en existait pas parmi les whigs.

M. Barthe présente un substitut qui met à l'élection du peuple la nomination des officiers chargés de faire le recensement.

M. McCay est prêt à discuter la question maintenant.

M. Kenner pensait que le sénateur avait besoin d'envoyer à la Nouvelle-Orléans pour avoir les papiers nécessaires et faire venir certaines personnes qu'il devait consulter.

M. Hodge.—Je voudrais savoir pourquoi les sénateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans pensent que les assesseurs ne sont pas capables de faire le recensement ?

M. Derbès en donnera la raison. C'est parce qu'ils ne peuvent pas s'occuper de ce travail. Son collègue a dit que plusieurs d'entre eux ont positivement refusé de le faire.

M. Hodge dit qu'il n'a pas compris que le sénateur eut avance ce fait.

M. Derbès dit qu'il croit que le sénateur (M. McCay) l'a assuré, s'il s'est trompé il le déclarera pour son propre compte.

M. Martin dit que les sénateurs semblent avoir oublié l'existence de cette partie du bill qui fait un devoir aux assesseurs de faire ce travail, sous peine de dommages considérables.

M. Derbès dit qu'il y a une autre raison pour ne pas donner ce pouvoir aux assesseurs. Ils se plaignent que le salaire qui leur est accordé est tout-à-fait insuffisant. Il se soucient fort peu de la place, mais s'ils doivent nommer des assistants, ils se réserveront certainement une partie des profits. Ils paieront aux assistants un cent par tête et empocheront le reste. La même objection n'existe pas quant aux recorders.

M. McCay demande que le substitut de M. Barthe soit déposé sur le bureau.

Il dit que, s'il était du comité, il tâcherait de présenter dans le rapport des raisons telles qu'elles décideraient le sénat tout entier à voter pour le substitut. Il s'est convaincu qu'il valait mieux confier ce pouvoir à d'autres officiers. D'abord il avait pensé au conseil général ; ensuite on lui a dit que les recorders étaient les personnes les mieux placées pour remplir ces fonctions. Il s'est rendu à cet avis parce qu'il pense que les recorders connaissent mieux la ville, et peuvent mieux faire le travail. S'il avait le temps, il pourrait donner de bonnes raisons pour prouver que les assesseurs ne peuvent faire le travail.

M. Hodge a encore quelques observations à présenter sur ce sujet. Si le Sénat decide que ce pouvoir doit être enlevé aux assesseurs et donné aux recorders, il n'élèvera jamais sa voix contre aucune demande qui sera faite par la Nouvelle-Orléans, à moins que la demande ne porte atteinte aux droits de ses commettants, parce qu'il sera convaincu que la ville peut obtenir tout ce qu'elle demande, et que toute opposition serait vaine. En 1847, comme il l'a déjà dit, les assesseurs ont fait le recensement et cela sans être aidés. La ville a-t-elle, dans l'intervalle, pris un accroissement tel, la population a-t-elle tellement augmenté que ces officiers ne puissent pas faire aujourd'hui ce qu'ils ont fait alors ? Les sénateurs qui lui sont oppose n'ont donné aucune raison pour motiver cette mesure, et ils ne peuvent espérer que les membres des campagnes sacrifieront un principe pour leur plaire.

M. Short propose de déposer sur le bureau le substitut et tous les amendements.

La motion est adopté, après quoi la section primitive est adoptée. M Griffin annonce immédiatement qu'il demandera une reconsidération.

Digitized by Google

M. Lacey demande l'ajournement.

M. Martin demande que le secrétaire inscrive sur le journal qu'à 3 heures moins 2 minutes une motion d'ajournement a été présentée.

Après quelques observations, le Sénat s'ajourne.

VENDREDI, 11 MARS 1853.

Le bill amendant l'acte de 1849 relatif aux corporations est mis devant le Sénat.

M. King.—Le principal changement qui soit introduit par ce bill, tel qu'il est rapporté par le comité, consiste en ceci, que les compagnies télegraphiques jouiront des mêmes droits d'expropriation que les autres compagnies incorporees.

M. Mouton.— Je voudrais que l'on fit subir au bill un amendement qui donnât aux propriétaires lésés par l'exercice des pouvoirs d'une compagnie, le droit de poursuivre cette compagnie dans leur propre paroisse, sans les forcer à porter leur action loin de leur domicile.

Le bill est adopté avec cet amendement.

Le bill ayant pour objet de réduire les frais de certaines annonces judiciaires, &c., est mis devant la chambre.

M. Martin.—L'objet de ce bill est de placer toutes les annonces sur un pied égal en reduisant le coût des annonces pour ventes de succession, et les mettant au même taux que les ventes de shérif.

M. King.—J'espère que ce bill ne passera pas en ce moment. Il opérerait un grand changement dans notre législation, et je suis peu disposé a l'adopter à la hâte, et avant de m'être convaincu que ce changement est commandé par la nécessité. Je ne puis, quant à présent, dire si je suis pour ou contre ce bill. La question des annonces judiciaires est très importante, et jespère que le Sénat ne la decidera pas sans y avoir donné une attention particulière. Je désirerais que le bill fût imprimé et mis sous les yeux du Sénat.

M. Martin.—Je connais parfaitement les motifs secrets qui dirigent le sénateur dans l'opposition qu'il fait au bill. Je sais fort bien qu'un officier du Sénat, qui ferait beaucoup mieux de donner tout son temps aux devoirs de sa place, a pris un vif intérêt au sort de ce bill, et a cherché à le tuer. Monsieur l'orateur, je ne vois pas le motif du grand intérêt qui est manifeste par cette personne. Ce bill n'est pas une attaque dirigée contre le Courrier, et il ne peut porter atteinte aux intérêts de M. La Sère.

M. King.—Je suis surpris des paroles du sénateur. Jespère que le senateur ne suppose pas, chaque fois qu'il voit se lever un de ses collègues, que l'on machine quelque trahison contre ses amis politiques. Quant à moi, je ne subis aucune influence secrète, ma motion d'ordonner l'impression du bill était basée sur la conviction de l'immense importance qu'il doit avoir.

M. Martin.—Comme je l'ai déjà dit, je ne veux point attaquer M. La Sère, je ne veux lui faire aucun tort. Je désire seulement faire disparaître ce que chacun sait et reconnait.

M. Lacey.—Je suis convaincu que le sénateur de l'Assomption n'est pas dirigé par les motifs qu'il a cru nécessaire de repudier, que son seul désir est de remédier a un mal qui existe dans son opinion. Mais le senateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King) l'a dit, il n'y a guère de sujet plus important que celui des annonces judiciaires. Aussi, j'espère que le bill sera imprimé et déposé sur les bureaux, afin qu'il puisse être soumis à l'examen des sénateurs. J'ai a la main un bill sur le même sujet, je désirerais qu'il fût aussi imprimé et mis sous les yeux du Sénat. Je n'attribue aucun motif secret au sénateur de l'Assomption et j'espère qu'il n'en verra aucun dans les efforts que nous faisons pour obtenir l'impression d'un bill de cette nature, avant que le Sénat en décide.

M. Martin.—On m'a attribué un motif auquel je suis entièrement étranger. Ma seule intention était de censurer la conduite d'un officier du Senat qui cherche à influencer nos déliberations, au lieu de se renfermer dans l'accomplissement de ses devoirs.

BILL DE PREEMPTION.

Le bill ayant pour but d'étendre le terme de paiement imposé à certains préempteurs pour l'acquisition de certaines terres, est renvoyé par la Chambre avec refus de concours.

M. Lacey fait la motion de nommer un comité de conférence.

M. Hodge.—Mon opinion est que le bill accorde déjà plus de temps aux preempteurs qu'ils n'en sauraient reclamer. Nous avons été aussi loin que nous le pouvions; maintenant des questions plus importantes réclament nos soins. Je crois que le Sénat ne consentira jamais à rien de plus qu'une extension du terme de paiement. Plutôt que de consentir à rien de plus, je demanderai que le bill soit déposé sur le bureau. J'ai entendu les raisons données en faveur de la mesure, mais aucune ne m'a convaincu qu'elle eût aucune importance, même pour les personnes directement intéressées. Je puis pareillement, je crois, fournir une raison de quelque importance. La Chambre, c'est evident pour moi, voudra absolument qu'on établisse une nouvelle catégorie de préempteurs. Quel sera l'effet de cette disposition, si nous y accédons ? Sous l'empire de la loi de 1852, ou a emis des certificats de terre pour un million d'acres ; ces certificats ont été écoulés. Si nous creons cette nouvelle classe de préempteurs, je demande si les detenteurs de certificats, sous l'empire de la loi de 1852, n'auront pas le droit de localiser leurs certificats sur des terres pour lesquelles les nouveaux préempteurs se seraient fait inscrire. Pouvons-nous dire que nous mettrons une vaste catégorie de terre en dehors du droit de localisation conferé par ces certificats. Dans mon opinion, les détenteurs de ces certificats ont le droit de prendre n'importe quelle partie des terres marécageuses. Ces terres ont été garanties par l'Etat, et aucune loi ne peut maintenant priver les détenteurs de certificats sous l'empire de la loi de 1852 du droit de se les approprier.

Je répète que des questions d'une bien plus grande importance sollicitent l'attention de la Législature. J'insiste donc sur une motion de dépôt.

Cette motion est repoussée.

Sur motion de M. Boatner, le bill de la Chambre pourvoyant à l'organisation des Ecoles Publiques est mis devant le Sénat.

M. King fait la motion que le bill soit renvoyé au comite d'éducation.

M. Wickliffe.—Je suis opposé au renvoi. Le sénateur n'a cessé de se montrer hostile à toute législation spéciale; et aujourd'hui il semble s'en déclarer le chaud partisan, surtout lorsqu'il s'agit de soustraire la ville et la paroisse de Jefferson à l'action de la loi générale sur les écoles. Si le sénateur de Jefferson, (M. Barthe) était ici, il pourrait nous donner quelque bonne raison à l'appui du bill. Mais je ne vois pas pourquoi on manifeste tant d'empressement pendant son absence.

M. Boatner.—Je n'avais pas idée de l'immense importance du principe qui semble être au fond de ce bill, lorsque je l'ai demandé. Je l'ai demandé à la requête du representant de Jefferson qui est venu me dire que le bill était d'une nature tout-à-fait locale, et que les particularites qu'il presente n'ont été introduites que pour la commodite des habitants de sa paroisse. Mais ce que je sais maintenant du bill suffit pour me faire voir qu'il met en jeu un principe d'une grande importance et, conséquemment, je n'en reclamerai pas l'adoption immédiate.

Le bill est renvoyé au Comité d'Education.

Le bill prohibant l'émission de petits billets est renvoyé par le Sénat avec un amendement.

Mr. Wickliffe. Le Bill devient une derision avec l'amendement de la Chambre. Notre but en passant ce bill était de prévenir la circulation de petits billets, qu'ils fussent émis dans l'Etat ou hors de l'Etat. A l'aide de cet amendement on peut jeter dans la circulation autant de ces billets que l'on veut pourvu qu'on ait soin de les émettre en dehors des limites de l'Etat. Dans mon opinion, l'amendement enlève au Bill toute son efficacité.

Mr. King.—Je ne comprends pas ainsi l'amendement.

Mr Wickliffe.—Je ne sais pas qu'elle était l'intention de la chambre en adoptant cet amendement, mais comme je l'ai déjà dit, il aura pour effet d'empêcher le Bill d'atteindre le but qu'il se proposait. Le but était de prévenir la mise en circulation de petits billets dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, mais, sous l'empire de ce Bill, tel qu'il existe actuellement, M. Jacob Barker, ou n'importe qui, peut aller dans un autre Etat, y établir une agence et inonder l'Etat de petits billets.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Short.— L'amendement ne consiste que dans une simple transposition de mots opérée dans l'une des sections du Bill ; mais peu importe la forme, quel est l'effet du changement ? Le but que se proposait le Sénat était de délivrer l'Etat du fléau d'une circulation en petits billets ; c'est dans ce but que ce Bill a été adopté. Depuis cette époque, nous avons reçu un mémoire dont l'auteur nous faisait connaître ses vues sur la question des Banques et des opérations de banque. Cet auteur, un citoyen distingué de la Nouvelle Orléans, avait pris la tâche d'éclairer le Sénat sur ces questions importantes. On nous représenta cependant que le Sénat était déjà en possession de tous les renseignements nécessaires sur ces questions, et conséquemment nous ne jugeâmes pas nécessaire de donner suite au mémoire. Maintenant nous arrive de la Chambre cet amendement qui détruit l'objet que se proposait le Bill. L'effet de l'amendement est celui-ci: Si Mr. B. met en circulation des billets qu'un autre de l'autre côté de la rivière ou quelque part que ce soit hors de l'Etat aura émis, la loi ne peut l'atteindre, et ainsi toute l'efficacité du Bill disparaît. A moins que nous n'atteignions le mal à sa source, nous ne pouvons l'arrêter. Si nous le laissons subsister encore, on viendra nous dire sans aucun doute, qu'il est d'une nécessité absolue que le mal continue d'exister. La petite monnaie et les piastres en or qui abondent seront chassés du pays par ces petits billets, et alors on proclamera qu'à moins que nous ne conservions ces petits billets nous ne pourrons avoir de monnaie. Tel sera le raisonnement qu'on nous fera si nous ne détruisons le mal d'un coup.

M. Hodge—Si les sénateurs veulent examiner l'amendement, ils verront qu'il ne ne peut avoir l'effet qu'ils supposent. Je pense qu'il remplit l'intention du Sénat.

M. Wickliffe—Je vais lire la section primitive et l'amendement. (Il en fait lecture.)

La discussion se prolonge quelque temps sans offrir d'intérêt, après quoi le bill est renvoyé au comité des banques.

M. Wickliffe se lève et dit: Je prends la parole pour un fait personnel. Je vois dans les rapports imprimés des débats du Sénat du 26 mars, le passage suivant:

« M. Wickliffe—A quelle question le sénateur fait-» il allusion ?»

« M. Lacey—A la question sur laquelle porte la ré-» solution ayant pour objet de procéder à l'élection » d'un sénateur des Etats.»

« M. Wickliffe — J'avais compris que le sénateur » niait qu'il y eût aucune question constitutionnelle » soulevée par cette résolution.»

Les observations que j'ai faites sont que les sénateurs, pendant la discussion sur la question de renvoi au comité judiciaire avaient nié que la résolution présentât aucun point de droit.

A quoi le senateur a répondu, ainsi que je le vois, par le rapport:

"M. Lacey.—Si le Sénateur a entendu mon argument sur cette question, s'il a lu le rapport imprimé qui en a été fait, et s'il n'a pas vu que je discutais la question au point de vue constitutionnel, il a essayé alors de répondre à une chose qu'il n'avait pas comprise."

Maintenant, Monsieur, je désire que ce que je vais dire soit inscrit sur le procès verbal. Je presume que dans les allusions qu'il a faites, le Sénateur avait en vue le discours dont j'ai en mains une copie. Je dis, monsieur, que ce discours n'a jamais été prononcé ici. Le Sénat n'ignore pas qu'il n'a pas été prononcé ici: le rapporteur du Sénat n'en a pas fait le rapport. Je le répète et je désire qu'on comprenne bien ce que je dis: Le Sénateur n'a jamais prononcé ce discours. Qu'on inscrive ce que j'ai dit sur le procès verbal.

Mr. Lacey.—Je ne puis certainement pas m'opposer à ce que le discours du Sénateur soit couché tout au long sur le journal. C'était un bien beau discours qui a ajouté encore aux nombreux lauriers dont son front est orné. Je ne puis donc ni ne désire en aucune façon m'opposer à ce qu'il soit inscrit au long dans le compte-rendu de cette assemblée. Quant à l'assertion du Sénateur, je puis dire que l'observation que je fis alors, était que la question comprise dans la résolution ordonnant qu'il fut procédé à l'élection d'un Sénateur des Etats-Unis était d'une nature plutôt politique que légale ou constitutionnelle.

Mr. Wickliffe.—Le Sénateur se trompe. Ce n'est pas mon propre discours que je désire voir inscrire au procès verbal. Je désire seulement que ce que je disais dans le moment fut inscrit dans le journal. Je ne me rappelle pas lui avoir demandé s'il entrait aucune question politique dans la résolution ordonnant qu'il fut procédé à l'élection d'un sénateur et il a répondu en disant que, selon lui, c'était dans un but politique qu'elle avait été présentée

Je le répète, le discours auquel le Sénateur a fait allusion, n'a jamais été prononcé par lui, le rapporteur n'en a pas fait un rapport et je désire que cela soit inscrit sur le journal. Je désire voir mettre un terme à ce système de rapports fait par les Sénateurs eux-mêmes.

Mr. Lacey.—Le Sénateur peut faire comme il lui plaît, je ne m'y oppose aucunement.

LUNDI, 14 mars

M. Wickliffe présente une pétition signée par plusieurs citoyens de la paroisse de Vermillon, protestant contre le bill qui ordonne une nouvelle élection sur la question du transfert du siège de la Cour dans la dite paroisse, et fait la motion que le secrétaire du Senat soit requis de demander à la Chambre l'acte ordonnant une nouvelle élection dans la dite paroisse afin qu'il soit remis en considération.

M. Mouton.—Monsieur le président j'ai appris que le mémoire qui vient d'être presenté au Sénat par le membre d'Ouest Féliciana était un « document des plus importants » Pour moi je n'ai pas encore lu cette pétition. L'acte décretant une nouvelle élection dans la paroisse de Vermillion dans le but d'établir le siège de la cour dans cette paroisse est d'une nature toute locale, et comme toutes les mesures semblables, il rencontrera quelque opposition de la part de ceux dont les intérêts seraient lesés par son adoption. Ce bill a été adopté par le Sénat il y a déjà quelques jours. Je ne sache pas que jusqu'aujourd'hui on ait jamais fait redemander à la Chambre un bill déjà passé par le Sénat. Mais comme je ne désire pas qu'on puisse dire que, par ma faute, à cause de moi, ce bill a été finalement adopté, sans qu'une occasion fut offerte à ceux qui y sont opposés de faire valoir les raisons de leur opposition, je suis très disposé, si cela est possible, à ce que le bill soit redemandé, et repris en considération par le Senat. Je ne crains pas l'opposition contre ce bill. Lorsque j'ai demandé qu'une nouvelle élection eut lieu afin qu'on put connaître si le désir du peuple était que le siège de la Cour fut transféré du lieu où il est actuellement à un autre lieu quelconque, je ne crois pas avoir demandé rien qui ne fut parfaitement raisonnable. Je suis très disposé à ce que la question soit remise en discussion. Le secrétaire peut donc aller redemander ce bill à la Chambre des Représentants afin que ceux qui sont opposés à l'adoption de ce bill puissent exposer les raisons pour lesquelles ils y sont opposés.

M. Griffin.—Je suis d'avis que cette manière d'agir est tout à fait inusitée. C'est la première fois, monsieur le Président, que j'ai jamais entendu soumettre pareille proposition, la première fois que je l'ai vu appuyer. Ce bill est maintenant devant la Chambre basse et par conséquent n'est plus sous le contrôle du Sénat..

Les seules circonstances dans lesquelles j'ai jamais vu redemander un bill par lecorps dont il émanait, étaient celles-ci : lorsqu'une omission de mots avait eu lieu, lorsqu'une erreur quelconque s'était glissée dans la copie, laquelle rendrait indispensable la reprise en consideration et la correction du dit document. En pareilles circonstances, dis-je, j'ai vu redemander un bill ; mais jamais je n'ai vu redemander un bill qui avait déjà été finalement adopté par une des branches de la Législature, qui n'était plus sous son contrôle, alors surtout que le temps après lequel une réconsidération peut-être demandée, était entièrement expiré.

Je le répète, c'est la première fois que je vais redemander un bill, dans le but de le remettre en discussion. Il me semble que c'est à la chambre basse à amender ou à corriger ce bill, puisqu'il n'est plus devant le Sénat.

Digitized by Google

M. Mouton.—M. le président, je désire qu'il soit bien entendu, que loin de m'opposer à la motion faite par l'honorable membre d'Ouest Félicjana, mon désir est, au contraire, que le bill soit repris par le Sénat et mis de nouveau en discussion.

Le président déclare que trois jours s'étant écoulés depuis l'adoption de ce bill, il ne peut être remis en consideration, même s'il était ramené devant le Sénat et que par conséquent la motion faite par le sénateur d'Ouest Feliciana n'est pas à l'ordre.

RILL DE PREEMPTION.

Le rapport du comité de conférence sur le bill de preemption est pris en consideration et adopté tel qu'il a été transmis par la Chambre.

M. Mouton présente un bill pourvoyant à la collecte, au dépôt et au déboursé des fonds publics et aussi à ce qu'aucun détournement du dit fond puisse être fait.

M. Mouton expose que le but de ce bill est de modifier la loi de 1844, laquelle révoque une section de la loi de 1805 relative à cette même question.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Lacey présente un bill pour venir au secours de la Branche banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane à Baton-Rouge.

M. Lacey.—J'exposerai en peu de mots le but de ce bill. Il y a quelque temps la Législature de cet Etat a chargé Hiram Powers de faire une statue de Washington, pour l'Etat de la Louisiane, et a créé une appropriation à cet effet. Cette appropriation a été bientôt épuisée et M. Powers a demandé de nouveaux fonds, afin qu'il put continuer son travail. Le gouverneur, comptant sur l'approbation de la Législature, a signé un bond pour la somme de $3,000, lequel a été payé par la Branche banque de cette ville.

Le but de ce bill est de faire restituer à cette banque les $3,000 avec intérêts.

Le bill est adopté.

Un bill astreignant les parties en litige à payer à l'avance la somme requise par la loi, pour le paiement des frais, est pris en considération.

M. Nicholls.—M. le président, je pense que ce bill devrait être adopté. La loi, telle qu'elle existe maintenant, donne lieu aux plus graves inconvénients. En plusieurs circonstances des affaires sont intentées par des personnes qui ne présentent aucune garantie pécuniaire; des témoins sont sommés de très loin, et requis de se présenter devant la Cour sans que l'on s'informe s'ils ont ou non les moyens de faire les frais de voyage. On ne s'occupe aucunement de cela, et l'excuse d'un témoin, basée sur le fait qu'il n'a pas les moyens de payer son transport et tous les autres frais auxquels il est necessairement forcé, n'est pas admise.

Il me semble, M. le président, que celui qui se présente devant une Cour pour reclamer un droit, doit préalablement se procurer ce qui est nécessaire pour payer les frais des témoins sans lesquels le gain de sa cause est impossible. Ce n'est pas assez que les témoins soient payés par la suite, ils devraient l'être à l'avance. Il arrive souvent qu'ils sont forcés de partir de chez eux sans qu'il leur soit possible de payer leur frais indispensables avant leur arrivée au lieu où siége la Cour; là même il peut arriver qu'ils ne puissent pas les payer, et alors il faut qu'ils vivent aux frais de la ville. Je le demande, M. le président, cela est il juste? Cela est il convenable?

Quel mal peut résulter de l'adoption de ce bill, qui pourvoit seulement à ce que les témoins puissent réclamer à l'avance de la personne qui les fait sommer de comparaître le per diem accordé par la loi.

C'est là non seulement un acte de justice envers les témoins, mais, plus encore, un frein pour empêcher les affaires inutiles ou dont le gain est impossible; c'est là éviter d'inutiles désagréments aux témoins, aux cours une grande perte de temps, à l'Etat de grands frais. Certes, c'est là un but désirable et s'il existe contre l'adoption de ce bill des raisons équivalentes, j'aimerais bien à les entendre exposer. Je voudrais entendre dire les raisons pour lesquelles les témoins n'auraient pas le droit de réclamer à l'avance la somme à laquelle ils ont droit et qu'ils peuvent fort bien ne jamais recevoir.

On peut objecter qu'il est du devoir des greffiers de cours d'exiger un cautionnement en pareil cas de la part de la personne qui intente l'affaire. Mais qu'importe à un témoin qu'un cautionnement ait été donné s'il ne peut payer ses frais de logement et de nourriture? Bien souvent la caution n'a pas de valeur. J'ai connaissance de plusieurs affaires dans ma propre paroisse, qui ont duré jusqu'à trois ans et les témoins étaient tenus de se trouver présents à chaque session. Plusieurs d'entre eux étaient des ouvriers et des hommes de labeur qui avaient été forcés de quitter leur demeure et de voyager à travers quinze ou vingt milles pour se rendre au lieu des sessions de la cour. Dans ma paroisse les témoins sont souvent forcés de parcourir une trentaine de milles tantôt en esquif, tantôt à travers des prairies, payant de leur propre bourse leurs frais de transport.

Dans ces affaires auxquelles j'ai fait allusion les témoins ont eu à encourir toutes ces dépenses et ils n'ont pas eu un sou de remboursement. Si la loi avait été alors telle que celle que l'on propose aujourd'hui, le mal dont on se plaint n'aurait jamais existé.

M. Wickliffe.—Le sénateur a dit qu'il désirait entendre les raisons que l'on peut avancer contre le bill. J'aurai quelques arguments à avancer que je crois de quelque poids. Comme le sénateur l'a dit, la loi permet d'exiger un cautionnement pour les frais de toute personne qui forme une action. Cette disposition est une garantie suffisante pour les témoins dans le district que j'habite. Le bill exige que la partie qui demande un attachment contre un témoin dépose la somme nécessaire pour couvrir les frais de l'attachment. Existe-t-il, monsieur l'Orateur, une pareille disposition dans aucun autre Etat? Dans le nôtre, si un témoin est absent, on peut se procurer son témoignage à l'aide d'une commission rogatoire. S'il est en ville, on peut l'amener en cour au moyen d'un attachment Quel est l'objet du bill? Le sénateur dit qu'il a pour but de mettre le témoin à couvert. Mais il ne fait rien sous ce rapport, de plus que le cautionnement qui est maintenant exigible. Quel sera le résultat du bill? Une personne a une action de mille piastres à intenter. Il lui faut trouver de l'argent pour déposer la somme nécessaire à couvrir les frais; si elle ne l'a pas, il la lui faut emprunter, ce qui lui sera difficile, impossible peut-être; dans ce cas, il lui faudra renoncer à ses droits. Je ne crois pas que la loi actuelle soit dure pour les témoins, et je voterai certainement contre ce bill.

M. Nicholls—Une loi semblable à celle qui est proposée existe actuellement à New-York, et, je crois, aussi dans le New-Hampshire. Le sénateur a dit que si une personne qui a un procès à intenter n'a pas l'argent necessaire, elle sera obligée de l'emprunter. C'est certainement un inconvénient, mais la question est celle-ci: cet inconvénient doit-il peser sur un seul ou sur un grand nombre? Je pense que lorsqu'une partie se présente en Cour, elle doit être tenue de payer les frais nécessaires pour amener les témoins en Cour.

Le bill est adopté.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Bill Judiciaire.

Le bill judiciaire est mis devant le Sénat.

M. Lacoste demande que le bill soit déposé provisoirement, vu l'absence de plusieurs sénateurs.

M. Short—Je m'oppose à cette proposition. Nous avons souvent renvoyé la discussion de bills importants pour la convenance de sénateurs absents, et, si nous suivons ces errements, nous n'arriverons à aucun résultat.

Il est évident qu'il nous faut adopter un système judiciaire. Si nous ne pouvons avoir des Districts étendus, ayons-en de petits, mais au moins ayons quelque chose. D'abord, consultons l'opinion du Sénat sur le bill de la Chambre, et s'il nous convient, tout est dit. Si nous le rejetons, le substitut du sénateur d'Ouest-Félicjana [M. Wickliffe] peut être mis devant le Sénat.

M. Wickliffe—Je ne saurais penser que le bill de la Chambre puisse jamais être adopté par le Sénat. Ma motion est de mettre à la discussion le bill qui est présenté comme substitut. C'est là une épreuve décisive.

Le bill et le substitut sont lus par le secrétaire.

M. McCay pense que le bill devrait être imprimé.

M. Short—Je saisirai cette occasion pour expliquer ma manière de voir, quant à la question qui est maintenant devant le Sénat. Un bill a déjà été adopté par la Chambre. Ce bill divise l'Etat en huit Districts, en n'y comprenant pas la Nlle-Orléans. C'est là ce qu'on a appelé le système des grands Districts. Les partisans de ce système ont en vue d'y faire entrer l'établissement d'une Cour des preuves dans chaque paroisse. Dans l'autre sytème, l'Etat serait divisé en petits Districts, mais il n'y aurait point de Cours des Preuves. En outre de ces deux systèmes, il y a une troisième proposition qui consiste à conserver les Districts tels qu'ils existent maintenant. C'est là le système mis en avant par le substitut qui a été présenté ce matin. J'avais supposé que les sénateurs avaient une opinion arrêtée sur ce sujet, qu'ils avaient décidé quel système ils adopteraient. Les sénateurs ne l'ont point fait ; il vaut donc tout autant que nous ajournions et que nous laissions les choses telles qu'elles sont.

Digitized by Google

La question est celle-ci : adopterons nous le système des districts étendus, le système qui réduit les dépenses en tant qu'il est question des Cours de District. Cependant si nous établissons ce système, nous devons le faire avec l'arrière-pensée d'établir une Cour de Paroisse dans chaque District. Ce n'est qu'en apparence que ce système est le plus dispendieux. Car si nous considérons que les frais perçus aujourd'hui par les greffiers le seront alors par les juges des Cours des Preuves, nous reconnaîtrons que ce système est plus économique. Quand nous mettons en ligne de compte la perte de temps qui résulte de l'obligation de prendre les témoignages par écrit, perte qui pourrait disparaître si la Juridiction de la Cour Suprême était restreinte aux questions de Droit; quand, dis-je, on réfléchit à l'économie de temps et de travail qui en résulterait pour les Cours de District, on verra que nous devons établir le système des districts étendus. Si l'on réfléchit que les dépenses occasionnées par notre système judiciaire, sans sortir de celles occasionnées par la Cour Suprême et les cinq Cours de District de la Nouvelle-Orléans, surpassent le montant total des traitements payés aux juges de l'Etat du Mississipi, on est inévitablement amené à envisager avec effroi les frais de notre système actuel. La question est celle-ci : Quel est le système que nous pourrions adopter et qui introduirait une économie dans le judiciaire? Ce dont on se plaint maintenant, ce n'est par la manière dont la justice est administrée en exceptant toute fois ce qui est relatif aux affaires des preuves—Sauf cette exception le système actuel fonctionne parfaitement. Il existe deux sujets de plainte, mais on n'a pas encore indiqué le remède à ces deux maux. Le premier est que le judiciaire est trop dispendieux:—c'est là une expression vague. Cette assertion ne s'appuie sur aucun chiffre, on ne propose aucun plan pour faire disparaître le mal. Mais à moins qu'on ne le fasse, et qu'on ne trouve le moyen de donner plus d'activité au reglement des successions, nous aurons en vain adopté des lois sur la matière.

Arrivons au fait. Comment pourra opérer le système qui crée les grands districts ? Je l'ai dit déjà, il ne diminuera aucunement les dépenses de l'Etat, au contraire, il les augmentera beaucoup ; mais, je le répète, lorsque nous considérons que la plus grande partie des affaires décidées par les greffiers de Cours, affaires pour lesquelles ils reçoivent un salaire, seront transférées aux juges des Cours des Preuves, nous verrons que quoique en apparence les dépenses de l'Etat soient augmentées, elle sont au contraire diminuées en fait. Si nous établissons ce système, nous remédirons du moins à un mal.

La question qui se présente ensuite est relative à l'administration des biens. Nous savons tous qu'une partie qui est en possession renonce difficilement. Il est donc important qu'il soit établi un système par lequel les Cours soient autorisées à exiger une prompte et définitive administration des propriétés. Pour cette raison, Monsieur, je voterai en faveur du bill qui émane de la Chambre basse.

M. Wickliffe.—Dans mon opinion, le bill de la Chambre donne lieu à plusieurs objections. En premier lieu, sous le système qu'il établit les districts sont beaucoup trop grands. Il serait presque impossible aux juges de voyager, à travers une aussi grande étendue de territoire, surtout aux époques où les communications sont presque entièrement interrompues par suite du mauvais état des chemins, de la baisse des eaux et d'autres obstacles de cette nature. De plus, il y a cette autre objection, que le système des grands districts serait beaucoup plus dispendieux que le système actuel. Le salaire des huit juges de district, à $3,500 chacun, s'élèverait à un total de près de $30,000, et nous avons de plus la dépense additionnelle des Cours des Preuves. Les seize juges à $2,000 chacun ne coûteraient que $46,000. Le système adopté par la Chambre coûterait environ $82,000, additionnant les salaires des juges de district et des juges des Cours des preuves. Que le substitut soit adopté, et les districts seront de dimensions convenables, assez peu étendus pour qu'il soit facile aux juges de se rendre d'un point quelconque au lieu où siégerait la Cour; et il n'y aurait aucun obstacle à la passation d'un bill définissant et limitant les pouvoirs des greffiers. Je ne sache pas qu'aucune plainte ait été faite contre le système actuel, quoique quelques personnes trouvent que les Cours ne siégent pas assez souvent. Une clause spéciale de ce bill prévoit ce mal et y obvie. Je me suis opposé à ce système qui proposait la création de 28 districts hors de la Nouvelle-Orléans, parce que je pensais qu'il n'aurait d'autre effet que de rendre justement ridicule le judiciaire de la Louisiane. Seize districts seraient un nombre grandement suffisant, et lorsque nous aurons réglé et défini les pouvoirs des greffiers, tout sera pour le mieux. J'espère que le substitut sera adopté.

M. Lacoste.—M. le président, je me suis toujours efforcé d'être juste envers mes collègues du Sénat, et j'espère qu'ils observeront envers moi la même ligne de conduite. Le bill tel qu'il est maintenant présenté est préjudiciable à mes constituants, parce qu'il range les paroisses de St-Bernard et de Plaquemines dans le même district que la paroisse de Jefferson, avec laquelle elles n'ont aucun rapport à quelque point de vue que ce soit, géographique ou commercial. Ce serait rendre ce district beaucoup trop grand pour un seul juge. J'espère que le bill ne sera pas adopté tel qu'il est maintenant présenté.

M. Wickliffe.—Lorsque l'on a rangé dans le même district les paroisses nommées par le sénateur, l'intention n'était pas d'augmenter aucunement la besogne du juge. Dans les circonstances actuelles, il était presque impossible d'éviter cette agglomération de paroisses, et de plus le sénateur doit prendre en considération que la paroisse de Jefferson est placée en excellente compagnie. J'espère qu'il retirera ses objections et qu'il acceptera le bill tel qu'il est.

M Lacoste—Le sénateur donne sa sanction au bill, lorsqu'il dit que la paroisse de Jefferson est placée en excellente compagnie. Qu'il n'oublie pas que lorsque l'on ne se soucie pas de la bonne compagnie, on peut facilement s'en dispenser.

M. Lacey.—En discutant ce bill qui est soumis au Sénat, je dois, je crois, restreindre mes observations strictement au bill lui-même. Néanmoins, en exprimant mes vues, je prendrai la liberté de faire ressortir, autant que je pourrai, les avantages du bill que j'ai soumis au Sénat, et j'essaierai de faire rejeter celui qui est maintenant devant ce corps afin d'obtenir que le mien soit mis aux votes.

Tout d'abord, je dois dire que le bill du Sénat me paraît préférable à celui proposé par la Chambre. Le bill de la Chambre a pour but de créer de grands districts, et dans chaque paroisse un juge pour la Cour des Preuves. Ce système me semble soulever plusieurs objections, et plutôt que de voter pour ce bill, j'adopterai le substitut de l'honorable membre d'Ouest-Féliciana [M. Wickliffe]. Mais il est évident, et personne ne saurait différer d'opinion sur ce point, il est évident, dis-je, que le peuple de cet Etat désire un changement dans le système judiciaire. Le substitut, pour tout changement, ne propose qu'un agrandissement d'un ou deux districts. Est-ce là le vœu du peuple ? Nos élections ne disent-elles pas ce que demande le peuple ? La presse ne s'est-elle pas formellement exprimée sur ce sujet ? N'est-ce pas là enfin une des grandes questions qui doivent occuper la Législature actuelle ? Que deviennent ces appels, ces demandes pressantes réclamant une législation à la fois plus expéditive et moins sujette à erreur, si nous fermons l'oreille aux besoins du peuple? Je le répète, la masse désire un changement, et pour cette raison je suis opposé au substitut, lequel ne propose rien de nouveau dans le système actuel.

Si je comprends bien le vœu du peuple, si je sais quelque chose et de ses besoins et de son désir, un changement est indispensable. Quel système peut plus sûrement répondre à nos besoins ? Telle est la question. A part le substitut maintenant devant le Sénat, deux systèmes ont été proposés. Le mien créant

Digitized by Google

29 Cours de District, avec juridiction en matière des "Preuves," et l'autre formant 8 Districts avec une Cour des Preuves dans chaque paroisse.

Je serai bref et tâcherai cependant de faire comprendre que le bill de la Chambre ne peut être mis en pratique. En effet, monsieur, que propose ce bill ? Il embrasse la formation de 8 Districts Judiciaires dont 7 doivent se trouver en dehors de la Nlle.-Orléans.—La première objection qui me frappe, est que dans plusieurs districts, la topographie de la campagne mettrait le Juge de la Cour de District dans l'impossibilité de tenir des sessions régulières. Ne saute-t-il pas à la vue que, si telle est la division des districts, quelques juges ne pourront pas remplir les obligations que leur impose la loi. Le Sénateur de St. Bernard nous dit qu'il serait à-peu-près impossible à un juge de traverser le district dans lequel sont placées ses paroisses. Ainsi, il est évident que les juges ne sauraient remplir d'une manière satisfaisante les fonctions qui leur ont confiées. Ici donc se trouve un obstacle insurmontable. Il y a encore une autre objection. Les districts étant très étendus, l'on ne pourra pas obtenir de la Cour certains ordres indispensables. On aurait à parcourir plusieurs milles, ou plusieurs mois se passeraient avant de recevoir un ordre de vente pour une propriété hypothequée. De plus, ce système pourrait injustement frapper des personnes détenues sous une accusation criminelle.

Elles peuvent être innocentes, et cependant elles resteront plusieurs mois dans une sombre prison avant que le juge puisse envoyer l'ordre de leur élargissement. Ne voyez-vous pas, après ces objections, l'inadmissibilité de ce bill ? Ne voyez-vous pas que les ordres interlocutoires, les ordres de vente &c., ne pourraient s'obtenir à moins que celui qui désire se les procurer, ne traverse un District aride pour trouver le juge ? Voici encore un point : Sera-t-il possible d'obtenir des juges capables, eu égard au temps qu'ils seront obligés de rester séparés de leurs familles ? Ils seront arrachés à leurs foyers ; pendant une grande partie de l'année, ils vivront loin de leurs familles, forcés, pour remplir leurs devoirs, de traverser des Districts étendus. En face de tout cela, pensez-vous pouvoir toujours trouver l'homme du plus grand mérite ? La conséquence du système des districts étendus sera non-seulement d'entraver le cours de la justice, mais encore d'empêcher l'acquisition d'hommes de grands talents, car celui qui oublierait ce qu'il doit à sa famille, oublierait à plus forte raison les obligations que lui impose sa qualité de juge. Mais là ne sont pas les seules objections.—D'après ce système, il sera nécessaire d'établir des Cours des Preuves. Si nous avons des districts étendus, alors nous verrons ce vieux système des Preuves, qui fait partie de celui propose par la Chambre.

La première objection au système des preuves, est relative aux émoluments. Les salaires doivent être ou minimes, et alors nous aurons de pauvres juges, ou élevés, et par là les taxes sont augmentées. Je crois que l'on doit fixer à $500 les émoluments des juges des Cours des Preuves. Je sais que c'est le montant proposé dans un bill. Monsieur, je ne voterai jamais pour un bill qui contient de telles dispositions. Réfléchissez un instant. Vous savez que je dis vrai, lorsque j'avance que les questions agitées devant la Cour des Preuves sont les plus importantes de l'Etat, et cependant vous voulez les faire décider par un juge qui se contenterait d'un salaire de $500 ? Avec une telle rétribution, pourrez-vous obtenir un homme de talent ? Personne ne saurait le croire. On dit que le bill contient une disposition autorisant le juge à pratiquer comme avocat. Ce que l'on nous présente comme un avantage, est plutôt un vice à mes yeux. L'on ajoute que les paroisses pourront augmenter les salaires des juges. A cela, je trouve aussi beaucoup d'objections. Les paroisses riches pourront alors avoir de bons juges, en leur donnant de forts émoluments, tandis que les paroisses dont les ressources seront moindres, ne pourront pas jouir des mêmes avantages. Je répète que la faculté laissée aux paroisses d'augmenter les salaires des juges, n'est pas un avantage. C'est de la législation qui favorise le riche au detriment du pauvre

M. Rivers—Je n'ai pas connaissance de semblable proposition.

M. Nichols—Cette proposition a été faite par le sénateur de Caddo [M. Hodge.]

M. Short—Par le bill que j'ai proposé les juges des Cours des preuves recevront $700 ou $750 et ils seront autorisés à exercer la profession d'avocats.

M. Lacey—Je vais essayer d'exprimer mes vues relativement à la proposition que j'ai soumise au Sénat. Si ce corps y consent il votera tour à tour sur chacun de ces bills, jusqu'à ce que ce soit au tour du mien. Je puis n'être pas tout-à-fait à l'ordre; mais j'espère qu'il me sera permis de continuer et d'exprimer mes vues sur chacun des systèmes qui ont été proposés.

Comme je l'ai déjà dit, je considère que le modique salaire de $500 pour les juges de Cours de preuves, est tout-à-fait insuffisant. Le bill de la Chambre porte ce salaire à $1,000, mais cela est tout aussi mal. A $1,000 vous n'aurez pas de meilleurs juges qu'à $500. Ces deux sommes sont mal calculées et ne nous assureront jamais les services d'hommes de talent. Mais le bill de la Chambre autorise le juge à exercer la profession d'avocat. Pensez-vous qu'il soit convenable de permettre que le même homme siége aujourd'hui comme juge pour décider une affaire, et que le jour suivant il comparaisse comme avocat devant une autre Cour ?

Ne sera-t-il pas nécessairement influencé par là dans ses jugemens et dans ses décisions ? Que l'on dise tout ce que l'on voudra de l'impartialité d'un avocat à qui une affaire est confiée, ne savons-nous pas qu'il est dans la nature humaine qu'il épouse la cause de celui du côté duquel est son intérêt. L'esprit de tout homme, quelqu'il soit, ne peut rester impartial et son opinion se forme toujours dans le sens de la cause qui lui est confiée. De la sorte le juge ne pourrait rester impartial. Si vous l'autorisez à exercer la profession d'avocat ne cherchera-t-il pas à se populariser aux yeux de la population litigieuse, sentiment, il est vrai, imperceptible d'abord, car la sainteté du serment prêté par lui l'empêcherait de le tenter à découvert. Et cependant si fragile est la nature humaine, qu'il pourrait même négliger de se couvrir du voile des apparences. Prenant donc en considération la modicité du salaire, la permission donnée au juge d'exercer la profession d'avocat et enfin la clause qui autorise les paroisses à augmenter le salaire des juges. Je pense que ce système donne lieu à une foule d'objections.

Ces objections que j'ai citées sont-elles les seules qui se présentent ? Non, certainement, monsieur ! Les différences établies entre les juridictions des diverses Cours, est, à mes yeux, un obstacle sérieux à l'adoption du système de Cours des preuves. La question de juridiction a toujours donné lieu à mille contestations. Il arrive parfois que les parties en litige sont des mois entiers à tâtonner sur la question de juridiction avant d'arriver à savoir quelle est la véritable Cour devant laquelle ils doivent porter leur affaire.

Je demanderai pourquoi le barreau de la Nouvelle-Orléans si plein de talent et d'expérience, si désireux de voir perfectionner le système judiciaire de notre Etat, pourquoi, dis-je, le barreau de la Nouvelle-Orléans demande-t-il que dans le système que nous adopterons il ne soit établi aucune différence de juridiction entre les Cours des preuves et les autres Cours. Il est vrai que maintenant certaines affaires ont la préséance dans certaines Cours particulières ; mais toutes les Cours ont la même juridiction et conséquemment il n'y a pas d'obstacle à la prompte administration de la justice. J'en appelle au jugement des sénateurs! Adopteraient-ils un système en vertu duquel les Cours seront en session tous les ans et dans quel but ? Pour décider des affaires qui soient de leur ressort ? Non ! mais pour que le plaignant, après des procédures sans fin, se retire découragé, dégoûté en voyant que la Cour devant laquelle il a porté son affaire n'a aucune juridiction sur elle.

Le bill que j'ai eu l'honneur de soumettre au Sénat, aurait, je crois, un résultat tout différent. Je crois qu'il réaliserait le but si désirable, de mettre la justice à la portée de tout le monde. Si je ne puis obtenir les vingt-huit districts proposés dans mon bill, je consentirai à en réduire le nombre. Mais je ne me prononcerai jamais en faveur du système qui crée une différence entre les cours ordinaires et les Cours des Preuves. Ce principe m'est odieux par lui-même; et il l'est bien plus encore de la manière dont il est posé par la chambre basse. Je suis en faveur de ce système qui astreint le juge à siéger dans chaque paroisse. Le peuple le désire, parce que de la sorte l'administration de la justice serait à la fois plus sûre et plus expéditive. J'ai donc présenté mon bill dans l'intention de satisfaire le vœu du peuple, qui demande que des sessions de cour aient lieu deux fois par an, dans chaque paroisse, pour l'examen des affaires criminelles et deux fois par an pour les affaires civiles. Quelle objection peut-on présenter à ce système? On dit que les mesquines dimensions des districts feront des juges un objet de dérision. Si un juge administre la justice avec impartialité, il sera toujours entouré de l'estime publique, il aura toujours sa place marquée parmi les plus hauts dignitaires de l'Etat, quelque étroitement limitée que puisse être sa juridiction. Mais si les juges doivent recevoir le salaire insignifiant de $500 par an, s'ils doivent se présenter un jour à la barre comme avocats et le lendemain siéger au tribunal, s'il faut que de temps en temps ils implorent des jurés de police une augmentation de salaire, ne pensez-vous pas qu'alors, et alors seulement notre judiciaire deviendrait une dérision.

Digitized by Google

J'espère donc que le Sénat adoptera mon bill. Qu'il soit amendé, s'il est nécessaire; que les imperfections qu'il présente soient effacées. Je maintiens que comme système, c'est le meilleur qui ait été proposé. J'espère que les autres bills seront écartés et que l'on agira sur le mien. Je n'entends pas montrer aucun manque de respect envers les sénateurs qui ne partagent pas mes vues; mais il me paraît évident que leurs systèmes sont entièrement impraticables et qu'ils ne répondent aucunement au vœu du peuple.

M. Wickliffe.—Je demanderai au sénateur, si ce bill n'occasionnera pas une dépense de plus de $70,000. Il doit y avoir vingt-huit juges à $3,000 chacun.

M. Lacey.—Le salaire est fixé à $3,500.

M. Wickliffe—Cela porterait la dépense à plus de $30,000.

M. King.—Notre but principal, M. le président, est de prendre un parti sage sur cette question, et après considération mûre et réfléchie, que nous puissions être certain d'adopter un système qui satisfasse le peuple, qui rende facile l'administration de la justice. Après cette réflexion je suis arrivé à la conclusion que le substitut proposé par le sénateur d'Ouest Feliciana (M. Wickliffe), est le seul bill qui puisse être adopté, le seul qui ait l'approbation du Sénat.

J'ai compris que ce bill établit le même nombre de Districts qui existe sous le système actuel; il crée quatre sessions par an, à deux de ces termes la Cour s'occupe exclusivement des affaires des preuves, pendant les deux autres elle jugera toutes sortes d'affaires, y compris les affaires des preuves. Je crois que ce plan satisferait le public et rapprocherait autant que possible le tribunal du justiciable. Je dirai maintenant en quelques mots les raisons pour lesquelles je me suis arrêté à ce système. En premier lieu, je considère l'économie qui en résulterait comme étant d'une grande importance. J'ai calculé la dépense qu'occasionnerait chacun des systèmes proposés et j'ai trouvé que, dans le système des grands districts, avec un traitement de $3500 par juge et un juge de Cour des preuves dans chaque paroisse à un traitement qui ne serait pas moindre de $1000—car il serait presqu'impossible que la justice fut bien administrée, avec un misérable système de juges à bon marché,—j'ai trouvé, dis-je, qu'au lieu d'une dépense de $4000 nous aurions à payer la jolie petite somme de $75,000.

Dans le système proposé par le Sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge, (M. Lacey) la dépense s'élèverait à $84,000. Il est vrai que le nombre des districts et des juges serait peut être réduit, mais les dépenses surpasseront encore de beaucoup les dépenses actuelles. Le Sénateur de Bâton-Rouge nous a dit que l'opinion publique réclamait impérieusement un changement dans le judiciaire. Pour ma part, après l'examen le plus attentif, il m'a été impossible de découvrir que le peuple demandât aucun changement important dans le système actuel; encore moins un changement qui doublerait les dépenses actuelles.

Le système présent est, sans aucun doute, de beaucoup préférable au système des Cours des Preuves. Je réprouve ce système autant que le Sénateur qui vient de parler, mais il est, je crois, un point sur lequel lui et moi nous nous accorderons; c'est que les greffiers de cours sont, en général, plus au courant des affaires des preuves que les membres même du barreau. Il est rare que nous fassions un pas dans la procédure qu'exigent ces sortes d'affaires sans consulter le greffier. Je crois que pour ces affaires les greffiers vaudront mieux qu'un juge de Cour des preuves quelqu'il soit; on sera sûr de trouver chez eux, pour ce genre d'affaires, plus de lumières; plus d'honnêté que chez un avocat tiré des bas-fonds de la profession et recevant un salaire de $500.

Pour ce qui regarde le système proposé par le Sénateur d'Est Baton-Rouge, je crois que les districts sont beaucoup trop petits. Il y aurait quelques districts dans l'Etat dans lesquels il serait impossible de trouver des juges compétents, et, en supposant qu'on les trouvât, ils auraient très peu de chose à faire. Donner aux juges qui ont peu à faire le même salaire qu'à ceux dont tout le temps est pris, serait une injustice patente. Il pourrait y avoir quelques juges qui ne seraient pas occupés plus de quatre mois dans l'année, tandis que d'autres seraient obligés de travailler presque tout le temps.

Monsieur l'Orateur. Je suis encore à découvrir la cause de cette résolution dans l'opinion publique, qui a mis, prétend-on, le système des Cours des preuves en si grande faveur. Il n'y a pas longtemps que le peuple tout entier était contre ce vieux système, et la constitution de 1845 eut à l'abolir.

M. Short.—Le Sénateur pense-t-il que le système de Cour des Preuves que l'on demande aujourd'hui ressemble en rien à celui qui a été aboli en 1845?

M. King.—Ce doit être quelque chose de semblable, puisqu'il porte le même nom.

M. Short.—Je veux que l'on sache bien que je n'ai nullement le désir de rouvrir cette boîte de Pandore. Le système que je désire voir établir n'est nullement semblablable à l'ancien système des juges de paroisse.

M. King.—Je suis heureux d'entendre le Sénateur déclarer qu'il ne veut pas rouvrir cette boîte de Pandore, qui a été fermée heureusement pour nous. Il peut être vrai que le Sénateur ne soit pas en faveur d'un système semblable à l'ancien, mais quand je verrai son système je serai plus à même de former mon opinion sur ce point. Il propose de donner aux juges des Cours des Preuves $750 par an. Je vous le demande, monsieur, y a-t-il un économe respectable dans la campagne ou même un cuisinier à la Nlle-Orléans qui voulût donner ses services pour une somme aussi misérable?

Peut-on supposer que pour $750 nous pouvons avoir un homme compétent pour remplir les fonctions de sa place, un homme qui doit s'être préparé par l'étude aux devoirs de sa profession et en connaître les principes? Un homme qui tient en ses mains la fortune des vivans et des morts? Les greffiers suffisent parfaitement aux actes conservatoires. Ils n'ont pas le pouvoir de décider, ils ont le pouvoir de conserver. Ces pouvoirs, conjointement avec les pouvoirs donnés aux juges, dans le système du sénateur d'Ouest-Baton-Rouge, de décider les affaires des preuves quatre fois l'an constituent le meilleur système qui ait encore été proposé. Il est plus commode, plus économique, mieux adopté aux besoins du public, et il ne s'écarte pas tant des systèmes établis. Pour ces raisons j'espère qu'il sera adopté par le Sénat.

M Short. — J'ai quelques mots à dire en réponse au sénateur qui vient de parler. Trois systèmes ont été proposés. De ces trois systèmes nous devons choisir celui qui nous paraîtra donner le plus de garanties en faveur d'une administration prompte et intègre de la justice. A coup sûr, nous devons considérer les avantages et les désavantages que présente chacun des systèmes. Les grands districts relèveront le judiciaire et l'empêcheront d'avoir un cachet misérable qui s'attacherait, ainsi que le pensent certaines personnes, aux juges qui ne recevraient que de minces salaires. On a dit que des salaires réduits feront descendre les juges dans l'opinion. Suivant cette doctrine, un homme qui a une place est respectable dans la proportion du salaire qu'il reçoit. M. l'Orateur, j'avais supposé que ce qui relevait l'homme était le caractère et la moralité; que c'était en se montrant capable de remplir les devoirs de sa place, qu'un officier se rendait respectable.

Mais je ferai usage des arguments du sénateur lui-même en faveur du système des huit districts. Sous ce système, les juges recevront de fortes salaires et devront conséquemment, suivant lui, être infiniment plus respectables que dans son système qui établit des districts moins étendus et des salaires moins élevés. Il est vrai que les districts comprendront une vaste étendue de territoire, et que les juges auront beaucoup à faire. Un sénateur a pris occasion de ce fait pour faire un appel à la sensibilité du Sénat. (« Y a-t-il, s'est-il écrié, un homme digne de ce nom, qui pourrait oublier ses devoirs et ce qu'il doit à sa famille au point de consentir à s'en séparer pendant plusieurs mois de l'année pour vaquer à ses affaires ? Y a-t-il un homme qui consentit à cela et à voyager d'un point à un autre à travers de mauvaises routes, sur des rivières qui débordent ?») Il paraît, monsieur l'orateur, que les dangers par terre et par eau ont beaucoup d'effet sur l'âme sensible du sénateur. Mais il devrait se souvenir que si nous adoptons les districts étendus, nous aurons des juges respectables. On a dit que si vous créez de forts salaires vous aurez des juges fort respectables. Ce sera le cas dans le système des huit juges de district, et conséquemment l'argument du sénateur se retourne contre lui.

Digitized by Google

Mais il est une autre raison en faveur de ce système c'est qu'en pratique il sera beaucoup plus économiques que toutes les autres. Admettons que, suivant le calcul du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, les juges de la Cour des Preuves reçoivent $1000, ce qui ferait $47,000 pour tout l'Etat. Ajoutons $28,000 pour les salaires des juges de district, vous avez un total de $75,000, et à ce prix vous avez à la fois et des juges de district et des juges des Cours des Preuves dans chaque paroisse. Mais sous le système proposé par le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey), vous aurez un nombre de district tel, que la place de juge deviendrait une dérision, si l'argument du sénateur est correct, et la dépense serait de $80,000 Ce système présente tous les désavantages des autres systèmes et aucun de leurs avantages.

J'arrive maintenant au système des juges de paroisses, qui a soulevé une si grande réprobation. Si les sénateurs veulent consulter les débats de la Convention de 1845, ils verront que ce système y a été longuement discuté. Ils verront par la discussion à laquelle il y a donné lieu, qu'ils se trompent grandement sur la nature du système des cours des Preuves, tel qu'il est proposé dans un des bills qui sont devant le Senat. Que propose ce système ? Rien de plus que d'accorder à certaines Cours une juridiction spéciale sur certaines affaires, imposant certains devoirs aux juges, et leur attribuant un salaire pour cela. La grande objection à l'ancien système des juges de paroisse, était qu'il offrait aux juges trop d'extortions un moyen du paiement de leur salaire. Le sénateur ignore-t-il que sous la Constitution actuelle, les juges ne peuvent rien recevoir en plus de leur salaire, et qu'ils ne peuvent, comme l'a dit le sénateur, aller demander et obtenir des ordres de vente. Pense-t-il que cela soit faisable sous la Constitution actuelle?

Les autres objections au système des Cours des Preuves sont plutôt imaginaires que réelles. On a dit qu'il y aurait conflit de jurisdiction. Pourquoi cela ? Quels seront les devoirs de ces Cours ? Ils seront si simples, si clairs, que le plus faible avocat pourra dire immédiatement si son affaire est ou n'est pas de la jurisdiction des Cours des Preuves.

Mais on nous dit que le barreau de la Nouvelle-Orléans, avec toute la sagesse et le talent qui le caractérisent, s'est prononcé contre le système des Cours des Preuves. Eh bien ! que signifie cela ? Devons-nous être guidés entièrement par l'opinion du barreau de la Nouvelle-Orléans?

On a introduit dans ce bill une autre clause à laquelle je suis entièrement opposé. Un citoyen de Carrol peut être poursuivi devant une Cour de la Nouvelle-Orléans, sans qu'il soit admis à en décliner la juridiction. La seule satisfaction qu'il pourra obtenir sera de n'être pas tenu de payer les frais.

Mr. King explique que telle n'est pas l'intention du bill.

Mr. Short. Je ne suis pas disposé à accepter comme parole d'Evangile tout ce qui pourra nous être dit, fut-ce même par le barreau de la Nlle.-Orléans, ce grand centre de la lumière et de l'intelligence. Je suis en faveur du bill qui émane de la Chambre. Les districts, tels qu'il les établit, sont parfaitement convenables, les salaires le sont aussi et conséquemment, si la théorie avancée par quelques sénateurs est admissible, nous aurons de bons juges. Ce bill répond, je crois, à toutes les objections qu'on a pu élever jusqu'aujourd'hui.

De plus, monsieur, lorsque dans chaque paroisse il y aura un juge exerçant une continuelle surveillance, sur tous ceux qui remplissent des devoirs officiels, ayant toujours les yeux sur eux, toujours prêts à lancer des ordres de Cour, ce que l'on désire tant, la prompte administration des biens, sera facile. Les sénateurs qui ont parlé contre ce bill semblent prendre en dédain un salaire de $1,000 par an !

Il paraitrait d'après les remarques de l'un d'entre eux [M. King] que dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans un cuisinier ou un marmiton peut faire plus que cela, et par conséquent s'élever au-dessus d'un juge de paroisse. Un («steward,») à bord d'un steamboat, recevant $1,500 par an, serait donc de 50 pour 100 plus respectable !

Je dis, monsieur, qu'on peut obtenir des juges honnêtes et capables à $1,000 par an, et même à $700, parcequ'il a la latitude d'exercer en même temps la profession d'avocat devant les Cours de Districts. Je le demande, que devient donc l'objection du sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge [M. Lacey] ? Il ne peut y avoir de danger aussi longtemps qu'il ne s'élève aucune question de juridiction. Quels sont les devoirs des juges des Cours de paroisse ? Ils décident du droit de telles ou telles personnes à agir comme administrateurs, curateurs, &c, &c. Est-il personne dont l'intelligence soit assez bornée pour qu'il ne puisse pas reconnaître quand il agit pour lui même, et quand il agit pour d'autres. L'objection basée sur les différences de juridiction ne subsiste plus lorsque les pouvoirs des Cours des preuves sont limités strictement à des personnes agissant avec une capacité fiduciaire

J'ai dit.

MERCREDI, 15 mars 1852.

Institutions Charitables.

Les rapports de la majorité et de la minorité du comité sur les Institutions Charitables sont lus par le Secrétaire.

Le bill autorisant les planteurs à engager leur récolte lorsqu'elle est encore sur pied est pris en considération.

M. Mouton—J'objecte à ce bill si le planteur, en engageant sa récolte, a le droit de la mettre à couvert de tout jugement en faveur de ses créanciers et si le saisi n'en est pas possible après qu'elle est récoltée.

M. Kittridge.—Si un jugement a déjà été prononcé il aura naturellement la préséance.

M. Short.—Je ne désire pas entamer la discussion de ce bill, mais je voudrais le rendre aussi inoffensif et en même temps aussi avantageux que possible. Je présenterai donc un amendement pour assurer la préséance des créanciers par premier jugement, des hypothèques et des vendeurs.

M. Kittridge accepte l'amendement,

M. Mouton.—L'amendement semble obvier à la difficulté, quoique réellement il ne le fasse pas. Il y a dans l'Etat beaucoup de planteurs dont les propriétés entières sont grevées d'hypothèques, et il ne reste rien, si ce n'est la récolte, qui puisse être saisi par les créanciers par premier jugement. Le bill autorise le planteur à engager sa récolte envers un négociant et à la placer ainsi hors de la portée des créanciers par premier jugement. Je voterai contre le bill.

Sur motion de M. King le bill est renvoyé au comité.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

QUESTION JUDICIAIRE.

Le substitut au bill de la Chambre est pris en considération.

M. Kenner.—Il y a beaucoup à dire pour et contre cette question. Pour moi, je considère que les objections avancées contre le système des Cours des Preuves par le sénateur d'Est Bâton Rouge (M. Lacey) sont bonnes. Elles ont agi puissamment sur mon esprit. Néanmoins je pense que le bill proposé par lui subdivise la ville en un trop grand nombre de districts. Je ferai donc la motion, comme compromis, d'effacer du substitut du sénateur d'Ouest Feliciana (M. Wickliffe) le nombre 16. et d'y substituer le nombre 20. Si l'on y consent, je ferai la motion de référer ce bill à un comité avec instructions de diviser l'Etat en districts.

M. Rivers.—Je n'ai aucunement l'intention de discuter cette question ; mais je dois dire qu'en dépit des arguments élaborés qui ont été avancés contre le système de grands districts, je ne suis pas prêt à le combattre. Je crois que c'est le meilleur système qui ait encore été proposé. D'aprés l'action prise par la Chambre, d'après l'opinion que j'ai entendu émettre par des personnes de différentes parties de l'Etat, et qui en savent plus sur ces questions que le Sénat, j'ai tout lieu de croire que décidément c'est le plus populaire de tous. Prenant en considération toutes ces choses, les sénateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans, doivent y donner leur attention et le regarder comme l'expression du vœu populaire ; dans le but d'obtenir un vote d'épreuve, je fais la motion que le substitut soit déposé sur le bureau.

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe.—Je ne crois pas que le système des grands Districts puisse être adopté ; je ne crois pas non plus que celui qui propose 28 Districts puisse l'être davantage. Je suis convaincu qu'aucun autre système que le système actuel ne peut être adopté. Si nous acceptons les 20 Districts proposés par le sénateur de l'Ascension (M. Kenner) je suis forcé de croire que le bill éprouvera dans la Chambre basse une résistance obstinée. La question y a été longuement et finalement discutée, tous les argumens qui pouvaient se présenter ont été épuisés. Rien, si ce n'est le bill adopté par la Chambre, n'a eu son assentiment, excepté un substitut de la teneur à peu près de celui qui vous est présenté. La lutte est maintenant entre le système des grands Districts et le système actuel. Si nous acceptons 20 Districts, qu'en résultera-t-il ? Le bill retournera à la Chambre, et là il rencontrera une résistance désespérée. Il peut s'élever une contestation qui dure vingt jours, et de la sorte la décision de cette question judiciaire qui a déjà tant duré sera encore indéfiniment ajournée Je sais qu'il y a d'insurmontables objections au système de 28 Districts et de Districts étendus.

La motion de déposer le substitut sur le bureau est rejetée.

La motion de M. Kenner, d'effacer le nombre 16 et d'y substituer le nombre 20, est prise alors.

M. Wickliffe.—Je m'oppose, comme je l'ai déjà dit, à l'adoption de cette motion. Son seul résultat, si elle était adoptée, serait, dans la Chambre basse, de renouveler inutilement la discussion d'une question qui y a déjà été decidée en faveur des Districts étendus. Dans ma paroisse, il ne s'est élevé aucune plainte contre le système actuel. Quelques senateurs affirment que le peuple désire des Cours des Preuves. Dans ma paroisse, semblable désir n'a jamais été exprimé. Je crois que 16 juges peuvent facilement décider toutes les affaires de l'Etat de la Louisiane

La motion d'effacer 16 et d'y substituer 20 est adoptée.

Le bill est ensuite référé à un comité spécial, avec instructions de rapporter un bill divisant l'Etat en Districts.

AMELIORATIONS INTERIEURES

Le bill des améliorations intérieures est pris en considération.

M. Short.—Je désire donner quelques explications.

Le comité des terres et levées ne s'est arrêté à aucun plan particulier. Deux propositions ont été faites à ce comité ; l'une est le bill adopté par la Chambre, l'autre est le même bill, mais corrigé conformément aux suggestions des membres du comite. Tous les deux ont été soumis au Sénat et sont à l'ordre spécial du jour. Le bill de la Chambre doit passer le premier. Si le Sénat ne l'adopte pas, je ferai la motion de prendre en considération le bill que j'ai rapporté de la part de deux des membres du comite.

M. Kenner.—Attendu que je suis membre du comité des terres et Levées, et qu'il peut exister quelque incertitude au sujet de la ligne de conduite que j'ai suivie, je crois de mon devoir de présenter quelques explications. Lorsque le bill était en discussion devant le comité, je crus nécessaire de faire une motion qui [je le crus alors du moins] fut unanimement adoptée ; quoique j'apprenne maintenant qu'elle n'eût pas l'assentiment de deux des membres. Le bill qui est devant le Sénat est le plus important des deux, parce que si nous commettons une erreur en l'adoptant, nous ne pourrons jamais revenir sur nos pas. La concession faite par le Congrès à l'Etat est des plus belles et des plus utiles ; si elle est bien administrée, elle contribuera beaucoup à notre prospérité. Un jeune homme mis en possession d'un immense héritage qu'il dépense avec prodigalité, peut, après quelques années, et s'il profite des amères leçons de l'expérience, relever sa fortune épuisée ; mais si nous perdons ce magnifique don conféré à notre Etat par la munificence du Congrès, nous ne pourrons jamais le recouvrer. Nous devons donc etre bien prudents dans son administration.

Il y a deux objets principaux dans ce Bill : faire des levées et dessécher. Ma motion consistait à effacer le mot dessécher. Je dirai en peu de mots les raisons qui me portent à présenter cette motion. Il n'y a pas de travail si dispendieux pour l'habitant que le travail de desséchement. Pour mettre les Sénateurs à même de se faire une idée des dépenses que ce système enraînerait, il n'y a qu'à faire un calcul simple et facile. Pour les habitants c'est une question fort importante et qui réclame la plus grande attention. Dans le cours de ma vie, j'ai eu à m'occuper de desséchement. Je dirai d'abord que les habitants sont dans l'habitude de faire des fossés soit à l'aide de leurs propres esclaves, soit en louant des travailleurs. Les contrats pour le creusement des fossés l'année dernière ont été dans une moyenne d'une piastre par pied cube pour les fossés d'un arpent de long. C'est là la base de tous les contrats de cette sorte. Un fossé d'un pied de largueur et de cinq pieds de profondeur coûte $5 l'arpent, et le travail est généralement fait par des Irlandais qui sont loués à cet effet. Eh bien, prenez ces données comme base de votre calcul, et il est raisonnable de supposer que cette base est juste, puisqu'il est important de faire ces contrats au plus bas prix. Songez que chaque fossé d'un pied de largueur et de cinq pieds de profondeur, coûte cinq piastres l'acre, considérez de plus le nombre de fossés qu'exigerait le déssechement d'un acre de terre marécageuse, et vous pouvez vous faire une idée de ce que coûterait le desséchement de toutes ces terres. Si vous voulez obtenir des informations à ce sujet, vous devez vous adresser à des hommes de pratique et qui ont l'expérience de ces matières, et non à ceux qui vous disent que les terres marécagenses peuvent être desséchées à moins de $10 par acre. Ceux qui soutiennent cela seraient considérés comme parfaitement fous par ceux qui ont l'habitude et l'expérience de ces sortes de choses.

Mais supposez que $10 soit réellement le prix. Vous avez des milliers d'acres de terres en marais, qui à $10 par acre s'éleveraient à la jolie petite somme de cent millions. Je vous le demande sérieusement, êtes-vous en mesure de voter une loi qui imposerait à l'Etat une dépense de $100,000,000 au moins? Des sénateurs prennent la parole ici et donnant cours à leur imagination, ils édifient de magnifiques systèmes, ils vous disent combien il serait beau de dépêcher les terres marécageuses et quels immenses avantages il en résulterait. Mais là n'est pas la question. Nous voulons savoir quelle sera la dépense avant d'entreprendre un projet aussi grandiose, quelque tentation que nous éprouvions de le faire.

Ma propre expérience et celle de plusieurs autres que j'ai consultés, me convainquent qu'il est impossible de dessécher les terres marécageuses sans l'aide de machines. Quelques-unes de ces terres ont une pente naturelle et pourraient peut-être se déssécher au prix de $10 l'acre ; les autres terres de ces marais proprement dits, présentent une surface uniformément plate et ne peuvent être desséchées sans l'aide de machines. Tous les marais proprement dits sont au moins au niveau des eaux basses et lorsque souffle un fort vent d'Est toutes les terres qui sont de ce côté-ci de la rivière sont inondées. Pour les déssécher convenablement il faut des machines à vapeur, des ingénieurs pour les diriger, des ouvriers pour les faire fonctionner ; il faut des hommes pour couper le bois et le transporter au lieu où il doit en être fait usage. Pouvez-vous imaginer jusqu'où cela vous conduirait et dans quel abyme de dépenses vous vous plongeriez si vous adoptiez un pareil système ? Serez-vous en mesure de voter en faveur d'un bill qui necessite de semblables frais ? Et pouvez-vous être étonnés qu'au sein du comité j'aie fait la motion d'effacer le mot desséchement partout où il se présentait dans le bill ?

Mais on dira peut-être que les termes de la concession nous font une obligation de desséchor ces terres, puisque la loi du Congrès dit qu'elles ont été concédées à l'Etat pour qu'elles fussent desséchées et entourées de levees. Personne ne dira cependant que parce que ces terres nous ont été concédées pour que nous les desséchions et que nous les entourions de levées, nous sommes obligés de nous mettre à l'œuvre et de les dessécher immédiatement. Mais on dira sans doute que si nous ne le faisons pas, nous encourrons pour rien d'immenses dépenses et que notre travail sera inutile. Si l'on raisonnait de la sorte je référerais aux termes de la loi elle même. La loi dit : "Entourer de levées et dessécher." Nous devons donc construire d'abord les levées. Si nous contenons le Mississipi par des levées, et si nous empêchons le débordement des eaux sur ces terres, nous aurons fait assez pour avoir droit à la concession. Puis, s'il nous reste encore quelques fonds, nous commencerons alors le desséchement. Ce que nous voulons d'abord c'est contenir le fleuve dans ses limites, et, si nous y parvenons, nous aurons accompli des merveilles.

Digitized by Google

Il y a encore une autre objection à ce bill qui, dans mon opinion, a une portée encore plus étendue. Non seulement il prescrit d'employer trois ingénieurs, mais encore il nous impose différents autres officiers, ouvrant ainsi la lice à tous les coureurs de places et constituant de vraies sinécures en faveur de ceux qui seraient désignés. Vous avez d'abord trois ingénieurs dont le salaire réuni formera une somme de $4,500 par an, trois ingénieurs à $3,000 chacun par an, et un secrétaire à $500, ce qui fait d'un seul coup $14,000 par an, seulement pour les principaux officiers du bureau.

Une autre section à ce bill, la 13me, enjoint aux commissaires de nommer un inspecteur dans chaque District de Levées. Je suis opposé à cela, M. le président Le loi actuelle place toutes les paroisses riveraines sous la protection de ceux à qui ce droit appartient; elle confie le soin de la sûreté des paroisses riveraines à ceux qui sont directement au-dessous des levées et qui par conséquent ont le plus grand intérêt à les tenir en bon état. Comme je l'ai dit, ce bill pourvoit à la nomination d'un inspecteur dans chaque District de Levées, lequel devra être nommé par le commissaire du District. Il y aurait donc 120 inspecteurs de levées. Que leur allouerez-vous pour leurs services ? Vous savez combien nous sommes généralement libéraux lorsque nous tirons sur les fonds de l'Etat; vous savez avec quelle bonne grâce et quelle facilité nous payons avec l'argent qui n'est pas à nous. Ce n'est donc pas trop de mettre à $100 par an ce que l'on allouera à ces inspecteurs. 120 inspecteurs à $100, $12,000 à ajouter aux $14,000 portées plus haut. Voilà donc le système mis en opération à raison de $26,000 par an. Et tous ces frais sont indispensables, ils découlent tous les uns des autres. Mettez de côté le desséchement, vous vous débarrassez de la plus grande partie des officiers. Si vous vous bornez à faire les levées vous éviterez d'immenses dépenses auxquelles, dans le cas contraire il vous faudra faire face.

Bien d'autres objections encore se présentent, mais je ne m'y arrêterai pas en ce moment; j'en parlerai lorsque d'autres sections du bill seront prises en considération. En soumettant ces observations, j'ai essayé d'être clair et surtout positif; je n'ai pas cherché à faire de l'éloquence, j'ai présenté des faits au lieu de figures et de fleurs de rhétorique. J'ai fait voir quels seraient les résultats de ce bill tel qu'il existe maintenant, et je puis prouver que, s'il est adopté, les revenus de trente années, provenant de la vente de ces terres en marais, seraient épuisés en moins de six mois.

Il est encore une chose dans ce bill à laquelle je dois m'arrêter. Le bill décrète que des contrats seront passés pour la mise à exécution de ce système; que des bons seront émis pour le paiement des contracteurs. Lorsque ces bons seront présentés, l'auditeur, s'il ne peut les payer, écrira sur sa porte (absence de fonds! pas de paiements!) et ces bons porteront alors intérêt à raison de 8 pour cent par an!

C'est le meilleur placement que l'on puisse faire. Il n'y a pas de Shylock, pas d'usurier à la Nouvelle-Orléans qui pût demander une meilleure garantie, en conséquence réfléchissez avant de faire un pas, car, autrement, vous risqueriez de vous perdre à jamais.

M. Rivers.—Comme le Sénateur a parlé de ce qui s'est passé au sein du comité, lorsqu'il avait charge de ce bill, je ferai connaître les faits véritables, afin qu'on ne se méprenne pas sur ma conduite. J'appuyai la proposition d'effacer du bill le mot (dessèchement,) parce que je pense qu'il serait absurde de songer à dessécher les terres marécageuses et les terres inondées. Je ne savais pas alors la somme qui serait nécessaire pour cet objet, je ne me suis pas enquis non plus des places d'ingénieur, de travailleurs de toute sorte et des postulants que le bill créait. Comme le Troisième District que j'habite n'a pas besoin de travaux de desséchement, je pensai que ce district ne devait pas être incorporé, quoique je fusse prêt à accéder à cette incorporation, si mon district était protégé et recevait la portion qui lui revenait. Si cette disposition est adoptée, si mon district, dans lequel aucun desséchement n'est nécessaire, doit avoir sa part, je consens volontiers à ce que les Sénateurs fassent toutes les expériences qu'il leur plaira, pourvu qu'ils ne fassent rien à notre détriment.

M. Short.—Je pense avec le Sénateur d'Ascension, (M. Kenner), que la question de desséchement est de la plus grande importance. Je suis fâché cependant de voir une tendance évidente à détourner ces terres de l'emploi qui leur a été assigné par la donation elle-même qu'en a faite le gouvernement fédéral. Si le Sénateur veut m'envoyer une copie de la loi qui est sur son bureau, je lui montrerai que le texte de la donation correspond exactement avec les principes émis par le bill. Je suis fâché d'entendre exprimer des opinions qui sont semblables à celles qui ont été avancées il y a quelques années, au sujet des terres marécageuses. J'ai moi-même entendu des hommes d'intelligence dire que, si l'Etat devait accepter les terres et en payer les frais d'arpentage, il s'y ruinerait.

M. Kenner.—Le Sénateur pense-t-il que j'aie une semblable opinion ?

M. Short —Non monsieur. Le Sénateur à l'heure qu'il est déclare que ce n'est pas là son opinion, et cependant il nous dit que ces terres ne sauraient être desséchées, à moins d'une somme de soixante millions de piastres. Je ne pense pas que le Sénateur lui même qui avait cherché à battre M. Harmanson, comme candidat pour le Congrès, en proclamant cette doctrine, voulût persister aujourd'hui dans cette opinion. En quels termes est faite la donation de ces terres? Quand les termes de la concession affectent le produit de ces terres à un objet spécial, ces termes n'indiquent-ils pas la manière dont ce fonds doit être administré, dans quel but, je le répète, ces terres ont été données à l'Etat ? Oui, évidemment, si le mot « loi » doit avoir aucune force. Quel est le premier pas à faire pour remplir l'objet qui nous a été prescrit. Après que nous aurons construit une levée pour retenir les eaux, nous devons chercher s'il est possible de fouiller un fossé pour égouter les eaux qui inondent les terres du fond. Le Sénateur suppose-t-il qu'un ingénieur, digne de ce nom, songeât à creuser un fossé au-dessous de l'eau. Non, le travail ne commencerait qu'après que les eaux auraient été contenues par une digue. On a fait, en outre, des objections imaginaires, à ce bill. A la dernière session de la Législature, on a présenté un bill qui proposait une entreprise magnifique. Malheureusement le mot " machine " se trouvait dans le bill, et conséquemment la proposition fut écartée. L'emploi de ce terme a été cause que des milliers de balles de coton ont été détruites cette année par l'inondation. En ce moment même, pendant que nous discutons cette question, une levée peut céder et ouvrir un passage au torrent dévastateur.

Les Sénateurs s'effrayent de dangers imaginaires. Le Sénateur d'Ascension dit qu'il faudrait soixante millions de piastres pour creuser ces fossés. S'est-on assuré que le montant serait aussi grand. si on refoulait d'abord les eaux du fleuve en construisant une levée ? C'est là la première tentative qui doit être faite. Mais alles-vous exclure les travaux qu'exige en définitif le système ? Supposez qu'un homme commence à bâtir une maison. Il faut qu'il place un toit audessus. Mais le toit coûtersit beaucoup d'argent ; en conséquence, il se refuse à finir la maison, parce qu'il coûterait trop de la couvrir. Que penseries-vous d'un homme qui agirait ainsi ? Et c'est l'argument du sénateur ? Il faut qu'il admette qu'aucun fossé ne peut être utile à moins que les eaux ne soient d'abord contenues à l'aide d'une levée. Le sénateur a dit que toute la Basse Louisiane est du même niveau que l'Océan.

M. Kennner.—Le sénateur se trompe. Je n'ai pas dit cela.

M. Short.—Le sénateur a dit que les vents poussent les eaux sur les terres basses et qu'alors ces terres restent inondées. Mais, sans aller plus loin, je dirai que, pour les raisons que j'ai avancées, je suis opposé à la proposition d'effacer le mot « desséchement » parce qu'alors le but que se propose le bill n'existerait plus. Pour ce qui est des commissaires, je suppose que le Gouverneur nommera des hommes de sens, des hommes qui peuvent dire si la terre est couverte ou non par les eaux, et qui songeront à les refouler, avant de vouloir fouiller un fossé.

Digitized by Google

L'objet du bill qui est devant le Sénat est d'accomplir les desseins du Congrès, lorsqu'il fit cette donation.

Une autre objection a été faite au bill. Le sénateur dit qu'on ne peut assigner de limite au chiffre des mandats qui seront émis sous l'empire de ce bill. Est-ce là le fait ? Les mandats ne pourront être émis qu'autant que l'ouvrage qu'ils représentent aura été fait conformément au contrat. Je suppose qu'une grande quantité du travail ait été faite avant l'expiration d'une année. Y a-t-il un sénateur qui puisse y trouver à redire ? Tandis que nous donnons tant d'attention aux affaires étrangères, tandis que chaque dépêche relative à ce qui se passe à l'étranger est recueilli avec empressement, pensez-vous que le peuple fera la moindre attention aux objections imaginaires dont le bill est l'objet ? Non, monsieur.

M. McCay propose de déposer sur le bureau la motion de M. Kenner à l'effet d'effacer le mot « desséchement. »

La motion est repoussée.

M. Short.—Je repète que je voudrais qu'on exécutât religieusement les intentions du Congrès, c'est un devoir qui nous est imposé par la Constitution. Je suis en faveur de tout bill qui sera conforme aux termes de la donation. Que ce soit un bill raisonnable, et il échappera à toutes les objections imaginaires qui ont été présentées ici.

M. Boatner.— Je crois que la Législature outrepasserait ses pouvoirs en adoptant ce bill. Il y a dans la Constitution certains articles auxquels nous sommes tenus de nous conformer. Un de ces articles dit qu'il y aura un bureau des travaux publics et qu'il sera composé de quatre membres. C'est là plus que nous ne pouvons faire ici. Ceux qui ont rédigé l'acte qui est maintenant devant le Sénat n'obéissent pas à la Constitution puisqu'ils pourvoient seulement à l'élection de trois commissaires. La Constitution dit que dans la formation des districts il devra être fait en sorte qu'ils soient égaux sous le point de vue du nombre de votants que comptait chacun d'eux ;— Cet article encore est violé. La Constitution dit que les Commissaires seront élus par le peuple, l'acte donne au Gouverneur le droit de nomination et dépouille le peuple du droit d'élection. Je le demande, avons-nous le droit de laisser au Gouverneur le soin de ces nominations lorsque la Constitution est là qui nous brûle les yeux ? Le bill est inconstitutionnel. Aussi longtemps que nous n'aurons pas révoqué ces articles de la Constitution auxquels j'ai fait allusion, nous n'avons pas le droit de faire ce que l'on nous propose. Aussi longtemps qu'un vote des trois-cinquièmes de la Législature n'aura pas annulé ces articles nous ne pouvons pas établir un autre bureau des travaux publics. Je puis être dans l'erreur ; mais aussi longtemps que je ne serai pas convaincu de ce fait je voterai contre le bill depuis le titre jusqu'au dernier mot.

M. Kenner.—Il y a sans doute une grande force dans l'objection que vient de présenter le sénateur. Mais il ne doit pas oublier que l'intention du comité a été que lorsque le bureau établi ainsi que le prescrit la Constitution aura été organisé il succédera aux pouvoirs et aux fonctions de celui que crée ce bill. Le comité voyait approcher le moment des hautes eaux, il savait que les levées étaient en danger et qu'il était absolument nécessaire que l'on prît quelques mesures.

Je voudrais dire quelques mots au sujet de l'interprétation donnée à la loi du Congrès par le sénateur de Madison (M. Short). Pas un mot de semblable interprétation n'a été dit devant le comité. La loi a été lue et semblable suggestion n'a pas été présentée, même lorsque la motion d'effacer a été faite.

M. Short.—Je ne dirai plus que peu de mots : J'ai demandé qu'on agit sur cette question ; plusieurs projets ont été soumis ; le bill de M. Ranney donnait lieu à l'objection qu'il requérait des machines [ce qui a si fort effrayé certains sénateurs]. J'aime à bien comprendre et à pouvoir bien expliquer un système que je soutiens, mais je ne m'attache quand-même à aucun système en particulier. Je suis disposé à accepter tout amendement ou toute amélioration qui pourrait être présentée, et je ne désire soumettre aucun système quelqu'il soit à l'épreuve du lit de Procuste. Je ne puis cependant m'empêcher de dire que la proposition du sénateur de l'Ascension (M. Kenner), serait contraire à l'esprit et aux termes de la concession.

Je regrette que le sénateur de Caldwell (M. Boatner) présente contre ce bill des objections de constitutionalité. J'avais moi-même d'insurmontables objections à l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics en ce moment. Mais elles ne portent aucunement sur ce bill. Les levées n'ont jamais été considérées comme travaux publics, elles ont toujours été faites par des particuliers et le travail de construction a toujours été imposé aux propriétaires riverains. Le but de ce bill est de faire construire immédiatement des levées là où le capital particulier n'est pas suffisant.

Je crois que par là nous mettrons le bill à couvert des objections d'inconstitutionnalité. J'espère que le sénateur se rangera de notre côté et qu'il nous aidera à le faire adopter. Il est très-intéressé à son adoption. Il représente une paroisse qui sera inévitablement inondé si les paroisses riveraines viennent à céder.

Je dirai une chose pour tirer le sénateur du mauvais pas où il s'est engagé. Vous voulez nous enlever le pouvoir de faire ce que fait chaque planteur, lorsqu'il construit une levée. Lorsqu'il le fait, il creuse un fossé pour l'écoulement des eaux. Et pourtant le sénateur est tellement désireux de mettre de côté le desséchement qu'il veut même empêcher ceux qui construisent des levées de creuser les fossés nécessaires.

M. King. — Nous avons à remplir un devoir important sur cette question. Au point de vue purement légal, nous sommes tenus de nous conformer aux instructions contenues dans l'acte de concession, laquelle a été faite pour deux objets : le desséchement et la protection des levées. La Constitution dit que ce fonds ne sera affecté à aucun autre usage. Supposez que nous affections le fonds entier à la construction de levées, ne serait-ce pas violer à la fois et la loi et la Constitution ?

La discussion se continue un instant, puis, le vote étant pris, la motion d'effacer les mots « et de desséchement » est adoptée.

MERCREDI, 16 mars 1853.

M. King présente le rapport du comité spécial auquel avait été référée la question de la division de l'Etat en districts judiciaires.

BILL DES TERRES MARECAGEUSES.

Une reconsidération du vote par lequel les mots « et desséchement » avaient été effacées hier dans le bill des terres marécageuses, ayant été demandée.

M. Short dit : J'essaierai, M. le président, de développer les raisons qui me portent à appuyer la motion de reconsidération. Ces raisons se trouvent dans les actes mêmes par lesquels le Congrès a fait donation de ces terres à l'Etat, et ressortent nécessairement d'une juste interprétation de ces actes. Les actes du Congrès forment l'un des motifs de la reconsidération, si nous voulons nous conformer aux intentions du Congrès.

Je comprends que l'interprétation qui doit être donnée à toutes les donations, lorsqu'elles sont faites pour certains objets et lorsque le donataire est investi du pouvoir nécessaire pour accomplir ces objets est celle-ci, qu'une loi doit être adoptée ayant pour but d'exécuter la volonté du donateur telle qu'elle est exprimée. La première question qui se présente est celle-ci : Quelle était l'intention du Congrès en faisant cette donation ?

La première section de la loi du Congrès est ainsi conçue :

Il est décrété, etc., Que pour aider l'Etat de la Louisiane dans la construction des levées et dans les travaux de desséchement qui sont nécessaires pour égoutter les terres marécageuses et inondées qui y sont situées, toutes ces terres marécageuses et inondées qui se trouveront être impropres à la culture, sont par les présentes concédées à l'Etat.

Ces termes sont clairs et faciles à comprendre. Mais afin de les rendre encore plus clairs et plus précis, je vais lire la disposition suivante qui se trouve dans la seconde section du même acte.

Digitized by Google

Pourvu cependant que le produit desdites terres soit appliqué exclusivement, autant qu'il sera nécessaire, à la construction des levees et aux travaux de dessèchement dont il est parlé plus haut.

Le second point est celui-ci : L'Etat se conformera-t-il aux termes de la donation (et c'est dans les termes que nous trouverons l'intention), en passant un acte qui restreint l'emploi du produit des terres marécageuses à la construction des levées ? Tout homme qui connait la nature des terres marécageuses sait que le but que l'on se propose en élevant des levées est de contenir les eaux et d'empêcher les terres d'être inondées. C'est ce que l'expérience a dû prouver à tout homme qui connait la campagne. On a dû avoir recours à un moyen à partir du temps d'O'Reilly et des autres gouverneurs espagnols. Les termes mêmes des différentes concessions faites aux premières personnes qui se sont établies dans la campagne étaient que les propriétaires riverains seraient tenus d'élever une digue ou levée d'une hauteur suffisante pour contenir les eaux. Après que les levées sont bâties, et que les eaux du dehors sont refoulees, si le propriétaire découvre qu'en creusant un fossé, il peut mettre à sec d'autres terres qui sont, inondées, en homme de sens, en habitant intelligent, connaissant ses propres intérêts, il fera naturellement creuser un fossé dans le but de rendre propres à la culture des terres qui autrement resteraient improductives. Tel est le sens du mot dessèchement, et je ne vois pas qu'il y ait là rien de si alarmant. Mais quelques sénateurs ont immédiatement vu se dresser un immense appareil, des machines coûteuses, et cette pensée les a terrifiées. Mais j'en appelle à ces sénateurs qui ont à cœur les intérêts de l'Etat, à ceux qui vivent dans les sections alluviales et qui sont, par conséquent, directement intéressés à cette question ; je les adjure de porter toute leur attention sur cette mesure, de l'examiner avec soin, de s'assurer de l'intention du sénateur, d'observer quels sont les devoirs qui leur sont imposes pour se conformer fidèlement à cette volonté, de voir l'esprit de l'acte du Congrès. Il est admis par tous que ce bill est de la plus grande importance. Je demande aux démocrates de dire s'ils veulent prêter les mains à une proposition qui tue véritablement le bill. Les whigs y consentiront-ils ? J'espère que non ; j'espère que whigs et démocrates ont trop le sentiment de leurs devoirs, comprennent trop ce qui est juste, pour permettre que les intérêts de l'Etat soient sacrifiés. J'espère les voir unir leurs forces et mettre ensemble l'épaule à la roue. J'espère qu'ils vont enfouir dans une tombe commune toutes leurs idées de rivalité politique, que tout esprit de parti disparaîtra afin qu'on ne puisse dire que l'un ou l'autre des deux partis a fait usage d'une question aussi importante, aussi délicate dans l'intérêt d'une élection. Ils doivent être guidés par des motifs plus nobles, plus élevés. La campagne demande-t-elle un bill de cette nature ? Oui, mille fois oui. Il n'est pas d'homme raisonnable qui puisse douter qu'un système de levée ne soit nécessaire. Pendant plus de la moitié d'un siècle, ou depuis 1770, des levées ont été construites dans cet Etat. En 1807, la Législature territoriale exigea pour la première fois la construction de levées. Jusqu'a nos jours, les levées n'ont jamais été construites par l'Etat ; elles n'ont jamais été considerées comme faisant partie de nos améliorations intérieures. Et cependant n'est-ce pas là ce qui doit, en première ligne, rendre la campagne habitable ? n'est-ce pas là ce qui doit tout d'abord être rangé parmi les améliorations interieures ? La Louisiane n'a jamais rien fait pour égoutter les dix-huit mille milles carrés de terre alluviales qui existent au milieu de son territoire ; ces travaux ont toujours été à la charge des propriétaires riverains et 1,500 milles seulement sont en état de culture. A quoi faut-il attribuer cet état de choses ? A la perfection de notre système de levées, par lequel la charge tout entière de la construction et du maintien des levées retombe sur les propriétaires riverains. Pour ce qui regarde le cas où ce fardeau doit être supporté par les propriétaires riverains, aux termes de la concession d'où dérive leur titre de propriété, l'Etat peut, avec quelque justice, exiger qu'ils se conforment aux termes de la concession, lorsque la non exécution de ces conditions pourra léser d'autres personnes. Mais dans le nord de la Louisiane, il n'existe pas de concession par laquelle cette obligation soit imposée aux propriétaires riverains. Les titres émanent en général du gouvernement général et ne sont assujettis à aucune servitude. Cette obligation dérive des actes de la Législature seulement ; et l'accomplissement en a été exigé avec tant de rigueur qu'un homme a été littéralement exproprié, sa maison a été vendue, tandis que d'autres qui produisent une balle de coton par acre, n'ont pas eu de taxe à payer, n'ont pas eu un cent à payer. Tout ce que nous demandons aujourd'hui c'est votre sympathie, messieurs, vous qui vivez sur des terres élevées et qui êtes à l'abri des dangers de l'inondation. Tout ce que nous demandons c'est que, quoique la nature vous ait placés dans une position élevée, vous nous donniez votre appui pour nous aider à accomplir l'objet de la concession. C'est tout ce que nous voulons obtenir de ceux qui ne voient jamais les eaux furieuses du Mississipi se dresser au-dessus de leurs habitations. Est-ce là trop demander, est-ce trop espérer ? Je pense que nous ne pouvons moins demander. Si nos prétentions ne sont pas déraisonnables, nous avons le droit d'espérer que ceux qui ne sont jamais victimes de ces épouvantables crevasses, travailleront avec nous pour établir un système qui réponde à nos besoins. Que demandons-nous ? Seulement de mettre en pratique le système recommandé par le comité des terres et levées. Le comité nous a dit que la construction de levées est la première chose à faire pour exécuter la volonté de votre donateur Il n'y aurait aucune nécessité, en fait il serait absolument impossible de creuser un fossé pour entraîner au loin les eaux, jusqu'à ce qu'on ait pris les mesures nécessaires pour refouler et contenir les eaux du fleuve. Mais après que des levées auront été construites sur les points importants et sous la direction d'ingénieurs expérimentes, alors il faudra creuser des fossés pour dégager les terres du fond, qui sans cela resteraient inondees. Ainsi l'on verra que notre but est de faire correspondre le bill avec les termes de la concession. Puis, nous voulons présenter un bill qui satisfasse aux besoins de l'Etat. Si nous nous arrêtons à moitié chemin, si nous ne faisons que construire des levées, nous violons les termes mêmes de la concession, nous lions les mains à toutes les personnes qui seront employées à exécuter précisément les travaux que l'acte du Congrès a en vue. Beaucoup de personnes qui ne connaissent point cette question, peuvent être effrayées par le tableau des immenses dépenses qu'entraîners, dit-on, l'exécution de ce système. A l'aide d'un calcul qui a été fait hier, il paraîtrait que le dessèchement de 6,000,000 d'acres de terre coûterait $60,000,000 ou $10 par acre. Quand les eaux du Mississipi seront refoulées, quand dix ou vingt acres seront mis à sec, il y a quelques endroits où la simple construction d'une levee, pour ne rien dire du creusement d'un fossé, sera suffisant pour livrer à la culture 30 ou 40 ou même 100 acres de plus. Mais disant qu'en dépensant 2, 3 ou même 4 escalins par pied pour la fouille d'un fossé, vous pourrez arracher à l'inondation 30, 40 ou 100 acres de plus, allez-vous refuser de faire ces fouilles, parce que vous supposez que ces travaux entraîneront une immense dépense de machines, d'appareils à vapeur et d'ingénieurs.

L'une des sections du bill dit expressément qu'il n'y aura que le fond des terres marécageuses qui sera affecté à l'établissement du système. J'espère que cela doit écarter les craintes des sénateurs qui s'effraient de voir l'Etat s'endetter. Beaucoup de sénateurs craignent de voir l'Etat contracter une dette considérable. Le bill ne dit-il pas qu'il n'y aura de dette contractée qu'en proportion de l'ouvrage qui aura été fait. Est-ce là ce qui peut effrayer ces messieurs. On suppose que les particuliers ont déjà dépensé $5,000,000 pour des travaux de ce genre. Cette dépense n'equivaut-elle pas à une taxe ? Vous avez vu que nous avions à dessécher six millions d'acres, qui acquerront de la valeur, augmenteront proportionnellement la richesse de l'Etat, et ajouteront de nouveaux stimulants à l'industrie.

Vous êtes au début d'un nouveau système. Ce bill est le premier pas Hésitez-vous, fléchissez-vous, doutez-vous au point de départ ? Vous avez de grands travaux à exécuter. Ce bill, malgré ses imperfections, est de nature à les effectuer, jusqu'à un certain point. Si ces travaux sont gigantesques, il faut la force d'un géant pour les accomplir. Mais voules-vous, dès le premier pas, engourdir nos forces, et nous empêcher d'exécuter les travaux qui nous sont imposés? J'espère que personne ne le désire. La campagne proclame à haute voix qu'il faut que nous nous mettions à l'œuvre, que nous devons donner à ces terres la destination pour laquelle elles nous ont été concédées.

Digitized by Google

Rassemblons toutes nos forces, tout notre courage et nous n'échouerons pas.

M. Lacey—Je demanderai au Sénat la permission d'expliquer les raisons qui me font voter pour la réconsidération du vote par lequel les mots «et desséchement» ont été, hier, effacés du bill.

La section pourvoit à la division de l'Etat en Districts de levées et de dessèchement, et je ne vois pas pourquoi nous ne maintiendrions pas cette division. Je me suis réservé, quand j'ai voté, le droit de changer d'opinion.

M. Kenner—Je ne comprends pas le sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge. Je croyais qu'il avait voté pour effacer ces mots, parce qu'il était opposé à faire entrer le desséchement dans le bill. S'il a changé d'opinion sur ce point, il a parfaitement raison de plaider en faveur de la réconsidération, mais s'il n'a pas changé, je ne comprends pas son raisonnement.

M. Lacey—Je n'ai pas changé d'opinion à cet égard. Je suis opposé à m'embarquer dans un système de desséchement artificiel, quoique je sois en faveur du desséchement naturel. Mais je ne suis pas opposé à la division de l'Etat en Districts de levées et de dessèchement, ainsi qu'elle est établie par le bill. Je me range donc du côté de ceux qui demandent la réconsidération.

M. Kenner—Le sénateur de Madison [M Short], a adopté un raisonnement fort ingénieux. Il désire nous représenter comme étant opposés à un système de levées aussi bien qu'à un système de desséchement. Il fait un appel aux démocrates, les adjure d'appuyer sa mesure favorite. Il espère l'emporter en les ralliant autour de lui, et il demande si les whigs sont disposés à prendre la responsabilité de tout le bill. Nous ne sommes point opposés à la construction de levées. Le sénateur ne peut nous placer dans cette position. Nous sommes en faveur de levées, mais nous ne sommes pas en faveur des levées et du desséchement tout à la fois. J'ai fait la proposition d'effacer du bill le mot «desséchement,» de manière a en restreindre l'effet à la construction de levées. Les paroles du sénateur s'appliquent aux levées exclusivement; cependant, il dit qu'il est aussi en faveur du desséchement. Je supplie en conséquence le sénateur de vouloir bien, lorsqu'il s'adresse au Sénat, ne pas nous placer dans une fausse position. J'espère que les autres sénateurs ne changeront pas avec la facilité qui caractérise le sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge [M Lacey], mais qu'ils resteront fermes dans leur opinion.

M. King—Je ne crois pas que la première section du bill établisse une distinction entre les Districts de levées et les Districts de desséchement. Je suppose que les Districts de levées et de desséchement seront identiques, de sorte qu'il serait hors de propos de concevoir des craintes exagérées relativement aux Districts de desséchement. J'ai taché, hier, de montrer combien est simple cette question.

L'acte du Congrès dit que les terres marécageuses ont été concédées à l'Etat dans un double but; la construction de levées et le desséchement. Du moment que nous consacrons cette richesse à seulement l'un de ces objets, nous violons l'intention du donateur. Si, dans les relations de la vie ordinaire, un pareil contrat avait lieu, il n'est pas d'avocat qui ne nous dise que le contrat doit avoir son plein effet. La Constitution dit que le fonds provenant des terres marécageuses ne sera pas detourné des objets en vue desquels la concession a été faite. Où trouver des termes qui soient plus clairs et plus precis? Supposez que vous effaçions les mots « construction de levées,» et que nous affections le fonds tout entier au desséchement, ne serait-ce pas une violation directe et flagrante de la loi et de la Constitution? Eh bien! si nous effaçons le mot « déssèchement, » ne sera-ce pas également une violation? Ne sera-ce pas une infraction à la Constitution? L'opposition semble provenir de l'idée que l'on s'est faite que les travaux de desséchement sont inutiles, et qu'ils absorberont le fonds tout entier. Si ces messieurs veulent se bercer de cette erreur et s'imaginent que le desséchement entraînera une dépense considérable, ils peuvent aussi bien supposer que ceux qui doivent construire les levées gaspilleront le fonds tout entier. Ils devraient présenter un bill restreignant les dimensions des levées, de crainte que les commissaires n'abusent du dépôt qui leur est confié. Il n'y aurait pas de sens commun à faire les travaux de desséchement avant la construction des levées. Autant vaudrait chercher à dessecher le Mississipi.

La motion de reconsidération est adoptée. M. Lacey présente un substitut au bill. Il dit:

M le Président, lorsque le bill qui est maintenant devant le Sénat, et qui est relatif au desséchement et à l'exhaussement des terres marécageuses ou inondées fut, pour la première fois, pris en considération, j'avais l'intention de présenter un substitut à ce bill; les circonstances ne me l'ont jamais permis alors, et je saisis maintenant l'occasion qui se présente pour soumettre à cet honorable corps le substitut lui-même et les raisons qui m'ont décidé à lui donner mon appui de préférence au bill original émanant, je crois, de la Chambre basse.

Je déclarerai, tout d'abord, M. le président, que je ne suis pas inflexiblement attaché au bill que j'ai eu l'honneur de présenter au Sénat, et mon hostilité contre le bill de la Chambre n'est pas telle, que je ne puisse consentir à l'appuyer si le Sénat refuse d'adopter le plan soumis par moi. Ce bill présente de grandes objections, d'insurmontables objections, et si ces objections ne peuvent s'appliquer à mon bill qui est intitulé: « Acte créant un département des améliorations interieures pour l'Etat,» ne serait-il pas convenable de l'adopter?

Je sais, M. le président, que l'acte auquel j'ai fait allusion, a en vue l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics, créé par la Constitution; mais avec mes idées relativement au pouvoir de la Législature sur cette question, l'effet de mon bill sur le bureau des travaux publics ne me semble présenter aucune difficulté. J'ai déjà exprimé, devant cet honorable corps, mon opinion relativement au droit constitutionnel que possède la Législature d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics, et mon intention aujourd'hui est de référer seulement les sénateurs aux vues que j'exprimai alors sur cette question.

En se référant à l'article 130 de la Constitution, on verra évidemment que le bureau des travaux publics [que l'on soutient devoir être établi par nous avant que nous puissions l'abolir] est créé par la loi organique. Les mots: « Il y aura un bureau des travaux publics, » sont la création de ce bureau; il est mis en existence par la loi organique et n'a plus besoin de l'action de la Législature. Le département législatif, le département exécutif, le département judiciaire, le surintendant de l'éducation publique ne sont-ils pas tous créés par la Constitution? Bien certainement ils le sont. Mais comment? Par un article, par des mots, presque identiquement les mêmes que ceux de l'article 130, qui a trait au bureau des travaux publics.

Cet argument emprunte encore une grande force de l'article suivant de la Constitution; car, dans cet article, les auteurs de la Constitution, supposant évidemment qu'eux-mêmes avaient créé ce bureau, que la paternité leur appartenait sans aucun doute, s'est occupé de prescrire la manière d'entretenir ce bureau. Ils établissent une différence entre le bureau et les membres qui le composent, entre l'âme et le corps, si je puis me servir de cette expression. Ayant eux-mêmes créé le bureau des travaux publics, ils enjoignent à la Législature, à sa première session après l'adoption de la Constitution, de pourvoir à l'élection et au paiement des commissaires; en un mot, à l'organisation du bureau. Qui pourrait soutenir que la création et l'organisation du bureau sont la même chose? Personne ici, je l'espère.

Il me semble alors, M. le président, que le bureau des travaux publics est déjà en existence; qu'il a été créé par la Constitution, et que puisqu'il est créé, l'assemblée générale a le droit, par un vote des trois cinquièmes des membres des deux chambres de la Législature, d'abolir ce bureau, alors que dans son opinion, ce bureau ne sera plus nécessaire. Tels sont les termes clairs et formels de l'article 134 de la Constitution.

Prenons donc que l'objection d'inconstitutionnalité

Digitized by Google

soulevée devant ce corps, n'est pas un obstacle à l'adoption du bill que j'ai eu l'honneur de proposer. Passons à l'examen des deux bills qui sont devant le Sénat, établissons autant qu'il nous sera possible les différences qui existent entre eux.

La première objection que j'aie à présenter contre le bill de la chambre, est qu'il n'est pas rédigé de manière à remplacer le bureau des travaux publics créé par la Constitution. Si j'ai bien compris le sentiment du Sénat, il s'est prononcé contre le bureau créé par la Constitution; il a reconnu l'impraticabilité de ce système et a demandé un substitut.

J'arrive maintenant à l'action prise sur la motion de l'honorable sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King), qui est président du comité des améliorations intérieures. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, le Sénat désire un substitut. Le bill de la chambre ne nous est pas présenté comme tel et conséquemment je dois pour cette raison et pour d'autres m'opposer à son adoption.

Passons maintenant à un objection bien plus formidable, au bill de la chambre, je veux dire son impraticabilité. Le contrôle entier et absolu de chaque district est confié à un seul commissaire et ce commissaire ne devra surveiller que les intérêts de son district, sans s'occuper de ceux des autres districts ou de l'Etat entier. Les travaux faits dans les différents districts ne se correspondront probablement pas, et alors il arrivera que lorsque les eaux des districts supérieurs, refoulées par les levées, seront poussées sur les districts inférieurs, ceux-ci ne seront pas en mesure, et ni levées, ni canaux ne seront achevés. Les conséquences de cela seraient très graves et il n'y a qu'un seul moyen de les prévenir, c'est de confier l'ouvrage tout entier à un seul chef. De plus, monsieur, l'ingénieur dont la surveillance doit s'étendre sur tout le district confié à sa charge, doit être nommé par le commissaire de ce district; il sera donc soumis à l'influence et au contrôle de ce commissaire, et étant ainsi sommé à cette influence et a ce contrôle, sa science et son travail au lieu de se répartir également sur tout le district se porteront plus particulièrement sur cette partie du district où est le plus spécialement l'intérêt de ce commissaire, qui lui-même peut-être soumis à des influences de localité. Si l'ingénieur acquiert quelque empire sur le commissaire, les choses n'en seront que pires et les intérêts de l'Etat sauvés du gouffre de Scylla seraient entraînés dans le gouffre de Charybde; car alors le commissaire serait sous l'influence de son inférieur et un système partial ou local serait adopté.

Il me semble, monsieur le président, que le bill de la chambre est tout à fait impraticable, que pour le mettre en opération, il faudrait un déboursé beaucoup plus considérable, que celui qu'exigerait l'acte que j'ai proposé au Sénat pour la création d'un département des améliorations intérieures. Ce bill exigerait :

3 commissaires à $1,500 chacun.....	$4,500
3 ingénieurs dont les salaires, à cause de la responsabilité attachée à leurs fonctions, seraît pour chacun de.....	1,500
Secrétaire du bureau.....	500
Dépenses éventuelles pour voyages, assemblées, &c.....	1,000
Total par an.....	$7,000

Mais, Monsieur le président, ce ne sont pas là les seules données sur lesquelles je me fonde pour démontrer que la dépense additionnelle à laquelle donnerait lieu l'adoption du bill de la Chambre avec son bureau des travaux publics surpasse de beaucoup celle qu'occasionnerait le bill que je soutiens.

Les dépenses du bureau des travaux publics pendant huit ans, employant une moyenne de 77 42⅝100 nègres et 2 714⅞100 bateaux se sont élevées à $364,917 ou a une moyenne annuelle de $45,614 62, tandis que les dépenses du département pour 11 années à partir de 1842 jusqu'en 1853 employant une moyenne de 91 545⅞100 nègres et 3 545⅞100 bateaux étaient de $347,880 41 ou une dépense annuelle de $31,620 94. Les dépenses annuelles du bureau des travaux publics employant un bateau et 14 nègres de moins que le département de l'ingénieur surpassait les dépenses de ce dernier de la somme de $13,993 68.

Ces chiffres montrent de la manière la plus claire que ce que j'ai avancé est parfaitement juste.

Mais je n'ai pas encore fini avec le bill de la Chambre. Il y a d'autres objections que je désire présenter en peu de mots au Sénat. Ce bill autorise la nomination d'un nombre illimité d'inspecteurs de levées, une armée d'officiers, dont les salaires absorberont le riche legs que nous avons reçu des exécuteurs du regrettable Harmanson; les inspecteurs des levées sont investis d'un pouvoir illimité en ce qui regarde la fixation des dimensions des levées et de la manière dont elles doivent être construites, ce qui leur donnera les moyens de tyranniser l'habitant et de disposer leurs travaux dans les différentes parties du district, de telle façon qu'il pourra n'y avoir pas d'unité de vue dans leurs opérations Ils sont aussi autorisés à requérir les esclaves, en n'importe quel temps, sans égard à la distance qui séparera les habitations de l'endroit où les esclaves seront appelés, et cela encore sans qu'aucun dédommagement soit accordé aux habitans pour l'usage de leur propriété. Le bill déclare aussi que les travaux prescrits par le dit bill devront être donnés au rabais, sans examiner si la personne qui les obtient est capable de les faire, et il ne laisse aucun pouvoir discrétionnaire aux fonctionnaires qui représentent les intérêts de l'Etat pour rejeter l'offre ou plutôt le rabais, au cas même ou ce rejet devrait être avantageux pour l'Etat. Enfin, par la généralité de ses termes, les travaux de desséchement qu'il autorise sont illimités et quant à la quantité et quant au genre. Des lieues de canal peuvent être fouillées sous l'empire de ce bill.

Voilà, M. le président, ce que j'avais à dire sur ce bill qui est si chaudement soutenu par un grand nombre de sénateurs, et qui s'appuie sur une influence du dehors dont la puissance n'a jamais été, à ma connaissance, surpassée ni dans cette assemblée ni dans aucune autre.

Mais on me demandera en quoi le bill que j'ai présenté est-il supérieur à celui dont je viens de signaler les défauts. Je répondrai que les avantages qu'il présente sont nombreux, et non seulement nombreux, mais susceptibles d'une facile démonstration. D'abord il ne s'arrête pas au desséchement des terres marécageuses et inondées, mais il pourvoit au choix qui sera fait de ces terres, aux travaux d'arpentage; il témoigne une juste sollicitude pour les autres, que dis-je, pour tous les travaux publics que l'Etat doit faire. Le Département de l'Ingénieur doit être disposé de telle façon que tous les travaux publics, l'aplanissement des chûtes de la Rivière Rouge, les améliorations à faire au Canal de Barataria et Lafourche, la fouille de la Rivière Rouge, à son embouchure, les travaux à exécuter aux chûtes du Ouachita et d'autres améliorations y trouvent leur place, et les intérêts que l'Etat se réservera dans les compagnies des rail-roads projetés seront sur la surveillance d'un département, toujours prêt à donner l'impulsion ou la direction, si le cas l'exigeait.

Un autre avantage que présente mon bill est qu'il place le desséchement des terres innondées entre les mains de personnes compétentes. Au lieu de confier ce travail important aux soins et au contrôle de personnes qui sont susceptibles de subir une influence locale ou sectionnelle, il le met sous la protection et la surveillance d'un officier, qui agit pour le compte de l'Etat, d'un homme qui fonctionne directement sous les yeux de l'Executif; d'un homme qui peut s'inspirer des conseils du Gouverneur actuel que ses éminentes connaisances comme Ingénieur rendent si capable de suggérer toutes les mesures importantes pour l'Etat, ce travail sera confié à un fonctionnaire préparé par son éducation aux devoirs qu'il aura à remplir, n'étant doué que d'un sentiment, le désir de servir les intérêts du pays, un homme qui sera en rapports continuels avec la Législature et qui, présidant seul aux travaux, devra seul répondre des fautes qui seront commises dans la mise à exécution du système de desséchement confié à ses mains.

En outre de ces avantages, la section 25 de mon bill contient une disposition fort importante qui n'existe pas dans le bill de la Chambre, et sans laquelle aucun système ayant pour base de protéger les terres contre l'inondation ne saurait être parfait. Je veux parler de la disposition qui établit des bâteaux à enfoncer des pilotis par la vapeur et l'appareil qui les accompagne. Une triste expérience nous a appris qu'il faut en finir avec cet état de choses dans lequel nous restons les bras croisés jusqu'au moment où la crevasse nous envahit avec tout son cortége d'épouvantables catastrophes. C'est pendant la paix que nous devons nous preparer à la guerre, et c'est lorsque nous sommes en sureté que la sagesse nous commande de nous préparer au danger.

Digitized by Google

Mais, M. le président, je manquerais de justice envers mon bill, si je n'appelais l'attention des sénateurs sur l'article qui a trait au travail des nègres, article qui manquait entièrement dans le bill de la Chambre. Je suis arrivé à la conclusion, au moins pour le moment, qu'il serait bien mieux pour l'Etat d'abandonner, autant que possible, le système de faire travailler des blancs et d'adopter le système d'acheter des nègres. Nous savons tous combien est incertain le travail des premiers, et quel prix élevé ils réclament souvent. Etablissez la différence des prix, et vous verrez que je suis bien fondé à prendre la position où je me suis placé lorsque j'ai dit que l'interêt de l'Etat est d'employer des nègres de préférence aux blancs. Je soumets au Sénat un tableau comparatif du coût du travail des nègres et celui du travail des blancs.

300 nègres coûtant environ . .	$300,000 00
Intérêt de 300,000 à 5 1/2 . . .	15,000 00
6 surintendants à 1000 chacun
Habillement et nourriture de 300 nègres par an	6,500 00
Nourriture des surintendants . . .	360 00
Perte des nègres par décès . . .	15,000 00
Coût du travail de 300 nègres par an .	$52,860 00
300 blancs à $30 par mois . . .	108,000 00
Provisions, etc. etc.	18,000 00
Six surintendants à $100 chacun . .	6,000 00
	$132,000 00
Le même nombre de nègres accomplira 25 pour 100 de travail de plus que des blancs, ce qui constitue une différence de	$27,000 00
Différence de frais ainsi qu'il est démontré plus haut	79,140 00
Différence de travail	27,000 00
Différence totale	$106,140 00

Je crois avoir démontré clairement que l'intérêt de l'Etat est d'acheter des esclaves ; que le trésor de l'Etat gagnerait énormément s'il était fait un emprunt pour ces achats. S'il en est ainsi, qui donc peut fermer les yeux à l'avantage que présente mon bill qui pourvoit à cet emprunt et va jusqu'aux plus petits détails de campement, de nourriture, et d'habillements de ces esclaves ? Ce mot emprunt, est de ceux que je n'aime pas ; mais dans les circonstances présentées et considérant quels immenses avantages en résulteraient et considérant de plus que la somme empruntée serait remboursée avec le produit de la vente des terres marécageuses, je n'hésite pas à dire que loin d'affaiblir mon bill, il ne lui donne au contraire que plus de force. Qu'il soit vendu assez de ces terres en marais ou inondées pour payer d'abord l'intérêt de la somme empruntée et plus tard la somme elle-même ; que cette somme soit affectée à l'achat d'esclaves ; que ces esclaves soient mis sous le contrôle du département des ingénieurs ; qu'ils soient employés au desséchement des terres maécageuses ou inondées, et le jour n'est pas loin, où l'on verra les basses-terres de la Louisiane s'étendre et fleurir au soleil comme un jardin de roses.

Un mot encore et je m'arrête. Je désire faire bien comprendre au Sénat les avantages qui résulteraient d'une unité d'action ainsi que l'établirait mon bill. Il n'y aurait qu'une tête, qu'un seul chef ; l'intérêt de sectionnalité disparaîtrait, le travail serait fait uniformément, les districts progresseraient simultanément, et le but que l'on se proposait d'atteindre par les différents bills soumis au Sénat serait promptement et facilement réalisé.

J'ai soumis cette matière au Sénat comme étant de de la plus haute importance pour l'avenir et la prospérité de la Louisiane. C'est parce que je la considérais telle que j'ai si longtemps abusé du temps et de l'attention des Sénateurs.

Quelque parti qu'adopte cet honerable corps j'espère que ce sera le meilleur et que dans l'avenir il n'aura jamais à se repentir de ce qu'il aura fait.

M. King se lève et dit : Je prends la parole pour annoncer au Sénat la triste nouvelle de la mort d'Isaac Johnson, ex-gouverneur de la Louisiane et ex-avocat-général de l'Etat. Voici la dépêche télégraphique qui vient d'être reçue : « Le gouverneur Johnson est mort aujourd'hui. » Les émotions que cette triste et bru-que nouvelle crée dans mon cœur sont trop profondes pour pouvoir être exprimees. En témoignage de la haute estime que nons avons pour les services publics et l'ardent patriotisme du defunt et en souvenir affectueux de ses vertus sociales, je fais la motion que le Sénat s'ajourne.

VENDREDI, 4 MARS.

M. Wickliffe présente un bill, à l'effet de limiter le nombre des juges de la paroisse d'Orléans à et le traitement à $4,000 par an.

M. King. Je crois, M. le président, que la présentation de ce bill n'est pas à l'ordre. Nous avons déjà adopté la seconde section d'un bill qui établit six cours. Le bill est en opposition directe avec cette section. Si nous suivons une pareille marche, nous n'arriverons jamais au bout de cette session. On a epuisé toutes les ressources que présente la tactique parlementaire, pour empêcher l'établissement de six cours, mais on n'a pu y parvenir. On offre maintenant un bill qui doit conduire au même résultat. Je le demande, M. le président, ce bill est-il à l'ordre ?

M. Wickliffe.—Mon intention M. le président, en presentant ce bill, est de donner plus de valeur à notre système judiciaire. Mon but n'est pas de tuer le bill du senateur.

La discussion se poursuit quelque temps, puis on met aux voix la question de savoir si l'action du règlement sera repoussée. Cette question est décidée dans la négative.

M. Short met devant le Sénat un mémoire signé de plusieurs habitants de Catahoula et de Carroll, par lequel ils demandent le rappel de la loi de 1852, relative aux districts de Levée.

Le but des pétitionnaires est expliqué dans le mémoire, et le senateur ne désire pas perdre le temps du Sénat en s'y arrêtant plus longtemps. Mais comme les doctrines et les opinions avancées par les pétitionnaires sont tout à fait contraires aux siennes, bien que ses opinions aient eté sanctionnées par les habitans de ces paroisses, il désire remplir un devoir de respect et d'estime en présentant leurs vœux et les faits qu'ils allèguent. Il demande donc que le mémoire soit mis dans les dossiers, afin qu'il puisse être mis à même d'y répliquer ; ce qu'il espère faire de façon à ne pas entraver le Senat dans sa marche.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion que le mémoire soit référé à un comité spécial composé des senateurs représentant les paroisses d'où émane le mémoire.

M. Boatner dit que les habitants de Catahoula sont unanimement d'accord avec ceux de Carroll pour demander le rappel de la loi de 1852. Il circule en ce moment une pétition à cet effet ; elle est signée par presque tous les habitants de Catahoula ; une pétition du même genre circule dans la paroisse de Carroll. Quand ces petitions auront été presentées, il n'y aura point de partage d'opinion quant à la marche qui doit être suivie Il pense avec le senateur d'Ouest Feliciana [M. Wickliffe] que le mémoire doit être refere.

M. Short dit que les habitants de Carroll sont en faveur de la loi de 1852. La pétition à laquelle le sénateur fait allusion, n'a reçu comparativement qu'un petit nombre de signatures Catahoula reçoit de la loi toute la protection qu'elle a le droit d'attendre. Mais il paraîtrait, que, parce que nous, propriétaires riverains, sommes obligés de nous protéger, vous, propriétaires du fond, ne devez pas fournir votre contribution. S'il en est ainsi, nous n'avons qu'un parti à prendre, c'est de nous soumettre.

M. Boatner réplique que ce n'est pas ainsi que les habitants de Catahoula envisagent la question. Ils sont opposes à cette loi parce qu'ils la croient injuste, inégale en pratique. D'autres paroisses ont plus bénéficié par ce bill que Catahoula, et cependant elles ont été laissées en dehors. Les paroisses de Concordia et de Tensas, qui sont plus exposées aux inondations, ont eu leur part de protection, et cependant elles n'ont point été taxées.

Les citoyens de Catahoula sont disposés à payer une juste proportion, mais ils désirent ne pas payer plus qu'il n'est juste, surtout quand les paroisses de Concordia et de Tensas, qui sont plus particulièrement protégées, ne sont nullement taxées.

M. Rivers a entendu avec surprise ces messieur avancer, que les paroisses de Concordia et de Tensas ont été plus favorisées que Catahoula et que cependant elles ne sont point taxées. Ces paroisses ont un budget formé de leurs propres fonds pour leurs levées. Elles contribuent pour une forte part à la protection des paroisses que le sénateur représente. Il n'y a donc que justice à ce que ces dernières paient une partie des dépenses. La paroisse de Concordia est entourée de levées et son territoire paie, sous forme de taxe, une moyenne de 25 cents par acre. C'est la raison pour laquelle ces paroisses n'ont pas été comprises dans les districts de levée, ainsi que Catahoula.

Digitized by Google

M. Boatner dit que la paroisse de Catahoula a aussi un système de levées et sera bientôt capable de se protéger contre l'inondation. Il a dit qu'elle est disposée à payer une juste proportion et il le répète. Mais on n'a qu'à consulter la carte pour s'assurer que des paroisses aussi exposées que Catahoula ont été laissées en dehors des Districts.

LUNDI, 7 MARS 1853.

M. Hodge présente un bill pour rendre les jugements sujets à la prescription après l'espace de dix ans.

M. Hodge dit : — Le but de ce bill est de rendre les jugements sujets à la prescription après l'espace de dix ans s'ils n'ont pas été renouvelés en les faisant enregistrer de nouveau. Tous les contrats sont sujets à la prescription et il n'existe pas de bonne raison qui empêche la prescription de s'appliquer aux jugements comme à toute autre pièce constatant l'existence d'une dette. En tous cas, il est rare de voir un jugement exécuté après dix ou quinze ans. L'objet de ce bill est d'incorporer dans notre loi une disposition semblable à celle de la loi commune, sous l'empire de laquelle tout jugement, à moins qu'un writ de scire facias ne l'ait fait renaître, est prescrit. Sous l'empire de cette loi le défendeur, à l'expiration d'un certain nombre d'années spécifié, est cité à comparaître et déduire les raisons pour lesquelles le jugement ne continuerait pas d'avoir force. S'il ne déduit pas de raisons, le jugement reste en force. Si le demandeur néglige de remplir cette formalité, le jugement est prescrit. Le bill n'affectera pas les hypothèques, comme les jugements, ainsi qu'il a été suggéré au sein du comité. Il arrive souvent que des jugements sont inscrits pour créer une hypothèque generale, et que cette inscription n'est jamais radiée. Les parties contre lesquelles pèse l'hypothèque ont recours à ce moyen pour grever leurs propriétés et les mettre à l'abri de leurs créanciers. Ce bill aura aussi pour effet de prémunir les défendeurs, qui empêcheront, à moins d'impossibilité absolue, de renouveler les jugements qui existent contre eux et de les faire courir dix ans de plus. — On a dit, pour combattre le bill, que le renouvellement des jugements dans la forme proposée entraînerait de grands frais. C'est une erreur. La seule formalité requise est une citation adressée au defendeur, lui enjoignant de déduire les raisons pour lesquelles le jugement ne resterait pas en force. Puis le juge donne un ordre qui prolonge l'existence du jugement, au cas où le defendeur n'aurait pas justifié de raisons suffisantes pour empêcher l'octroi de cet ordre.

La dernière section du bill est réclamée par la nécessité. Elle est destinée à mettre nos concitoyens à l'abri des harcellements dont ils pourraient être l'objet pendant 50 ans par suite de jugements obtenus contre eux dans les autres Etats.

M. McCay—Comment la citation dont il s'agit pourrait-elle être servie lorsque le défendeur est hors de la juridiction de la Cour Elle ne pourrait l'être en pareil cas et il n'y aurait alors aucune possibilite de renouveler le jugement.

M. Hodge—Je n'ai aucune objection à admettre tels amendements qui pourront ajouter à l'efficacite du bill. Si la partie qui doit être citée est dans l'Etat, une citation peut lui être remise personnellement — si elle est hors de l'Etat, la citation pourra être placée sur les propriétés sur lesquelles pèse l'hypothèque. Mais je pense qu'il y aurait peu d'interêt à faire revivre un jugement dans cet Etat, si la partie l'avait quitté, attendu qu'il serait mieux de l'aller rejoindre là où elle se serait fixée.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Martin appelle le bill qui réduit les prix d'annonces pour les ventes de succession, et qui les met au même taux que celles qui ont lieu pour les ventes de shériff, et qui établit que dans les paroisses où se publient plus d'une gazette, les annonces seront données au rabais.

M. Martin explique que l'objet du bill est de placer toutes les annonces sur le même pied. Actuellement les annonces des ventes ordonnées par les Cours coûtent deux fois plus que celles des ventes de shériff. Il désire aussi que dans les paroisses qui ont plus d'une gazette le shériff publie des propositions à l'effet de mettre au rabais la publication des annonces judiciaires. Il est convaincu que la concurrence ne peut qu'être avantageuse à toutes les parties. Dans l'État actuel des choses, les imprimeurs sont beaucoup trop payés.

Le bill est déposé, conformément au réglement.

Le mémoire est définitivement renvoyé à un comité special

M. King provoque la discussion du bill émanant de la chambre à l'effet d'autoriser la compagnie de l'hôtel Saint-Charles, à hypothéquer sa propriété pour effectuer un emprunt.

Le bill est adopté.

Le bill pourvoyant à l'établissement d'une maison d'éducation dans la paroisse des Rapides, est pris en consideration.

M. Boatner demande le renvoi du bill.

M. Griffin est opposé à cette proposition.

M. Hodge dit que si les sénateurs avaient lu le rapport officiel des debats auxquels le bill a donné lieu dans la chambre, tels que ces débats ont été publiés dans le journal officiel, qui en donne un long rapport, ils auraient découvert que cette question a créé un grand interêt dans cette assemblée, ils auraient vu les raisons qui ont dirigé la conduite de la chambre. Il a vu qu'une proposition a même été faite dans la chambre pour établir cette maison d'éducation dans la paroisse Jefferson. Il présume que le but du sénateur (M. Burthe) est de porter cet amendement devant le comité.

M. Burthe fait la remarque qu'il faudrait de fortes dépenses pour mettre le bill à exécution.

M. Griffin nie que ces dépenses soient nécessaires— le Congrès y a deja pourvu.

MARDI, 8 mars 1853

M. Martin dit qu'il y a quelques jours il a présenté une resolution requérant le comité judiciaire de rédiger un bill pour mettre à exécution cet article de la Constitution, qui défend que plus d'une place de l'Etat soient occupées par la même personne. Le comité ayant mieux aimé qu'il rédigeât lui-même ce bill, il l'a fait et l'a soumis à plusieurs membres du comité qui l'ont approuvé. Il présente donc ce bill.

M. Wickliffe.—Je désirerais avoir quelques informations à ce sujet et savoir si les encanteurs sont considérés comme officiers de l'Etat.

M. Martin.—Ils sont certainement des officiers de l'Etat, ils sont autorisés par la loi à recevoir une licence; ils ont une commission du gouvernement. S'ils ont aucune autre place, c'est un cumul, une violation de la Constitution.

M. Wickliffe.—Il y a beaucoup de paroisses dans l'Etat où les affaires des encanteurs ne s'élèvent pas a un total de plus de $100 par an. Il est donc avantageux de permettre aux greffiers de Cours d'agir dans la capacite d'encanteurs. Cette question, monsieur, est de la plus grande importance, et avant de voter pour ce bill, je voudrais obtenir plus de lumière que je n'en ai sur ce sujet.

M. Martin.—J'espère que le sénateur ne persistera pas dans son opposition à ce bill, dont le but est simplement de mettre à exécution cet article de la Constitution et d'empêcher le cumul. Je voudrais empêcher que les greffiers de Cours ne fussent en même temps encanteurs, ce qui leur donne le contrôle des ventes judiciaires.

M. Short.—Je crois comprendre que le but de ce bill est d'empêcher que les greffiers de cours puissent enregister d'abord un ordre de vente, puis, devenant tout à coup encanteurs, de procéder immédiatement à la dite vente.

M. Wickliffe—Eh bien! monsieur, je dirai, moi, que jamais dans ma paroisse il n'y a eu de plaintes à ce sujet. Peut-être le devons-nous au fait que nous avons un des meilleurs greffiers de tout l'Etat. Quoi-qu'il en soit, jamais il ne s'est élevé aucune plainte de la nature de celle qu'exprime le sénateur de l'Assomption.

Digitized by Google

M. Todd.—Je voterai avec plaisir en faveur du bill, si la section qui a trait aux encanteurs est supprimée. Il y a beaucoup de paroisses dans les campagnes, où les encanteurs, dont les salaires sont ordinairement très modiques, remplissent en même temps quelque autres petit emploi, à l'aide duquel il font de quoi vivre. Je ne voudrais pas qu'on les dépouillât de ce privilège, et je suis d'opinion que les encanteurs qui ont une licence, ne sont pas officiers de l'Etat.

Le substitut au bill autorisant les cours à lancer des writs de "mandamus" contre les juris de police est pris en considération.

M. Hodge dit : Lorsque le bill primitif auquel celui qui nous occupe est un substitut, était encore devant le comité, je croyais que le principe en vertu duquel les débiteurs sont tenus de déclarer leurs dettes, était vrai aussi bien pour les corporations que pour les individus. Cependant après réflexion, et depuis que le rapport du comité a été fait, j'ai reconnu qu'il ne serait pas convenable d'insister sur ce point en ce moment.

Le bill décrète, que les créanciers des paroisses peuvent obtenir jugement contre elles, lorsqu'une taxe spéciale sera levée pour couvrir le jugement dans l'espace d'une année. Personne n'ignore, M. le président, que beaucoup de paroisses de cet Etats ont de fortes dettes et qu'elles ont émis des bons pour un montant considérable. Ces dettes ont été contractées alors que l'argent était très rare, et quelques paroisses se sont ainsi endettées de vingt-cinq ou trente mille piastres. L'effet de ce bill serait de mettre dans l'embarras toutes ces paroisses. Je ne pensais pas à tout cela à l'epoque où le bill etait devant le comité et c'est la raison pour laquelle j'y donnai sans réflexion mon consentement. Il peut arriver qu'un individu ayant des réclamations contre une paroisse, intente un procès et, qu'en vertu du pouvoir que lui donnerait ce bill, il puisse entraver la marche du gouvernement dans nos corporations municipales.

On dira peut-être qu'il n'y a en fait aucune différence entre ces débiteurs et tous les autres. Ils ont contracté une obligation et sont tenus de la remplir. Je reconnais tout cela ; mais prenez en considération l'historique des circonstances dans lesquelles ces dettes ont été contractées, Les bons ont été émis à l'époque où les paroisses étaient criblées de dettes et dans une situation financière à peu près désespérée, de sorte qu'elles ont du émettre des bons pour beaucoup plus que leur dette. Tel était le cas dans ma propre paroisse, je le sais personnellement, et je ne doute pas qu'il n'en ait été de même dans plusieurs autres paroisses. Dans mon opinion, il serait à la fois dangereux et peu convenable d'accorder aux créanciers des paroisses le droit, le pouvoir et le privilége renfermés dans ce bill.

M. Wickliffe.—Je suis heureux d'entendre confirmer cette opinion par le Sénateur de Caddo. Pour moi, Monsieur le président, je ne consentirai en aucune circonstance à voter en faveur du bill. Je partage l'avis du Sénateur quant à son inopportunité, et je connais des paroisses sur lesquelles son effet serait ruineux. Je voterai donc avec l'opposition aussi longtemps que j'en aurai l'occasion

M. Short.—Le Sénateur pourrait facilement amender le bill de manière qu'il ne prêtât plus aux objections auxquelles il a fait allusion. Qu'il considère donc combien il est plus facile d'abattre que de construire L'objection du Sénateur de Caddo est que si un jugement est obtenu contre une paroisse, elle serait alors forcée de lever une taxe et serait mise dans le plus grand embarras, si la somme nécessaire ne peut être fournie ; et de plus, qu'il serait injuste de l'exiger, puisque à cause de la dépréciation de ses bons, elle aurait à payer plus qu'elle n'a reçu. Le but de ce bill est d'empêcher cela, d'empêcher que les paroisses ne s'endettent tellement qu'elles ne puissent plus se libérer.

Il me semble que lorsqu'une paroisse est assez imprudente pour contracter des dettes si fortes que ses ressources ne soient pas suffisantes pour les payer, il faut qu'elle soit bien folle et bien inconsidérée. Une paroisse qui agirait de la sorte aurait besoin d'un curateur. Si c'est un homme n'y aurait-il pas lieu à élever bien des doutes au sujet de son intelligence?

M. Hodge.—Lorsque au commencement de la session l'Etat a contracté une dette de $100,000, vous n'avez pas dit qu'il méritait d'avoir un curateur.

M. Short.—Je n'ai aucune objection à voir une personne contracter une dette lorsqu'elle a assez de biens pour repondre de sa dette, lorsque son papier n'est pas au dessous du pair et qu'elle peut le racheter avec de l'argent. Le but de ce bill est de forcer l'imprudent à agir comme s'il avait de la prudence.

En ce moment, lorsque les juris de police déclarent qu'il faut pourvoir au paiement d'une forte dette lorsque les bons seront présentés, lorsqu'ils voient l'indispensable nécessité d'avoir recours à une taxe:— et vous le savez, la taxe n'est pas toujours populaire, pas plus dans les petits districts que dans les grandes villes —ils cherchent à éviter la responsabilité et voudraient se retirer laissant à leurs successeurs de pourvoir au paiement de la dette. Si le sénateur veut forcer les paroisses à payer leurs dettes qu'il propose quelque plan qui facilite ce résultat. S'il y est opposé, je ne crois pas que sa conduite soit celle d'un sénateur prudent et sage. Dire tout simplement que ce bill ne convient pas et s'y opposer sans suggérer aucun autre moyen de réaliser le but qu'on se propose, n'est pas, il me semble, une façon d'agir qui soit convenable. Mais quel autre moyen y a-t-il ? Le moyen presenté par le bill est le plus lent qu'autorise la loi. Lorsque le creancier a fait inutilement toutes les démarches possibles, que peut-il faire ? Qu'un writ de mandamus soit donc lancé, qu'une taxe soit imposée par la paroisse pour payer sa dette. Ce remède est tout simple. Lorsque les paroisses sauront que sur l'emission d'un writ de nulla bona elles devront imposer une taxe, alors elles seront plus prudentes dans les obligations qu'elles contracteront ; elles se garderont bien d'émettre tant de papier qu'il ne vaille plus que deux escalins à la piastre, elles craindront que des mesures ne soient prises pour rendre à leur papier toute sa valeur.

M. Hodge.—Le bill du sénateur est excellent en tant qu'il a trait aux transactions qui pourraient être faites. Il ne serait pas sage de dire à un individu, lorsque jugement est rendu contre lui, qu'il ne doit plus manger qu'il n'ait tout payé. Ma paroisse doit beaucoup plus qu'elle ne peut payer en douze mois au moyen de taxes. Si ce bill était adopté la conséquence serait que l'administration serait entravée. Il serait injuste de donner au bill un effet rétroactif, parce que ces obligations ont été contractées par les paroisses à une epoque où les créanciers n'avaient pas le pouvoir qu'on propose maintenant de leur accorder. L'argument du sénateur, quant à l'imprudence des paroisses, ne prouve pas qu'il serait juste de donner aux spéculateurs le pouvoir de les arrêter, de les soumettre à tous les maux qui résulteraient de l'interruption de leur existence comme corporation. Je sais que dans ma propre paroisse, les spéculateurs pourraient obtenir des jugemens et embarrasser beaucoup les autorités en exigeant le paiement de vingt-cinq ou trente mille piastres en douze mois. Ces obligations n'ont pas été contractées en vue d'un paiement si prompt et il ne serait pas juste d'accorder un tel privilège à cette classe de créanciers. C'est un privilège plus grand que celui dont jouissent les créanciers de l'Etat ou tous autres créanciers, et l'on ponrrait tout aussi bien soutenir que l'Etat doit être tenu de payer ses dettes en douze mois, sous peine d'une suspension semblable. Lorsque les créanciers ont consenti à prêter leur argent ils n'esperaient avoir que les droits que leur donnaient les lois alors existantes, et nous ne devons pas leur en accorder d'autres.

La plus ample considération de ce bill est enfin ajournee

Le bill autorisant la compagnie du chemin de fer du Lac Pontchartrain à étendre le chemin jusqu'à la Mobile est appelé et adopté.

Le bill accordant à M. Hord le paiement d'une certaine somme d'argent pour la fourniture de certains outils pendant les travaux du Raccourci Cut-Off, est appelé.

M. Wickliffe explique l'objet du bill et dit que la réclamation est juste et aurait passé à la dernière Législature, si le temps n'avait pas manqué.

M. Kenner fait observer que M. Hord a déjà reçu un paiement extra de dix ou douze mille piastres qui devait être pris par lui en acquit de toutes ses réclamations contre l'Etat

Je suis persuadé qu'au moins $8000 ont été données, car j'ai combattu moi-même, sans succès, la proposition qui en a été faite.

Digitized by Google

M. McCay lit un passage du journal de l'année dernière qui prouve que la Législature a accordé $6000.

M. Wickliffe.—Cette somme n'était que celle à laquelle il avait droit par son contrat. M. Hord lui a dit qu'il n'avait jamais reçu un sou de plus que ce à quoi il avait droit d'après son contrat. Cependant il est disposé à ce que la discussion du sujet soit renvoyée, pour donner au Sénat le temps de recevoir des renseignemens.

M. Mouton désire que le bill soit renvoyé. S'il trouve que le réclamant a déjà reçu $3000, il n'est pas disposé à contribuer à lui faire recevoir un sou de plus.

M. Wickliffe fait observer que la seule question est de savoir si M. Hord a en effet fourni ces outils à l'Etat.

M. Hord dit que le comité des réclamations s'est assuré que cette somme n'avait jamais été comprise dans aucun bill.

M. Kenner—Je ne désire pas que l'on pense que je vote contre une réclamation juste, mais je pense que voici l'état de la question : Si les articles ont été réellement fournis, l'ingénieur de l'Etat a le pouvoir d'en payer le prix des fonds destinés aux dépenses casuelles. Le sénateur dit que l'ingénieur de l'Etat, le colonel Williams, est mort. Mais son successeur est aussi responsable. Pourquoi donc M. Hord ne s'adresse-t-il pas à la personne compétente ? Au lieu de cela, il a attendu cinq ou six ans, après quoi il s'adresse à la Législature et la harcelle de la reclamation d'une dette que l'Etat n'a jamais contractée.

Je me souviens maintenant parfaitement que M. Hord a reçu un paiement extra de la dernière Législature. Le bill avait été confié à M. Maunsel White qui dit que M. Hord avait droit à un paiement extra, parce que le travail en a été fait avec une grande rapidité et d'une manière parfaite.

Le débat se poursuit, puis la discussion du bill est renvoyée.

M. Rivers présente une résolution affectant une somme de $300 pour l'achat de différents livres, papiers et traités pour l'usage des prisonniers du pénitentiaire.

M. Martin—Cette proposition, M. le président, a été faite par le colonel Flucker et le bureau des administrateurs du pénitentiaire. La même proposition, surtout pour ce qui regarde les journaux, a été faite par l'un des membres du comité. Quant aux traités, je dois dire que dans ma jeunesse, j'ai lu un grand nombre de ces traités et je ne pense pas que j'y ai beaucoup gagné du côté des principes. Je ne puis croire que le mensonge doive être propagé pour le maintien de la religion, plus que par tout autre moyen.

M. Mouton propose de déposer la résolution sur le bureau. Il a visité le pénitentiaire et a examiné avec soin la manière dont il est conduit. Il a vu une bible dans chaque cellule, et il pense que c'est assez. La position financière de l'Etat ne permet pas la dépense que propose le bill.

M. Kenner dit que dans tous les autres Etats, ces choses étaient fournies au moyen de libéralités privées. Si l'association qui a soulevé cette question est désireuse d'arriver à ses fins, elle devrait adopter la marche suivie dans le Nord. Le but est juste et louable, et il n'y est pas opposé; tout ce qu'il repousse c'est que la personne nommée dans la résolution, avec laquelle il est personnellement lié, et pour laquelle il a le plus grand respect, s'adresse à la Législature, et demande une assistance qu'il devrait chercher ailleurs.

M. Rivers. — Le sénateur se trompe. Cette personne ne demande pas cette affectation de fonds. Elle a été recommandée par un comité réuni des deux Chambres.

M. Kenner. — Je croyais que la demande était faite par lui, en voyant que son nom était mentionné.

M. Rivers.—Il est fait mention de son nom comme aumônier du pénitentiaire et parce que sa presence est requise lorsque les livres et les papiers sont distribués.

M. Kenner. — Très bien. Je voterai contre le bill. Je ne suis pas d'opinion que l'Etat salarie le premier venu pour la diffusion des vues d'aucune sorte.

M. Mouton. — Je ne vois pas comment lorsque nous défrayons ces ministres de leurs frais de nourriture et de logement, nous pourrions être appelés à payer aussi pour leurs frais de lecture.

M. Rivers. — le sénateur consentirait-il à prendre pension aux mêmes conditions ?

M. Mouton. — Je crois faire au sénateur une réponse à la Yankee, en lui adressant une question nouvelle. Le sénateur accepterait-il lui-même le bénéfice de nourriture et de logement si on le défrayait aussi des frais de lecture.

M. McCay. — Mes collègues paraissent ne pas se tromper sur le sujet qui nous occupe. Il n'y a rien dans ce bill qui tende à favoriser l'esprit de secte. Il a simplement pour but l'acquisition de certains ouvrages et de certains journaux pour l'usage des prisonniers. Nous ne pouvons nous refuser à l'affectation de fonds demandée, elle est de peu d'importance, une simple bagatelle dont la perte serait inaperçue pour nous. L'accorder dans ce but serait agir sagement au nom de l'Etat. Ce serait prouver l'intention d'alléger la malheureuse condition de ces malheureux. Je répète que ce bill n'est point dicté par l'esprit de secte. Je n'y puis rien voir de semblable. Nous savons tous que le simple fait d'une simple privation de la liberté matérielle ne constitue pas la punition. C'est l'isolement de l'esprit qui est insupportable et nous pourrions bien, sans inconséquence, faire quelque chose pour les soulager sous cette forme.

M. Todd. — Je suis absolument opposé au bill et je suis d'un avis opposé à celui du sénateur qui vient de parler. Un des objets de la punition est de réformer le criminel et l'instruction religieuse doit le réaliser. Mais elle doit être donnée par des associations et non par l'Etat. Un autre objet est la punition du criminel afin de détourner d'autres hommes de le devenir à leur tour. Le sénateur a observé avec justice que la coercion la plus insupportable est celle qui est exercée sur l'esprit. La punition dans le but d'être efficace doit être aussi sévère que possible. Nous aurions tort de l'alléger, car l'effet qu'on en attend serait amoindri. Nous devons donc nous refuser à fournir aux prisonniers des matériaux de lecture de nature à amoindrir leur peine.

M. Short.—Les philantropes s'accordent généralement à reconnaître que dans le traitement des prisonniers, le châtiment et la réforme doivent marcher de pair; cependant je ne désire pas contrarier l'objet que se proposent ces institutions chritables et humaines qui ont été répandues sur toute la face du pays et qui envoient des ouvrages de morale et de religion dans ces parties du monde habitées par les payens. Je désire suivre ce principe qui nous dit que charité bien ordonnée commence par soi-même, bien que je sois loin de prétendre qu'elle doive s'arrêter là. Néanmoins, comme je l'ai déjà dit, je ne désire pas contrecarrer les travaux des institutions charitables dont je viens de parler.

M. Rivers.—Je suis surpris de l'opposition qui a été faite à ce bill. Ce qu'il propose c'est d'acheter des livres et de les mettre entre les mains des prisonniers afin qu'ils puissent cultiver et améliorer leur esprit et se préparer pour l'époque où ils seront rendus à la société. Je suis étonné de la doctrine avancée par le sénateur de Morehouse, (M. Todd) que lorsque nous punissons un homme nous ne devons rien faire pour adoucir son châtiment. Ils sont prisonniers de l'Etat, ils ont perdu les sympathies de leurs concitoyens et ils n'en mérirent plus aucune ; mais nous les soumettons à une bien rude discipline, nous leur prenons leur travail—devons-nous leur refuser cette légère consolation qui ne nous coûtera pas plus de $300 ?

En punissant, le but que l'on se propose est de corriger le criminel et notre devoir envers l'Etat réclame de nous que nous préparions les prisonniers à une meilleure vie après qu'ils auront été libérés. Nous devons donc faire tout ce qui est en notre pouvoir pour les arracher à l'influence mauvaise à laquelle ils étaient autrefois exposés.

M. Mouton présente une résolution demandant que chaque sénateur renonce à sa paye de deux jours à l'effet de faire la somme nécessaire pour mettre ce bill à exécution

M. Griffin dit qu'il votera avec plaisir en faveur de cette résolution, mais il l'a croit inconstitutionnelle.

M. Mouton.—Le sénateur pense que c'est un acte constitutionnel de jeter par les fenêtres l'argent de l'Etat et inconstitutionnel de jeter le sien ! Je donnerais volontiers deux jours de paye, mais je ne suis pas disposé à donner l'argent de l'Etat. Si nous voulons être généreux, soyons-le de notre propre argent et non de celui de l'Etat.

Digitized by Google

M. Rivers.—Je ne suis pas le moins du monde avare, mais je considère que cette résolution est si ridicule qu'elle est indigne du sénateur qui l'a présentée. Si le sénateur est disposé à donner deux jours de sa paye, qu'il le fasse. En présentant sa résolution, il n'a voulu qu'empêcher que le bill ne fut adopté.

Quelques observations sont tour à tour présentées par différents sénateurs, puis le bill est dépose sur le bureau.

LUNDI, 21 mars 1853.

M. Mouton prend la parole et dit: M. le président, je prends la parole pour un fait personnel. Une résolution émanant de la Chambre des Représentants a été adoptée par le Sénat, il y a quelques jours. Cette résolution autorise les deux comités des dépenses casuelles à payer à M. Théodore Moïse ce qui lui est dû pour les services qu'il a rendus comme messager spécial pendant la maladie du gouverneur Hébert; mais la résolution laisse aux comités à fixer le montant qu'il doit recevoir. A l'époque, M. le président, je pensais et pense encore que cette marche était mauvaise. Dans mon opinion, aucun comité ne devrait avoir le droit de décider du montant qui doit être payé pour aucun des services rendus à l'Etat. Il faudrait qu'un bill faisant cette allocation fût présenté pour que ceux qui paient les taxes sussent où passent les fonds publics, et je regrette beaucoup que lorsque la résolution vint devant le Sénat, je ne la combattis point; mais, si je ne l'ai pas fait, c'est par suite de mon inexpérience en pareille matière. Je ne savais si ce n'était pas la marche usuelle en pareille circonstance.

En vertu de la résolution dont je viens de parler, le comité des dépenses casuelles se réunit au comité correspondant de la Chambre, et il fut convenu par une majorité des deux comités que la somme de $500 serait accordée à M. Théodore Moïse. Je pensai, M. le président, que cette somme était un prix fort libéral pour les 38 jours que M. Moïse avait été employé comme messager spécial. Depuis, les comités se sont reunis de nouveau, et, après avoir examiné de nouveau la conclusion à laquelle ils étaient arrivés, relativement à ce sujet, ils ont accordé à M. Moïse une somme additionnelle de $250. Bien que j'eusse appris que c'était l'intention des comités de revenir sur leur détermination précédente, n'ayant pas reçu avis de l'époque à laquelle ils devaient se réunir à cet effet, je ne me rendis pas à leur séance. Je demanderai donc au Sénat de me permettre de dire, en quelques mots, les raisons qui m'empêchent de concourir d'opinion avec les comités, afin que ma conduite paraisse au procès-verbal sous son veritable jour.

M. Théodore Moïse a rempli les fonctions de messager spécial pendant 38 jours. Je pense que la somme de sept cent cinquante piastres, qui lui a été accordée est plus que raisonnable, pour les services qu'il a rendus. Nous faisons trop bon marché des deniers publics. Et je veux protester contre une pareille législation. Aussi longtemps que j'aurai l'honneur d'être membre du comité des dépenses casuelles, je ne veux pas que mon silence puisse être pris pour un acquiescement à de pareilles mesures. Je pense que le principe est faux, et, mon opinion etant telle, je crois de mon devoir de le proclamer.

Il n'entre certes pas dans mes intentions de jeter le moindre blâme sur les membres du comité. C'est une simple différence d'opinion entre nous, quant à la valeur des services rendus par M. Moïse. Ils ont pense qu'ils valaient $750. Je pense que c'est beaucoup trop. Et quand nous savons que l'avocat de District du 15me District judiciaire, qui a à traverser ce District étendu dans l'exercice des devoirs difficiles de sa place, n'a qu'un salaire de $600 par an, nous devons, il me semble, admettre que nous avons été un peu trop généreux envers M. Moïse. Ce que je sais de M. Moïse me donne à penser qu'il est un homme comme il faut, et je ne lui désire que du bien. Et je suis persuade que ma conduite en cette circonstance n'a pas été inspirée par aucun sentiment de mauvais vouloir contre lui. J'ai appris qu'il a déjà reçu ses $750. Je sais par conséquent qu'il n'est plus au pouvoir du Sénat de revenir sur cette question; mais, comme je n'approuve pas la manière dont cette somme a été tirée des fonds destinés aux dépenses casuelles, j'ai cru qu'il était de mon devoir de donner une forme authentique aux opinions que j'entretiens à cet égard, afin qu'il fût bien prouvé que j'étais tout-à-fait étranger à cette mesure.

M. Wickliffe. —Je regrette que le sénateur ait jugé à propos de mettre aujourd'hui cette question sur le tapis, attendu que les membres du comité des dépenses casuelles qui se sont arrêtés à la somme dont a parlé le sénateur sont tous deux absents, et conséquemment ne peuvent se défendre des accusations portées contre eux. Comme président par intérim du Sénat, j'ai eu sous les yeux un mandat que j'ai signé de grand cœur, parce que j'ai pensé que cette somme n'était qu'une juste rémunération des services rendus par M. Moïse. Je ne puis rien trouver à reprendre dans la marche qui a été suivie en cette occasion. Si nous pouvons donner $750 par un bill, nous pouvons les donner par une résolution conjointe. La chose ne me paraît pas aussi horrible qu'au sénateur. Il faut nous rappeler que les membres du comité ne sont pas ici pour défendre leurs actes, ou pour nous expliquer les raisons qui les ont influencés. Il dit qu'il ne désire jeter aucun blâme sur eux, cependant ses paroles ont le même effet qu'un blâme Quelle qu'ait été l'intention du sénateur, les observations qu'il a faites sont une véritable censure du comité.

Quand un messager spécial est nommé, ce n'est pas la coutume de restreindre son salaire au simple remboursement des sommes qu'il a tirées de sa poche. Lorsque le peuple examinera le tableau des taxes et les dépenses qui ont été créées par cette Législature, il ne se montrera pas peu disposé à payer cette somme, surtout lorsqu'il saura que les dépenses pour l'inauguration du gouverneur Hébert ont été de 1,000 moindres que celles qui ont été encourues pour l'inauguration de tous les gouverneurs qui l'ont précédé.

M. Mouton—Je n'ai que quelques mots à dire. Si j'avais reçu avis de la réunion du comité, j'eusse présenté un rapport de la minorité. Mais comme je n'ai pu le faire, je considère qu'il est de mon devoir de soumettre aujourd'hui mes vues au sénat. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, il peut exister une différence d'opinion quant à la valeur des services rendus, et le montant du salaire qui peut être raisonnablement demandé et accordé. Mais ce dont je me plains c'est la manière dont la chose a eu lieu; c'est ce mode nouveau, ce mode répréhensible de législation que j'attaque. La manière de disposer des fonds publics est par le bill, de façon que la question puisse être discutée à fond par le sénat. Les comités ne devraient point être autorisés à affecter aucune partie du fonds consacré aux dépenses casuelles. Ce sont là les raisons qui m'ont conduit à porter aujourd'hui la question devant le sénat. Je l'ai fait parceque je pense que cette marche est mauvaise en elle-même, et ne peut conduire qu'à de fâcheux résultats, et chaque fois que je croirai que quelque chose est mal, je le dirai.

M Lacoste—Quand les whigs étaient au pouvoir nous disions qu'ils se livraient à d'épouvantables extravagances. Aujourd'hui nous allons plus loin qu'eux. J'espère que mes collègues mettront un peu d'eau dans leur vin.

LE JUDICIAIRE.

M. Hodge.—Je crois devoir à mes commettants, d'exprimer mon opinion sur l'organisation du judiciaire. Comme je n'étais pas au Sénat lorsque la question s'est présentée précédemment, je dirai qu'après y avoir réfléchi, et pensant que c'est là aussi l'opinion du peuple du nord de la Louisiane, je voterai pour le système des districts étendus. Je suis en faveur de l'établissement de Cours des Preuves. Ce système suppose naturellement l'existence de grands districts. Je n'ai pas entendu les raisons qui ont été avancées dans le Sénat pour ou contre; mais j'ai lu les débats de l'autre Chambre, et ils n'ont fait que me confirmer dans la conclusion à laquelle je suis arrivé que la campagne demande des Cours des Preuves. Après examen des débats de la convention de 1845, époque à laquelle le système des juges de paroisse était devenu si odieux qu'il fallut l'abolir, je crois que la seule objection solide avancée contre ce système était que les juges en beaucoup de cas étaient dans l'habitude d'exiger des droits plus considérables que ceux auxquels ils avaient droit. Si ce fait n'était pas vrai, il existait dans les soupçons du peuple. En examinant les débats, je n'ai vu aucune raison valide opposée aux Cours des Preuves pour ce qui regarde l'expédi-tion des affaires. Mon examen a été assez attentif pour me convaincre que dans ce système les affaires étaient expédiées avec plus de facilité que dans le système actuel. Il est évident que le peuple désire un changement. Personne ne prétend dire que le système actuel satisfasse les esprits. Chacun sait que le peuple demande impérieusement une réforme. Quel est le cas quant à la partie de l'Etat que j'habite ? Dans la plupart des paroisses les cours ne tiennent que deux sessions par an ; par conséquent les affaires ne peuvent être expédiées avec la rapidité voulue. Je savais avant de venir ici, et depuis que je suis ici j'ai reçu des lettres de personnes recommandables qui me parlent dans le même sens ; qui me disent qu'en ville aussi on désire l'établissement de Cours des Preuves. Dans les campagnes, où, sous le système actuel, les cours ne siègent que deux ou trois fois par an, où elles ont à s'occuper des affaires de toutes sortes, criminelles, commerciales et affaires de Cours des Preuves, il est impossible de régler les successions avec cette certitude et cette promptitude que réclament les intérêts publics. L'on sait que quelquefois les successions sommeillent pendant des années, parce que les cours n'ont pas le temps de forcer les curateurs et les administrateurs à rendre compte du dépôt qui leur a été confié.

Digitized by Google

Les dépenses créées par les différents systèmes présentent une question digne de notre examen. Nous devons donner à chaque juge de district un salaire d'au moins $2,000. Avec neuf juges nous pouvons avoir des Cours des Preuves, et elles ne nous coûteront rien de plus. Je répète qu'un examen des débats de 1845 m'a prouvé que la seule raison qui ait fait abolir le système des juges de paroisse, était que les juges étaient dans l'habitude de percevoir des droits au delà de ce qui était légal. Mais la constitution actuelle dit que les juges ne pourront percevoir de droit. Cela prouve implicitement que le peuple désire l'établissement de Cours des Preuves, car quand a-t-il été question de droits perçus par un juge de district? Je ne suis pas venu au Sénat dans le dessein de représenter autant mes propres opinions que celles de mes commettants. Ne voyez-vous pas dans la constitution un désir évident, une intention marquée de prévenir le retour des abus qui causèrent la chûte du système des Cours de paroisses.

Lorsque nous examinons cette question, l'expérience des autres Etats est bonne à consulter. Dans presque tous, il existe des Cours des Preuves, chargées des affaires de successions. Dans le Mississipi, les Cours des Preuves siègent chaque mois. Elles s'acquittent de cette tâche à la satisfaction du peuple, et les Cours de Districts fonctionnent avec un égal succès.

Je pense avec les auteurs de la constitution que les juges ne doivent pas percevoir de droits. Il faut que les juges reçoivent des traitements modérés, suffisants cependant pour assurer au corps judiciaire des hommes de talent et de capacité. C'est le terme moyen que nous devons prendre entre une économie sordide et une extravagante prodigalité. Nous devons certainement donner des traitements qui décideront des hommes compétents à accepter l'hermine. Mais je ne veux pas voir les places devenir l'objet des désirs seulement à cause des profits qu'elles rapportent. Je répondrai à une objection présentée dans l'autre Chambre que les juges des Cours des Preuves doivent être versés dans la connaissance des lois. Si nous suivons la marche que trace la raison, on verra que l'objection est sans fondement. Je voudrais voir modifier les lois qui régissent les successions de telle sorte que le juge de paroisse devint un officier ministériel. Alors il n'y aura pas de nécessité à avoir un avocat. Un habitant sans aucune connaissance des lois, mais ayant une intelligence moyenne, sera parfaitement capable de remplir les fonctions de juge de la Cour des Preuves. L'on a dit dans l'autre Chambre que nous devons donner aux juges des Cours des Preuves $2,000 par an. Je pense qu'avec un traitement de $1000, nous pourrons avoir des hommes capables. Mais donner $2000 serait un acte fatal. Des salaires aussi considérables feraient de ces places autant de points de mire pour la cupidité et les intrigues d'hommes sans principes qui ne tiendraient aucun compte de l'honneur qui s'attache à ces fonctions, et ne verraient que le profit qu'elles rapportent. Lorsque c'est l'argent et non l'honneur qui devient le but de l'ambition les fonctions politiques perdent toute leur dignité. Dans les comtés les plus riches de l'Etat du Mississipi, les juges ne reçoivent pas plus de $600 par an. Ils sont élus non seulement à cause de leur talent et de leur intégrité, mais quelquefois, parce qu'ils ont le bonheur d'être chefs d'une nombreuse famille. Nous voyons donc que dans les comtés opulents d'un Etat voisin, qui n'est qu'à 60 milles tout au plus de la capitale de notre Etat, les juges des Cours des Preuves vivent avec $600 par an. Nous dira-t-on qu'il n'y a que ceux qui quittent les tribunaux et les villes pour prendre le siége judiciaire, qui soient capables de comprendre les lois, et que les gens de la campagne ne peuvent pas les comprendre ? S'il en est ainsi les lois ont besoin d'une reforme. Je crois que dans ma propre paroisse je pourrais compter au moins 50 hommes capables de remplir les fonctions de juge de cour des Preuves, et disposés à les accepter pour un salaire de $1000. Ils peuvent n'être pas capables de donner le sens de tous les termes techniques, mais il comprendront les motifs de décider dans toute affaire qui se présentera devant eux. Je pense que nous devrions proscrire de nos recueils de loi le jargon qui les souille aujourd'hui, je pense qu'il faudrait qu'ils fussent écrits en bon anglais. Dans ma paroisse, $1500 se dépensent annuellement en frais de greffier et en frais d'inventaire. Ces dépenses disparaîtraient avec les juges des Cours des Preuves. Vous connaissez les frais qu'entraîne la prise d'inventaires et les autres actes d'une nature semblable. Quand un notaire fait un inventaire, il présente généralement un compte de cent piastres. Pourquoi le juge de la Cour des Preuves ne ferait-il pas aussi bien cette besogne? Pourquoi ne pourrait-il pas rendre un ordre de vente, qui est aujourd'hui donné par le greffier, lequel établit un compte aussi long qu'un traité de morale? Dans ma propre paroisse l'épargne que l'on obtiendrait de cette façon suffirait à constituer le salaire du juge de la Cour des Preuves.

Dans le bill que j'ai présenté, il est laissé entièrement aux paroisses, c'est-à-dire aux juris de police, de fixer le salaire des juges de Cours des Preuves. Mais on a dit que beaucoup de juris de police ne donneraient pas assez et l'on s'est exprimé sur leur compte tant et si bien, qu'on serait tenté de croire qu'ils sont de vrais Hottentots. Pour moi, monsieur, quoique je n'appartienne pas à cette classe qui fait profession d'un amour sans bornes pour le « cher peuple » je crois néanmoins que le peuple de la Louisiane peut lui-même diriger ses affaires. Laissons au peuple ou aux juris de police qui le représentent, le soin de pourvoir à la compensation des juges de Cours des Preuves et ils donneront un ample salaire à leurs serviteurs qu'ils ne voudront pas employer sans les rémunérer grassement. J'ai aussi suggéré l'idée de faire agir les greffiers de Cours des Preuves, comme recorders de paroisses; grâce à ce moyen, leurs appointements pourraient être réduits à la moitié ou au tiers de ce que reçoivent maintenant les greffiers des Cours de District.

Je crois que la principale objection aux juges de paroisse était qu'ils étaient payés par les droits qu'ils percevraient eux-mêmes et que très souvent ils étaient incapables de remplir les devoirs qui leur étaient assignés. Mais avec le temps, en suivant le progrès des idées, nous sommes arrivés au point où nous sommes, l'élection des juges par le peuple. Si ce système est correct, nous n'avons aucune raison de craindre que nos juges ne soient pas capables parce que nous n'avons aucune raison de douter que le peuple ne puisse choisir lui-même les meilleurs juges.

En examinant avec soin cette question nous nous convaincrons que lorsque nos Cours auront en même temps juridiction en matières civiles et criminelles, leur action ne pourra être ni juste, ni uniforme. Nous n'avons certainement pas le droit d'attendre que le même homme possède une connaissance égale de toutes ces différentes branches de la loi. On peut dire de l'un qu'il est excellent avocat pour les affaires commerciales, de l'autre qu'il est très heureux dans les affaires de successions, de l'autre qu'il brille dans les affaires civiles, mais pourquoi cela ? Parce qu'il est de l'intérêt d'un avocat de s'adonner plus particulièrement à l'étude de l'une des branches de la loi. Si nous créons la place de juge de Cour des Preuves, nous exciterons l'émulation de notre population des campagnes; chacun voudra s'appliquer à l'étude de la loi afin de pouvoir un jour être chargé de ces importantes fonctions.

Digitized by Google

M Wickliffe—Je n'ai pas l'intention d'occuper longtemps l'attention du Senat; je désire seulement dire quelques mots du calcul fait par le sénateur au sujet des dépenses relatives des différents systèmes. Il a dit que le système de Cours des Preuves serait le plus économique. Voyons s'il ne se trompe pas: Neuf Districts avec des juges à $3,000 feraient une somme de $27,000. Ajoutez à cela le salaire de 47 juges de Cours des Preuves à $1,000 et vous avez une somme beaucoup plus forte que ne requiert aucun des autres systèmes.

M. Hodge—J'aurais dû dire que dans le système que je propose, les juges de Cours des Preuves seront payes du trésor des paroisses.

M. Wickliffe—Il importe peu que le salaire des juges soit payé du trésor des paroisses ou du trésor de l'Etat; la dépense sera la même pour le peuple, de quelque part que les fonds soient tirés. Le sénateur se plaint que sous le système actuel il n'y a, par an, que deux sessions de Cours des Preuves. Y a-t-il rien qui soit plus facile pour nous que d'adopter une loi forçant les juges à tenir session six ou huit fois par an? Le sénateur cite l'Etat du Mississipi comme une preuve concluante que son système réussirait à merveille. Le cas n'est pas du tout le même. Le système si compliqué, si complexe de la Louisiane n'existe pas au Mississippi, et il est par conséquent plus facile de s'y procurer d'excellents juges à des salaires beaucoup moindres qu'ici. Pour moi, je n'ai encore rien vu qui indiquât que l'opinion publique demande une modification de notre système judiciaire actuel, ainsi que semblent le soutenir quelques sénateurs. Le désir du Sénat—et le Sénat exprime le vœu du peuple,—est l'économie. Prenons en considération ce désir, et nous voyons que le bill de la Chambre coûteterait $78,000, et que le système actuel ne coûte que $51,000, ce qui fait une différence de $27,000.

M. Short.—Lorsque cette question a été agitée pour la première fois, j'ai essayé de faire comprendre qu'avec un juge de Cour des Preuves dans chaque paroisse, quoique en apparence la dépense fut plus grande, elle serait en fait beaucoup moindre que sous le système actuel dans lequel les greffiers reçoivent une paie si énorme. Je suis encore en faveur du système des grands Districts. Toutes les nouvelles que je reçois de mes constituants des paroisses Madison et Carroll, me confirment dans mon opinion. Loin qu'il soit impossible d'y trouver des candidats pour les places de juges des Cours des Preuves, je puis affirmer que déjà trois candidats se sont présentés dans la paroisse de Carroll. Que coûtait l'ancien système de juges de paroisse? Au moins $160,000. Et l'énormité de la dépense n'était pas la seule objection. Lorsqu'un juge réunissait differentes fonctions et différents pouvoirs, lorsqu'il était à la tête du jury de police et que toutes les affaires de la paroisse étaient sous son contrôle, les abus étaient faciles et naturellement fréquents. Telle était la principale objection au système de juges de paroisse. Il était dispendieux, mal administré, et pourtant on n'a rien tenté auprès du Sénat pour faire abolir ce système. Le simple changement qui consiste à rendre électives les places de juges, au lieu de les laisser à la nomination du gouverneur, remédierait à presque tous les abus de ce système. Mon but est de faire établir une Cour des Preuves dans chaque paroisse, et de grands districts judiciaires pour les affaires générales

M. Todd—Je partage en grande partie l'opinion émise au sujet de l'inconvénient que présente le système actuel pour le réglement des affaires de successions. Je suis venu ici avec l'intention de voter en faveur du système qui crée des cours des preuves, mais lorsque j'ai réfléchi au surcroît de dépenses qu'il occasionnerait j'ai changé d'opinion. Je voterai en faveur du système actuel. Je crois que nous pouvons y faire tels changements et telles améliorations qui pourrait remédier aux défauts qu'il présente. Déjà nous avons fait une grande amélioration en autorisant les greffiers à lancer des ordres &c. en cas que le juge soit absent ou se trouve dans une autre paroisse. Je crains que cette clause de la constitution qu'approuve si fort le sénateur de Caddo, ne puise être que bien difficilement mise à exécution, cette clause par laquelle il est défendu aux juges de percevoir des droits. Je ne partage pas l'opinion émise par lui qu'il est de toute nécessité de n'attacher à ces places que des salaires fixes. N'était cela nous pourrions établir un système de cours des preuves beaucoup moins dispendieux et plus efficace qu'il ne nous est possible maintenant, parce que le juge de la cour des preuves pourrait être son propre greffier et de plus conservateur des hypothèques.

Le senateur dit que le salaire des juges peut être payé du tresor des paroisses. Cette proposition me paraît tout à fait objectionnable. Le département judiciaire est une des branches dont l'ensemble constitue le gouvernement de l'Etat et je ne voudrais pas le placer sous le contrôle des autorités de paroisses, ce qui aurait lieu si les juris de police avaient le contrôle du salaire des juges. Dans beaucoup de paroisses il arriverait qu'on ne pourrait trouver d'hommes capables pour remplir ces places ; d'autres paroisses sont écrasées de dettes et ne paieraient qu'un salaire insuffisant. Si le système de Cours des Preuves doit être établi, je voterai en faveur du plus grand nombre de districts qui ait été proposé afin de diminuer la dépense; et dans ce cas, on devrait passer une loi ordonnant que les juges tiennent des sessions de Cours quatre fois dans l'année.

M. Short.—La seule objection à cela est que déjà l'on a essayé de ces quatre sessions et qu'il a fallu y renoncer.

M Hodge répond en peude mots.

La motion de reconsidération est perdue et le bill est enfin adopté.

M. King fait la motion de prendre en considération le bill du judiciaire relatif à la ville.

M. King.—Je demande qu'il soit amendé de telle sorte que toutes les affaires de succession doivent être portées devant la Seconde Cour.

Il n'existe peut-être pas de question légale plus difficile à résoudre que celle-ci : Qu'est-ce qu'une affaire de succession? Sous l'ancien système de Cours des Preuves, les juridictions séparées des Cours donnaient lieu à de grands inconvénients. Il était souvent difficile aux meilleurs avôcats de décider si une affaire devait être portée devant une Cour des Preuves ou devant toute autre Cour. S'il lui arrivait de commettre une erreur, elle était fatale à sa cause. Cela donnait lieu à des délais, à une grande confusion dans l'administration de la justice. Je désire éviter cet écueil contre lequel se sont brisés tant de procès et qui a causé la perte de tant de justes réclamations. Je crois que mon amendement empêcherait ce mal.

L'amendement est adopté.

Après un débat de quelques instants, le bill est adopté.

MARDI, 22 mars 1836.

Après la lecture du journal, M. King se lève et dit: M. le président, en presentant le rapport du comité chargé de rendre les derniers devoirs à Isaac Johnson, je dois, pour répondre à l'attente générale, ajouter quelques observations sur la vie, le caractère et les services publics du défant.

Isaac Johnson naquit dans la paroisse d'Ouest-Féliciana, dans l'année 1805. Son père John H. Johnson était un de ces chefs de cette révolution qui renversa la domination espagnole dans cette région qui forme aujourd'hui ce que l'on appelle les paroisses de la Floride.

Son éducation, quoique limitée à ces éléments qui constituaient toute l'éducation classique et autre, reçue à cette epoque reculée dans la paroisse qu'il habitait, n'était nullement bornée. Son esprit était richement meublé des idées, des beautés des pères de la littérature.

Peu après sa majorité, il fut admis au barreau. Son succès dans sa profession fut instantané et n'a peut-être pas d'exemple dans l'histoire de la Louisiane. A l'époque de son élévation au siege de la Cour de District, qui eut lieu quelques annees après son admission au barreau, le régistre de la Cour comprenait deux cent vingt affaires. Il continua à présider la Cour de District et la Cour d'Appels en affaires criminelles, à l'exception d'un court intervalle, lorsqu'il fut nommé secretaire-d'Etat par le gouverneur Moreton, jusqu'à son élevation à la magistrature Suprême de l'Etat.

A l'expiration de ses fonctions comme gouverneur, il fut nommé avocat-général de l'Etat par le gouverneur Walker, position qu'il occupa jusqu'à la mise en vigueur de la Nouvelle-Constitution. A partir de cette époque jusqu'à sa mort il fut l'un des candidats les plus distingués à l'un des siéges de la Cour Suprême.

Digitized by Google

Comme juge, quoiqu'il ne fût pas surtout remarquable par la profondeur de ses connaissances légales, il sût plus peut-être que, n'importe quel autre juge, contenter le public par ses decisions. Doué d'une vive sensibilité, il savait tempérer la justice par la compassion.

Comme magistrat suprême, il donna de beaux exemples des qualités qui font le patriote et l'homme d'Etat. C'est à lui qu'echut la tâche difficile d'organiser le gouvernement d'Etat sous la Constitution de 1845. Il le fit avec une remarquable habileté et ajouta à sa réputation par les services patriotiques et efficaces qu'il rendit pendant la guerre du Mexique.

La plus grande partie de sa vie fut consacrée au service public et quoiqu'elle ait été interrompue à cette époque ou d'ordinaire on en est encore à gravir la pente escarpée de l'ambition, il avait déjà occupé un grand nombre de positions élevées. Sa popularité donne lieu de supposer qu'il eût été appelé à d'autres dignités plus elevées, si Dieu lui eût accordé la santé et de plus longues années.

Mais ce n'est pas seulement dans les services publics rendus par Isaac Johnson, quelqu'éminents qu'ils soient, qu'il faut chercher la source de l'attachement de ses concitoyens pour lui. Il faut la chercher dans les éléments naturels de son caractère, dans la sincérité de son patriotisme; dans la pureté et la bienveillance de son cœur et dans la ferveur de ses affections domestiques et sociales.

Comme homme public, ses actions n'avaient d'autres mobiles que sa patrie, son Dieu et la vérité.

Doué par la nature d'une sensibilité poétique, d'une tendre sympathie pour toutes les souffrances de l'humanité, il répandait ses dons avec une prodigalité qui devait soumettre sa vie entière à des embarras pécuniaires.

Ceux-là seuls qui l'ont connu intimement peuvent parler de la force et de la douceur de ses affections sociales. Leur cœur garde une place eternelle à sa mémoire.

Ami d'un grand nombre, il n'avait d'inimitié pour personne. Sa vie était la mise en pratique de cette belle vérité qu'errer est humain, pardonner divin.

Quand il était frappé, comme il l'était souvent, par des preuves d'ingratitude, (ce trait plus acéré que la dent du serpent,) la patience, la douceur avec laquelle il supportait et pardonnait, n'appartenait pas à la terre.

Si ses diffamateurs avaient pu lire dans son cœur, comme leur malveillance eût été réduite au silence, comme leur hostilité eût été désarmée!

Ayant reçu de la nature un extérieur des plus gracieux et des plus imposants, des manières chevaleresques, son corps était l'enveloppe qu'il fallait pour contenir ses nobles qualités.

« Un ensemble de formes et de traits où chaque dieu semblait avoir mis son empreinte pour montrer au monde que c'était un homme. »

Ce corps divin, ce cœur noble sont maintenant enfouis dans le sein de la Louisiane qu'il aimait si ardemment. Jamais cette terre ne recouvrira un cœur plus dévoué.

Cette langue dont chaque mot était une bénédiction, cette oreille qui n'était jamais sourde à la voix du malheur, cette main toujours ouverte, toujours pleine de charité, sont glacés pour toujours!

Son nom et le souvenir de ses vertus sont tout ce qui nous reste. Conservons longtemps ce nom, chérissons toujours ce souvenir.

Que Dieu donne à sa veuve et à sa famille affligée le courage nécessaire pour supporter cette triste calamité et qu'ils trouvent dans la sympathie de la nation, un soulagement à leur douleur.

M. Kenner.—Je demande la permission d'introduire, sans avis préalable, un bill qui, le Sénat le reconnaitra avec moi, est de quelqu'importance. L'on sait parfaitement que pendant les commencements de la session, la somme de $50,000 a été affectée au paiement des dépenses de l'assemblée générale. J'ai aujourd'hui à annoncer au Senat la triste nouvelle, que ces $50,000 ne sont plus. C'est avec un profond sentiment de regret que j'apprends au Sénat qu'il ne reste plus rien de cette somme. La nouvelle m'en a été communiquée hier par un membre de la chambre basse, qui semblait écrasé par ce coup. Il m'avait prié de présenter le bill hier, mais je n'ai pu le faire, faute de quorum. Il paraît que plusieurs membres, plusieurs officiers attendent leur per diem, ils sont en proie à une noire mélancolie; ils sont victimes de tristes hallucinations pendant lesquelles un spectre sous la forme d'un trésor vide apparaît à leurs yeux. J'ai preparé un bill, qui consacre à cet emploi, une somme additionnelle de $75,000, et je désire qu'il soit pris immédiatement en considération pour mettre un terme aux souffrances de mes collègues.

Le bill est pris en considération et adopté.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Bill des Améliorations Intérieures.

Le substitut présenté par M. Lacey au bill qui établit un Bureau des Améliorations Intérieures arrive devant le Sénat.

M. Nicholls.—Je fais la motion de renvoyer le bill à cause de l'absence du sénateur qui l'a présenté. De plus, je vois autour de moi le triste spectacle de sièges vides. Il n'y a qu'une simple majorité du Sénat. Si nous en venons aux voix, nous arriverons à un résultat directement opposé au vœu du peuple. La volonté de dix sénateurs pourrait imposer au Sénat un système fatal à ses intérêts et à sa prospérité. Quand aucun mal ne peut résulter d'un renvoi, quand par un court retard, nous pouvons arriver à une meilleure décision, nous devons au peuple, nous devons à nos collègues que nous accordions ce délai.

M. Wickliffe.—Je suis aussi disposé que qui que ce soit ici à remplir les devoirs que commande la politesse. Mais, cependant, je ne puis consentir au renvoi. Nous avons été déjà en session pendant près de deux mois, et nous sommes loin d'être au terme de nos importants travaux. Il était du devoir du sénateur qui a présenté le substitut d'être présent aujourd'hui, comme il l'était le jour où la motion du dépôt sur la table a été faite. Le parti democratique est en majorité et doit porter la responsabilité de tous les actes de la Législature. Le bill auquel on propose de substituer celui dont il s'agit actuellement a été devant le Sénat pendant deux ou trois semaines et il est temps que nous en disposions d'une façon ou d'une autre. J'avoue que je suis en faveur du bill de la chambre basse, et je ferai tout ce qui sera en mon pouvoir pour le faire triompher. Ce bill est impérieusement reclamé par les besoins de l'époque. J'espère, monsieur le président que le substitut ne sera pas renvoyé.

M Derbes.—Je ne vois aucune bonne raison qui milite en faveur du renvoi, attendu que j'ai en mes mains un billet du sénateur auquel il est fait allusion et qui m'annonce qu'une indisposition l'empêchera d'être ici de deux ou trois jours. Je pense aussi que nous devons statuer immédiatement sur cette question. Nous avons été ici deux mois et cependant nous n'avons rien fait relativement à cette question importante. Nous devrions agir aujourd'hui, comme le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey) ne sera ici ni aujourd'hui ni demain.

La motion de renvoi est retirée et le substitut mis à la discussion, puis déposé sur le bureau.

Le bill primitif est alors discuté section par section.

M. Hodge.—Je dirai les objections que j'ai contre l'adoption de la première section de ce bill. Quelque nécessaires que puissent être les autres sections, celle-ci est certainement inutile, puisque l'objet qu'elle se propose est pleinement accompli par la Constitution elle-même. Je ne voudrais pas que mon vote pût, directement ou indirectement, contrevenir à la Constitution de l'Etat, et je pense que nous en violerions non seulement l'esprit, mais la lettre, en faisant ce qu'a déjà fait la Constitution. Le peuple a voulu faire de la législation dans la Constitution elle-même, et a tracé la composition du bureau, d'un bureau semblable à celui que le bill propose.

La Constitution déclare que l'Etat sera divisé en certains districts et qu'un commissaire devra être élu par chacun de ces districts. Ces commissaires composeront le bureau des améliorations intérieures. Leurs fonctions sont précisément les mêmes que celles des commissaires que crée le bill et la nature du bureau doit être la même. Si le peuple, exprimant sa volonté par l'organe de la Constitution, a déjà pourvu à la formation du bureau, je demande aux sénateurs de me montrer la nécessité d'en établir un autre! Vous êtes vous décidés à abolir le bureau des travaux publics tel qu'il est établi par la Constitution. Nullement, car il n'y a que quelques jours vous avez décidé que vous ne le feriez pas, à moins que vous ne fussiez convaincus, par le rapport du comité des améliorations intérieures, que l'on pouvait présenter un plan plus praticable, plus satisfaisant. Le fait est que quelques membres doutèrent sérieusement que la Constitution nous eût donné le pouvoir d'abolir le bureau avant qu'il fût organisé. J'étais de ceux qui pensaient que nous avions ce droit. Je pensais que tous ces articles de la Constitution pouvaient être rappelés par le vote fixé dans la Constitution. Mais je ne pense pas que la Législature ait le pouvoir d'établir un autre bureau, avant d'avoir déoreté par la majorité requise que le bureau établi par la Constitution ne sera pas organisé. Je crois qu'il est de mon devoir de combattre la section, parce que les dispositions qu'elle contient ne cadrent pas avec la Constitution. Il peut, il est vrai, y avoir quelque différence dans la manière dont les districts sont formés. Ce bill établit trois districts. La Constitution dit qu'il y en aura quatre.

Digitized by Google

La seule différence est donc celle qui existe entre trois et quatre. Mais en dehors de cette différence, il y a une distinction fort importante. Le bill donne au Gouverneur le droit de nommer les commissaires. Aux termes de la Constitution, le peuple s'est expressément décidé en faveur de l'élection des commissaires par les électeurs des différents districts. Je suis forcé de penser que l'abandon du principe énoncé dans la Constitution est produit par le désir d'ajouter aux pouvoirs de l'Exécutif et d'arracher au peuple le droit de choisir ses propres officiers. Il y a quelques jours, lorsque la question de l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics fut mise à la discussion, j'écoutai avec beaucoup d'attention les arguments présentés par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King.) Mais, à mon avis, il n'a pas présenté une seule raison qui doit nous déterminer à abolir le bureau excepté celle-ci que le bureau serait composé d'un nombre pair, qu'il pourrait renfermer deux whigs et deux démocrates, et qu'ainsi l'harmonie qui doit exister dans le bureau pourrait être détruite. C'est cette raison qui lui fait préférer un nombre impair. Je considère que si un travail n'est pas d'une assez grande importance pour se recommander à l'approbation de trois des commissaires, il ne devrait pas être exécuté. Je ne pense pas que la besogne du bureau sera mieux faite par trois démocrates nommés par le Gouverneur que par deux whigs et deux démocrates élus par le peuple. Je répète que je n'ai entendu aucune bonne raison en faveur de l'abolition du bureau. Je n'abuserai pas davantage du temps du Sénat à propos de cette section. J'aurai à traiter des autres articles.

Je répète que je considère que la section est une violation flagrante de l'esprit et de la lettre de la constitution, et en conséquence je la combattrai.

M. King dit qu'il désire présenter en quelques mots ses objections contre ce bill.

Il est oppposé au système compliqué qu'il établit, pour la construction et la direction de nos améliorations intérieures.

Le bill établit un bureau de trois commissaires, autorisés à nommer trois ingénieurs, qui devront decider des travaux à faire et les exécuter. Dans cet état de choses, il ne voit pas l'utilité d'un bureau de commissaires, et il pense que l'on pourra s'en passer.

Il est opposé à ce que les travaux d'améliorations intérieures soient confiés à trois personnes. Autant vaudrait trois généraux à la tête d'une armée ou trois économes sur la même habitation. Il doit y avoir unité de volonté, unité d'action, dans notre système d'améliorations intérieures. Les forces ne doivent pas être divisées. Cette unité est nécessaire pour assurer l'harmonie et l'homogénéité d'action dans l'exécution de ces travaux.

Ce bill propose seulement d'établir l'une des branches du système. Il pourvoit à la construction des levées et au desséchement, n'établissant rien quant aux autres branches. Il ne désire pas voir une double organisation qui serait dispendieuse et inutile.

Le bill, dans la forme qu'il présente actuellement, est une violation flagrante de la Constitution. On peut cependant faire justice de cette objection à l'aide d'un amendement qui ne donnerait au bureau qu'une existence temporaire. Le bureau devrait aussi être remplacé par celui qui est établi par la Constitution, aussitôt que ce bureau serait organisé. Mais un amendement à cet effet est indispensable.

Il avoue qu'il ne goute nullement ce bill. Il ne pense pas que ce soit le meilleur plan auquel on puisse s'arrêter pour l'exécution des travaux publics. S'il donnait au bill son appui, ce ne serait qu'après des modifications considérables, et encore ne serait-ce que parce qu'il penserait que c'est le seul bill qui pût passer à cette session.

Ses vues quant à la manière dont les fonds provenant des terres marécageuses doivent être employés dans la construction des levées et les travaux de desséchement ont déjà été présentées au Sénat. Il pense que l'Etat pourrait réaliser deux millions de piastres au moyen d'un emprunt garanti par les terres marécageuses, et que les levées devraient être construites immédiatement, afin de mettre l'Etat à l'abri de l'inondation. Les terres d'alluvion devraient être divisées en districts, selon leur topographie. Les levées après avoir été achevées par l'Etat, devraient être remises à la garde des districts. Il faudrait adopter un système de lois qui fit une obligation aux Districts à partir de ce moment de tenir toujours ces levées en bon état.

Mais malheureusement il n'a aucun espoir de voir ses vues se réaliser à cette session.

M. Short fait la motion de rétablir les mots «et desséchement» dans le bill.

M. Kenner.—Je suis convaincu que le Sénat est décidé à rétablir cette disposition dans le bill, néanmoins je persiste à penser que c'est une grave erreur. J'ai fait tout ce que je pouvais pour empêcher le Sénat d'y tomber, et ma responsabilité est à l'abri. La responsabilité de la mesure en reviendra à ceux qui veulent à toute force maintenir cette disposition dans le bill. Sans revenir sur la discussion de cette question, je dirai que personne n'a répondu aux arguments que j'ai présentés relativement à l'effrayante dépense que ce système imposerait à l'Etat, personne n'a contredit ce fait qu'il serait impossible à l'Etat d'accomplir ce travail. On peut se livrer à de magnifiques descriptions de cette entreprise gigantesque, on peut bâtir des châteaux en Espagne, mais on ne peut répondre à ces faits. Je ne pense donc pas qu'il soit nécessaire de revenir sur les arguments que j'ai présentés. Je relèverai cependant une observation qui a été faite. On prétend que la loi déclare que les terres marécageuses nous ont été données pour que nous établissions un système de levées et de désséchement. Je demande si lorsqu'une donation est faite sous une condition impossible, le donateur serait bien venu à tenter de révoquer la donation, parce que le donataire n'exécuterait pas la condition. Assurément non. Quand nous aurons construit nos levées, nous aurons fait tout ce que la loi a en vue, et nous ne sommes pas obligés de nous conformer à une condition qui serait désastreuse pour l'Etat. Maintenant je puis dire en toute sincérité que je ne suis pas opposé à ce bill, bien que quelques sénateurs le croient et aient prêté l'oreille aux propos qui sont débités au dehors par des personnes qui n'oseraient avancer le fait ouvertement. Au contraire je m'intéresse vivement à ce bill, mais si ces messieurs mettent les assertions de certaines personnes au dessus des miennes, je n'ai rien de plus à dire.

Dans le comité, j'ai fait la motion d'effacer les mots « et desséchement » et cette motion a été unanimement adoptée.

M. Short.—Je n'ai jamais voté pour cette motion.

M. Kenner.—Alors je dois admettre que je me suis trompé. Cependant je suis forcé d'ajouter que le sénateur ne m'a jamais fait part de sa désapprobation : Bien que je ne puisse dire que le sénateur fût en faveur de la motion, je déclare de la manière la plus explicite qu'il n'y a fait aucune objection sur le moment, qu'il n'a pas discuté la question avec nous, qu'il n'a fait aucune opposition lorsque la question a été mise aux voix.

M. Short.—La question n'a pas été mise aux voix.

M. Kenner.— Alors j'ai oublié tout ce qui s'est passé.

M. Rivers dit comment les choses se sont passées au sein du comité, et déclare qu'il votera maintenant pour effacer le mot « desséchement ».

M. Palfrey —Je voterai contre cette section et contre les bils, jusqu'à ce qu'il en soit présenté un qui me paraisse constitutionnel. Je ne pense pas que ce bill puisse être adopté avant que nous ayons aboli le bureau des travaux publics.

La section qui délimité les districts est alors prise en considération.

M. King.—Je pense qu'il ne convient pas de couper en deux une paroisse. En examinant la carte, je vois que la ligne 31, passe exactement par le milieu de la paroisse des Rapides.

Digitized by Google

M. Rivers.—C'est simplement une ligne imaginaire et il n'en peut résulter aucun inconvénient pour les habitans des Rapides. Le district supérieur est déjà trop étendu et nous ne pouvons pas y ajouter.

M. Hodge.—Faisons quatre districts nous rentrerons alors dans l'esprit et la lettre de la Constitution. Comme les districts se trouvent constitués par le bill, dans un district il se trouve beaucoup de terres marécageuses, dans un autre, fort peu. Les districts devraient être formés selon la quantité qu'ils doivent renfermer respectivement. Je pense qu'il devrait y avoir deux districts au nord de la Rivière-Rouge, l'un portant le nom de district de la Rivière-Rouge et l'autre le District-Mississipi

Sur motion de M. Griffin, les paroisses des Rapides et des Avoyelles sont placées dans le 3e district.

La 3e section donnant au gouverneur le droit de nommer les commissaires, est prise en considération.

M. Todd fait la motion de l'amender, en mettant ces places à l'élection du peuple.

M. Wickliffe.—Je propose de déposer l'amendement sur le bureau. Il me semble que les whigs n'ont plus les mêmes principes quand ils sont au pouvoir et quand ils le quittent.

Le nom de M. Rivers ayant été appelé, il dit :

Comme le bureau n'aura qu'une existence temporaire, et comme je crois que le gouverneur Hebert est parfaitement capable de faire de bonnes nominations, je voterai en faveur du dépôt sur le bureau.

L'amendement est déposé sur le bureau.

M. King présente un amendement par lequel les commissaires resteraient en place pendant deux ans, à moins qu'ils ne fussent remplacés, et les fonctions du bureau cesseraient aussitôt que le bureau désigné par la Constitution serait organisée.

M. Kenner.—Cela est établi par la section 25 du bill.

M. King —Cette section ne détruit pas mon objection. Si nous pouvons prolonger de six mois l'existence du bureau, nous pouvons la prolonger de six ans, la rendre indéfinie.

M. Short.—L'Etat de la Louisiane n'a jamais mis la construction des levées au rang des travaux publics.

M. Hodge.—Je ferai connaître mes objections à l'amendement. Si je comprends bien, le but de l'amendement est celui-ci : que le bureau sera remplacé par le bureau qui doit être organisé aux termes de la Constitution. Il est évidemment du devoir de cette Législature, si elle a le moindre respect pour la Constitution, de pourvoir à l'élection et au salaire des commissaires, ainsi que l'ordonne l'article 131. Si nous avons l'intention de pourvoir à l'organisation du bureau, comme il y a été pourvu par la Constitution, combien de temps devra durer le bureau que propose d'établir le bill ? Existera-t-il six mois? Nullement A moins que l'article de la Constitution ne doive être une lettre morte, votre bureau ne peut continuer d'exister pendant six mois. Je pense que nous ne pouvons, que nous ne devons pas créer une chose que nous savons ne pouvoir exister si la Législature fait son devoir. L'amendement, je suppose, est presenté pour dorer la pilule à ceux qui ont des objections constitutionnelles

M. King —Le sénateur trouve-t-il mauvais qu'on cherche à faire que le bill soit du goût du Sénat.

M. Hodge.—Je suis opposé au tout ensemble. Je désire faire voir que je ne puis me laisser égarer par un pareil amendement.

M. Kenner propose un amendement qui consiste à faire nommer un seul ingénieur au lieu de trois. Le système actuel est conduit par un seul ingénieur qui a à remplir des devoirs aussi difficiles que ceux qui sont imposés par ce bill.

On propose de payer aux ingénieurs $3,500 chacun, ce qui ferait un total de $10,500 par an, et aussi $1,500 aux quatre commissaires.

M. King —Je seconde la motion de ne nommer qu'un seul ingénieur.

M Short —Je suis opposé à la motion, car elle rendrait le bill tout-à-fait insuffisant. Elle lui ôterait tout pouvoir pour le bien et lui en donnerait pour le mal. Je m'étonne que ce système d'un seul ingenieur, si vivement combattu déjà par quelques sénateurs, soit maintenant proposé de nouveau. J'ai écouté avec attention les argumens avancés par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King), je lui ai entendu dire que personne ne songerait jamais à placer trois généraux à la tête d'une armée, où à confier à trois économes la direction d'une habitation. Quoique je ne sois pas un planteur, je n'en crois pas moins avoir de justes notions à ce sujet. Le sénateur lui-même ne sait-il pas que, lorsqu'un planteur a trois habitations, il doit avoir trois économes ? Par ce moyen il réalisera certainement plus de bénéfice du capital investi par lui, que s'il n'employait qu'un seul économe. Je le demande, comment un ingenieur pourrait-il se rendre dans les differentes parties de l'Etat où sa présence serait nécessaire ? Comment pourrait-il être un jour sur la Rivière Rouge, et le lendemain à la Balise ? Si ce n'était l'air de conviction avec lequel le sénateur a parlé, je croirais qu'il a voulu plaisanter en présentant son amendement. Son seul effet serait de détruire tout le système proposé dans le bill. Je le demande encore, comment un ingénieur pourrait-il être à la fois à la ligne des Arkansas et sur le littoral du golfe ? Comment pourrait-il passer des contrats et remplir enfin les mille devoirs de sa place ? Si un seul ingénieur est nommé, le bill devient sans portée. Je n'hésite pas à prendre la responsabilité d'avoir fait encourir à l'Etat cette dépense en plus, lorsque je songe aux circonstances qui peuvent se présenter bientôt, quand je songe aux paroisses qui sont exposées à être submergées d'un jour à l'autre, à l'inondation qui est imminente, et que je considère les effets bienfaisants que j'ai vus résulter du système proposé aujourd'hui, et que moi-même j'ai déjà vu en vigueur. Oui, lorsque je prends en considération toutes ces choses, je ne suis pas disposé à me laisser épouvanter par le mot de dépenses ! dépenses ! ! Le dixième seulement de la valeur des propriétés qui sont minées tous les ans suffirait à payer tous les frais du nouveau système.

M. King.—Le sénateur de Madison [M. Short] se méprend entièrement sur le motif qui me fait demander un seul ingénieur. Je ne désire pas en détruire l'efficacité; au contraire, je désire ajouter à celle qu'il a deja. Quoique je n'approuve pas le bill, je désire le rendre aussi parfait que possible. Si notre intention est de construire des levées depuis la ligne des Arkansas jusqu'à la Balise, il peut être nécessaire de nommer trois ingénieurs : mais allons-nous entreprendre un tel projet avec le peu d'argent dont nous pouvons disposer ? Ce que nous avons en mains ne durerait pas plus de deux ou trois semaines et l'ingénieur ne serait pas surchargé de travail. Le bill pourvoit à la nomination d'inspecteurs qui feront la partie matérielle de l'ouvrage. L'ingénieur n'aura presque rien à faire si ce n'est de passer les contrats. Telles sont mes vues ; je ne désire pas détruire le bill et j'espère qu'on de m'imputera pas semblable intention.

M Kenner.—Lorsque je croirai necessaire de présenter un amendement à ce bill je le ferai. Le sénateur croit que je m'efforce de detruire le bill, mais je lui répète qu'il se trompe beaucoup. Je fais maintenant ce que devrait faire le sénateur lui-même, je présente un amendement au bill en tout conforme à l'opinion du comité.

M. Short.—Je dis encore que le sénateur se trompe. Le comité ne s'est arrêté à aucun bill. S'il veut encore avancer comme argument que je ne me suis pas opposé à la motion qu'il a faite devant le comité, qu'il le fasse, je ne puis l'empêcher.

M. Kenner.—Non ! je n'insisterai pas sur cet argument après le déni du sénateur et je ne m'en serais jamais servi s'il ne m'avait imputé un motif que je n'ai pas Mais j'en appelle au senateur de Concordia (M. Rivers) le sénateur n'a pas dit un seul mot en opposition lorsque, devant le comité, j'ai fait la motion d'effacer le mot « desséchement »

M. Short.—Que le sénateur se rappelle que le vote n'a pas été pris sur sa proposition. Je crois n'avoir pas manqué aux règles parlementaires lorsque j'ai nié les allégations du senateur et que j'ai voulu retablir les faits. Autant que je le puis, je n'emploie jamais envers les autres que le langage que je désire qu'ils tiennent en s'adressant à moi.

M. Rivers répète qu'il votera en faveur d'amendements sans s'occuper de ce qu'à fait le comité.

M. Kenner.—La seule raison pour laquelle j'ai fait cette remarque est celle-ci : que n'ayant pas été accusé de vouloir détruire le bill lorsqu'il était devant le comité, je ne voudrais pas l'être ici en plein Sénat. Je crois, monsieur, qu'une économie de $6,000 est assez importante pour que nous y songions. Je crois qu'un ingénieur suffit pour tout l'ouvrage qu'il y aura à faire. Quelle est sa besogne? Il n'a que des contrats à passer et n'a nullement besoin d'être sur les lieux. Il ne sera pas occupé plus de trois mois dans l'année. Pourquoi donc payer $9,000 lorsque $3,000 sont suffisantes?

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe.—Il sera moralement impossible à un seul ingénieur de faire même le tiers de l'ouvrage. Je crois qu'il y aurait même économie à en employer trois; je fais donc la motion de déposer sur le bureau la motion d'effacer et de substituer.

M. Rivers.—Le comité s'est prononcé en faveur de la motion d'effacer par ce qu'il a cru qu'un seul ingénieur serait suffisant. Mais il me semble, d'après la nature des devoirs à remplir, et l'ingénieur devant se rendre d'un point à un autre partout où il y aura danger de crevasse; je crois, dis-je que plus d'un seront nécessaires. Ne fussent-ils occupés que trois mois dans l'année, je crois qu'il est necessaire de nommer trois ingénieurs.

M. Hodge. — Après examen je suis arrivé à la conclusion que l'ouvrage de l'ingénieur ne sera pas assez important pour meriter un salaire de $3,500, et que les commissaires ne seront pas occupés plus du dixième du temps. Je fais donc la motion d'amender le bill de manière à ce qu'il soit exigé que les commissaires soient de bons ingénieurs. Par ce moyen nous répondrons à toutes les objections.

M. Wickliffe. — Nous ne pourrions peut-être pas trouver un homme capable dans chaque district. Les bons ingénieurs, les ingénieurs pratiques sont très rares à la Louisiane.

M. Hodge. — S'il en est ainsi je ne vois pas pourquoi l'objection ne s'appliquerait pas aussi bien à l'autre cas.

M. Wickliffe. — Le bill dit que chaque commissaire doit résider dans le district pour lequel il est nommé.

M. Hodge. — La Constitution contient un article semblable; mais l'interprétation qu'on lui a donnée est celle-ci. Les commissaires résideront dans leurs districts respectifs, mais après leur élection. Je présume que la même interprétation doit être donnée à cette section du bill. Je ne vois pas la nécessité d'une telle foule d'officiers. Il n'est pas du tout nécessaire de nommer des commissaires lorsque le travail peut tout aussi bien être fait par les ingénieurs. Il y a là une économie de $6,000.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe la motion de déposer sur le bureau est adoptée.

Le substitut de M. Hodge est donc déposé sur le bureau.

M. Lacoste fait la motion d'effacer $3,000 et d'y substituer $2,500 comme salaire des ingénieurs.

M. Rivers fait la motion d'insérer $2,000.

M. Short. — $2,000 ne sont pas suffisantes. Lorsque la question judiciaire est soulevée, des sénateurs se lèvent et disent que le caractère et la position des juges doit être rendue respectable et que pour cela il faut leur attribuer des salaires élevés! Et lorsque nous proposons une mesure qui doit rendre habitable toutes les parties du pays, lorsque nous voulons dessécher et rendre cultivables les terres sur lesquelles s'établira la population sur laquelle les juges exerceront leur juridiction, nous n'entendons plus avancer cet argument, il n'en est plus question. Pourquoi voulez-vous tellement réduire les salaires que le bill ne puisse plus avoir d'effet? Lorsqu'un plan convenable nous est soumis pourquoi ne pas l'essayer?

M. Derbès. — J'ai présenté quelques remarques en opposition à l'amendement.

M. Kenner—Lorsque le sujet était en considération devant le comité, j'ai fait la motion de donner $3,500 par an à l'ingénieur, pensant qu'il n'y en aurait qu'un seul dont le travail serait énorme et qui aurait à voyager dans les différentes parties de l'Etat.

Mais puisque le Sénat a decidé, dans sa sagesse, qu'il y aurait trois ingénieurs et que je crois qu'ils ne seront pas occupés plus de douze semaines dans l'année, je voterai pour la plus faible somme. Considérez quels sont les salaires des différents officiers de l'Etat: Le gouverneur reçoit $4,000 par an, le secrétaire d'Etat qui est tenu de se trouver ici pendant toute l'année et dont les devoirs sont très difficiles, reçoit $1,500, le trésorier $2,500, l'adjudant-général $500. Sous le prétexte qu'il est indispensable d'établir un système on crée une longue liste de gros emplois auxquels l'Exécutif devra nommer. L'ingénieur actuel de l'Etat qui a trois fois plus à faire que les ingénieurs nommés par ce bill, qui est tenu de se rendre tour à tour de la limite des Arkansas au littoral du golfe, qui a la surintendance de tous les travaux de l'Etat, ne reçoit que $2,000 par an! Pourquoi cela? Si ces énormes salaires devaient être payés au moyen de taxes, on réfléchirait avant de mettre ainsi en danger sa popularité en les proposant. Mais comme ils doivent être prises du fonds des terres marécageuses, on va de l'avant sans s'inquiéter de rien et comme des corneilles qui abattent des voix. Il est heureux qu'une loi défende qu'aucun membre de la Législature ne pourra occuper un autre emploi, car nous aurions une foule de candidats de ce corps.

M. Short.—Cet intéressant ingénieur dont parle le sénateur n'a jamais été aperçu dans ma paroisse.

M. Wickliffe—Si je ne me trompe, le sénateur a voté l'année dernière contre la réduction des salaires.

M. Kenner—Je vais ramener le sénateur à la vérité; j'ai voté contre la réduction du salaire du surintendant de l'éducation publique, parce que je pensais que les devoirs de la place méritaient un salaire plus élevé. J'ai voté contre la réduction immédiate des salaires des autres officiers, simplement parce que je pensais que la mesure était inconstitutionnelle, aussi longtemps que les places étaient occupées par les mêmes personnes. Telles ont été mes raisons, et j'espère quelle Sénat les trouvera bonnes. S'il en était autrement, je serais forcé de reconnaître que j'ai beaucoup moins de bon sens que je ne pensais.

M. Wickliffe—Je n'ai pas l'intention de blâmer le sénateur pour les votes qu'il a donnés; mais il confirme lui-même l'assertion que j'ai faite, qu'il avait voté contre une réduction immediate des salaires. Je sais, M. le président, que le trésorier recevait l'année dernière $8000.

L'amendement accordant $2,000 est adopté.

La section accordant à l'ingénieur le pouvoir de déterminer le lieu ou doivent être construites les levées, est prise ensuite.

M. Kenner.—Je suis opposé à cette section du bill, et je vais essayer de faire comprendre les raisons qui m'y portent. Lorsque le syndic des levées découvre qu'une levée est sur le point de s'abîmer et qu'il veut la déplacer, il indique l'endroit où une nouvelle doit être construite. Si le planteur fait objection, il doit convoquer deux voisins, et les trois réunis décident. La seul restriction est qu'il ne doit pas placer la levée derrière une maison ou une bâtisse quelconque. Si l'intérêt public ou celui des voisins l'exige, l'ouvrage doit être fait. Je suis opposé à ce que le pouvoir soit laissé à un seul homme. C'est un pouvoir très important et ne doit pas être enlevé à la legère des mains auxquelles il est confié maintenant. Il nous faut pour protéger nos intérêts l'opinion de nos voisins. J'en appelle au sénateur de St-Bernard [M. Lacoste] où la population est habituée à se voir mouiller les pieds par le «Vieux Fleuve», s'il aimerait à la voir dépouiller de cette protection. Nous ne voulons pas être mis à la merci d'un seul homme et ces questions doivent être décidées par nos voisins. Il n'y a à cela aucun dangers, aucun inconvénient et nous conservons ainsi des droits qui nous appartiennent.

Un amendement est adopté accordant à l'ingénieur et à trois propriétaires du voisinage le pouvoir de déterminer l'emplacement et la dimension des levées.

M. Short.—Je pense que le pouvoir donné aux citoyens doit être limité à la détermination de l'emplacement des levées, et que l'ingénieur est le seul juge compétent de la forme et des dimensions à leur donner.

M. Kenner.—Supposes que l'ingénieur soit dans une disposition d'irritation ou de mauvais vouloir contre l'habitant, et lui ordonne de construire une levée de cinquante pieds de hauteur et de cent pieds de base, que pourrait faire ce dernier? Construire une pareille levée serait suffisante pour ruiner un homme.

M. Wickliffe.—Personne ne la construirait.

M. Kenner.—D'après ce bill, quelle ressource aurait-il pour s'en dispenser?

M. Wickliffe.—Le gouverneur démettrait l'ingénieur de ses fonctions.

Digitized by Google

M. Kenner —J'aime mieux protéger les droits du citoyen que de confier à qui que ce soit cettre protection, fût-ce même le gouverneur.

M. Wickliffe. — Mais, après tout, qu'importe au citoyen la dimension de sa levée lorsque l'Etat en paie les frais.

M Kenner. — Se propose-t-on donc de faire payer par l'Etat les frais de construction de ces levées ?

M. Wickliffe. — Certainement, du fonds des terres marécageuses.

M. Kenner. — Un nouveau jour m'éclaire ; mais alors je dois protéger le fonds des terres marecageuses tout autant que les droits de nos citoyens.

M. Short. — Je suis en faveur du pouvoir donné aux ingenieurs de fixer les dimensions des levées, mais je demande que trois habitants déterminent le lieu de la construction. La force d'une levée dépend en grande partie de son mode de construction. On a reconnu qu'on peut construire des levees plus fortes que celles qui ont été construites sous la loi de 1829. Avec les trois quarts de la quantité de terre employée d'après cette loi, on peut bâtir une levée plus forte. Pourquoi donc voudrait-on revenir au vieux système ?

M Wickliffe fait la motion de déposer les amendements sur le bureau.

M. Kenner.—Je suis fâché de voir le sénateur s'élever contre ce que nous considérons être de la plus haute importance. Ce n'est point une question puérile, elle est au contraire d'un grave intérêt. Le sénateur pense probablement que c'est un sujet peu digne de votre consideration, parce qu'il réside dans un district où la terre est haute et où les inondations ne troublent point son repos ni sa sécurité. Je vais vous dire ce que j'en pense. Je demanderai d'abord si nous qui vivons derrière ces levées, qui sommes intéressés à leur conservation, qui serions anéantis par leur destruction, si, dis-je, nous n'en sommes pas les gardiens naturels. Sera-ce donc un homme qui vient d'autre part, qui n'a d'intérêt ni dans la construction, ni dans la conservation de nos levées, est-ce donc, je le demande, cet homme qui en sera chargé ?

Je desire, M. le président, effacer tout ce qui, dans cette section, est en conflit avec nos lois locales. Je le demande, quoique j'ose à peine le faire par crainte d'être accusé du desir de tuer le bill. Je ne puis retourner au milieu de mes constituants dont trois cent ont été, l'année dernière chassés de leurs demeures par l'effet d'une crevasse, je ne puis, dis-je, retourner et leur dire que j'ai voté pour cette section. Quand ils me demanderont qui est chargé de prendre soin de leurs levées, puis-je donc leur repondre que c'est un homme qui a sa residence loin de là, et qui n'a aucun interêt à leur salut ? Quand ils me demanderont à qui la surveillance en est confiée je devrai leur repondre : Une officier du gouvernement ? Quand ils me demanderont où ils peuvent le rencontrer, je devrai répondre à Bâton-Rouge ou à la Nouvelle-Orléans ?

Pourrai-je donc leur donner l'assurance qu'ils n'auront aucun danger à redouter ? Seraient-ils justifiables en vivant en sécurité ? Non, monsieur le président, je ne puis pas retourner dire à mes constituants que le système qu'on nous propose assure leur salut

M. Short—Je ne pense pas que le senateur ait tracé un tableau de fantaisie en nous représentant ses voisins ruinés et sans asyle, s'adressant à la charité du monde, aux heures de leurs besoins. J'ai été témoin de quelque chose de semblable dans la section de l'Etat où je réside ; mais je soutiens que je ne fais point appel à mon imagination quand je parle du bon resultat politique qui sera la suite de l'adoption de ce système. J'ai vu en operation dans trois paroisses et je ne le juge pas en vertu de vues théoriques mais, mon comme suite d'experiences actuelles.

MERCREDI, 9 mars 1853.

Le substitut de la Chambre au bill du Sénat étendant à 12 mois l'epoque du paiement par les premiers acquéreurs est appelé.

M. Short—Attendu que la position prise par moi, ainsi que par le Sénat sur cette question semble avoir été mal comprise par la Chambre basse, je désire donner quelques explications. Le bill que je présentai il y a quelque temps ne touchait en rien aux droits de préemption acquis sous l'acte de 1852. J'allais même plus loin. Le bill pour fermer le bureau des terres qui a été adopté par ce corps, semble avoir été fort mal interprété à la Chambre. Là il a été considéré comme n'ayant en vue que l'interêt des spéculateurs. Ici nous l'avions jugé à un tout autre point de vue, et en adoptant le bill le Senat se proposait un tout autre but; celui d'empêcher que les spéculateurs ne s'emparassent des meilleures terres, ne les accaparassent avant que nous n'adoptassions un système général de levées, ce qui aurait privé l'Etat du bénéfice de ces terres marecageuses. Le plan que se proposait le comité était de graduer les prix et de n'offrir en vente chaque année qu'autant de ces terres qu'il serait nécessaire pour faire les frais du système des levees pendant cette année. Nous pensions qu'en laissant prendre ces terres par les spéculateurs nous ne pourrions pas retirer autant du fonds des terres marécageuses que nous devrions le faire. Lorsqu'une levée est construite il en resulte nécessairement que les terres qu'elle abrite acquièrent plus de valeur, et les spéculateurs, avec cette acuite de perception qui les distingue et qui leur fait decouvrir la plus petite chance qui se presente, iraient retenir ces terres et recueilleraient ainsi à leur profit, et au grand détriment de l'Etat, le fruit du travail de ce dernier. L'objet du bill du Sénat était de prévenir cela en empêchant la vente des terres publiques jusqu'à ce qu'elles fussent classées de telle sorte qu'on en put retirer le meilleur prix possible.

J'étais opposé au bill proposé par le sénateur de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, et cela pour deux raisons. En premier lieu il proposait d'accorder aux préempteurs des deux paroisses seulements que représentait le sénateur, une extension de temps, pour le paiement, lorsque tous les autres préemteurs de l'Etat avaient un droit égal à obtenir ce privilége. Depuis l'établissement de notre gouvernement jusqu'aujourd'hui, la preemption a servi à d'ambitieux politiques pour leurs menées électorales, et je ne suis pas du tout disposé à tolérer plus longtemps cet abus. Je suis opposé à ce qu'on applique le fonds des terres marécageuses à aucun autre objet que celui pour lequel il a été concedé à l'Etat, c'est-à-dire au dessèchement des terres et à la construction des levées. Je voudrais qu'on offrit tous les encouragements possibles aux planteurs industrieux qui amélioreut les terres et les rendont cultivables ; mais je ne consentirai pasà ce que les fonds des terres marécageuses soit appliqués à un but politique.

M. King.—Les termes du bill de la chambre sont vagues et peu explicites. Le sénateur des Avoyelles désire savoir si sans ce bill il peut être fait des entrées pour une grande étendue de terres. Mon opinion est que les entrées peuvent être faites jusqu'à concurrence de 320 acres et dans différentes sections du pays. Une autre objection au bill est qu'il laisse-là les 320 acres. A moins que la personne ne vienne et ne designe particulièrement les terres qu'elle veut retenir, il n'a qu'une sorte de droit indefini, flottant, si je puis dire. C'est là accorder aux premiers occupants un privilége extraordinaire. Ils peuvent aller de l'une à l'autre des terres publiques, couper du bois, élever un petit chantier et acquerir par là le droit de choisir 320 acres de terre de prix. Ce privilége est beaucoup trop large et il me semble que, s'il est accordé, toutes les terres marécageuses de l'Etat seront retenues. Je fais la motion que le bill soit référé au comité des Terres et Levées.

M. Wickliffe s'y oppose. La Législature, dit-il, a refusé de fermer le bureau des terres et est evidemment disposé à donner tous les avantages aux premiers occupants.

M. Short.—Il n'y a pas lieu à référer le bill. Il est des plus simples et surtout des plus clairs.

M. Griffin.—Je voudrais que le bill fut référé, car il ne prevoit pas le cas où des entrées contraires seraient faites. Je désire voir passer le bill, mais avant j'aimerais qu'on suppléât à cette omission.

M. Wickliffe.—L'acte de 1852 laisse la division de ces sortes de cas au register du bureau des terres, ce qui me semble injuste, car il n'y a aucun droit d'appel.

M. Hodge fait la remarque que le seul changement fait par la Chambre a été d'étendre l'époque des demandes de terres et du paiement. Il croit que le désir du Sénat est de ne pas étendre l'époque pour les demandes, mais seulement pour les paiements, lorsque les demandes ont été faites sous l'acte de 1852. Je fais la motion de déposer le bill sur le bureau.

M. Rivers.—Ce bill n'étend l'époque du paiement que pour ceux qui, de bonne foi, se sont fait inscrire pour des terres comme occupants et non comme spéculateurs. Pour plusieurs, le terme expire ce mois-ci et beaucoup de personnes ignorent la loi qui ne leur accorde qu'un an, à partir du 17 de mars de l'année dernière. A moins que le terme ne soit prorogé, les spéculateurs les entoureront et obtiendront d'elles de leur céder leurs terres. J'espère que le bill passera.

Digitized by Google

M. Hodge.—Je désire exposer mes vues sur cette question. Le bill de l'année dernière accorde douze mois pour le paiement à tous ceux qui se sont fait inscrire pour des terres avant le 17 mars 1852. Une extension de douze mois de plus fut encore demandée et accordée ; mais si un nouveau terme est encore accordé, si l'époque des demandes est encore prolongée, cela nuirait au fonds des terres marécageuses et à l'établissement de tout système général que nous pourrions adopter. Je ne crois pas que l'Etat soit tenu d'accorder un crédit illimité, d'ajourner à l'infini le terme des paiements. Si nous accordons encore douze mois, il nous sera absolument impossible d'adopter aucun système général.

A la lecture de ce bill, on s'apercevera que non-seulement il étend le terme de douze mois de plus, mais aussi qu'il introduit une nouvelle classe d'occupants. L'acte de 1852 accorde un privilége à tous ceux qui se sont établis avant l'adoption de cet acte. Je crois que le Sénat a refusé toute prolongation, quoique nous soyons disposés à accorder une extension de crédit de douze mois à ceux sur qui portait l'acte de 1852. Comme nous avons envoyé un bill de cette sorte à la Chambre, nous devons y insister, et laisser aux nouveaux occupants de s'arranger comme ils l'entendent. Il ne serait pas juste envers l'Etat d'accorder une extension de temps pour les demandes de terre. Je voterai contre.

M. Rivers.—Le représentant peut arriver à ses fins en faisant disparaître les parties auxquelles il trouve à redire.

M. Hodge.—Le bill se trouverait alors dans l'état où il était lorsqu'il est venu du Sénat. Il est parfaitement clair que l'intention de ce bill était d'accorder une extension de temps aux personnes établies avant l'acte de 1852.

Le bill est référé au comité des terres levées.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Le bill qui rend les decisions des juges de paix finales dans les affaires au dessous d'un certain montant est appelé.

M. Hodge.—Je fais la motion de rejeter le bill et je donnerai mes raisons à l'appui.— Dans la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, j'ai entendu des attaques formulées contre ces magistrats par des personnes qui les accusent d'actes malhonnêtes. On dit que si vous rendez leurs décisions finales, ils pourraient s'entendre avec les demandeurs pour donner jugement en leur faveur D'autres disent que les juges deviendraient directement intéressés dans les procès qui seront portés devant eux, qu'ils s'entenderaient même avec les hommes de bateaux à vapeur, et qu'il serait presque impossible pour un propriétaire de batenu d'obtenir justice dans l'une de ces cours, parce que s'il donne jugement contre le demandeur il court risque de ne pas toucher ses frais.

Je ne sais jusqu'à quel point ces accusations sont fondées, mais la pureté des lois veut être garantie de manière à prévenir même la possibilité du soupçon. Il y a autant d'importance à ce qu'une affaire de peu de valeur soit bien décidée qu'il y en a pour une affaire d'où dépendent des milliers de piastres. Pourquoi donc ne pas donner le droit d'appel aux parties qui sont traînées dans ces cours ? Dans les campagnes, les juges des Cours de District préviennent les appels non fondés au moyen de dommages qu'ils prononcent en pareil cas. Si je comprends bien la chose, il ne s'écoule que peu de temps entre l'appel et l'examen de la cause dans la Cour de District ; de sorte que l'inconvénient ne peut être considérable pour le demandeur. En résumé, à cause des accusations qui sont portées contre les juges de paix de la campagne, je pense que nous devrions accorder le droit d'appel ; mais en même temps il faudrait donner aux juges des Cours de District le droit d'accorder des dommages en cas d'appel non fondé.

M. Derbès,— Le sénateur dit que ces magistrats, dont la position devrait certainement leur donner droit au respect pourraient, s'entendre avec des matelots, des hommes de bateaux à vapeur et d'autres pour s'assurer la chétive somme d'une piastre. Si le sénateur a foi dans l'argument qu'il a l'habitude d'employer, pourquoi ne présente-t-il pas un amendement qui consisterait à rendre le système qu'il propose général dans tout l'Etat. J'ai entendu le sénateur condamner l'usage de passer des lois pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans différentes de celles que nous faisons pour le reste de l'Etat. Je l'ai entendu proclamer qu'il était fatigué de faire continuellement des lois exceptionnelles pour la Nouvelle-Orléans ; et aujourd'hui il propose de faire justement ce qu'il a si fort condamné jusqu'ici. Il sait que dans les campagnes, les affaires au dessous de dix piastres ne sont pas sujettes à l'appel et, comme il l'a dit lui-même, ce qui est bon pour les campagnes l'est également pour la ville. Si le sénateur arrive à ses fins, quelle sera la conséquence ?

Pour un œuf, pour une volaille de la valeur d'une piastre, on pourra porter un appel à la Cour de District, et le temps des juges qui sont déjà si occupés sera pris par ces questions frivoles. Ce système encouragera l'esprit procesif, qu'en hommes sages nous devrions plutôt arrêter. Le Sénateur dit que l'affaire sera vite décidée par la Cour de District. Il se trompe. Le juge Reynolds a siégé pendant six ou sept mois, il siége encore pour décider des appels venant des cours de Juges de paix qui ont été pendantes durant plus d'une année. Quant à ce que le Sénateur a dit à l'occasion des frais des Juges de paix, je puis lui apprendre que la loi exige le paiement de ces frais à l'avance.

M. Short.—Il y a une vieille maxime qui dit, de minimis non curat lex. Je crois que nous pourrions faire aux Juges de paix l'honneur de rendre leurs décisions finales dans les affaires au-dessous de dix piastres.

M. Hodge —J'ai dit qu'il y avait des accusations portées contre les Juges de paix de la ville. Je ne prétends pas que les mêmes charges n'existent pas contre les juges de la campagne parce qu'ils sont plus purs que ceux de la ville, mais je ne les ai pas entendu articuler. Le Sénateur (M. Derbès,) doit avoir des notions bien imparfaites de ce qui doit déterminer la juridiction des juges de Paix. Dans son premier bill il avait posé la somme de cinquante piastres comme la limite au dessous de laquelle il n'y aurait pas d'appel. Le comité a réduit cette somme à vingt-cinq piastres, et finalement par un amendement présenté à la Chambre, la limite a été fixée à dix piastres; et maintenant on propose de l'abaisser à zéro. Je ne desire voir aucune distinction établie entre la ville et la campagne, mais je voudrai voir disparaître les motifs qui ont donné lieu aux accusations fournies contre les Juges. Je voudrais que toutes les affaires fussent sujettes à l'appel dans tout l'Etat. Le Sénateur a dit qu'aux termes de la loi les frais des Juges de paix doivent être payés à l'avance. Je puis lui dire pour son information que cette loi n'est pas observée et que, chaque fois que l'on plaide une exception fondée sur ce point, l'exception est mise de côté. Je répète que je voterai contre le bill.

Le bill est finalement adopté

JEUDI, 10 MARS 1852.

M. Boatner présente un bill à l'effet de payer à M. Moore $650 ; dont $350 à titre de rémuneration pour services rendus et $300 à titre de remboursement pour avances faites par lui pour l'arrestation d'un meurtrier.

M. Boatner dit que M. Moore a arrêté un homme nommé Simmons, qui était accusé d'avoir tué deux hommes par lesquels il était employé. Il paraît que ces hommes étaient occupés à vendre certaines denrées qui se trouvaient sur un bateau, quand ils furent assassinés par Simmons. Le meurtrier prit immédiatement la fuite. Plus tard M. Moore le vit à Louisville. Il revint ici, se munit d'un mandat d'arrêt, retourna à Louisville, l'arrêta et l'amèna dans l'Etat. Le gouverneur n'ayant pas offert de récompense, pensa qu'il n'était pas autorisé à rien payer à M. Moore, sans une allocation spéciale.

Le bill est adopté.

L'acte incorporant les vétérans de couleur de la Nouvelle-Orléans est adopté.

M. Short présente, au sujet du bill confié hier au comité des terres et levées avec instructions de présenter un rapport aujourd'hui, le rapport suivant :

Digitized by Google

Aux Président et membres du Sénat de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Le comité auquel avait été référé l'acte relatif à la vente des terres marécageuses et inondées, acte No 279 de la Chambre, qui a passé comme substitut à l'acte No 8 du Sénat, rapporte respectueusement :

Que le 3 de ce mois un acte passa au Sénat, [acte No 8] pour accorder un laps de douze mois aux personnes qui avaient un droit de préemption, en vertu de la seconde section de l'acte du 17 mars 1852, pour effectuer leur paiement, mais exigeant aussi que la demande et la preuve fussent faites dans le temps spécifié par la seconde section du dit acte savoir : au 17 mars 1853.

Leurs plaintes n'étant pas fondées sur ce qu'ils n'avaient pas le temps pour présenter leur demande et leurs preuves au 17 mars 1853, mais sur le manque d'argent pour payer leurs terres, le Sénat passa un acte pour leur accorder douze mois pour effectuer leur paiement.

Cet acte ayant été envoyé à la Chambre, fut référé au comité des terres et levées publiques. Ce comité ayant pris l'acte en considération, comme il appert par leur rapport, en conclut qu'il autorisait le paiement de toutes terres non vendues, restant du million d'acres [environ 800,000] à douze mois de crédit, et en même temps empêchait le colon actuel de parfaire son titre, à moins d'avoir fait sa demande avant le 17 de ce mois ; et le comité de la Chambre a rapporté le substitut qui est maintenant devant le Sénat, par lequel on propose de donner non seulement à ceux qui se sont établis sur les terres marécageuses et inondées avant le 16 mars 1853, le droit de preemption, comme il est spécifié dans le dit acte ; mais à tous ceux qui s'étaient établis avant cette époque, et d'augmenter de douze mois le terme pour faire la demande et le paiement, à dater de l'adoption du substitut à cet acte.

Le comité de la Chambre paraît s'être trouvé complétement dans l'erreur relativement à la signification de l'acte du Sénat. Le Sénat, loin de vouloir empêcher la vente des terres marécageuses et inondées a taché par cet acte d'empêcher l'augmentation de ces droits de préemption qui pouvaient mettre obstacle à la vente de toutes terres marécageuses et inondées, faisant toutefois une exception en faveur de ces personnes auxquelles s'applique la deuxième section de l'acte de 1852, et les obligeant d'enregistrer leur preuve vers le 17 mars 1853. Par là, l'annotateur des terres publiques connaîtrait les terres qui ne seraient pas sujettes au droit de préemption.

L'acte de la Chambre expose ces terres à un nouveau droit de préemption, ce qui embarrassera le bureau des commissaires des terres marécageuses dans leurs opérations, attendu qu'il sera privé par là de l'usage des fonds qu'auraient versés ces nouveaux préemteurs dont parle la seconde section de l'acte de 1852, et qui auraient été payés le 19 de ce mois ; et en même temps cette nouvelle classe de préempteurs mettrait hors du marché une grande partie des meilleures terres.

Ceci fera grand tort à la mise en pratique du système de levees, comme la détermination a été prise de ne pas pourvoir à cet objet par un emprunt direct, mais de s'en reposer sur la vente des terres marécageuses pour mettre le système en activité. Au commencement de la session le Sénat a passé un acte pour fermer le bureau des terres, jusqu'à ce que les terres fussent arpentées, classées, et que leur prix fussent gradués afin de réaliser par là la plus grande somme d'argent, laquelle devrait être employée aux objets pour lesquels ces terres ont été données à l'Etat ; c'est-à-dire pour l'arpentage et le dessèchement. Dans cet acte, le Sénat ne voulait nullement se mêler des droits de préemption, l'acte n'a pas été passé pour le bénéfice des spéculateurs, comme le pensaient quelques personnes, son but était directement contraire, et l'acte sous sa première forme ; pourvoyait au colon actuel et lui donnait le droit d'entrer toute quantité de terre au-dessous de 320 acres à $1 25 par acre. Ceci était contre et non pour les spéculateurs ; mais un substitut a été offert qui a défiguré la forme de cet acte. Mais cet acte ne devait avoir qu'un effet temporaire. On discutait alors certaines propositions relatives à l'utilité d'empêcher la vente des terres, à la construction des levées et l'exécution des autres travaux nécessaires à leur égouttement, à l'aide d'un emprunt portant hypothèque sur ces terres, attendu que l'on pensait de cette manière réaliser pour les travaux de levees et de dessèchement quatre ou cinq fois le montant que pouvait produire le present système ; la majorité semble avoir hésité devant l'emprunt, et l'autre Chambre n'a pas passé l'acte pour fermer le bureau des terres.

Ce système d'emprunt a été mis de côté, et le bureau des terres est toujours ouvert.

Il ne reste plus rien qui empêche d'accorder des droits de préemption, si ce n'est qu'ils peuvent être un embarras pour les opérations du système de levées, en reculant l'époque du paiement d'une somme d'argent dont l'usage immédiat est requis.

La Legislature ne peut, sans se montrer dépositaire infidèle, se mettre en possession de ces terres et faire des concessions particulières, accorder des droits qui seraient contraires à l'objet pour lequel la donation a été faite. En tant que la concession des droits de préemption peut favoriser la vente de ces terres ou augmenter leur valeur, en y amenant des colons, une pareille mesure peut être bonne, mais elle doit toujours être subordonnée à la destination qui est fixée par l'acte de donation.

En conséquence, nous soumettons la question au sénat, si l'on doit accorder d'autres droits de préemption avant qu'il décide cette question importante jusqu'à quel point cette concession peut être contraire aux opérations du système des levées ; et, si un acte relatif à la préemption venait à passer, nous pensons que les terres devront être choisies en masse, et la liste des terrains envoyés au bureau des terres dans les six mois à dater de la passation de cet acte. Une classe de personnes qui ne prétendent jamais s'y établir soit par préemption ou autrement commettent des dépredations sur une grande partie des terres boisées appartenant à l'Etat, et non seulement ces personnes n'augmentent pas leur valeur, mais elles en retirent tout ce qui leur donne de la valeur ; et nous conseillons l'adoption d'une loi pour empêcher ces dépredations, s'il est possible d'en passer, de plus efficaces que celles qui existent contre ces personnes qui ont plus d'intérêt à casser les levées qu'à les tenir en Etat.

Signé H. SHORT, président.

M. Lacey—Si l'on veut venir en aide aux colons sérieux, il n'y pas de temps à perdre. Je fais donc la motion de suspendre l'action du réglement afin de prendre en consideration le bill et de l'adopter.

M. Rivers—Je suis disposé à prolonger l'époque des paiement, mais je ne désire pas jeter du trouble dans la caisse des levées. Je voterai pour une prolongation de six mois, mais non pour retarder l'époque à laquelle la demande doit être faite. Je désire présenter un amendement a cet effet.

M. Lacey—Si l'on présente des amendements, le bill devra être envoyé à l'autre chambre, et l'adoption en sera différée d'autant.

M. Rivers—Le major Ranney, m'a-t-on dit, est d'avis que l'effet de ce bill sera de rouvrir les opérations du bureau des terres et de donner un crédit de six mois à tous les acheteurs.

M. Palfrey—Quand cette question était en discussion, j'ai cru comprendre d, après les paroles du sénat que le seul but du bill était de venir en aide aux préempteurs qui n'avaient pas en ce moment les moyens de payer le prix de leurs terres. Si je ne me trompe, le but n'était pas de rouvrir le bureau des terres pour recevoir de nouvelles demandes. Le bill de la chambre permet de recevoir de nouvelles demandes et de nouvelles preuves pendant une année encore. Si les demandes ont cessé depuis le 17, il est evident que les préempteurs ont abandonné leurs droits.

M. Nicholls—Je suis disposé, M. le president, à voter en faveur d'une prolongation d'une année pour le paiement. Aux termes de l'acte de 1852, les personnes qui se sont établies sur les terres publiques avant le 7 de mars de cette année ont droit à un an de credit pour la liquidation de leurs droits de préempteurs. Si nous ouvrons aujourd'hui la porte à une nouvelle classe de postulants, cette richesse qui a été donnée à l'Etat dans le but de construire des levées afin de protéger les terres contre l'inondation se trouvera si embarrassée qu'il sera impossible de l'appliquer à l'objet pour lequel elle nous a été abandonnée. Personne n'est opposé à une prolongation de l'époque du paiement, mais nous ne sommes pas disposés à ouvrir la porte à une nouvelle classe de postulants. Si nous persistons dans cette voie, nous ne serons jamais à même de rien retirer des terres marécageuses. L'année prochain, peut-être, on nous demandera une nouvelle extension, l'année après, une autre et ainsi de suite à l'infini. J'espère que le substitut ne passera pas sans amendement.

Digitized by Google

M. King—Je voterai certainement contre le bill si on insiste pour le faire passer tel qu'il est. Ce bill aura pour effet d'empêcher ces terres de rien rapporter, et de retarder l'accomplissement des travaux en vue desquels elles ont été concédées à l'Etat

M. Short.—On peut facilement résoudre la question en recourant à la discussion du bill lorsqu'il a été présenté d'abord par le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey.) Ce bill proposait une extension seulement en faveur des personnes qui s'étaient établies sur des terres marécageuses d'Est-Bâton-Rouge et de Livingston. Le Comité Judiciaire auquel le bill fut référé présenta un rapport qui réprouvait la proposition d'accorder une extension à deux paroisses, tandis que d'autres, placées dans les mêmes circonstances, ont les mêmes droits. On proposa, à l'époque où le bill relatif à la disposition des terres publiques était en discussion au sein du comité, que la categorie de personnes dont il est fait mention dans l'acte de 1852 devint l'objet d'une loi générale. Quand le bill du sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge vint devant le Sénat il fut amendé de telle sorte que le privilège fut étendu à toutes les paroisses de l'Etat, bien entendu toutefois que cette classe de préempteurs ne devait pas s'étendre au delà de ceux auxquels s'applique l'acte de 1852. Par là le bureau des terres publiques était à même de savoir au juste les terres pour lesquelles des demandes avaient été faites, et avait le pouvoir de vendre le reste. Dans cet état de choses, les opérations du Bureau des terres se trouveraient extrêmement simplifiées. L'amendement présenté avait pour but non d'étendre le temps pendant lequel les demandes seraient reçues, mais seulement d'accorder de nouveaux délais pour le paiement à ceux qui manquaient d'argent pour payer le prix des terres achetées par eux. Ce délai, nous l'accordâmes. Maintenant c'est une nouvelle proposition que l'on fait à la Chambre. Le comité de la Chambre basse s'est certainement mépris sur nos intentions. Il est vrai que le bill n'est pas aussi explicite qu'il pourrait l'être, a cause des nombreux amendements dont on l'a surcharge: Cependant je crois que l'objet qu'il se propose ressort assez clairement pour qu'on ne dût pas s'y méprendre. La question que nous avons à décider est celle-ci: Le Sénat va-t-il défaire son propre ouvrage ou adopter le bill qui nous est venu de l'autre Chambre ?

M. Hodge.— Le sénateur a-t-il dit que le Sénat avait passé un bill pour étendre l'époque du paiement et prolonger le temps accordé pour recevoir les demandes ?

M. Short.—Non, monsieur. Si le Sénat a passé un pareil bill, il était conçu dans des termes qui n'exprimaient point une pareille intention. Il accordait un délai pour le paiement, mais il ne créait pas de nouvelle classe. Le bill de la Chambre propose de prolonger le temps pendant lequel les demandes pourront être reçues, de manière à créer une nouvelle classe de préempteurs.

M. Lacey.— Il me semble que nous pouvons arriver par un autre moyen au but que se proposent quelques uns de mes collègues. Au lieu d' nsister sur la motion de concours, qu'il soit fait une motion de rejet et que la question soit renvoyée à un comité conjoint des deux Chambres.

M. Rivers propose un amendement qui consiste à donner un nouveau délai de six mois aux préempteurs auxquels s'applique l'acte de 1852.

M. Hodge.—Pouvons-nous raisonnablement espérer qu'un pareil bill recevra le concours de l'autre Chambre quand elle vient d'en adopter un tel que celui qui est devant le Sénat ?

M. Rivers.— Le président du comité de la Chambre a expliqué le motif qui a dirigé la Chambre. Il dit, vous, messieurs du Sénat, vous avez voulu ouvrir la porte du Bureau des Terres aux spéculateurs, nous, de la Chambre, nous voulons retirer de l'argent comptant des terres publiques et en même temps venir au secours des colons véritables et des préempteurs.

M. Lacey.—La seule objection que l'on puisse opposer à l'amendement du sénateur, c'est que le délai qu'il propose est beaucoup trop court. Un délai de six mois n'en est pas un.

M. King — Je crains que si la prolongation demandée est accordée ce ne soit un fâcheux précédent. Une autre Législature s'assemblera avant l'expiration du terme, et cette Législature sera aussi désireuse que nous de venir au secours des pauvres cultivateurs. Et il en pourra être ainsi jusqu'à la fin des temps. Je désire que le Sénat se montre aussi libéral que possible envers ces braves gens. Personne plus que moi ne désire leur accorder tout ce qui est légitime, mais je voudrais qu'il y eût un terme à ces extensions sans fin. Je voudrais qu'on fixât une époque à laquelle elles devraient cesser ; et, si alors le paiement n'est pas effectué, que l'Etat reprenne possession de ces terres. Je crois que c'est là ce que veut la raison, et je veux mettre la prochaine Législature à l'abri des importunités auxquels nous avons été soumis.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de déposer le bill sur le bureau.

La motion est repoussée.

La discussion se poursuit et le bill est amendé de telle sorte qu'il est ramené à l'état où il était primitivement lorsqu'il a été adopté par le Sénat.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

TRANSFERT DU SIEGE DU GOUVERNEMENT.

Sur motion de M. Derbès, le bill proposant de soumettre au peuple un amendement à la Constitution ordonnant que le siége du gouvernement soit transféré à la Nouvelle-Orléans, est appelé.

M. Palfrey—Je rappelerai que le sentiment du peuple de l'Etat, et de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans elle-même, a déjà été pris relativement à cette mesure, par le vote donné pour l'adoption de la Constitution.

M. Derbès—Si la question a été ainsi finalement décidée, pourqui donc la faculté de décider cette question a-t-elle été laissée à la Législature ?

M. Hodge—Je désirerais présenter quelques observations sur cette question, pour expliquer les raisons pour lesquelles je suis opposé à ce que l'on soumette au peuple de l'Etat l'amendement proposé, c'est-à-dire de donner à la majorité le pouvoir de faire une chose qui sera nuisible et désavantageuse à la minorité. Il n'y a pas de doute que sur cette question il y ait unanimité d'opinion à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et que tous les votants n'y marchent en colonnes serrées. Mais, monsieur, je suis opposé à la dépense qu'occasionnerait à l'Etat l'érection d'une nouvelle maison d'Etat. Je ne m'oppose pas à ce qu'on accorde des pouvoirs au peuple de l'Etat, mais qu'on accède au désir des seuls habitants de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et que l'on construise une nouvelle maison d'Etat lorsque déjà nous en avons une qui a coûté trois cent mille piastres J'apprends de bonne source que la ville de Bâton-Rouge a fait un don à l'Etat du terrain sur lequel est bâti le Capitole, à condition que le siége du gouvernement y serait maintenu. S'il est déplacé, l'Etat perd tous ses droits à cette terre. Si tel n'avait pas été le cas, si une maison d'Etat n'avait pas été bâtie, les choses seraient bien différentes. Mais maintenant, après que $300,000 ont été dépensées pour la construction d'un local convenable, lorsque le trésor de l'Etat est presque dans un état de banqueroute, et que le peuple est écrasé sous le poids de taxes énormes, je ne puis ni ne veux donner mon consentement à une mesure qui fera augmenter les taxes et ajoutera encore au lourd fardeau dont le peuple est accablé.

M. Lacey—En ce moment, où la question de transférer le siége du gouvernement est devant le Sénat, je croirais manquer à ce que je dois à mes constituants si je n'exprimais mes vues à ce sujet.

Si le peuple s'était clairement, formellement exprimé en faveur du transfert du siége du gouvernement, s'il n'y avait pas à se tromper sur son désir de changer de capitale, si enfin il y avait lieu à ce que la législature agit à ce sujet, si cela était exigé de nous, je serais disposé à ce qu'on consultât par la voie du scrutin, le peuple de la Louisiane, au sujet de cet amendement à la loi organique. La constitution de 1845 était l'expression formelle, explicite de l'opposition du peuple à ce que le siége du gouvernement continuât d'être à la Nouvelle Orléans. Par cette constitution non seulement le siége du gouvernement ne devait plus être à la Nouvelle Orléans, mais, plus encore, jamais il ne devait en être proche de plus de 60 milles. Les habitants de la ville firent alors tous les efforts imaginables, et quoique cette dernière clause militât beaucoup en leur faveur ils ne purent obtenir que le capitole restât dans son sein. En 1852 la question fut de nouveau soumise au peuple qui cette fois encore décida que le siège du gouvernement ne serait pas à la Nouvelle Orléans. Où donc trouvez-vous maintenant que tel ne soit plus le désir du peuple ? Non, monsieur, son désir n'a pas changé et ce serait se moquer de lui que d'agir dans la supposition qu'il désire un changement. Je professe le plus grand respect pour la volonté du peuple quelle qu'elle soit, mais dois-je consentir à ce qu'on lui soumette encore ce sur quoi il ne demande pas à être consulté ? Est-il nécessaire que tous les jours, toutes les fois qu'une mesure inconstitutionnelle sera présentée, il soit consulté, de nouveau et toujours consulté ? Une telle conduite de notre part serait des plus dangereuses Je le demande encore, serait-ce de bonne politique de consulter tous les ans le peuple sur des amendements à la constitution jusqu'à ce que la loi organique elle-même ne fut plus qu'un recueil d'actes législatifs ?

Digitized by Google

Mais outre que le peuple de l'Etat ne désire pas un changement, outre qu'il n'a jamais exprimé semblable vœu, la législature veut-elle encore le consulter sur une mesure qui, si elle était adoptée, occasionnerait à l'Etat une perte de millions de piastres ? Si cela a lieu, si contrairement à ce que nous avons le droit d'espérer, le siége du gouvernement est déplacé, que ferons-nous des bâtisses qui ont été construites à de si grands frais ? En ferons-nous un collége, un séminaire ? Elles ne peuvent être appliquées à cet usage parce que déjà nous avons fait une affectation de fonds pour la création d'un établissement de ce genre dans une autre partie de l'Etat. Si le Capitole n'est pas laissé à Bâton Rouge tous les immenses frais de construction qui ont été fait nous retomberont sur les bras, nous aurons dépensé pour rien une immense somme d'argent, nous perdrons bien certainement de trois à quatre cent mille piastres.

Une autre considération se présente encore : nous devons voir si le transfert du siége du gouvernement n'occasionnera pas des dépenses additionnelles à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Monsieur le président, le peuple de cette ville voudra-t-il élever une Maison d'Etat ? Qu'on n'oublie pas que cette même question a été récemment soumise au Conseil-Commun et qu'il a résolu de faire don à l'Etat d'un emplacement sur lequel serait construit une Maison d'Etat, et que cette résolution n'a pas été approuvée par le maire qui a dit que ce serait compromettre le crédit de la ville que de contracter une dette additionnelle de $400.000

Non, monsieur, la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans n'a le droit de rien donner lors même qu'elle le désirerait et elle ne le désirerait pas, en eût-elle le droit. Si elle le faisait, trois années ne s'écouleraient pas avant qu'elle ne vint implorer la Législature et supplier qu'on lui rende l'argent qu'elle aurait dépensé. Voyez alors quelle dépense occasionnerait à l'Etat le transfert du siége du gouvernement. Il vous faudrait donner une compensation à Bâton-Rouge et dépenser de fortes sommes à la Nouvelle-Orléans pour l'érection d'une Maison d'Etat. Consentirez-vous à imposer au peuple une taxe additionnelle ? Et comme vous avez ici un local commode et spacieux, construit à très grands frais, voulez-vous imposer a l'Etat une énorme dépense dans le seul but de plaire à une partie des citoyens de la Nouvelle-Orléans ? Donc, attendu qu'aucun semblable desir n'a été exprimé par le peuple, attendu que ce changement nécessiterait l'imposition d'une taxe nouvelle, j'espère que la Législature terminera d'une fois cette question. Il n'y a aucune nécessité d'y revenir ainsi de temps en temps et de soulever une continuelle excitation à ce sujet.

Qu'il en soit décidé d'une manière ou d'une autre, mais de telle sorte qu'elle ne nous revienne plus jusqu'à ce que le peuple réclame formellement, positivement un changement. Il sera temps alors de passer un bill à la demande des citoyens de la Nlle-Orléans, il sera temps alors de faire des lois toutes favorables à cette ville et préjudiciable au reste de l'Etat.

M. Short.—Je n'ai pas l'intention de discuter à fond cette question, je désire seulement déclarer ici que la grande majorité de mes constituants est en faveur du transfert du siége du gouvernement à la Nlle-Orléans. Baton-Rouge est tellement en dehors de tout que ce n'est qu'avec peine que les lettres écrites par des constituants arrivent aux membres de la Législature, et lorsqu'elles arrivent, il est trop tard pour qu'elles puissent être d'aucune utilité. Quant aux inconvénients de cette ville, cela est à l'avantage de l'Etat en empêchant que les sessions ne soient trop prolongées.

M. King.—Je ne désire pas entrer dans une discussion approfondie de cette question. Je désire seulement dire qu'il me parait que le Sénateur qui a combattu ce bill recule devant le verdict du peuple. Il faut que le Sénateur ait eu les yeux et les oreilles bouchées, s'il n'a vu la preuve du désir du peuple de voir le siège du gouvernement transféré, ou s'il n'a pas entendu les plaintes qui s'élèvent de toutes parts contre le siège actuel. Mais non. Si le Sénateur ne veut pas soumettre cette question au peuple ce n'est pas qu'il ne soit assuré du vœu populaire, mais c'est par ce qu'il craint que le peuple ne donne un verdict contre lui. Dans l'origine le siège du gouvernement a été éloigné de la Nouvelle-Orléans par suite des efforts de speculateurs politiques qui flattèrent des jalousies de section, existant malheureusement dans les campagnes contre la ville.

Ces faiseurs pensaient qu'ils auraient plus de chances de se pousser, si le siége n'était pas à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Demandez à n'importe quel membre la différence qu'il y aurait pour la Législature si elle siégeait à la Nouvelle-Orléans au lieu de siéger ici. Là il serait en rapports presque journalier avec ses commettants, et par là il serait à même d'apprendre leurs besoins et leurs vœux, condition essentielle de toute bonne législation. Ici il est isolé, privé de tous rapports avec le peuple, incapable de deviner l'écho de leurs sentiments et de leurs opinions. A la Nouvelle-Orléans il y a une concentration de population et de lumières qui ne peut avoir qu'un résultat favorable pour les travaux de la Législature, et sous le simple rapport de la commodité les avantages que cette ville présente doivent être évidents à tous les yeux. Là est une ville qui offre mille ressources pour les affaires, une ville dans laquelle se trouvent concentrees une grande partie du capital de l'Etat et la plus grande partie de son commerce, où par conséquent se trouvent en plus grand nombre les objets qui peuvent attirer l'attention de la Législature. Là nous ne serions pas claquemurés comme à Bâton-Rouge, et privés de tous rapports avec nos commettants. Il est d'autres motifs qui devraient engager à transporter à la Nouvelle-Orleans le siége du gouvernement, mais ceux-ci sont suffisants.

C'est pour obtenir cet avantage et nullement pour servir les intérêts particuliers de la Nouvelle-Orléans que nous désirons que le siege du gouvernement y soit transferé. Il n'y a pas un sénateur ici qui ne voulut aller à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Leurs affaires les y appellent toujours avant qu'ils ne puissent venir ici. Que le peuple decide donc cette question. Qu'il dise s'il veut un changement. Donnez lui l'occasion d'exprimer nettement, formellement son désir par le seul moyen qui soit en son pouvoir, la voie du scrutin Pourquoi cette opposition du transfert du siége du gouvernement ? La Constitution n'a pas, ainsi que le pense le senateur de Ste-Marie, décidé à tout jamais ce point. En adoptant cette Constitution le peuple n'a pas exprimé son désir de laisser le Capitole à Bâton-Rouge. Il a été forcé d'adopter cette clause en adoptant la Constitution ; il fallait ou tout ou rien, et s'il a voté en faveur de l'adoption ce n'est pas à cause de cette clause, mais en dépit d'elle. Les objections constitutionnelles qui nous sont présentées sont elles-mêmes une preuve que l'on craint de consulter le peuple.

Quel droit avait la convention d'imposer au peuple une loi pour l'avenir ? et d'ordonner que le siége du gouvernement serait à tout jamais tenu hors de la Nouvelle-Orleans ? Je conçois que tel soit le désir du sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge et peut-être des habitants de quelques paroisses ; mais je ne crois pas que tel soit le vœu du peuple entier ou même d'une majorité. Donnez-lui une occasion d'exprimer son opinion à cet égard, et, n'en doutez pas, il assignera comme siége du gouvernement la ville que nous désignons, c'est-à-dire, au centre du commerce et des affaires, au foyer de l'intelligence et des lumières. A la Nouvelle-Orléans, la législature pourrait juger de ses besoins.

Digitized by Google

et y pourvoir; ici, c'est à peine si elle peut juger des besoins de la campagne.

M. Nicholls — M. le président, je me lève dans le seul but de bien établir une position relativement à cette question. S'il s'agissait de transférer le siege du gouvernement, je croirais de mon devoir de decliner les raisons pour lesquelles je voterais dans un sens ou dans un autre ; mais comme il s'agit seulement de soumettre au peuple la question de savoir si la Nouvelle-Orléans ou Bâton-Rouge sera la capitale, il n'est pas besoin de discussion pour décider de cela. Quoique je n'appartienne pas au grand parti de la democratie et que peut-être je n'aie pas le droit comme lui de parler avec tendresse et avec amour du très cher peuple, privilége que semble monopoliser ce parti, cependant lorsque se présente une question de taxes, je crois que nous devons laisser au peuple de la décider. Il est bien préférable que ce soit lui-même que nous.

M. Lacey.—Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M. King], me semble s'être fait l'avocat d un système de conduite fort dangereux. Quand une question constitutionnelle est douteuse, nous pouvons avec raison peut-être, la soumettre au pueple. Mais quand la question est résolue, comme dans ce cas, par la Constitution de 1845, quand c'est une question sur laquelle la ville se prononcera, comme un seul homme, le sénateur a tort de vouloir la soumettre au peuple. Supposez que deux cents bills aient été présentes et que, pour ne pas prendre la responsabilité de leur adoption, nous déciderons qu'ils soient tous soumis au peuple, le sénateur prétendra-t-il que nous ferions bien d'en agir ainsi. Il me semble que ce serait une atteinte portée à la loi fondamentale, surtout quand elle n'est pas sanctionnée par l'expression du vœu populaire. Il y aurait peu de l'esprit conservateur dans une pareille mesure, a moins que nous n'eussions la preuve que le peuple la demande. Le sénateur dit que j'ai peur de la decision du peuple. Je demande au Senat, si une proposition était faite de restreindre les privileges de la Nouvelle-Orléans, serait-il disposé à la soumettre au peuple? S'élèverait-il avec indignation contre ceux qui combattraient sa mesure, et les accuserait-il de redouter le verdict du peuple. Je serais curieux de connaître la conduite qu'il tiendrait en pareille occasion. Je ne prétends pas connaître aussi bien que le sénateur les desirs des habitants de la Nouvelle-Orleans; mais là on m'a dit qu'il n'y avait que les intrigants politiques qui desirassent le transfert du siége du gouvernement. J'ai appris que ce changement n'est demandé que par quelques boutiquiers, quelques trafiquants, qui pensent que la presence de la Legislature produirait un accroissement dans leur commerce. Peut-être le sénateur reconnaîtra-t-il que la Nouvelle-Orléans n'est pas disposee à donner une majorité à cette mesure; mais si elle doit le faire, je désire empêcher que par cette unité d'action, la campagne soit privée de ses droits constitutionnels.

Il n'y a aucune raison qui puisse engager à soumettre cette question au peuple. Si la majorité du peuple désire déplacer le siége du gouvernement, qu'il envoie ici des représentants charges d'exprimer leurs vues, ce qui serait une manière plus juste et plus convenable de prendre l'opinion du peuple. Que la question soit agitée dans le pays; qu'elle soit discutee, et si les électeurs envoie ici des membres qui soient en faveur de la mesure, je serai parfaitement disposé à me soumettre Il me semble evident que l'intention de la convention n'était pas que le transfert du siége du gouvernement eût lieu au moyen d'un changement dans la Constitution. Je ne consentirai pas alors au deplacement, ni à aucune mesure qui y tendrait, à moins que le peuple n'envoyât ici une majorité constitutionnelle en faveur de la majorité. J'espère donc que le Sénat terminera cette question par une prompte décision.

Je n'ai aucun sentiment hostile contre la Nouvelle-Orléans. Je ne voudrais faire aucun acte qui pût l'entraver dans sa marche; je désire autant que personne la voir prospérer, et je ferai tout pour contribuer à ses progrès, en tant que cela ne dût pas porter atteinte aux intérêts de la campagne. Mais je ne suis pas disposé à livrer la campagne pieds et poings liés à la ville. Je sens qu'il est de mon devoir de prémunir le Sénat contre cette proposition, car si elle est accueillie, les droits de la campagne ne seront plus qu'un vain fantôme, et rien ne se fera plus que par la volonté de la ville.

M. Mouton.—Il m'est tout-à-fait indifférent que le siège du gouvernement soit établi à la Nouvelle-Orléans ou à Bâton-Rouge, mais comme les paroisses que je représente n'ont jamais exprimé leur opinion quant à cette question, je considère qu'il est de mon devoir de voter contre la résolution. Avant de voter pour, j'attendrai qu'elles m'aient signifié que tel est leur désir.

M. King.—Le sénateur de Lafayette (M. Mouton) refuse de rendre justice au peuple de son district en ne lui offrant pas l'occasion d'exprimer son opinion. S'il professe une aussi haute considération pour ses constituants, que ne se range-t-il alors de notre côté? Quant à l'assertion du sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey), que les hommes politiques de la Nouvelle-Orléans désirent seuls le transfert du siège du gouvernement, je puis lui assurer qu'il est grandement dans l'erreur. Le fait seul du transfert du Capitole est par lui-même de trop peu d'importance pour qu'ils y songent, et la présence des membres de la Législature ne changerait rien aux idées ou aux opinions du plus humble et du plus pauvre votant de la ville. Ce n'est pas en vue de l'intérêt de la Nouvelle-Orléans que nous désirons le changement, mais parce que l'Etat tout entier bénéficierait de cette mesure. Je dois déclarer que je n'ai pas du tout compris le sénateur lorsqu'il a dit, au debut de son discours, que le peuple de la Nouvelle-Orléans marcherait en phalange serrée, et que plus loin il a dit que cette question n'était soulevée que par quelques politiques ambitieux de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Pourquoi ces contradictions? et que signifient-elles?

M. Hodge fait la motion de déposer le bill sur le bureau.

Lorsque le nom de M. Rivers est appelé, ce sénateur se lève et dit :

Je vote dans l'affirmative, parce que je ne sache pas que le peuple désire ce changement, et parce que ce changement, s'il est fait, nécessiterait des dépenses que l'Etat ne peut pas faire. Le peuple est déjà surcharge de taxes, et le trésor est à la veille d'une banqueroute.

Le bill est déposé sur le bureau par un vote de 15 oui contre 12 non.

MERCREDI, 23 MARS.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement.

M. Clifton du comité des banques et maisons de banques, présente le rapport suivant :

A l'honorable W. Farmer, président du Sénat :

Les comités permanents sur les banques et maisons de banques du Sénat et de la Chambre des représentants, qui avaient été requis, par une résolution conjointe, d'examiner la condition des banques incorporées de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, ont rempli le devoir qui leur était imposé et demandent la permission de présenter le rapport suivant.

Une connaissance des ressources et du crédit des personnes qui ont des affaires avec ces banques plus ample que ne possèdent les comités, eût été nécessaire, pour les mettre à même d'exprimer une opinion positive, sur la valeur du montant énorme de billets escomptés à recevoir, qui constituent les opérations de ces institutions.

Mais les tableaux tirés de leurs livres, et les examens que nous avons pu faire, laissent une impression très favorable de leur solvabilité et de la sécurité qu'elles offrent a leurs creanciers et au public.

Les espèces métalliques dans les caveaux ont été minutieusement comptées par les comités, correspondent aux tableaux assermentés qui leur ont été fournis, et sont en rapport avec l'acte de 1842.

Les comptes généraux fournis par ces banques à la demande des comités, se trouvent annexés à ce rapport, ou condensés sous leurs titres respectifs, de manière à démontrer ce qui est le plus important. Outre ces comptes généraux, vos comités, ont pris des informations particulières, dont le résultat est ci-après démontré, relativement à l'administration des banques et aux profits qu'elles ont pu faire, pensant que cela pourrait vous être de quelque utilité, eu égard à la loi générale sur les banques, qui, l'on pense, attirera l'attention de la Législature pendant cette session·

Digitized by Google

Parmi les comptes spéciaux des banques maintenant en opération, se trouvent les retours du montant du capital de chacune, que possèdent les actionnaires résidents et non-résidents; le montant dû par les directeurs de chaque banque à l'institution dans laquelle ils sont directeurs, et les dettes dues à chaque banque par les directeurs de toutes les autres banques, et un compte des profits répartis et en réserve par la banque des Artisans et des Marchands, la banque du Canal et la banque de la Louisiane, depuis le commencement de leurs opérations jusqu'à ce jour. Ce dernier compte n'a pas été obtenu de la banque de l'Etat

BANQUES DES ARTISANS ET DES MARCHANDS

Le Tableau général de cette Banque démontre qu'elle est préparee à se soumettre à la décision de la Legislature, dans le cas où celle-ci serait opposée à l'application qui lui a déjà été faite dans le cours de la présente session, pour un renouvellement de sa charte, qui expire le second mardi d'avril prochain.

Ses moyens sont suffisants pour faire face à ses engagements, soit en circulation, en dépôts et autres réclamations payables sur demande. Un coup d'œil sur le tableau (lettre C) montre que la Banque possède (pour parler en chiffres ronds) dans ses voûtes, plus de cinq millions de piastres en espèces ou en papier à courte échéance, équivalant à de l'argent, tandis que toutes ses dettes payables immédiatement et ultérieurement, exclusives du fonds capital, ne s'élèvent qu'à peu de chose au-dessus de quatre millions. Il est certain que la Banque pourrait liquider, payer toutes ses obligations, et distribuer presque tout son capital dans l'espace de quelques mois. L'acte de 1850, qui a passé par anticipation pour pourvoir à sa liquidation, accorde aux commissaires qui pourraient être nommés sous l'empire de cette loi, un terme de cinq ans à partir de l'expiration de sa charte, afin de terminer finalement ses affaires dans ce laps de temps.

Les profits de cette Banque, depuis le commencement en 1833 jusqu'au 16 février 1853, se sont élevés, d'après les tableaux fournis, à $2,077,598 68. Aucun dividende n'a été déclaré en juin 1837, janvier 1839, janvier et juillet 1840, janvier et juillet 1842, janvier et juillet 1843.

Le fonds capital de la Banque consiste en 34,797 actions.

($1,689,850) appartenant comme suit :

13,767 actions ($688,350) appartiennent à des résidents.

20,030 » ($1,001,500) appartiennent à des non-résidents.

La dette des Directeurs est comme suit :

	Comme tireurs.	Comme end.	Total.
Directeurs de cette Banque,	$99,783 27	$33,425 08	$133,208 35
do des Banques de la ville à celle-ci,	204,677 06	103,711 85	308,388 91
	$304,460 33	$137,136 93	$441,597 26

BANQUE DU CANAL.

Les affaires ce cette institution ont aussi été profitables, malgré les pertes énormes qui ont suspendu ses dividendes. Pendant la moitié de la durée de sa charte; elle a été à même d'assurer et de déclarer les profits suivans :

Dividendes d'après tableau fourni,	$2,882,207 50
Compte de profits et pertes, d'après tableau général,	880,666 86
Nouveau compte de profits et pertes, d'après tableau général,	268,803 54
Total,	$3,936,677 40

Aucun dividende n'a été déclaré en juin et décembre 1834, juin 1837, décembre 1839, ni à aucune époque pendant les années 1840, '1, '2, '3, '4, '5, ou '46, ni en juin 1847 et décembre 1849.

Le fonds capital de la Banque ($3,164,000) appartient comme suit :

16,741 actions ($1,674,100) à des non-résidents.

14,899 " ($1,489,900) à des résidents.

Les dettes des directeurs de cette Banque sont comme suit :

	Comme tireurs.	Comme endosseurs.	Total.
Directeurs de cette Banque,	$184,955 03	182,346 72	$367,311 75
Dû par les directeurs d'autres Banques,	256,087 78	147,404 01	403,491 70
	$441,052 81	$329,750 73	$770,803 45

BANQUE DE LA LOUISIANE.

La Banque de la Louisiane présente un résultat encore plus favorable. Son capital nominal est de $3,992,600, mais la Banque possède elle-même pour $1,200,000 de ce montant, de sorte que son capital réel est de $2,792,600 appartenant comme suit :

15,119 actions, $1,511,000 à des non-résidents.

12,804 " 1,280,400 à des résidents.

12,000 " 1,200,000 à la Banque.

Il paraît que cette Banque a été administrée avec une prudence et un succès plus uniformes qu'aucune autre dans cette ville. Elle fait voir un dividende net et un profit réalisé de $3,729,858 81, sur un capital de $3,992,600 et ayant en outre acheté pour $1,200,000 de ses propres actions, ce qui augmente les profits au chiffre de $9,929,858 81, c'est-à-dire à peu près 250 pour cent dans l'espace de 28 ans, mais elle a déclaré des dividendes extra en janvier 1847, janvier 1850 et janvier 1853.

Les dividendes réguliers et extra des derniers six mois s'élèvent à 15 p. 0|0, faisant voir les profits énormes qui peuvent se réaliser d'après le système restreint actuel de Banques incorporées, et fait fortement sentir la nécessité d'établir une concurrence générale.

Le montant que doivent les directeurs des Banques à celle-ci est comme suit :

	Tireurs.	Endosseurs.	Total.
Directeurs de la Banque,	$91,012 89	$47,799 62	$138,810 51
" d'autres Banques à celle-ci,	304,470 34	354,886 76	659,357 10
	$395,483 23	402,684 38	798,167 61

BANQUE DE L'ETAT DE LA LOUISIANE.

Les comités n'ont pu obtenir aucun tableau du montant des profits faits par cette Banque, ni la distribution du capital ($1,987,960) entre les résidents et non-résidents. La Banque n'a aucun agent hors de l'Etat pour le transfert de ses actions.

Les dettes de directeurs à la Banque et à ses succursales sont comme suit :

	Tireurs.	Endosseurs.	Total.
Mère-Banque. Ses propres directeurs,	$234,997	$106,007	$340,798
Directeurs de la Branche de la seconde Municipalité	84,951	143,990	228,950
" d'autres Banques	96,267	2,520	98,787
	$413,202	$255,228	$668,430

La somme de $167,000 sur le montant dû comme Tireurs, est garanti par sûreté collatérale sur actions.

Dettes des directeurs de la Succursale de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane de la 2de Municipalité :

	Tireurs.	Endosseurs.	Total.
Les propres directeurs,	$232,039	$9,050	$231,089
Directeurs de la Mère Banque,	29,016	70,804	99,820
" d'autres Banques à celle-ci,	10,439	.....	10,439
	$261,494	$79,854	$341,348
Succursale à Bâton-Rouge,	$12,855	.. ....	$12,855

Digitized by Google

Montant total des dettes des directeurs de Banques à la Banque de l'Etat et à ses succursales ; comme tireurs, $687,551—comme endosseurs, $335,082—Total : $1,022,633.

Afin de faire mieux comprendre les affaires de cette institution, les comités ont obtenu des tableaux séparés faits le même jour des affaires de la Mère-Banque et des deux succursales. Ils sont annexés à ce rapport et condensés de manière à faire voir d'un coup d'œil le fonds de réserve et les opérations de la Banque et de ses succursales, le 12 février.

On verra qu'une très grande partie des affaires de la Banque, à la Nouvelle-Orléans, se fait par l'intermédiaire de la Succursale de la Seconde Municipalité et que les emprunts faits par les Succursales et particulièrement par celle de la Seconde Municipalité sont beaucoup au-dessus du montant prescrit par la charte de la Banque eu égard au montant de ses affaires avec son capital et démontre aussi un grand surcroit d'affaires de la Mère-Banque et de ses succursales au-delà de la limite imposée par la charte. Il est bon de remarquer que la succursale de la Seconde Municipalité a prêté à ses propres directeurs et à ceux de la Mère-Banque, la somme de $255,055 sur un capital nominal de $100,000, soit deux fois et demie son capital.

Le comité ne peut abandonner ce sujet sans au moins attirer l'attention sur des questions graves ayant rapport à cette institution, et qui de temps à autre ont été beaucoup agitées, mais n'ont jamais été examinées judiciairement ni sommairement terminées.

La Banque a-t-elle le droit dans le lieu où elle dirige elle-même ses propres affaires, de nommer une autre Banque sous le titre de Succursale avec des pouvoirs aussi étendus que les siens propres, (et par ce fait le droit de se multiplier à l'infini dans la même ville ?)—A-t-elle légalement demandé et exercé les priviléges dont elle a fait usage d'après l'acte de 1850 relativement à l'établissement d'une succursale, à Bâton-Rouge, d'après lequel la Banque demande d'être exemptée des limites qui lui sont imposées par sa charte pour les prêts faits par l'intermédiaire de ses succursales ? Dans un tel embarras, les comités ne peuvent exprimer une opinion décisive, mais ils n'hésitent pas à dire que tous ces faits devraient être l'objet d'une investigation judiciaire.

De quelle manière elle doit être faite, il ne leur convient pas de dire, mais ils insistent pour que le vœu de la loi soit mis rigoureusement en force contre des pouvoirs si dangereux et une licence si effrénée.

BANQUE DES CITOYENS.

L'examen des affaires de la Banque des Citoyens démontre que cette institution n'a ni circulation, ni dépôts, et aucune dette, sauf les Bons de l'Etat et les Bons de la Banque à l'étranger.

Les comités n'ont eu à s'occuper que de la garantie qu'à l'Etat dans l'actif de la Banque et des garanties hypothécaires données à la Banque par ses Actionnaires, afin d'assurer le paiement ponctuel des obligations de l'Etat au fur et à mesure qu'elles viennent à échoir.

L'examen que les comités ont pu faire, d'après la connaissance particulière des différens membres des comités relativement à la valeur des hypothèques sur propriétés dans leurs endroits respectifs, porte à croire que la garantie est suffisante pour la sécurité de l'Etat.

Les hypothèques demeurent en pleine force sur le montant primitif, quoique seize paiements d'une piastre chacun sur chaque action aient été faits avec une ponctualité remarquable. La Banque a un actif considérable et acollecté des actionnaires les contributions autorisées d'après l'acte de 1847. Ces contributions pendant un certain nombre d'années produiront une balance considérable en faveur des recettes.

D'après le jugement des comités, l'Etat est bien protégé contre toute perte pour sa garantie à cette Banque, si ses intérêts sont prudemment administrés plus tard.

Il n'y a eu aucun mouvement dans cette Banque depuis le rapport des commissaires de Banque qui est déjà en la possession de la Législature, c'est pourquoi nos comités n'ont pas jugé nécessaire d'annexer un tableau général à ce rapport.

ASSOCIATION CONSOLIDÉE.

Les mêmes remarques générales s'appliquent à cette Banque—elle n'a ni circulation, ni ne fait aucune opération. Il est de l'intérêt de l'Etat de veiller à sa liquidation de manière à se garantir contre toute perte sur les Bons émis pour l'usage de la Banque. La liquidation de cette Banque donnera une forte perte aux actionnaires.

Le déficit apparent est maintenant d'à peu près $300,000 et sera indubitablement augmenté lorsque les comptes non-réglés seront clos : mais les hypothèques que possède la Banque et son actif réel démontrent que dans le présent état de choses, elle a apparemment une garantie suffisante pour protéger l'Etat contre toute perte.

L'heureuse négociation de la Banque des Citoyens avec les détenteurs de bons à l'étranger peut remettre et remettra dans peu de temps à ses actionnaires, le contrôle de ses affaires, et nécessitera, lorsque ces arrangements seront terminés, un changement dans la manière dont l'Etat doit diriger cette institution.

Le bureau des commissaires des Banques maintenant établi par la loi, n'aura plus à s'occuper que de la Banque Consolidée, et les dépenses de ce bureau sont trop fortes et nullement en harmonie avec l'administration d'une seule Banque.

Ce sujet nécessitera l'action de la Législature.

BANQUE DE L'UNION.

La dernière Banque à passer en revue est la Banque de l'Union, qui est aussi en liquidation et a presque terminé ses affaires. Ses dettes sont purement nominales ou sont garanties par un fonds de réserve. Elle a collecté et distribué à ses actionnaires presque tout le montant de son capital. Dans le partage de ses profits extra, l'Etat comme actionnaire d'un sixième a reçu en deux dividendes les sommes suivantes :

1er Dividende, 1er juin 1852, $207,170.
2d " janvier 1853, 147,396.

Le premier dividende en entier et en outre une somme de $22,866 73 du second dividende ont été retenus d'après un arrangement avec l'Etat vu la responsabilité de la Banque pour les Bons du chemin de fer de Clinton et Port-Hudson.

Une autre somme de $3,000 a été portée au compte de l'Etat pour une traite à vue sur le Trésor et payée par la Banque, et $6,000 pour rembourser un dépôt fait entre les mains du Trésorier pour représenter six Bons de l'Etat que la Banque est en mesure de délivrer.

Quant à la balance se montant à $105,629 67, vus comités l'ont vu figurer au crédit de l'Etat sur les livres de la Banque et elle est prête à être payée depuis le 1er janvier dernier.

L'Etat a encore un intérêt d'un sixième dans les profits de cette institution qui ne sont pas encore distribués. Une proposition a été faite par la Banque afin d'acheter cet intérêt. Le trésorier de l'Etat a été autorisé par un acte, passé en mars dernier, à entrer en negociations avec la Banque, mais n'a pu arriver à aucun arrangement.

La Banque offrait dix-huit piastres par action ce que le Trésorier a refusé d'accepter. Elle a, depuis cette époque, déclaré un dividende de quinze piastres par action sur lequel l'Etat a reçu la somme de $137,306.

Il existe encore un montant considérable de valeurs non-partagées dont le chiffre exact n'est pas connu. Dans ce but, les comités ont jugé nécessaire de demander un état détaillé de tout l'actif qui reste, ainsi que des dettes de la Banque, de manière à les mettre à même de se former une opinion sur les mesures que doit prendre l'Etat.

Les documents ont été promptement fournis et après examen, les comités ont décidé que les intérêts de l'Etat n'exigent en aucune manière une vente à la Banque de la part des profits à venir, mais seraient tout aussi bien augmentés en permettant à la Banque de continuer régulièrement sa liquidation et que l'Etat reçoive au pro rata sa proportion des bénéfices au fur et à mesure qu'ils seront réalisés.

Les comités ont choisi parmi la masse énorme de papiers qu'ils ont examinés, condensés et annexés à ce rapport, les documents suivants :

A. Tableau et récapitulation des profits des trois Banques en opération.

B. Tableau et récapitulation des dettes des directeurs des Banques de la ville aux institutions, dans lesquelles ils sont directeurs, ainsi qu'à celles des autres Banques de la ville.

Digitized by Google

C Tableau général de la Banque des Artisans.

D. " " " " du Canal.

E. " " " " de la Louisiane.

F. 1er. Tableau général de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

F. II. Tableau général de la Succursale de la 2nde municipalité.

F. III. Tableau général de la Succursale à Bâton-Rouge.

Le tout vous est respectueusement soumis.

C. W. CLIFTON,
Président du comité du Sénat.
S. F. WILSON,
Président du comité de la Chambre.

M. Palfrey appelle le bill suivant :

Sect. 1re.—Qu'il soit décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en assemblée générale, Que le trésorier de l'Etat soit et demeure requis de payer à l'ordre de Théodule Labauve, résidant dans la paroisse de Ste Marie, sur le mandat de l'auditeur des comptes publics, la somme de cinq cents piastres.

Sect. 2me —Qu'il soit de plus résolu, etc., Que la somme de cinq cents piastres soit et demeure spécialement affectée au but ci-dessus indiqué.

M. Wickliffe —Cela me semble être une façon d'agir tout à fait irrégulière. La proposition est tout simplement celle-ci : Parce qu'un individu a été blessé d'un coup de fusil chargé à postes, l'Etat doit payer les frais et dommages résultant de sa blessure. Il y a en Louisiane des centaines de personnes qui ont été blessées ainsi, alors qu'elles étaient à la poursuite de criminels. La conséquence serait que nous devrions les payer toutes, car certainement elles ont autant de droit à réclamer cette indemnité Pour moi, je ne suis pas disposé à payer aucun individu à qui il peut arriver d'être blessé pendant qu'il est à la poursuite d'esclaves marrons. Je le répète, c'est une doctrine toute nouvelle. Si nous commençons une fois ce système, où nous arrêterons-nous ?

Bien des paroisses pourraient présenter d'aussi justes réclamations que celle qui nous occupe. Il y a dans ma propre paroisse, quelques personnes qui ont tout autant de droit à une indemnité. Si le sénateur de Sainte-Marie obtient $500 pour son constituant, je demanderai une somme égale, pour ceux des miens qui sont dans la même position. Je le demande, sur quoi est est basée cette réclamation ? Cet individu a-t-il été blessé au service de l'Etat ? Par le fait ou par la faute du Sénat ? Pourquoi, quand et comment a-t-il été blessé ? Quelles sont les circonstances qui ont donné lieu à cet accident ? Nous ne sommes informés de rien de tout celà. N'avait-il pas pour l'exciter l'espoir d'une récompense, s'il parvenait à arrêter le nègre ? S'il en est ainsi, il ne peut avoir aucune réglamation contre l'Etat. Il n'a aucun droit de s'adresser à la Legislature et de demander une indemnité pour un accident ou un malheur dont il a été frappé alors qu'il était, non pas au service de l'Etat, mais engagé dans une entreprise où pour lui la récompense était près du danger.

M. Mouton.—Si j'avais le rapport du comité, je pourrais, je crois, faire voir que la loi oblige l'Etat à accorder des compensations pour blessures reçues exactement dans les mêmes circonstances que celles qui sont ici discutées. Je ne suis pas disposé à accorder cette compensation si la loi ne nous y autorise pas, mais si le contraire est vrai, pouvons nous refuser de nous y conformer ? Si le Sénateur examine le rapport il verra que la loi y est citée. Autant que je puis me souvenir la loi est explicite à ce sujet.

Le rapport du comité est lu.

M. Palfrey.—On voit par ce rapport que les esclaves n'étaient pas seulement marrons mais échappés à la justice. Au fait ils avaient commis un meurtre. Ils s'étaient rendus coupables d'un crime hideux.

Pour rendre bien claire toute cette affaire, je vais en dire toutes les circonstances.—Après que ces esclaves furent partis marrons, ils furent arrêtés par un individu du nom de Wilcox. Il les força de s'embarquer avec lui sur un squif. Après quelques instants, les nègres, profitant du moment où Wilcox ne se tenait pas sur ses gardes, le jetèrent par dessus bord. Il avait pris avec lui dans l'esquif un fusil chargé ; les nègres s'en saisirent, firent feu sur lui et le tuèrent pendant qu'il essayait de se sauver à la nage Ils débarquèrent ensuite et abandonnèrent l'esquif. L'individu dont la réclamation nous est présentée, poursuivit volontairement sans promesse et sans espoir de récompense, les esclaves fugitifs et parvint à s'en emparer. Il en tua un et fut lui-même blessé. Il me semble qu'on ne peut imaginer un cas, où la gratification soit plus justement demandée.

M. Wickliffe—Je désirerais savoir si cet individu n'était pas officier de l'Etat et dans l'exercice de ses fonctions.

M. Palfrey—Non, monsieur.

M. Wickliffe—Alors c'était son droit et son devoir comme citoyen d'arrêter ces nègres. Il y a ordinairement des récompenses accordées par les paroisses dans des cas pareils, et je ne vois pas pourquoi l'Etat porterait ce fardeau. C'est ainsi du moins dans ma paroisse et je ne doute pas qu'il n'en soit de même dans la plupart des autres. J'ai l'intention de voter contre ce bill et je désire que mon vote soit inscrit sur le journal.

M. Millard—Le comité a pris en considération spéciale toute cette affaire et est arrivé à la conclusion que la loi exige que l'Etat accède à ces réclamations. (Il lit le texte de la loi) C'est sur cette loi qu'a été basé le rapport. Au delà, le comité ne pouvait ni ne devait rien. Ils ont trouvé cette loi sur le livre des statuts et se sont crus obligés de s'y conformer.

M. Nicholls—Le sénateur d'Ouest-Féliciana (M. Wickliffe) a dit que c'était là une manière de procéder toute nouvelle et irrégulière. Je ne partage pas son avis Cette manière n'est certainement pas nouvelle, puisque cette même Législature a sanctionné une réclamation de la même nature, en passant un bill pour venir au secours de M. Moore, qui avait réussi à se rendre maître d'un échappé de la justice. Cette personne fut dangereusement blessée, si dangereusement qu'elle en a été estropiée pour le reste de ses jours et mise presque hors d'état de travailler pour sa subsistance. La loi accorde généralement une gratification dans des cas semblables, et nous n'avons pas le droit de refuser de nous y conformer.

M. Derbès.—Si la loi est mauvaise, elle devrait être rappelée; mais aussi longtemps qu'elle existe dans nos statuts, nous ne pouvons refuser de nous y conformer. Nous ne pouvons refuser cette gratification à laquelle la loi nous oblige. La personne qui est venue ici présenter cette réclamation a exposé sa vie sans même avoir l'espoir d'une récompense, comme on a voulu l'insinuer, mais parce qu'elle comprenait bien ses devoirs de bon citoyen. Elle a été blessée, estropiée pour la vie. Autant qu'elle a pu, elle a évité de recourir à l'Etat pour des secours, et ne l'a fait que lorsqu'elle s'est vue dans la nécessité d'accepter ce à quoi la loi lui donnait droit. Ainsi que l'a bien dit le sénateur [M Nicholls], ce cas n'est pas unique. Nous avons déjà passé des actes de cette nature, et nous ne pouvons maintenant sans injustice refuserde le faire maintenant.

M. Wickliffe.—Le sénateur se trompe. Aucun acte de cette nature n'a été adopté par la Législature. M. Moore était dans une situation toute différente Il a eu à encourir de grandes dépenses pour s'emparer d'un criminel qui s'était soustrait à la loi, un homme coupable de meurtre. La Législature lui accorda une indemnité pour les services qu'il avait rendus et lui rembourse les dépenses qu'il avait faites.

M. Millard.— J'ai quelques paroles à ajouter. Pour ce qui regarde cette affaire, le comité a eu la preuve, à l'aide du témoignage du médecin, que cet individu avait reçu une blessure fort grave, dont il ressent encore les effets Cette blessure remonte à 1842. Mais on ne saurait en faire un argument de ce qu'il s'est écoulé un si long temps ; cela prouve au contraire que M. Labauve a répugné à s'adresser à la libéralité de la Législature, jusqu'au moment où il s'est vu forcé de le faire. Si le bill avait pris naissance au Sénat j'aurais voté pour une indemnité de $1000; mais comme le bill est venu de la Chambre, le comité n'a pu que faire un rapport en faveur de la proposition de $500, telle qu'elle avait été adoptée par la Chambre.

M. Hodge.— Je demanderai si le postulant a déjà reçu quelque chose du propriétaire de l'esclave. S'il en est ainsi l'Etat a le droit de former une action contre le propriétaire.

Digitized by Google

M. Palfrey.—Je ferai remarquer qu'il n'est guère probable qu'il en soit ainsi, attendu que les nègres ont été abandonnés à l'Etat.

Le bill est adopté par le vote suivant.

MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Dupré, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Nichols, Palfrey, Patterson, Rives, Slaell et Taylor; — 47 oui, Et MM. Burthe, Evans, Lacoste, Neal et Wickliffe; — 5 non.

Sur motion de M. Derbès le bill à l'effet de rappeler la loi d'exemption [homestead law] est pris en considération et adopté.

BUREAU DES TRAVAUX PUBLICS.

M. King. — Je fais la motion que le Sénat s'occupe du bill ayant pour objet l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics. Il y a déjà quelque temps que le bill a été presenté. Il a été l'objet d'une discussion prolongee, et de nouveaux débats seraient inutiles. Il est temps que nous décidions du sort de cette question.

M. Wickliffe—Je suis opposé à ce que le bill soit pris en considération dans ce moment. Nous devons nous occuper de l'ordre du jour régulier.

M. Todd—Je crois qu'il faudrait statuer sur la question aussitôt que possible. La raison qui m'a déterminé à voter comme je l'ai fait, est que je désirais ne pas aller à l'encontre d'une disposition constitutionnelle.

Le bill, conçu dans les termes suivants est pris en considération.

Section 1re. Il est décrété par l'assemblée générale de l'Etat de la Louisiane, que le bureau des travaux publics établi par les articles cent trente, cent trente-et-un, cent trente-deux, cent trente-trois et cent trente-quatre est par le présent aboli.

M. King demande l'adoption de la première section.

M. Wickliffe demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans, Kittridge, King, Lewis, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, Rivers, Thériot, Todd et Wickliffe—15 oui.

Et MM. Burthe, Dupré, Hodge, Kenner, Lacoste, McCay, Nichols, Palfrey, Short, Slack et Taylor—11 non.

Conséquemment, la majorité des trois quarts requise par la Constitution n'existant pas pour l'adoption de la première section, le bill est repoussé.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Acte pour dessécher et égoutter les terres de marais ou inondées, concédées à l'Etat de la Louisiane par le Congrès.

Acte pour améliorer et dessécher les terres marécageuses et inondées, données à l'Etat de la Louisiane par acte du Congrès intitulé : Acte pour aider l'Etat de la Louisiane à dessécher les terres marécageuses qui s'y trouvent. Approuvé le 2 mars 1849.

Sect. 1. Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentants de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en assemblée générale, que l'Etat sera divisé en trois districts de dessèchements et levées.

Sect. 2. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; que toute cette partie de l'Etat au Sud du trente et unième degré de latitude Nord et à l'Ouest du Mississipi, formera le premier district; toute cette partie au Sud du trente-et-unième degré de latitude Nord, et à l'Ouest du Mississipi formera le second district; et toute cette partie de l'Etat au Nord du trente-et-unième degré de latitude Nord, et à l'Ouest du Mississipi—comprenant la paroisse des Avoyelles—formera le troisième district.

Sect. 3. Il est de plus décrété, &c., que le gouverneur nommera un commissaire pour chaque district; chaque commissaire devra demeurer dans le district pour lequel il est nommé. Les trois commissaires ainsi constitués seront connus sous le nom de Commissaires des terres marécageuses. Ils garderont cette place pendant deux années, et jusqu'à ce que leurs successeurs soient entrés en fonctions.

Sect. 4. Il est de plus décrété, &c., que le gouverneur aura le droit de remplir toute vacance causée dans ledit Conseil des Commissaires, par un cas de mort, par de démission au autrement.

Sect. 5.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Que chacun des dits commissaires, avant d'entrer dans ses fonctions, donnera à l'Etat de la Louisiane une obligation de cinq mille piastres souscrite par deux cautions : laquelle obligation devra être approuvee par le secrétaire d'Etat, la dite obligation devra répondre de l'accomplissement fidèle des devoirs du commissaire, et le secrétaire d'Etat recevra de lui le serment prescrit par la Constitution.

Sect. 6.—Il est est de plus décrété, etc., Que le dit conseil des commissaires se réunira à Bâton Rouge, le premier lundi du mois de mai prochain, et tous les trois mois ensuite, ou plus souvent s'ils le jugent nécessaire.

Sect. 7.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Que les dits commissaires seront par le présent acte, autorisés à faire tous les statuts et règles qu'ils croiront nécessaires pour leur propre organisation; ils choisiront l'un d'entre eux pour président, et auront un secrétaire qui tiendra un journal de leurs opérations, et auquel il ne sera pas alloué plus de cinq cents piastres par an.

Sect 8.—Il est de plus decrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir des dits commissaires, à leur première réunion, et tous les deux ans après, de nommer un ingénieur compétent pour chacun des dits districts, lequel gardera son emploi pendant deux années et sera sujet, cependant à être renvoyé en tout temps par une majorité des commissaires, pour cause de négligence dans l'accomplissement de ses devoirs.

Sect. 9.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Que chacun des dits ingénieurs recevra pour ses services le salaire de trois mille piastres par an.

Sect. 10.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir des dits ingénieurs dans leurs districts respectifs, de déterminer l'endroit, l'étendue et les dimensions des levées et égoûts nécessaires pour dessécher et améliorer les terres marécageuses de l'Etat.

Sect. 11.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir de chacun des dits ingénieurs de diviser son district en wards de levées et dessèchement, de déterminer la grandeur des levées à faire, les réparations nécessaires à celles qui existent, la distance à laquelle elles doivent être des rivières ou bayous, et des canaux à dessécher et de faire l'estimation du coût de ces dits ouvrages, pour en faire un rapport détaillé aux dits commissaires aussitôt qu'ils le desireront.

Sect 12.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir des commissaires, de nommer un inspecteur pour chaque arrondissement de levée, de lui prescrire ses devoirs et de fixer sa compensation.

Sect. 13.—Il est de plus decrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir de chacun des dits ingénieurs, après la formation des districts de levées et de dessèchement, de donner au rabais la construction ou la réparation desdites levées ou canaux, comme l'ordonneront les commissaires, après trente jours d'avis dans une gazette, publiée dans la paroisse dans laquelle l'ouvrage est à faire; s'il n'existe pas de gazette dans cette paroisse, alors par des avis posés dans trois endroits publics de la dite paroisse; les dits ouvrages seront délivrés à un prix stipulé de tant par yard cube, pourvu que les ingenieurs soient autorises à rejeter toutes les offres quand ils les croiront déraisonnables, ou que les parties sont incompétentes, ou les cautions insuffisantes.

Sect. 14—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir de chacun des dits ingénieurs d'exiger de toute personne qui entreprendra tout ouvrage conformément à cet acte, une obligation avec caution, pour la fidèle exécution du dit ouvrage entrepris, la dite obligation devant être d'une somme égale à la valeur probable des services qui peuvent être rendus, et payable aux commissaires et recouvrable par devant toute cour competente de l'Etat, et quand elle sera recouvrée elle devra constituer une partie des fonds provenant des terres marécageuses.

Sect 15—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'il sera du devoir des dits ingenieurs d'exiger que toutes les levées et réparations soient complétées vers le premier lundi de décembre de chaque année.

Sect. 16.—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Que les ingénieurs et en cas d'absence des dits ingénieurs, les inspecteurs soient autorisés, dans tous les arrondissemens de levées, à faire travailler pendant les hautes eaux aux levees qui y sont situées, tous esclaves mâles au-dessus de l'âge de seize ans et au dessous de soixante, où autant qu'ils en jugeront nécessaires; et quand le propriétaire du dit esclave ou esclaves, ou son agent son économe, refusera ou négligera de fournir les esclaves demandés par l'ingénieur ou l'inspecteur, alors dans ce cas, le dit propriétaire paiera cinq piastres par jour pour chaque esclave qui ne sera pas envoyé sur demande, ledit montant sera dû aux dits commissaires et recouvrable en leur nom pardevant toute cour compétente et payable au trésorier de l'Etat et devra constituer une partie du fonds des terres marécageuses.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 17. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Qu'il sera du devoir des dits ingénieurs, autant que possible, de surveiller la construction et la reparation de toutes les levées et canaux de leurs districts respectifs, d'établir le coût des dits travaux lorsqu'ils seront achevés, en divisant le compte par items et mentionnant le nom des différentes personnes auxquelles des différentes sommes seront dues, et de certifier le dit compte pour les commissaires.

Sect. 18. Il est de plus décrété, &c., que tout ouvrage fait et toutes dépenses faites d'après cet acte, seront payés par les commissaires de tout argent du trésor de l'Etat provenant de la vente des terres marécageuses.

Sect 19. Il est de plus décrété, &c., que les commissaires, sur le certificat d'un ingénieur qu'une certaine somme est due à un individu, spécifiant l'ouvrage qui a été fait, devront tirer leur mandat sur l'auditeur des comptes publics en faveur de toute personne ou personnes pour le montant dû, payable des fonds des terres marécageuses et sur la présentation du dit mandat à l'auditeur, il devra donner son mandat sur le trésorier pour le dit montant, s'il y a des fonds destinés à ce paiement ; mais s'il n'y a pas de fonds au trésor destinés au paiement des mandats tirés par les commissaires, alors il sera du devoir de l'auditeur d'en dosser chaque mandat non payé pour manque de fonds et de signer ledit endossement.

Sect. 20. Il est de plus décrété, &c., que les dits mandats, lorsqu'ils seront endossés par l'auditeur, ainsi qu'il est prescrit dans la section précédente, porteront huit pour cent d'intérêt à partir de la date jusqu'à leur paiement.

Sect. 21. Il est de plus décrété, &c., que toutes dépenses occasionnées par les dispositions de cet acte seront payées par l'auditeur sur le mandat des commissaires, pourvu qu'aucun mandat ne soit payé à moins qu'il ne soit signé par une majorité des commissaires.

Sect. 22. Il est de plus décrété, &c, que chacun des dits commissaires recevra pour ses services une compensation de quinze cents piastres [$1,500] par an.

Sect. 23. Il est de plus décrété, &c., qu'il sera du devoir de chacun des dits commissaires de surveiller la conduite des ingénieurs de son district, et d'examiner tous les travaux faits ou à faire, suivant les dispositions de cet acte.

Sect. 24. Il est de plus décrété, &c, Que le 1er janvier de chaque année, les commissaires feront au gouverneur de l'Etat, le rapport de leurs travaux officiels, et recommanderont l'adoption de tels moyens qui leur paraitront nécessaires pour protéger les terres d'alluvion contre les inondations, et pour les dessécher et les améliorer.

Le gouverneur remettra leur rapport accompagné de son message à l'assemblée générale à chacune de ses sessions.

Sect. 25. Il est de plus décrété, &c, Que toutes dettes contractées et tous salaires payés pour services rendus, selon les dispositions de cet acte, seront acquittés par le produit de la vente des terres marécageuses; et les dettes contractées, d'après les clauses de cet acte, ne seront jamais payées par les fonds du trésor public excepté par ceux qui proviendront de la vente desdites terres.

Sect. 26. Il est de plus décrété, &c, Qu'aucun des dits commissaires, ou ingénieurs, ou autres agents employés par eux, ne pourra avoir un interêt dans les contrats faits d'après les dispositions de cet acte, sans encourir la peine d'être renvoyé de son emploi et de voir confisquer le montant qui pourrait lui être dû.

Sect. 27. Il est de plus décrété, &c, Qu'il sera du devoir des commissaires à leurs différentes réunions, d'ordonner que les ouvrages les plus importants soient faits avant les autres; et chaque commissaire, en cas de danger d'inondation dans une partie de son district, sera et est par le présent autorisé à employer, sur la recommandation de l'ingénieur de son district, tels moyens qui peuvent éloigner le danger et proteger les terres d'alluvion.

M. Griffin fait la motion que le bill soit de nouveau renvoyé au comité des terres et levees avec instruction d'amender la première section de manière à diviser le troisième district en deux, l'un depuis la vallée de la Rivière Rouge et tout le côté ouest de cette vallée, au nord du trente et unième degré de latitude nord, en y comprenant les paroisses des Rapides et des Avoyelles un district qui sera appelé le 3me district et de l'autre, le côté est de la vallée de la Rivière Rouge et au nord du trente et unième degré de latitude nord, un autre district qui sera appelé le quatrième district.

M. Wicliffe fait la motion de déposer indéfiniment sur le bureau cette motion et demande l'appel nominal.

M. Kenner.—Je ferai la motion d'effacer.....

M. Wickliffe (l'interrompant), Le Senateur n'est pas à l'ordre.

M. Kenner.—Si le but du Sénateur en faisant la motion de déposer sur le bureau est de mettre fin au débat je voterai contre sa motion quoique j'eusse voté en faveur s'il avait eu toute autre intention.

M. Wicliffe.—La raison pour laquelle j'ai fait cette motion, est que je désire terminer au plus tôt les affaires

M. Kenner.—Ce que nous devons surtout nous proposer c'est de faire de bonne besogne et non de courir la poste.

La motion de déposer sur le bureau est perdue.

La motion de référer de nouveau au comité étant mise aux voix, le résultat est comme suit:

Oui—MM. Burthe, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Patterson, Rivers, Short et Wickliffe—14.

Non—MM. Beatner, Dupré, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Neal, Nicholas, Palfrey, Slack, Taylor, Thériot et Todd—13.

La motion est donc perdue

M. Hodge—Je fais la motion de référer le bill au comité sur les améliorations intérieures. Les raisons pour lesquelles je fais cette motion sont celles-ci : Le Sénat a ce matin refusé, par un vote direct, d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics. Il serait donc inutile d'adopter le bill sous sa forme actuelle, puisqu'il est impossible de réconsidérer la première section, laquelle est en opposition à un article de la Constitution. Cette section fixe à trois le nombre des commissaires, tandis que la Constitution fixe ce nombre à quatre. Les devoirs imposés à ces commissaires par le bill sont les mêmes que leur imposait la Constitution. Ces commissaires sont donc exactement les mêmes. Il serait superflu d'adopter aujourd'hui ce bill, puisque demain nous pouvons être appelés à passer un autre bill organisant le bureau des travaux publics.

Je puis dire cependant que je n'ai aucune objection aux détails de ce bill. Il y en a un du moins, là, sur mon bureau, que je suis disposé à soutenir. Mais je ne desire pas faire une chose inutilement, violer la Constitution, enfreindre ses prévisions. Je ne désire pas faire aujourd'hui ce que demain il faudra peut-être défaire.

M. Short—Je suis opposé à ce qu'on réfère ce bill à tout autre comité que celui entre les mains duquel il a deja passé. J'y suis opposé pour plusieurs raisons, entre autres celle-ci, que ce serait ajourner indefiniment notre action sur cette question qui est de la plus haute importance. Un senateur, que je croyais favorable à cette mesure, a dit ici que ce bill est imparfait. A la Chambre basse, où l'Etat tout entier est represente et où la volonté du peuple est reflétée directement, le bill a passé et trois votes seulement ont été donnés contre. Au Sénat, au contraire, on s'y oppose depuis la première jusqu'à la dernière section. L'objection constitutionnelle est que les commissaires devraient correspondre au bureau des travaux publics tel que l'établit la Constitution. Pour placer ce bill hors de l'atteinte de cette objection, il a déja été pourvu à ce que le bureau qu'il établit sera remplacé par celui qui doit être organisé en vertu de la Constitution, ce qui exemptera le fonds des terres en marais des frais de deux bureaux. Je n'entends pas dire que d'après la Constitution les levées fassent partie des travaux publics. Quels statuts montrent que ce soit ainsi ? N'ont-elles pas toujours été construites au moyen de capitaux privés ? Assurément elles l'ont été. Que dit la Constitution ? Prescrit-elle que les levées devront être comprises au nombre des travaux publics ? Non, monsieur, cela ne se trouve dans aucune partie de la Constitution.

Digitized by Google

M. Kenner—J'appellerai l'attention du sénateur sur l'article 137 de la Constitution.

M. Short—Quand donc les terres et levées ont-elles fait partie de notre système d'améliorations intérieures. Je soutiens, moi, que cela n'a jamais été. Supposes que ces commissaires soient nommés. Leur seul devoir sera d'aviser aux meilleurs moyens d'appliquer le fonds des terres marécageuses au but auquel il est destiné. Leur devoir et leurs pouvoirs se bornent à cela.

Mais pour placer le bill au-dessus de toute objection de constitutionalité, quelque soit le terrain sur lequel on voudrait la poser, nous avons, comme je l'ai dit plus haut, pourvu à ce que les pouvoirs de ce bureau soient transférés à l'autre aussitôt qu'il aura été organisé. Certes cela devrait rassurer ceux qui sont affligés de la maladie des doutes et des scrupules au sujet de la Constitution; cela devrait faire taire leurs objections. Mais quand élires vous le bureau à la création duquel pourvoit la Constitution ? Sera-ce en novembre prochain ? Vous ne le pouvez guère avant ce temps. Le comité sur les améliorations intérieures a-t-il rapporté un bill pour l'organisation de ce bureau ? Nous savons tous qu'il ne l'a pas fait Loin de prendre des mesures pour arriver à une conclusion comme celle-là, voilà que nous avons enfin voté contre l'organisation de ce bureau, nous avons voté sa destruction et cette motion a obtenu la majorité, quoiqu'elle n'ait pas rallié le nombre de votants requis par la Constitution. Lorsque le vote est si nombreux en faveur de la destruction de ce bureau, comment pourrez-vous l'organiser ? Qu'on réponde à cette question. Consentirez-vous à laisser oisives dans les coffres et ne rapportant aucun intérêt à l'Etat, les $200,000 que vous avez en mains ? Cela ne serait bien certainement pas agir en législateurs prudents et sages. En ce moment où nous discutons encore sur cette question les eaux montent et le puys est exposé au danger des crevasses et des inondations. Souffrirez-vous cela ? Contemplerez-vous les bras croisés ce spectacle désolant sans rien faire pour prévenir le mal ? Est-ce pour cela, je vous le demande, que nous avons été envoyés ici.

M. le Président, notre position actuelle me rappelle ce général célèbre qui monta avec 20,000 hommes sur des hauteurs et redescendit aussitot Nous sommes montes sur les hauteurs, de la nous avons embrassé d'un coup-d'œil les quatre points de l'horizon et voilà que nous nous mettons en marche pour redescendre, peut-être pour aller beaucoup plus bas que le point d'où nous étions partis. Ce ne sont pas des paroles mais des faits; des travaux et non des mots qu'il faudrait. Les discours ne signifient rien. Je ne m'occupe ici que des actes des sénateurs et non de leurs motifs. Les premiers sont sous les yeux du monde entier, les autres enfouis, au fond de leurs cœurs, ne sont connus que d'eux-mêmes. Je puis avoir le droit d'attaquer les uns, quoique je ne puisse me permettre de faire allusion aux autres. Eh bien ! jugeant d'après les actes des sénateurs, je ne puis arriver qu'à cette seule conclusion qu'ils ne desirent pas terminer cette question. Depuis trois semaines nous nous en occupons tous les jours, et pourtant il n'a encore été rien fait. N'étant moi-même membre de ce corps que depuis peu de temps, et n'ayant pas une très grande expérience législative," je suivrai l'exemple de ceux qui ont fait la motion de référer de nouveau le bill a un comité. Ce bill a été entre les mains des comités trois ou quatre semaines deja, et pourtant malgré toute l'importance de la question, à l'exception de quelques membres, deux ou trois tout au plus, aucun n'a assisté aux seances, n'a pris la moindre part au débat. Le sénateur qui a fait la motion est celui à la suggestion duquel deux membres additionnels ont été nommés de ce comité. Est-il jamais venu aux séances du comite ! a-t-il présenté aucune idée, soumis aucun plan ? A-t-il enfin employé a nous éclairer les lumières de sa haute expérieuce ? Qu'il réponde lui-même, l'a-t-il jamais fait ?

M. Griffin.—Le sénateur fait-il allusion à moi ?

M. Short.—Je fais allusion au sénateur qui a présenté la motion de referer de nouveau à un comité, empêchant ainsi que cette question fut réglée d'une fois. D'où vient donc, je le demande, ce zèle tout nouveau que l'on fait paraitre pour ce bill ? D'un autre côté, pourquoi le debat est-il suspendu par le sénateur même de qui j'espérais l'offre d'une main amie et non d'une main hostile prête à frapper et à détruire ? Que ceux qui agissent ici, prennent sur eux la responsabilite de la défaite du bill, pour moi je ne m'en charge pas.

Je sais que cette question n'est pas intéressante, je sais qu'elle est aride et ne prête pas aux grands déploiemens d'éloquence et de fleurs de rhétorique, mais elle n'en est pas moins de la plus haute importance. J'ai remarque déjà plusieurs fois que lorsque le mot de "levées" est prononcé ici, il produit sur le Sénat l'effet que produirait le titre d'une histoire ou d'un conte qui aurait été raconté trois ou quatre fois. Si vous en êtes las, eh bien ! débarrasses vous en donc d'une manière qui soit avantageuse pour l'Etat et qui vous fasse honneur à vous-mêmes.

M. Wickliffe demande que la motion soit déposée indéfiniment sur le bureau et demande l'appel nominal.

M. M. Clifton, Derbès, Evans. Griffin, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Theriot et Wickliffe— 16 votent dans l'affirmative.

Et MM. Boatner, Burthe, Dupré, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Nichols, Slack, Taylor et Todd— 10 votent dans la négative.

Conséquemment la motion de déposer prévaut.

M. King.—Jai quelques remarques à faire sur cette Section. Je ne pense pas qu'elle puisse avoir un effet avantageux. Elle aurait pour résultat de placer toutes les levees de la Louisiane sous lecontrôle de l'Etat. Je ne suis pas en faveur d'un pareil système. Il y a eu un moment quinze cents ou deux mille milles de levées dans la Louisiane. Devons-nous placer cette étendue énorme de levées sous le controle de l'Etat, quand nous n'avons que $200,000 dont nous puissions disposer ? Un pareil système aurait pour effet, non de nous protéger, mais de nous priver de la protection dont nous jouissons. Mon opinion, et je pense qu'elle est conforme au bon sens et à la sagesse, mon opinion est que nous devons dépenser judicieusement et pour le plus grand avantage possible, l'argent dont nous pouvons disposer. Mais nous ne devons pas nous charger de la surveillance de tous les syndics et du controle de toutes les levées de l'Etat. Nous avons déjà une grande étendue de levées construites. Nous n'avons rien à voir à ces levées. Faisons ce que nous pouvons pour les augmenter, et laissons les autorités locales exercer les mêmes pouvoirs qu'elles exercent aujourd'hui. N'allons pas tromper le peuple en lui faisant croire qu'ils n'a rien à redouter du moment où ils est sous le contrôle de l'Etat. Les eaux du Mississipi ne se riraient pas moins d'une faible levée parce qu'au lieu d'être sous la juridiction des autorités locales. elle se trouverait soumise au pouvoir d'un ingenieur, ou d'un inspecteur de l'Etat. Je ne voudrais pas voir le peuple s'aveugler au point de penser qu'il n'a plus à travailler à se proteger lui-même. S'il venait à concevoir une pareille opinion, le bill au lieu de tourner à son profit deviendrait une cause de ruine.

Sur motion de M. Kenner, les mots « résidant dans le District,» sont insérés dans la 12me section à la seconde ligne, entre les mots «inspecteur» et «pour,» et sur motion de M. King, les mots « quand ils le jugeront nécessaire,» sont insérés dans la même section et la même ligne, entre les mots « commissaires et de »

M. Rivers propose la clause restrictive suivante :

« Bien entendu que cette section ne devra pas recevoir une interpretation qui porte atteinte au pouvoir qu'aux termes des lois existantes les juris de police des différentes paroisses ont de nommer les inspecteurs et de fixer leur salaire. »

M. Kenner.—Je crois que toute la section repose sur un principe faux, mais je n'ose proposer de l'effacer de peur d'être accusé de vouloir entraver la marche du bill. Je suis entièrement de l'opinion du senateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M. King], et j'adopte les observations qu'il a faites. Je pense avec lui que nous allons trop étendre notre contrôle ; que nous nous chargeons d'un fardeau trop pensant. Je voterai avec plaisir pour la clause proposée par le sénateur de Concordia [M. Rivers], attendu que je pense qu'elle équivaut virtuellement au rappel de la section.

Digitized by Google

M. Martin.—Il me semble que la clause ne répond pas à l'objection : quand on saura que les commissaires de l'Etat ont le pouvoir de nommer les inspecteurs de levées et de régler leurs salaires, les juris de police de manqueront pas de négliger ce devoir. De cette façon, l'Etat aura la charge de toutes les levées, et nous nous verrons ramenés au véritable état de choses dont se plaint le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M. King]. Je n'ai pas de doute que les paroisses ne négligeassent de nommer des syndics, et conséquemment la clause deviendrait inutile.

M. Rivers. Certainement les commissaires ne voudraient pas nommer des inspecteurs lorsque ces officiers l'auraient déjà été par les autorités de la paroisse. Dans ma paroisse nous avons douze inspecteurs, et nous n'en voulons pas davantage. Ce que nous désirons, c'est que le pouvoir discrétionnaire soit laissé aux autorités locales, que les inspecteurs soit soumis à la loi générale et en dépendent.

M. Mouton.—La section donne aux commissaires le pouvoir de nommer les inspecteurs. L'amendement du sénateur de Concordia [M. Rivers], porte que les autorités de paroisse pourront exercer ce pouvoir si elles le veulent. Eh bien ! je soutiens avec le sénateur d'Assumption [M. Martin], qu'ils n'exerceront pas ce pouvoir, s'ils savent que les commissaires peuvent remplir ce devoir, au cas où ils ne feraient pas de nomination Ils s'en reposeront de ce soin sur l'Etat. Ainsi, la clause du sénateur ne répond pas à l'objection que soulève la section, objections qui, dans mon opinion, sont bien fondées.

M. Hodge.—Si je comprends bien, tout ce que nous avons à faire est de nommer des personnes compétentes pour prendre charge du fonds des terres marécageuses et de faire emploi de ce fonds. Toutes les sections de l'Etat ont un intérêt égal dans ce fonds. L'emploi de cette argent intéresse toutes les différentes parties de l'Etat. Je pense qu'en adoptant un système général, l'Etat ne doit pas porter atteinte aux droits des paroisses, droits dont elles ont toujours joui, pas plus que je ne pense que les officiers de l'Etat ne doivent être placés sous le contrôle des paroisses. Mais pouvez-vous forcer les paroisses à nommer des inspecteurs ? Non certainement. Si elles négligent ou refusent de le faire, vous n'avez pas les moyens de les y forcer, Je suis par conséquent opposé à ce conflit d'autorité chaque fois que ces devoirs ont été accomplis par les habitants ou les autorités d'une paroisse. Je ne désire imposer au peuple d'aucune partie de l'Etat un système qui peut lui répugner. Mais lorsque certaines paroisses refusent ou négligent de nommer des inspecteurs, il peut être nécessaire que les commissaires se chargent de ce soin. C'est-là un sujet qui regarde à proprement parler l'Etat. Ce fonds appartient à l'Etat ; il provient de terres concédées à l'Etat. L'emploi de ce fonds ne doit pas être laissé aux paroisses. Je vis dans une paroisse dont les terres sont élevées, et qui est peu exposée aux inondations.— Mais nous avons autant de droits à ces fonds que les paroisses dont les terres sont basses. La paroisse de Concordia n'a pas le droit de réclamer le contrôle exclusif d'aucune partie de ces fonds. Je n'ai pas d'objection à ce que les paroisses fassent les fonds nécessaires aux dépenses qui les intéressent en particulier ; mais, lorsque l'Etat a des officiers incompétents pour diriger l'emploi de ces fonds, je ne veux pas qu'ils leur soient adandonnés.

M. Clifton présente comme substitut à la 12 section et aux amendements proposés, la section suivante :

Sect. 12. (Substitut). Il est, &c., Que les inspecteurs de levées nommés par les parties respectives seront sous les ordres de l'ingénieur de District; bien entendu que cette section n'aura pas pour effet de rappeler les ordonnances sur les levees et les ordonnances des jurys de police actuellement en force.

Le substitut est adopté.

Sur motion de M. Kenner les mots « ou canaux » de la 13e section ; 4e ligne, sont effacés et la section est adoptée avec cet amendement.

Le Sénat passe à la section 14.

M. King. — Je crois que l'obligation requise par cette section est trop considerable. Elle ne devrait s'élever qu'à une somme suffisante pour garantir l'exécution du travail.

M. Kenner. — La section doit, à mon avis, rester telle qu'elle est. Si une crevasse avait lieu par la faute ou la négligence d'un officier, des centaines de familles se verraient sans asile.

Sur motion de M. King. les mots « ou suffisante pour assurer l'exécution du travail, » sont insérés dans la section 14, ligne 7, après les mots- « valeur des services rendus, » et la section est adoptée avec cet amendement.

M. King fait la motion d'insérer dans la section 15, 2de ligne, après les mots « ingénieurs d'exiger que toutes les » ceux-ci « entreprises pour la construction de. » Cette motion est adoptée.

La section est adoptée avec cet amendement.

M. Kenner fait la motion d'effacer le mot «décembre» et d'insérer «novembre» dans la même section, troisième ligne.

M. Kenner—La rivière a déjà généralement monté vers le mois de décembre, et si les levées n'ont pas été achevées quelque temps avant cette époque, elles courent grand risque d'être enlevées. Les jurys de police exigent que les levées soient faites en novembre. Quelques personnes pensent qu'il serait même préférable qu'elles le fussent au mois d'octobre. Il est nécessaire que les levées se soient consolidées, après qu'elles ont été construites pour résister à la force du fleuve. Quand il s'est écoulé quelque temps entre l'époque où elles ont été construites et celle où la rivière monte, elles peuvent supporter une pression plus forte qu'elles ne le pourraient immédiatement après leur achèvement.

M. King—Je préférerai que le Sénat fixât le terme au mois de décembre, pour donner aux entrepreneurs le temps de terminer leurs travaux.

M. Kenner—Ce n'est pas là une question de préférence, c'est une question de sûreté. Nous désirons faire une bonne loi; cet amendement ne peut que l'améliorer. Je ne le présente pas pour la convenance des hommes qui bâtissent des levées, mais dans l'intérêt de la sécurité publique. C'est cet intérêt que nous devons consulter, non l'intérêt d'entrepreneurs et de spéculateurs.

L'amendement est adopté.

Sur motion de M. Kenner, le mots de la 16me section, 4me et 5me lignes «pendant les hautes eaux» sont effacés et les mots «en cas de crevasse ou de danger de crevasse» sont insérés.

M. Kenner présente l'amendement suivant : Après les mots «qu'ils en jugeront nécessaire» inserer «dans une distance de cinq milles de l'endroit où le danger existe.

M. Taylor propose un amendement à cet amendement qui consiste à insérer «sept milles» ; cet amendement est adopté.

M. Burthe propose d'amender l'amendement de M. Kenner en insérant ces mots «sur le même côté de la rivière ou du bayou» ; la proposition est adoptée.

L'amendement de M Kenner est adopté après avoir subi ces différents sous-amendements.

M. Kenner propose un amendement à la même section 16, ayant pour objet d'accorder au propriétaire une indemnité de une piastre et demie par jour pour chaque esclave mis en réquisition, et faisant un devoir à l'ingénieur d'adresser la réquisition à tous les propriétaires d'esclaves dans la distance voulue et d'exiger un nombre d'esclaves proportionnel à leurs différents ateliers.

M. Kenner ne croit pas que $1 50 soit trop. Les crevasses arrivent généralement au printemps et à cette époque la journée d'un nègre vaut cinq de ses journées au printemps.

M. King pense que les habitants ne peuvent rien réclamer. Les travaux pour lesquels leurs nègres sont mis en réquisition ne sont destinés qu'à les protéger.

M. Short exprime la même opinion.

M. Hodge propose d'ajouter à la fin de l'amendement de M. Kenner ces mots «Bien entendu que les mêmes esclaves ne seront pas employés plus de dix jours dans le même mois.»

M. Lacoste dit qu'il faut plus de deux ou trois semaines pour arrêter une crevasse. Si l'on retire un

Digitized by Google

médiatement les esclaves jamais une crevasse ne pourra être bouchée

M. King présente la clause suivante :

« Pourvu que les dispositions de cette section ne s'appliquent qu'aux cas où les travaux auront été autorisés par l'ingénieur.

M. King.—Je veux que le paiement soit restreint aux cas où les nègres auront été mises réquisition par les officiers de l'état. Si cette section passe telle qu'elle est actuellement présentée ; les fonds provenant des terres marécageuses seront dilapidés. Nous devons repousser une proposition dont les effets doivent être si déplorables.

M. Wickliffe.—La clause proposée par le Sénateur n'est pas à l'ordre, parce qu'elle est en contradiction avec l'esprit du bill. Aux termes du bill, les inspecteurs auront le pouvoir de mettre en réquisition les esclaves toutes les fois qu'ils le jugeront convenable. D'après cela, il est évident que l'Etat se charge de tous les travaux.

M. King.—Chaque fois qu'une crevasse surviendra, et qu'un habitant emploiera ses nègres à l'arrêter ou chaque fois qu'une levée doit être construite ou agrandie ou raffermie, les planteurs viendront demander la paie de leurs nègres, cette paie devra sortir des fonds des terres marécageuses. Je suis entièrement opposé à un pareil système.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, les deux clauses restrictives sont déposées sur le bureau.

La 16me section est alors adoptée avec les amendements.

La 17me section est adoptée.

M. Kenner propose d'ajouter à la fin de la 18me section les mots suivants :

« Bien entendu que les sommes provenant de la vente des terres marecageuses et inondées seront divisées entre les différents districts dans les proportions suivantes, savoir :

Au premier District, deux huitièmes.
Au second District, trois huitièmes.
Au troisième do do do

M. Kenner dit qu'il faut prouver au peuple que l'intention des commissaires n'est pas de dépenser tout cet argent, chacun dans l'interêt de son propre district. Il croit que la division est aussi équitable que possible.

M. Short dit que le troisième district est très étendu. Il comprend la paroisse d'Avoyelles et des Rapides. La repartition proposé par le sénateur d'Ascension est injuste. Le sénateur de Concordia est peut-être disposé à s'y soumettre ; mais, dit M. Short, j'en appelle à vous tous ; je vous demande si cette division est équitable, quand vous réfléchissez que toutes les terres situées sur la Rivière-Rouge sont sujettes aux inondations, et qu'une grande partie de celles qui se trouvent au bord de la Rivière Rouge sont dans la même position. Sa division ne devrait pas se faire par rapport à l'étendue géographique du District, mais par rapport à la topographie du pays, l'étendue des levées à construire dans chaque District, et la convenance des habitants en général. Dans mon District, l'étendue des levées est le double de ce qu'il est dans le reste de l'Etat. Je suis persuadé que lorsque vous aurez réfléchi, vous repousserez cette proposition.

M. Kenner—Je n'admets pas comme fait ce qu'a dit le sénateur. Je ne crois pas que l'étendue des levées à faire dans son District soit aussi considérable que dans le reste de l'Etat. Dans mon opinion le Second District est le plus considérable de l'Etat en ce qui concerne les levées. Il comprend non-seulement la rive droite du fleuve, mais aussi Lafourche. Une distribution équitable serait celle qui accorderait 2/8 au District de ce côté de la rivière, 2/8 au District du sénateur, et 3/8 au District situé sur l'autre côté du fleuve.

M. Short—Dans mon calcul je comprends les deux bords de la Rivière-Rouge et toute la partie de l'Etat situé au nord de la Rivière Rouge Notre représentation dans la Législature est trop faible pour que nous puissions placer notre espoir autre part que dans le sentiment de justice qui anime mes collègues. Je demande au membre de Concordia (M. Rivers) ce qu'il croit être une division équitable.

M. Rivers demande que la division soit faite ainsi que suit :

Au Premier District quatre seizièmes.
Au Second « cinq «
Au Troisième « sept «

M. Kenner—Je vois par les rapports qui ont été présentés à ce sujet que ce chiffre mettra le premier District à 200 milles de levées, le second 570 et le troisième environ 400. En faisant la division nous devons considérer non l'étendue géographique des Districts, mais la longueur des levées.

M. Short—Je ne base pas mes calculs sur l'étendue territoriale des districts.

M. Hodge—Le sénateur d'Ascension doit se tromper. Il y a plus de 400 milles de levées sur la rivière Rouge seule. A partir des terres hautes jusqu'a l'embouchure de la rivière, il y a 500 milles ; puis nous avons la rive occidentale du Mississippi au dessus de la rivière Rouge, les deux rives du Ouachita et tous les bayous si nombreux dans cette région. Mais il y a encore d'autres considérations qu'il faut mettre en ligne de compte. Cette donation de terres n'a pas été faite à l'Etat dans le seul intérêt des populations qui possèdent des terres situées le long du Mississippi, ou des individus qui ont des terres déjà en culture. S'il en était ainsi, il nous faudrait employer jusqu'au dernier sou de ces fonds pour l'avantage des terres qui sont situées sur les bords du Mississippi. Mais je ne crois pas que telle fût l'intention du gouvernement, en faisant la donation. Ces fonds devaient être appliqués à la construction de nouvelles levées et a l'amélioration des terres qui sont aujourd'hui impropres à la culture. J'espère que les sénateurs ne seront pas guidés par des motifs sectionnels ou par un sentiment de partialité pour la paroisse dans laquelle ils résident. Qu'ils ne consultent que la loi et l'intention qu'avait le Congrès en faisant cette concession, et qu'ils repoussent toute autre influence.

L'amendement de M. Rivers est déposé sur le bureau.

La section est adoptée avec l'amendement.

La section 19e est alors prise en considération.

M. Kenner. — Si notre intention est de nous borner à la question d'argent dépensé ou à dépenser, il est inutile que nous allions plus loin que cette section. J'y suis formellement opposé en principe et je n'approuve aucun de ses détails. Nous avons maintenant en disponibilité $220,000 du fonds des terres en marais, lesquelles s'élèveront encore, suivant tous les calculs, à $400,000 dans le courant de l'année prochaine. Lorsque le bureau aura dépensé $400,000 cela sera suffisant pour payer le système que nous sommes sur le point d'adopter. Il sera plus que temps après cela de penser à travailler sur du crédit. Jusque-là, jusqu'à ce que nous soyons convaincus que l'argent dépensé servira à bien, $400,000 sont amplement suffisantes pour tout l'ouvrage que nous aurons à faire. Je crois que ce serait une très grande amélioration au bill que de supprimer toute cette section, en un mot de ne rien faire à crédit.

M. Short. — Je suis opposé à ce qu'on supprime cette section pour la raison suivante, que l'objet de ce bill ne serait plus rempli. Craint-on maintenant qu'on ne fasse trop de levees ? Qu'on n'emploie trop de travailleurs ? Que nos dépenses ne soient trop augmentees ? S'il en est ainsi, je dois adresser mes compliments aux senateurs qui veulent aujourd'hui détruire toute l'efficacité de ce bill en en enlevant la section la plus importante Ils sont logiques, ils sont conséquents avec eux-mêmes. Qu'ils ne soient donc pas si timides, qu'ils ne craignent pas que l'Etat se jette inconsidérément en dettes. Une des sections du bill défend qu'aucun mandat ne soit émis jusqu'à ce que l'ouvrage ne soit entièrement terminé.

Si donc aucun défaut existe le moyen est là tout près d'y remédier. On a cru devoir insérer cette section à cause des objections qui avaient été faites au système des emprunts. Un plan a été proposé par lequel deux millions de piastres devaient être empruntées et sécurités données sur les terres en marais pour le paiement de cette dette. Quelques sénateurs furent choqués de cette proposition comme d'une monstruosité ; ils manifestèrent un tel étonnement, qu'en vérité on aurait pu croire que jamais auparavant ils n'avaient entendu prononcer le mot emprunt. Ils semblaient ne pas comprendre un aussi vaste plan. On le réduisit alors de manière à ce qu'il correspondit au montant des fonds que nous avons en mains, et si cela n'est pas suffisant, les terres elles-mêmes sont engagées pour le paiement des travaux faits.

Digitized by Google

C'est grâce à ce moyen que l'Etat n'aura pas à contracter de dettes.

Je supplie les sénateurs qui représentent ici des districts de terres-hautes, de ne pas s'alarmer de ce système de mandats. Lorsqu'une crevasse aura été arrêtée, lorsqu'une levée aura été construite, lorsque les travaux seront complétement achevés, le contractant ira faire approuver son compte par l'auditeur. S'il n'y a pas d'argent, l'auditeur écrira tout simplement sur le dos du reçu «non payé à cause de manque de fonds» — Cela ne veut pas dire fonds de l'Etat, mais désigne seulement le fonds des terres en marais. De ce moment, ce compte devient un mandat et porte intérêt à raison de 8 pour cent par an.

Où donc est le danger de ce système ? Qu'y a-t-il là qui doive tant épouvanter les sénateurs ? Pourquoi donc alors entraver le bill. Pourquoi enlever au bureau ce qu'on dit être si bien le nerf de la guerre ? Si le sénateur insiste pour que des mandats ne soient pas émis pour une somme de plus de $500,000 au-delà de ce qui est dans le fonds des terres en marais, j'accepterai sa motion comme un compromis destiné à rassurer ceux que tourmente la peur, si les mandats devaient être émis avant que l'ouvrage ne fut achevé, je serais moi-même opposé à ce plan. Mais l'ouvrage doit être fait d'abord, et il n'y a par conséquent pas lieu à avoir peur. L'objet de ce bill est de protéger l'Etat contre l'inondation. Ce but doit être atteint, et les travaux nécessaires devront être faits d'une manière ou d'une autre. Vous avez entrepris une tâche, et vous ne devez pas laisser la charrue au milieu du sillon lorsque vous pouvez le finir.

M. Mouton.—Je suis opposé au système de crédit mais je sais que pour assurer le succès dans cette entreprise, il faut l'adopter jusqu'à un certain point.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le secrétaire du Sénat va demander le concours de la Chambre à un bill intitulé :

Acte pour changer le nom de Salomon Zuckar, et requérir la signature de l'Orateur à un acte pour venir au secours de la branche Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane à Bâton-Rouge.

Un acte créant une justice de paix et un constable additionnels dans et pour la paroisse des Rapides.

M. Derbès, du comité des enregistremens, rapporte, comme enregistrée convenablement, Une résolution relative à l'établissement d'une certaine malle-poste par le Congrès.

Le secrétaire est aussi chargé de demander la signature de l'orateur à la dite résolution.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eston, messager spécial de la chambre, demande le concours du Sénat aux bills suivants :

Acte pour punir les auteurs de toute tentative faite pour couper un raccourci sur toute rivière navigable de cet Etat.

Acte pour punir toute tentative qui serait faite pour endommager les levées de toute rivière navigable ou tout cours d'eau dans cet Etat.

Un acte révoquant un acte intitulé : acte pour empêcher que des particuliers ne fassent des raccourcis.

Un acte autorisant Rufus D. Killgore et sa femme Sarah C. Killgore à adopter Robert Bliss Read et à changer son nom en celui de Robert Read Killgore.

Un acte pourvoyant à la collecte des taxes sur les professions et métiers.

Un acte relatif à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Une résolution conjointe demandant au Congrès l'érection d'un hôpital de marine dans le district de Tèche de la Louisiane.

Et informe le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours, avec quelques amendements, au bill intitulé:

Acte amendant un acte pour le réglement uniforme des élections dans l'Etat de la Lonisiane, les paroisses d'Orléans et de Jefferson exceptées—approuvé le 1er juin 1846.

Il demande la signature du président aux bills suivants qui ont été enregistrés.

Acte pour l'établissement d'un séminaire d'instruction.

Acte pour incorporer l'Institut de Longwood dans la paroisse de Caddo.

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du Chemin plan chey de St-Joseph.

Acte pour incorporer l'Université du Mount-Liban.

Acte pour autoriser Antoine B. Dauterives et Marie Célestine Darby, sa femme, a disposer par acte de vente ou autrement, d'un certain lot de terre dans la paroisse de St-Martin.

Il informe le Sénat que l'Orateur a signé le bill intitulé.

Acte pour émanciper William T. Glasscock.

Puis le Sénat s'ajourne.

LUNDI, 21 mars 1853.

Le Sénat se réunit conformément à l'ajournement.

Rapports et Memoires adressés à la Legislature par les citoyens de la Paroisse de Carroll.

M. Short, membre de la majorité du comité spécial auquel avait été référé le mémoire adressé par certains citoyens de Carroll, présente le rapport suivant :

Les soussignés, membres du comité spécial auquel a été referé le mémoire de certains citoyens de la paroisse de Carroll, demandant le rappel d'un acte intitulé : «Acte pour constituer un District de levée, composé des paroisses de Madison, Carroll et Catahoula, approuvé le 18 de mars 1852, rapporte respectueusement,

Qu'il a pris en considération le dit mémoire, et qu'il n'a trouvé aucune raison qui milite en faveur du rappel du dit acte, et il exposera aussi brièvement que possible les raisons qui militent contre la demande qui vous est adressée.

Le premier motif que met en avant le mémoire, pour demander le rappel du dit acte, est qu'il est en opposition à l'article 127 de la Constitution de 1845, parce qu'il impose une taxe sur une partie de l'Etat et non pas sur la totalité ; tandis que l'article de la Constitution déclare que la taxe sera égale et conforme dans tout l'Etat.

La réponse à cet argument est que l'objet de la taxe est local et non général ; cette taxe est imposée dans le but de protéger les personnes taxées, elle pèse uniformément sur la propriété sur laquelle elle repose. La Cour Suprême a décidé, qu'en pareil cas, la taxe n'est pas une taxe d'Etat, et par conséquent ne viole pas l'article 127 de la Constitution.

Le second point est que le dit acte est inconstitutionnel, parce qu'il porte atteinte aux droits nés de contrats préexistants, en ceci : que lorsque les terres du District furent achetées, la loi de la Louisiane était que les propriétaires riverains feraient et maintiendraient en réparation des levées suffisantes pour protéger les campagnes contre l'inondation ; par suite de cette servitude, les propriétaires riverains eurent la permission d'acheter des terres à $1 25 cts par acre, terres qui, sous l'empire de la loi actuelle, vaudraient de 15 à 20 piastres.

De plus, par suite de cette servitude, ils furent autorisés par le Gouvernement général à acheter autant de terres dans le fond, qu'ils en avaient sur le devant, au prix minimum de $1 25 par acre ; c'est pourquoi la Législature n'a pas le droit, aujourd'hui, de relever ces propriétaires riverains des obligations qu'ils ont volontairement assumées, encore moins de rejeter ces obligations sur des personnes qui n'étaient point parties au contrat et qui n'ont pas reçu d'équivalent en retour de ces obligations.

Cet argument est faux et en fait et en droit

Il est vrai qu'à l'époque reculée de l'année 1770, sous l'empire des lois de l'Espagne ou des ordonnances d'O'Reilly, Gayose et Morales, les concessions de terres situées sur les bords de la rivière Mississippi, et d'autres rivières navigables, comprises dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, ont été faites à la condition que le cessionnaire ou propriétaire riverain entretiendrait une élévation ou levée suffisante pour protéger les terres contre les inondations de la rivière, et aussi un chemin de cinquante pieds de large sur la devantière. Ces règlements restèrent les mêmes sous les lois françaises et jusqu'à la date du 30 avril 1803.

Aux termes de ces traités les concessions complètes faites par les gouvernements espagnol et français n'ont reçu aucun changement ; et ceux qui avaient des droits incomplets purent les parfaire conformément aux lois des Etats-Unis.

Le droit de concession pour les terres du fonds donné à ces propriétaires par les actes du Congrès qui ont été passés à diverses époques depuis 1811 jusqu'au 15 de juin 1832, limitant ce droit d'acquisition par préférence en vertu duquel le propriétaire riverain pouvait acheter à $1 25 par acre autant de terre qu'il en possédait sur le devant, ce droit, disons-nous, fut limité à ceux qui possédaient des terres en vertu d'une concession espagnole ou française.

Digitized by Google

Et nous n'avons pas de doute que les motifs qui ont provoqué l'adoption de ces actes du Congrès relatifs aux concessions de terres du fond, étaient que le propriétaire avait à entretenir une levée et un chemin sur sa devanture.

En 1807, quand la première loi relative aux levées fut passée par le gouvernement territorial, la législature entreprit de forcer la construction des levées et les réparations des chemins par les propriétaires, sur le principe qu'ils étaient obligés à faire ces travaux. Tel fut le point de départ de cette législation d'Etat qui construisit soit directement soit indirectement, à l'aide des juris de police, à forcer le propriétaire riverain à entretenir une levée ou un chemin sur sa devanture, et à l'exproprier s'il manquait à cette obligation.

Cette législation était basée sur l'idée qu'il y avait une obligation imposée aux propriétaires riverains d'entretenir une levée et un chemin. Par suite la Législature entreprit de décider le mode dans lequel ces travaux seraient exécutés. Quand la Législature était dirigée par ce principe, c'était dans les premiers temps de l'histoire de la Louisiane, il y avait peu ou point d'habitants dans le district inondé, excepté sur les bords du Mississipi et de quelques grands bayous; ils avaient en général choisi les points les plus élevés, et les levées étaient ordinairement petites et construites à très peu de frais.

Dans de pareilles circonstances il y avait quelque justice de la part de la Législature à forcer à construire des levées ceux qui avaient des titres provenant de concessions françaises ou espagnoles; mais il n'y a pas sur le Mississipi dans les paroisses situées au Nord de la Rivière-Rouge, de concessions françaises ou espagnoles portant la condition que le sessionnaire sera forcé de maintenir une levée et un chemin ; au moins n'en existe-t-il pas dans les paroisses de Madison et de Carrol.

Personne, je pense, ne soutiendra que les patentes du gouvernement général n'ont jamais été accordées à la condition que le cessionnaire entretiendrait une levée sur la devanture. Non, l'acheteur, en pareil cas, recevait sa terre libre de toute servitude, et l'Etat ne pouvait même le taxer pendant cinq ans, encore moins pouvait-il forcer le propriétaire à bâtir une levée sur sa façade.

La loi de 1852 relative aux concessions du fonds, étendit pour la première fois le décret de préemption au propriétaire de face, qui tenait ses terres en vertu d'une patente émanée du gouvernement fédéral; cette loi devait être en vigueur pendant trois ans, mais avant que son terme expirât elle fut prolongée pendant un an, mais très peu de personnes en purent profiter; l'obligation de la part du propriétaire riverain naissant de ce droit supposé de préemption, le simple privilége d'acquérir autant de terre dans le fond que le propriétaire en avait sur le devant est plus imaginaire que réel; aucune obligation n'a été créée par les termes de la patente, ou les termes de la loi relative à la concession des terres du fonds.

L'obligation du propriétaire de construire une levée est imposée par la législation de l'Etat seule; elle est fondée sur cette opinion que la Législature a le droit d'exproprier un homme dans le but de construire une levée qui doit servir de protection à cent ou mille autres, sans forcer ceux-ci à contribuer proportionnellement au capital qui leur est garanti par cette proportion. Ce principe, loin de créer une obligation est une injustifiable usurpation de la propriété individuelle. Et l'acte de 1852, loin d'être inconstitutionnel, a rappelé pour ainsi dire une loi inconstitutionnelle qui violait les droits individuels, et a créé une taxe ad valorem, une taxe générale, pour un objet général, une protection commune contre un danger commun à tous ceux qui étaient compris dans la loi.

L'intérieur de Madison et de Carroll contient une population assez dense, les terres sont riches et fertiles, c'est le jardin de la région cotonnière. Ces paroisses sont protégées pas une ligne de levées sur la rivière Mississippi, dont plusieurs milles demandent au moins dix pieds de hauteur et de 50 à 80 pieds de bas. Demandez au propriétaire de face de construire ces levées à ses propres frais, quand toutes les terres possédées par lui, en beaucoup de cas, ne se vendraient pas à un prix suffisant pour construire la moitié des levées serait une prétention que personne ne songerait à soutenir. Exproprier un homme pour lui être utile, est ce que l'on a appelé de l'équité irlandaise ; le rappel de la loi de 1852 ne serait que la mise en pratique de ce principe d'équité.

Les paroisses de Concordia et de Tensas ont les premières reconnu ce principe de justice et de sage législation, qui exige des contributions générales pour créer une protection commune. Les paroisses de Carroll et de Madison ont reconnu le même principe après elles. La paroisse de Catahoula s'est rangée dans la ligne; placée derrière ces paroisses toute inondation dont elles seraient victimes devait l'atteindre. Si d'autres paroisses n'ont pas prêté la main pour détourner leur danger, c'est leur faute; ce ne peut être là un motif qui doive déterminer à rappeler la loi, ainsi que le mémoire le suppose, attendu que ces paroisses embrassées dans la loi se sont liguées pour détourner une calamité qui leur est commune. Aucune paroisse qui est entrée dans cette ligue ne devrait avoir le droit d'en sortir jusqu'à ce que tout danger d'inondation eût cessé et qu'il y ait eu une liquidation de tous les comptes qu'il a fallu faire dans l'intérêt commun. Ce n'est que des paroisses de Catahoula et de Carroll qu'il est venu des plaintes relatives aux conséquences de cette loi.

Ces personnes qui occupent les parties de ces paroisses qui sont le moins exposées aux inondations du Mississipi, et dont les terres, bien que situées au-dessous du Mississipi à ses plus hautes crues, sont un peu plus élevées que d'autres, ces personnes pensent que la taxe est inégale et sont très opposés au principe de la taxe «ad valorem.» Il est peut-être vrai que la taxe peut frapper inégalement, mais ces terres ne sont pas tellement au-dessus du niveau ordinaire des eaux pour que l'inégalité de la taxe soit très saisissable. On ne peut arriver à une égalité parfaite pour l'assessement de la taxe dans une pareille question. L'égalité approximative est tout ce que l'on peut espérer. Décider que la taxe n'est pas égale et uniforme, parce que la loi, dans ses conséquences, ne tourne pas également au profit de chaque individu, c'est décider qu'en pratique aucune taxe ne peut être imposée sous l'empire de la Constitution. Cette inégalité se reproduit dans la taxe que l'on paie pour le judiciaire, sans qu'on doive peut être jamais paraître devant un tribunal.

Mais ce mémoire de la paroisse Carroll résulte d'une différence d'opinion sur la question de savoir si une taxe destinée à maintenir une levée devait être spécifique ou «ad valorem.» C'est à dire, si au lieu que chaque personne vivant dans le District protégé paie proportionnnelle ment à la valeur du capital qu'il a placé derrière une digue commune, il doit payer proportionnellement au nombre d'acres en superficie qu'il peut avoir dans le fond de sa propriété.

La taxe s'élèverait à cinq cents par acre sur des terres situées dans les bois, et dix cents sur les terres en culture, ou en d'autres mots, un homme ayant mille acres de terre dans des prairies paierait, au taux de cinq cents par acre, cinquante piastres ; un autre ayant mille acres en culture, à dix cents par acre, paie cent piastres. Dès que l'on s'écarte de la taxe ad valorem pour adopter la taxe spécifique ont commet la plus grande injustice, et ceux qui soutiennent ce principe, se méprennent sur l'objet et le but de poser la taxe qui ne doit avoir d'autre fin que de créer une contribution commune pour assurer une protection commune dans l'étendue du capital protégé. Ce principe fait la base de la loi dont on se plaint; cette loi respecte ce principe d'égalité et d'uniformité que pose la Constitution, et nous ne voyons aucune raison de rappeler cette loi, jusqu'à ce que le système général de levées qui doit être établi aura été mis en vigueur et ait absorbé les travaux qui doivent être aujourd'hui exécutés au moyen de la taxe prélevée dans ces paroisses où ces levées sont prises comme une partie du système général des levées. Alors ces paroisses seront allégées du lourd fardeau qu'elles ont eu jusqu'à present à porter.

H. SHORT,
H. L. RIVERS.

Digitized by Google

M. Boatner, de la minorité du même comité, présente le rapport suivant:

Le soussigné, l'un des membres du comité spécial auquel avait été référé le mémoire de certains citoyens de la paroisse de Carroll, demandant le rappel d'un acte intitulé: « Acte pour constituer un district de levées, composé des paroisses de Madison, Carroll et Catahoula, approuvé le 18 de mars 1852, se sépare de la majorité du comité, aussi bien quant aux raisons sur lesquelles elle s'est basée, qu'aux conclusions auxquelles elle est arrivée, et il présente ce rapport de la minorité.

Le soussigné a examiné soigneusement le mémoire en question et adopte entièrement les arguments qu'il contient. Mais je puis faire usage d'arguments qui s'appliquent avec une forme toute particulière aux citoyens de Carroll et de Madison, mais non à Catahoula. Le soussigné appellera l'attention du Sénat sur ce mémoire, dans lequel il trouvera des raisons suffisantes pour bien rappeler cet acte odieux Quant à ce qui concerne la paroisse de Catahoula, le soussigné est d'opinion que cet acte, pour employer le langage des postulans, est non seulement inconstitutionnel, injuste, mais qu'il est inégal, partial, oppressif au dernier degré. Un simple coup d'œil jeté sur la carte de l'Etat de la Louisiane convaincra tout homme désintéressé de la vérité de ce que j'avance. L'on verra que, entre Madison et Catahoula, se rangent les paroisses de Tensas et de Franklin et même une grande partie de la paroisse de Catahoula Les paroisses de Tensas et de Franklin sont mieux protégées et plus avantagées, et la paroisse Concordia est aussi protégée que la paroisse de Catahoula. Cependant cette dernière paroisse est injustement, arbitrairement imposée pour contribuer à la conservation et à la protection de ces paroisses, tandis que celles-ci n'ont rien à payer pour subvenir à la protection générale.

C'est là, dans l'opinion du soussigné, une sorte de législation qui ne devrait pas être tolérée ou rester dans le recueil des lois. Une législature qui déclare qu'un petit nombre d'individus seront taxés au bénéfice d'un grand nombre, tandis que ceux-ci sont aussi capables de supporter le fardeau d'une taxe, et en retirent plus de profit car, ils sont entièrement protégés et Catahoula ne l'est pas ayant à se protéger contre les eaux qui l'assiègent par derrière et qui viennent du Mississipi par la Rivière Rouge, forcés ainsi de payer une double taxe. Le soussigné insiste sur le rappel en se fondant sur cet autre motif que deux de ces paroisses, savoir: Carroll et Catahoula, réclament le rappel, et il pense qu'il est de son devoir, autant qu'il est possible, d'accéder à une demande aussi juste et aussi raisonnable. A. C. BOATNER.

RESOLUTIONS ET INVITATION ADRESSÉES A MILLARD FILLMORE.

M. Rivers fait la motion que les règles soient suspendues, afin que le Senat prenne en considération les résolutions offrant à M. Fillmore l'hospitalité de l'Etat.

M. Wickliffe.—Je voterai en faveur des résolutions si le préambule n'est pas ce que je suppose. Je ne desire pas donner mon vote en faveur de quoique ce soit qui pourrait être considéré comme une approbation de la ligne suivie par l'administration de M. Fillmore.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

BILLS DES TERRES ET LEVÉES.

La section 19me est appelée.

M. Kenner.—Je répéterai aujourd'hui ce que j'ai dit hier, relativement à cette question. J'ai la conviction intime que la position prise alors par moi est bonne et correcte. Je persiste à croire que $400,000 sont une somme suffisante à dépenser en une année. Si nous allons au delà de cette somme nous donnerons dans l'extravagance. Elle sera amplement suffisante pour la protection de toutes les parties de l'Etat qui pourraient être menacées. Cette position, je crois, est inattaquable. Vous pouvez voyager de la ligne des Arkansas au golfe du Mexique, sur toute la ligne du Mississippi et des bayous, et indiquer tous les points où il peut exister quelque danger d'une crevasse, vous pouvez faire vos calculs comme vous l'entendrez et porter aussi haut que possible le coût probable des travaux et vous ne parviendrez pas à dépenser plus de $100,000.

Le représentant de Madison (M. Short), en réponse aux argumens avancés par moi hier a fait usage des mêmes argumens dont il s'est servi dans toutes les occasions précédentes, que si nous supprimons cette section nous détruisons tout l'effet du bill. Qu'il me soit permis de lui dire combien peu je partage son opinion. La motion n'est pas faite dans le but de perdre le bill ou de le rendre impraticable, mais bien pour l'amender et l'ameliorer. Examinons la question et voyons quelles en seraient les conséquences: Les commissaires commandent un certain travail; ils sont autorisés lorsqu'il est terminé à émettre des mandats pour le paiement de la somme qui peut être due au contractant et ils donnent à celui-ci ces mandats. Le contractant vient à Bâton-Rouge pour recevoir son paiement. Il se trouve qu'il n'y a pas d'argent dans le fonds des terres en marais, mais sur le dos de son compte l'Auditeur inscrit « non payé à cause de manque de fonds » et alors ce compte devient partie des dettes de l'Etat et porte intérêt à raison de 8 p. 100 par an, du jour de la présentation. C'est justement là ce à quoi j'objecte Je suis opposé non seulement au système de crédit en général, mais aussi à cette espèce particulière de crédit.

Personne n'ignore que lorsque un contractant s'engage pour un travail quelconque, la première question qu'il pose est celle-ci: "Serai-je paye pour ce que j'aurai fait? Lorsqu'il sait qu'il sera paye promptement, qu'il n'aura pas à attendre son paiement, il consentira naturellement à se charger de l'entreprise à un prix moindre que s'il avait longtemps à attendre. Si l'on persiste à faire entrer dans ce bill le système de crédit, je présenterai un amendement pour autoriser le gouverneur à emprunter un million de piastres sur des bons de l'Etat. Je demande toute l'attention du Sénat sur la difference qu'il y a entre ce système et celui que propose le bill. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, lorsqu'un contrat est fait, si le contractant sait qu'il sera payé immédiatement il travaillera à beaucoup meilleur marché que s'il en était autrement. Si donc vous êtes résolus au système de crédit, empruntez l'argent dont vous croirez avoir besoin, mettez la somme dans vos coffres afin que vous puissiez toujours en disposer: le contractant saura alors, qu'aussitôt son travail fait, il sera payé. Vous économiserez de la sorte à l'Etat au moins 15 ou 20 pour cent. Si vous adoptez la section dont nous nous occupons, des hommes qui ne disposent d'aucun capital entreprendront l'ouvrage, et etant forcés de tout acheter à crédit, ils demanderont naturellement un prix beaucoup plus élevé que s'ils avaient des fonds en mains. Voilà une considération qui milite en faveur de l'amendement que je propose. Sous l'autre système les contractants sauront aussi bien que les commissaires qu'il n'y a pas d'argent prêt pour les payer, et comme on doit bien penser, ils demanderont pour cette raison un prix beaucoup plus élevé.

Une autre différence existe encore. D'après le bill, les mandats doivent porter interêt à raison de 8 0[0. Nous n'aurions que 6 0[0 à payer sur l'emprunt que je propose, ce qui nous ferait un gain net et clair de 2 0[0. Même si j'étais dans l'erreur, lorsque j'avance qu'un contractant travaillerait à meilleur marché pour du comptant que pour du crédit, la difference d'intérêt seule nous permettrait de faire une économie suffisante pour pourvoir à la mise en opération du bill tout entier. Elle suffirait amplement au paiement des commissaires, des ingénieurs et des commis, elle paierait toutes les dépenses et au delà. Il y a déjà deux ou trois jours que nous sommes occupés à la discussion de ce bill et je ne désire pas occuper plus longtemps l'attention du Sénat. Néanmoins je ne pouvais pas laisser échapper l'occasion d'exprimer mes idées. J'espère que vous ne vous engagerez pas dans ce système de crédit. Je suis oppose à ce qu'on dépasse le chiffre de $400,000, montant de la somme que nous avons en mains; mais si vous êtes résolus à le faire, je présenterai un amendement autorisant l'emprunt d'une somme d'un million de piastres, afin que nous puissions payer au comptant et ne soyions pas forcés de recourir au crédit. J'ai essayé de faire ressortir les avantages de ce système, surtout au point de vue économique, et j'espère que les considérations que j'ai présentees seront prises comme bonnes.

M. Short—Hier, j'étais opposé à ce qu'on supprimât du bill la section qui nous occupe. Le sénateur qui vient de reprendre son siége a bien et correctement exprime les raisons qui me portaient à le faire. Je disais, comme probablement j'avais déjà dit plus d'une fois, qu'en supprimant cette section nous détruirions toute l'efficacité de ce bill. Dans le cours du débat sur cette question, j'ai cru devoir répéter bien des choses que j'avais déjà dites et de présenter des arguments dont je m'étais déjà servi. Ces choses-là ne peuvent pas s'éviter et j'espère que les fréquentes répétitions auxquelles j'ai été obligé ne feront que graver plus profondément dans la mémoire des sénateurs les idées et les vues que j'ai exposées. Je n'espère pas maintenant dire rien de nouveau; néanmoins, à l'appui des arguments dont j'ai déjà fait usage hier, je dirai qu'au moment de décider cette question il est nécessaire de prendre en considération la nature de l'ouvrage que nous avons à faire. Je dois aussi appeler l'attention sur le système actuel des levées en Louisiane. Tout le monde admet qu'il est défectueux, qu'il a besoin d'être entièrement réformé, qu'il ne protége pas assez l'Etat et ne répond pas au but auquel il est destiné. Là est le point de départ, là doit commencer notre tâche. On propose que l'Etat exécute les travaux qui jusqu'aujourd'hui avaient été faits par les propriétaires riverains; je suis donc opposé à ce qu'on restreigne l'action des commissaires dans les limites de la somme que nous avons en mains. On s'est épouvanté non de la grandeur du projet, mais des probabilités de sa mise à exécution. Il semble qu'on n'ait pas fait la moindre attention aux avantages qui en résulteraient, on n'a pas pris en considération l'immense produit des terres alluviales et à quel point énorme peuvent être portées les ressources de l'Etat. Il y a dans le nord de la Hollande un petit Etat qui a environ les dimensions de deux de nos paroisses réunies. Autrefois on le désignait sous le nom de «Terre Basse» et postérieurement à cela était un marais tout à fait inculivable. Il est habité par des Hollandais, nation industrieuse quoiqu'elle jouisse de la réputation d'être très lente et très lourde. Elle n'avait pas les moyens de réaliser aucun profit, elle n'avait pas de terres à cultiver aucunes ressources si ce n'étaient celles de leurs laiteries. Les habitants résolurent d'égoutter leurs terres et les protéger contre les inondations de la mer. Leur première levée coûta plus de 340,000 livres, c'est-à-dire environ un million sept cent mille piastres. La Louisiane, habitée par une population chevaleresque, riche et énergique, refusera-t-elle de suivre un si brillant exemple? Et ses planteurs de sucre et de coton craindront-ils d'entreprendre comme les Hollandais, des travaux si nécessaires, si indispensables à la prospérité de l'Etat.

Digitized by Google

Prenez en considération la situation de la Louisiane et le caractère de ses habitants, la nature de ses productions, et dites, allez-vous hésiter et trembler, au moment d'une entreprise si importante, lorsque vous avez pour commencer un capital de $200,000, et en perspective une somme $7,000,000 que rapporteront les terres marécageuses? Je vous le demande encore ne suivrez-vous l'exemple des Hollandais; et devant une dépense d'un million et demi reculerez-vous dans une entreprise dont les résultats doivent être si magnifiques? La proposition de limiter vos opérations au montant de la somme que nous avons en mains n'est pas tenable. Cette somme est tellement au-dessous de ce qui est nécessaire, que je suis etonné qu'on ait pu suggérer chose pareille. Si nous restreignions ainsi les commissaires nous agirions comme autrefois les Egyptiens envers les Israëlites, ne leur accordant que la moitié de la paille nécessaire et leur demandant le double de la quantité ordinaire de briques. En d'autres mots, ce serait leur demander l'impossible. Le sénateur a avancé un argument bien spécieux au sujet de l'économie sur l'intérêt qui serait effectuée par ses amendements. Si nous empruntons de l'argent nous aurons à compter l'intérêt du jour même de l'emprunt. Par le bill nous n'avons aucun intérêt à payer jusqu'à ce que l'ouvrage soit entièrement terminé. En faisant un léger amendement, tel que, faire les mandats recevables en paiement de terres en marais, nous nous débarrassons de toute espèce d'intérêt. C'est là le plan le plus simple et ce serait sans doute le plus efficace s'il était adopté. Je ne dirai rien maintenant du système d'emprunt que je croyais tout à fait abandonné, sur tout par le sénateur de l'Ascension (M. Kenner).

M. Kenner présente le suivant comme substitut de la section 19me,

Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'à l'effet de constituer un fonds additionnel des terres marécageuses pour mettre en force les dispositions de cet acte, le gouverneur est autorisé à emprunter sur les bons de l'Etat ayant de dix à vingt ans à courir et portant intérêt à raison de 6 0[0 par an, une somme n'excedant pas un million de piastres dans de tels montants et tels temps qu'il jugera nécessaires pour le département des levées et dessèchements; le paiement des intérêts annuels des dits bons sera fait avec le revenu provenant de la vente des terres marécageuses et inondées.

M. Kenner.—Il n'est pas nécessaire de rien ajouter à ce sujet. Je crois avoir démontré l'inefficacité du système de crédit et l'efficacite du système de comptant. Le Sénat doit voir combien il serait préférable d'avoir les fonds en mains.

M. Wickliffe.—Le sénateur voudrait-il nous dire comment les mandats seront dépreciés?

M. Kenner.—Je répondrai que je n'ai pas dit que les mandats dussent être dépréciés. Je vais redire en peu de mots ce que j'avais avancé: Les commissaires croient qu'un certain ouvrage est nécessaire; ils en donnent avis par les journaux. Le contractant qui désire bien connaître l'ouvrage avant de s'en charger va au bureau du trésorier ou de l'auditeur et demande s'il y a des fonds en mains. On lui répond que non—le manque de fonds est du moins la base de ce système des mandats. Je disais donc qu'il apprend qu'il n'y a dans le trésor aucun argent au crédit du fonds des terres en marais. De l'instant où il le sait il exigera un prix beaucoup plus élevé, car c'est un principe admis d'économie politique que tout, même le travail, peut être obtenu à meilleur marché pour du comptant qu'à crédit. Il sait que lorsqu'il ira demander son paiement à l'auditeur, au lieu d'argent il ne recevra qu'un mandat avec cet endossement: «Non payé à cause de manque de fonds.» S'il a besoin d'argent, comme il est probable quetel sera le cas, il mettra dans son mandat dans la circulation et le fera escompter à un taux énorme. Le courtier lui dira qu'il ignore à quelle époque le paiement pourra être fait et naturellement son escompte sera très fort. C'est l'Etat, après tout, qui souffrira de cette perte, car devant de pareils faits, les contractants iront augmentant de plus en plus leurs prix. Mon but est d'avoir en mains l'argent nécessaire lorsque le contrat est passé; de la sorte nous saurons ce que nous avons à payer, et nous économiserons de grandes dépenses.

Sur motion de M. Short, les mots «ne devant pas excéder par chaque fois,» sont insérés avant les mots un million de piastres»

M. Clifton présente l'amendement suivant au substitut de M. Kenner, lequel est adopté.

Les bons devant être de mille piastres chaque et payables par ordre de numéros, que l'Etat se réserve le droit dans n'importe quel temps, quand il y aura des fonds en mains, appliqués au paiement des dits bons pour les racheter. Le gouverneur devra publier dans la gazette officielle de l'Etat, par trente jours d'avis, les bons que l'Etat sera prêt à racheter, et si les possesseurs des dits bons ne les présentent pas pour être rachetés, les intérêts des dits bons resteront.

Les commissaires nommés d'après cet acte devront prendre des fonds provenant des ventes de terres marécageuses, un montant annuel suffisant pour payer 11 pour 100 sur le montant des bons qui pourront être émis d'après cette section.

Sur motion d'adopter le substitut de M. Kenner, tel qu'il est amendé, M. Evans demande l'appel nominal, MM. Barthe, Clifton, Derbès, Kenner, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, McCay, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Thériot et Todd votent pour, 16 voix.

MM. Boatner, Evans, Griffin, Millard, Neal, Patterson et Wickliffe votent contre, 7 voix.

Par conséquent le substitut de M. Kenner à la 19me section est adopté.

Sur motion, la section 20me est rejetée.

Sur motion, la section 21me est adoptée.

M. Kenner fait la motion d'effacer dans la 22me section, 3me ligne, le mot «1500,» et de mettre «1000.»

M. Kenner. — Je crois que mille piastres sont un salaire suffisant pour les commissaires.

M. Short. — Lorsque la question des salaires a été discutée devant les comites, je pensais qu'un salaire de $1,500 piastres serait trop élevé et que ce serait assez que de donner à ces officiers ce qui est suffisant pour payer leurs dépenses. Nous ne devons pas faire de ces places un objet de convoitise pour l'argent qu'elles peuvent rapporter. Néanmoins je crois que $1,000 seraient trop peu.

Digitized by Google

La motion est perdue.

M Evans fait alors la motion de renvoyer ledit acte au comite des terres et levées.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de déposer l'amendement indéfiniment sur le bureau.

Le mot « de » dans la 3me ligne de la 22me section, après le mot ingenieur est effacé et le mot « dans » inséré à sa place et les mots « dans les limites de son district » sont ajoutés à la fin de ladite section.

Cette section est adoptée telle qu'amendée.

Les sections 24, 25, 26 et 27 sont alors adoptées.

M. Kittridge soumet la section additionnelle suivante :

Sect. 28 Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les commissaires du 1er et du 2me districts sont autorisés et requis, quand ils le jugeront nécessaire, d'acheter deux bateaux à vapeur a belier, avec les chalands et les matériaux à bélier qui y sont attachés nécessaires pour arrêter les crevasses ; lesquels seront gardes à tels endroits du district qui pourront paraître les plus convenable, afin de remplir le but en vue.

Et ils seront de plus autorisés à se pourvoir de tous les matériaux, outils, instrumens, et tout ce qui est nécessaire pour remplir les devoirs exigés d'eux par cet acte.

Pourvu que le prix desdits bateaux-à-vapeur, à bélier, chalands et matériaux qui les accompagnent soit payé de cette partie des fonds des terres marécageuses appartenant au 1er et 2me districts.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de déposer cette section indéfiniment sur le bureau.

Cette motion est rejetée.

Sur motion de M. Kittridge, la section est adoptée.

M. Clifton présente le suivant comme section additionnelle :

Il est de plus décrété &c. Qu'en cas qu'une portion de terre exigeant des levées, soit abandonnée par son propriétaire, l'Etat y fera alors construire les levées nécessaires et deviendra «ipso facto» propriétaire de la terre abandonnée, et la dite terre sera entrée sur les régistres du bureau des terres, comme partie des domaines publics.

M Rivers—Je suis formellement opposé à la section additionnelle présentée par le sénateur de la Pointe-Coupée (M. Clifton) Je crois, si elle est adoptée, que six mois après l'adoption du bill, il n'y aura pas dans tout l'Etat de la Louisiane une seule levee qui ne soit la propriété de l'Etat. L'effet en serait ruineux et le but de ce bill serait entièrement manqué.

M. Wickliffe—Je suis opposé à cette section pour les mêmes raisons que vient de donner le sénateur de Concordia, (M. Rivers.) Je crois que la position prise par lui est très bonne, que dans six mois il n'y aurait pas un seul propriétaire riverain qui n'eût abandonné ses levées à l'Etat. La tentation d'agir ainsi serait irresistible.

M. Kenner—Que l'on ne s'épouvante pas sitôt. Nos planteurs, soyez en sûrs, n'abandonneraient pas sitôt leurs propriétés. Il y a des levées si etendues qu'elles ne peuvent être faites et entretenues par des particuliers; elles sont ordinairement entretenues par les paroisses dans lesquelles elles sont situées. La section presentée par le sénateur de Pointe-Coupee (M. Clifton) ne propose pas autre chose que ceci : que l'ouvrage fait par les paroisses soit fait par l'Etat avec les fonds des terres marécageuses. Aucun planteur ne voudra abandonner 150 pieds de sa terre et laisser le reste exposé à l'inondation. Les terres ont trop de prix pour cela, et c'est fort à tort que l'on s'alarme.

M Wickliffe—Je suis très reconnaissant au sénateur d'avoir bien voulu nous apprendre que nous nous alarmons à tort, mais il doit nous être permis de juger de cela nous mêmes. Je dis que c'est chose facile à un planteur que d'abandonner un ruban de terre ou quelque partie que ce soit, et que tous seraient très tentés de le faire lorsqa'ils sauront que l'Etat se chargera de leurs levées.

M. Boatner—Je désire savoir si aucunes terres qui ne sont pas terres en marais peuvent légalement être enregistrées comme telles.

Ce à quoi M. Derbès présente l'amendement suivant :

Pourvu que, si le propriétaire de la dite propriété venait à payer dans le cours de douze mois les dépenses occasionnées, il ait le droit de rentrer en possession de sa terre.

M. Griffin présente comme amendement, pour être inséré dans la section de M. Clifton, après le mot « devra dans la 4me ligne » de tous fonds des terres marecageuses assignés au district dans lequel la dite portion de terre est située.

M. Rivers fait motion d'effacer de la section de M. Clifton le mot « Portion » et d'insérer « toute partie de terre. »

M. King—Je ne voterai certainement pas en faveur de chose si vague que me semble être cette section. Je partage l'opinion des sénateurs qui pensent que ce serait encourager les planteurs à abandonner leurs levées et forcer l'Etat à s'en charger. Nous ne sommes pas en mesure d'entreprendre un projet aussi vaste que cela. Nous aurons assez fait des levées dans le but de dessécher les terres inondées. C'est là tout ce que nous devons nous proposer. Songer à placer sous notre contrôle toutes les levées de l'Etat est tout à fait impossible.

La section est rejetée.

M. Short présente le suivant comme section additionnelle, lequel est adopté.

Sect. 29. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que six mois après l'organisation de tout bureau général des travaux publics, les devoirs ci-dessous fixés et tous les pouvoirs donnés au bureau des commissaires des terres marécageuses, comme ci-dessus mentionnés, devront être sous l'administration du dit bureau des travaux publics et le bureau ci-dessus établi sera remplacé.

M. Palfrey—Avant que le vote définitif ne soit pris, j'ai à présenter une motion que, je dois l'avouer, je ne hasarde qu'avec méfiance, convaincu que je suis qu'elle sera rejetée. Et pourtant le sentiment de mes devoirs m'oblige à le faire. J'ai des scrupules constitutionnels relativement à ce bill. Je fais la motion de le référer de nouveau avec instructions de le rapporter sous une forme telle qu'il soit conforme à la Constitution.

La motion est rejetée.

Sur l'adoption finale de l'acte tel qu'amendé,

M Griffin demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Burthe, Clifton, Derbès, Kenner, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack et Taylor votent pour l'adoption.—15 voix.

M. Thériot, sur motion, est dispensé de voter.

MM Boatner, Evans, Griffin, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Todd, et Wickliffe votent contre.—8 voix.

Par conséquent l'acte est adopté.

Le protêt suivant est, sur demande, intercalé dans les minutes du Sénat.

Nous sommes en faveur des principaux articles de l'acte, mais nous avons voté contre, parce que nous le croyons inconstitutionel.

La constitution a commandé à cette législature d'organiser le bureau des travaux publics et a placé tous les travaux publics sous son contrôle. Nous considerons que les deux bureaux ne peuvent exister d'une manière constitutionnelle en même temps.

Signé, C. Nichols, B. B. Todd. W. J Palfrey, W. W. Boatner.

M. Derbès présente comme un substitut au dit acte.

Sur motion, après dispense des règles, le substitut est pris en considération est lu par section et passe. La 6ème section étant en consideration.

M. Taylor presente le proviso suivant: « Que cet acte n'aura force de loi que lorsqu'il aura été soumis aux électeurs qualifies de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et qu'une majorité de votes aura été en faveur de son adoption.

M. Derbès fait la motion de déposer le proviso sur le bureau.

M. Rivers demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Miller, Neal, Patterson, Short, Thériot et Wickliffe votent pour le dépôt.—14 voix

MM. Burthe, Kenner, Kittridge, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Taylor, et Todd votent contre.—8 voix.

Par conséquent le proviso est déposé sur le bureau.

Digitized by Google

MESSAGES A LA CHAMBRE

Le secrétaire va informer la chambre que le président a signé les dits actes.

Et il demande la signature de l'orateur pour un acte intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours de T. P. Hall et l'administrateur de W. J. McElroy, et une Résolution autorisant et requerrant l'ingénieur de l'Etat d'examiner l'embouchure du Bayou Plaquemines.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivantes :

Acte pour venir au secours de Théodore Labauve.

Acte pour rappeler un acte intitulé :

Acte pour exempter de la saisie et vente le domicile d'un propriétaire et aussi pour exempter de la saisie et saisie arrêt pour loyer, certaines propriétés personnelles et certains effets ainsi que les salaires du travail et les compensations pour services rendus dans une profession ou autrement.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours à l'amendement fait dans le corps et le titre de l'acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriations pour les procédures criminelles jusqu'au 31 mars 1853.

Il rapporte aussi à la Chambre que le Sénat a adopté la résolution conjointe du comité d'arrangement relativement aux funérailles d'Isaac Johnson, ex-gouverneur de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de J. M. Lapeyre, de la paroisse d'Orléans.

MESSAGES DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Lartin, messager spécial de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que l'orateur a signé les actes suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de la branche de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane à Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour élir un juge de paix et un constable additionnels dans et pour la paroisse des Rapides.

Et une résolution pour venir au secours de Jérôme Tourné.

Résolution relative à l'établissement d'une voiture pour l'usage de la malle par le Congrès.

Et il demande la signature du président pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de Hall Frazier, mulâtre de la paroisse Claiborne, demandant sa liberté.

Acte pour venir au secours de Samuel Patterson.

Acte pour changer le nom de Suzanne Virginie Haden.

Et il demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes et résolutions suivants :

Resolution recommandant à nos sénateurs et invitant nos représentants au Congrès à faire leurs plus grands efforts pour faire passer un acte pour agrandir le port de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'administration future des affaires de l'association consolidée des Planteurs de la Louisiane.

Acte pour requérir les juris de police de pourvoir à la compensation des jurés.

Acte pour empêcher l'extension des maladies et infections contagieuses par les bateaux naviguant sur la baie de l'Atchafalaya et ses tributaires

Acte pour relever l'Etat du paiement des jurés.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé : Acte pour incorporer la ville de Covington.

Acte pour créer un notaire additionnel dans et pour la paroisse de Bienville.

Rapporte la résolution sur Fillmore.

Et que la chambre a donné son concours à un acte pour autoriser David Brady, de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, à changer son nom de David Brady par celui de David Braden.

MESSAGE DU GOUVERNEUR.

M. Hatch, secrétaire privé du gouverneur, informe le Sénat que le gouverneur a approuvé et signé le bill suivant :

Acte pour autoriser le bureau des directeurs du collége Centenaire à vendre certaines terres.

MARDI 29 mars 1853.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

Acte pour autoriser la Banque dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

L'acte suivant présenté par M. Kenner, président du comité des banques et maisons de banque est pris en considération.

Sect. 1. Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans réunis en assemblée générale.

Qu'à partir et après la promulgation de cet acte, il sera légal pour toute personne, association de personnes, conformément aux dispositions de cet acte et si plus de cinq personnes, de se former en corporation pour faire des opérations de banque et pour établir des bureaux d'escompte, de dépôt et de circulation, mais le montant total du fonds capital de toute banque ou corporation ne doit pas être moindre que $100,000.

Sect. 2. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toute corporation qui sera établie d'après les dispositions de cet acte, aura le pouvoir et l'autorité 1o D'avoir et de jouir d'une durée sous le nom de corporation pour le temps fixé par son acte d'incorporation, lequel ne dépassera pas vingt-cinq ans.

2o De faire des contrats, de poursuivre, d'être poursuivi par son nom de corporation.

3o D'avoir et de se servir d'un sceau particulier.

4o De posséder, recevoir, acheter, vendre sous le nom de corporation les propriétés foncières et mobilières

5o De nommer et d'appointer tels directeurs et officiers que leurs intérêts et leur convenance exigent.

6o De faire et d'établir tels réglements pour la direction et l'arrangement des affaires de la corporation qui seront nécessaires et utiles et non contraires aux dispositions de cet acte.

Sect. 3 Il est de plus décrété, &c. Que toute charte d'incorporation accordée d'après les dispositions de cet acte contiendra : 1o le nom et le titre de la corporation et la place choisie pour son domicile ; 2o le montant du fonds capital, le nombre des esclaves, le montant de chaque action, et le temps et la manière dont les paiements des fonds souscrits seront appelés ou faits ; 3o la manière dont l'élection des directeurs sera conduite ; 4o la manière de liquider à la fin de sa charte

Sect. 4. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que la charte de toute corporation organisée d'après les termes de cet acte, et les souscriptions originales faites dans le but de l'organiser, seront enregistrées au bureau de l'annotateur des hypothèques, ou de toute autre officier exerçant les fonctions d'annotateur des hypothèques de l'endroit choisi pour le domicile de la corporation et qu'une copie certifiée des mêmes soit déposée entre les mains de l'auditeur de l'Etat, et ladite charte sera publiée dans une gazette de l'endroit où est le domicile, et dans le journal officiel de l'Etat publié à la Nouvelle-Orléans, une fois par semaine pendant au moins trente jours ; mais il ne sera pas nécessaire de publier les noms des souscripteurs, et tout souscripteur pourra présenter ladite charte et souscription par acte public où à l'annotateur des hypothèques, comme il a été dit plus haut.

Section 5. Il est de plus décrété &c; Qu'il sera légal pour les actionnaires de toute corporation, à une assemblée générale convoquée à cet effet, de faire toute modification, addition ou changement dans son acte d'incorporation, non contraires aux dispositions de cet acte, ou de dissoudre la corporation; pourvu que les dites modification, addition, changement ou dissolution, reçoivent le consentement des trois quarts du capital représenté à ladite assemblée. Pourvu aussi, que la dite modification, addition, altération ou dissolution soit enregistrée comme l'exige la 4me section de cet acte.

Section 6. Il est de plus décrété &c; Que toute corporation établie d'après cet acte, aura forfait à sa charte pour insolvabilité, ou pour n'avoir pas rempli toute disposition de cet acte, et que dans ce cas, il sera du devoir de la Cour de District du District de la dite corporation, à la demande de tout créancier ou de l'auditeur de l'Etat et sur une preuve satisfaisante à la dite cour, de décréter la dite forfaiture, et de nommer trois commissaires pour effectuer la liquidation, dont le devoir sera de convertir tous les biens de la compagnie, en y comprenant toutes les balances non-payées par les actionnaires sur leurs actions, au comptant, et de distribuer le tout sous la direction de la cour, entre les parties ayant droit, de la même manière autant que possible, comme il est fait dans les cas ou des personnes se trouvent insolvables; et si une banque se trouve en faute d'après les dispositions de cte acte, le protet du billet premièrement protesté, constituera une hypothèque au bénéfice des créanciers de la dite banque sur tous les biens de la banque qui ne seront pas entre les mains de l'auditeur; la dite hypothèque aura force comme les autres hypothèques dans cet Etat, et la vente des dits biens après ledit protet sera valable.

Digitized by Google

Section 7. Il est de plus décrété &c; Que l'auditeur est par le présent autorisé et requis de faire graver et imprimer de la meilleure manière, la quantité de billets de circulation, en blanc, de différentes dénominations autorisées que les banques incorporées de cet Etat doivent émettre, de temps en temps, comme il le jugera nécessaire, pour remplir les dispositions de cet acte, de telle forme qu'il prescrira. Les dits billets de circulation en blanc, seront contresignés, numérotes et enrégistrés dans des livres tenus dans ce but, dans le bureau de l'auditeur, sous la direction de telle ou telles personnes qu'il nommera à cet effet, de manière que la dénomination des dits billets sera semblable, et portant la signature régulière dudit annotateur ou d'un des dits annotateurs et sera marqué sur la face «assuré par engagement de fonds.»

Sect. 8 Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que tout banquier ou corporation créés d'après cet acte, en déposant entre les mains de l'auditeur de l'Etat les bons de cet Etat, les pièces justificatives d'une dette des Etats-Unis, aura droit à recevoir de l'Auditeur un montant égal des billets de circulation de différentes dénominations, enregistrés, contresignés et marqués comme ci-dessus.

Mais les dits bons publics seront maintenus et seront regardés comme égaux à un fonds de cet Etat portant cinq pour cent d'intérêt, et il ne sera pas légal que l'Auditeur reçoive les dits bons à un taux au-dessous de leur valeur, ni au-dessus de leur valeur sur le marché. Au lieu de transférer les fonds publics, comme il est dit ci-dessus, pour assurer le montant total des dits billets, toute personne ou association de personnes sera légalement autoirsée en cas qu'elle soit ainsi nommée avant de recevoir tout billet ou billets, pour assurer le paiment d'un tiers du montant total qui sera ainsi émis, en transférant à l'Auditeur les bons ou hypothèques sur des propriétés foncières de cet Etat, portant au moins huit pour cent d'intérêt, payable annuellement ou tous les six mois; dans ce cas tous billets émis par la dite personne ou association de personnes, seront marques sur la face « assurés par engagement de fonds publics et de propriétés foncières.» Les dites hypothèques pèseront seulement sur des terres améliorées, productives, et non embarrassées avec les esclaves qui y sont attachés, dans cet Etat, valant sans y comprendre les bâtisses qui y sont construites, au moins le double du montant pour lequel elles seront hypothéquées, et l'Auditeur devra prescrire tels règlements qu'il jugera nécessaires pour certifier le titre et la valeur des dites terres et esclaves, mais dans aucun cas l'estimation de la propriété ne sera plus grande que celle fixée pour l'assessement des taxes d'Etat fait avant l'application pour les dits billets; et les dites hypothèques seront payables dans un temps qui ne dépassera pas dix ans.

L'Auditeur peut, à sa discrétion, assigner les dits bons et hypothèques, ou les uns ou les autres, à la personne ou association qui les aura transférés en recevant d'autres bons et hypothèques approuvées d'un montant égal; et quand toutes sommes du principal des bons et hypothèques transférées à l'auditeur lui seront payées, il devra notifier la personne ou l'association qui a transféré les bons et hypothèques, et il pourra payer la dite somme à toute personne ou association en recevant d'autres bons et hypothèques d'un montant égal.

Sect. 9. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que les billets de circulation ne seront donnés à aucun banquier ou corporation pour un montant plus grand que son capital ou le capital payé.

Sect. 10. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que les intérêts ajoutés sur les dits bons seront collectés par l'auditeur et remboursés au banquier ou à la corporation de qui ils auront été reçus, autant que la valeur du marché des dits bons ne sera pas au-dessous du taux auquel ils auront été pris. Si une telle dépréciation venait à avoir lieu, l'Auditeur est requis par le présent, de retenir l'intérêt jusqu'à ce que la dépréciation soit remplie ou jusqu'à ce qu'un autre dépôt soit fait pour garantir pleinement le montant pour lequel les billets de circulation auront été émis.

Sect. 11. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Qu'en cas qu'une des sécurités dans les mains de l'auditeur viendrait à être dépréciée, et que sa valeur sur le marché soit moindre que le taux pour lequel elle aura été prise, l'auditeur devra demander au banquier ou à la corporation qui l'aura engagée, qu'il ou elle ait à faire un nouveau dépôt ou qu'un montant suffisant de billets de circulation soit rendu pour couvrir et remplir le déficit qui pourrait venir d'une telle dépréciation, et si le dit banquier ou corporation manque de le faire ainsi, trente jours après la dite demande, tous les priviléges accordés par cet acte seront forfaits.

Sect. 12 Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que l'auditeur est par le présent autorisé à restituer à tout banquier ou corporation toute partie des sécurités déposées entre ses mains, en recevant et en annulant un montant égal de billets de circulation qu'il aura donnés au dit banquier ou corporation.

Sect. 13. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que si un banquier ou une corporation refuse ou manque de payer en espèces, sur demande, tout billet ou billets émis par lui ou elle, et enregistrés et marqués comme ci-dessus, qui seront présentés dans les heures d'affaires ordinaires, le possesseur du dit billet ou billets pourra demander au dit banquier ou au caissier de la corporation d'écrire en travers de la face des dits billets les mots « Présentés, paiement refusé » avec la date et de les signer, et il sera du devoir du banquier ou du caissier, de mettre cet endossement, à moins d'une amende de cinquante piastres pour chaque omission ou refus de faire ainsi, recouvrables pardevant toute cour de juridiction compétente, et l'auditeur, quand les dits billets lui seront présentés, devra en notifier par écrit l'auteur ou les auteurs des dits billets de les payer, et si dans dix jdurs après la notice les dits billets ne sont pas payés, l'auditeur (à moins qu'il ne soit satisfait du bon et légal empêchement du paiement du dit billet ou billets) devra là-dessus immédiatement procéder à la vente, de la manière la plus avantageuse, des sécurités placées entre ses mains par le dit banquier ou corporation concessionnaire, et donner avis dans le journal officiel de l'Etat ou un autre journal imprimé à la Nouvelle-Orléans, que tous les billets de circulation émis par le dit banquier ou corporation seront rachetés des fonds qui sont dans ses mains pour ce but, et il sera du devoir de l'auditeur de payer tous les dits billets des dits fonds, et d'adopter telles mesures, pour payer tous les billets de circulation du dit banquier ou corporation, qui pourront dans son opinion empêcher ceux qui les possèdent de perdre. En cas qu'il y ait déficit, et que les sécurités placées entre les mains de l'auditeur ne soient pas suffisantes pour payer en plein tous les billets présentés, les propriétaires des dits billets auront le droit de préférence et seront payés avant tout autre créancier des biens du banquier ou de la corporation susdits.

Sect. 14. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que toutes les sécurités déposées entre les mains de l'auditeur par les banquiers ou corporations créés d'après cet acte, seront gardées par lui exclusivement pour le rachat des billets émis en circulation par les dits banquiers ou corporations, jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient payés.

Sect. 15. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Qu'aucun billet émis ne sera moindre de cinq piastres.

Sect. 16. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que toute association particulière ou corporation, excepté les banques existantes qui possèdent des chartes légales, ne pourront émettre et faire circuler comme argent des billets payables au porteur, excepté ceux qui sont autorisés par cet acte, sous peine d'une amende de mille piastres, recouvrable avec les frais de poursuite, une moitié de la dite amende pour l'usage de toute personne qui aura poursuivi et continué la dite poursuite jusqu'au jugement final pardevant toute cour de juridiction compétente, et l'autre moitié sera versée au trésor.

Sect. 17. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que tout fonds souscrit par toute corporation, d'après cet acte, sera payé en plein douze mois après que la dite corporation aura commencé ses affaires.

Sect. 18. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Qu'aucun prêt ne sera fait par la dite corporation à aucun de ses actionnaires sur l'engagement de ses propres actions.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 19. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les planques, coins et matériaux qui seront achetés par l'auditeur pour la gravure et l'imprimerie des billets pourvus par le présent, resteront à sa garde ; et les dépenses qu'ils occasionneront pour mettre en force des dispositions de cet acte, seront payées, pro rata, par les banquiers et corporations qui seront formées d'après le dit acte.

Sect. 20. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les banquiers et les corporations autorisés par le présent, auront le pouvoir de faire les affaires de la banque, d'escompter les billets, effets et autres preuves de dettes, de recevoir des dépôts, d'acheter et de vendre de l'or et de l'argent non monnoyé, des monnaies étrangères, et des lettres de change, de preter de l'argent sur des propriétés foncières et mobilières, et d'exercer tous les pouvoirs ordinaires nécessaires pour les dites affaires.

Sect 21. Il est de plus décrété, &., Que les actions des dites corporations seront transférables sur les livres des dites corporations dans la manière que leurs règlements l'indiqueront.

Sect. 22. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toutes personnes s'associant d'après cet acte, dans leur acte d'incorporation, pourvoieront à l'augmentation de leur capital et du nombre de leurs associés, comme elle les jugeront convenable.

Sect. 23. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que tous billets mis en circulation par un seul banquier, seront signés par lui et son caissier ; et ceux émis par une corporation seront signés par leur président et leur caissier.

Sect. 24. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Qu'en cas de faillité de tout banquier ou corporation établi d'après cet acte, chaque actionnaire ou associé ou corps politique, ayant une action ou des actions dans la dite banque au temps de sa faillite, ou qui aura été interessé dans tout temps douze mois avant sa faillite, sera responsable et devra fournir chacun un bon pour une somme n'excédant pas le nombre du montant de son action ou de leurs actions.

Sect. 25. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que la propriété foncière que la dite corporation devra posséder d'après la loi, sera de 1o autant qu'il sera necessaire pour les transactions ordinaires de leurs affaires. 2o celles qui leur seront hypothéquées en bonne foi comme sécurité pour emprunts. 3o celles qui leur seront rendues pour satisfaire les dettes précédemment contractées dans la transaction de leurs affaires ; ou 4o celles qu'elles achèteront à des ventes exécutées pour des jugements rendus en faveur des dites corporations.

Sect. 26. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les dits banquiers ou corporations devront fournir à l'auditeur un tableau trimestriel, certifié sous serment par les dits banquiers et présidents et caissiers des dites corporations de la situation exacte de leurs banques et montrant ;

1o Le montant payé de leur capital.

2o Leur billets en circulation.

3o Leurs dépôts et autres responsabilités monétaires.

4o Toutes leurs dettes de quelque nature et espèces que ce soit.

5o Leurs espèces en mains.

6o Les billets escomptés, montrant les montants de ceux qui ont quatre-vingt-dix jours pour leur échéance et ceux qui ont un plus long espace de temps.

7o Leur échange, montrant aussi ceux qui ont plus de quatre-vingt-dix jours à courir.

8o Leurs valeurs au comptant autres que les espèces.

9o Leurs billets protestés et autres mauvaises et douteuses dettes.

10o Leurs propriétés foncières et autres biens ; il sera du devoir de l'auditeur de publier le dit tableau dans la gazette officielle de l'Etat, imprimée a la Nlle-Orléans.

Sect. 27. Il est de plus decrété, etc. Que l'auditeur est autorisé par le présent, a examiner ses affaires, et si dans son opinion la dite banque est dangereuse ou dans un état de faillite, de citer la dite banque par devant la cour de district du district dans lequel la dite banque est domiciliée, comme il est pourvu dans la sixième section de cet acte. Il sera aussi de son devoir de faire un examen entier semi-annuel de l'état de chaque banque et de vérifier ses tableaux.

Sect. 28. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Que si une banque ainsi établie venait à refuser ou à omettre le paiement de ses billets sur demande, les propriétaires des mêmes auront le droit de recevoir un intérêt sur les mêmes au taux de douze pour cent par an à partir du temps du refus, jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient entièrement payés.

Sect. 29. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Que les dites banques pourront escompter à un taux qui ne dépassera pas dix pour cent par an pour tous leurs prêts ou escomptes n'ayant pas plus de quatre mois à courir et pas plus que le taux de huit pour cent par an pour ceux d'une plus longue période.

Sect. 30. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Que toute banque créée d'après cet acte, domiciliée en dehors des limites de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, aura le pouvoir de nommer une agence dans cette ville pour le rachat de sa circulation.

Sect. 31. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Qu'il sera du devoir de l'auditeur, quand une banque le lui demandera de recevoir et de canceller tous billets déchirés qui lui seront présentés, et de les changer contre d'autres billets de circulation pour le même montant.

Sect. 32. Il est de plus décrété, etc Que la Législature devra nommer au moins une fois tous les ans, un comite conjoint pour examiner les sécurités qui sont dans les mains de l'auditeur, les comparer avec ses comptes du montant des billets émis, et de rapporter le résultat de son examen.

Sect. 33. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Il ne sera pas légal à un banquier ou une corporation autorisé par le présent, de commencer les affaires de banque, jusqu'à ce que les sécurités requises par cet acte soient dûment déposées et acceptées par l'auditeur.

Sect. 33. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Que toutes les banques établies par le present seront banques d'escompte et de dépôts ainsi que de circulation, et leurs affaires seront strictement confinées aux affaires de banque comme le définit la 20me section de cet acte.

Sect. 35. Il est de plus décrété, etc. Que toutes les banques ou corporations établies en vertu de cet acte seront taxées sur le montant des billets de circulation obtenus de l'auditeur, conformement à la huitième section de cet acte, au même taux que toutes les autres propriétés dans cet Etat.

M Kenner—Je fais la motion que le bill soit lu section par section afin que chacune d'elles puisse êtrediscutée. C'est la un bill important et qui mérite l'attention particulière du Sénat.

La première section est lue.

M. King—Je ne vois pas pour quelle raison nous ne permettrions pas à une ou deux personnes de faire des affaires de banques. Pourquoi insister pour qu'il y en ait plus de cinq ? Je fais la motion d'effacer les mots «et plus de cinq personnes.»

L'amendement est adopté.

La seconde section est lue.

M. Short—Je désirerais savoir jusqu'à quel point on croit que cela satisfera les desirs du peuple de la Louisiane. Selon moi, cette section accorde aux compagnies de banques des pouvoirs qu'elles ne devraient pas avoir. Il pourrait être excessivement dangereux de leur donner le privilége d'acheter et de vendre des propriétés foncières.

M King—J'appellerai l'attention du sénateur sur les sections 20 et 24me qui définissent le genre d'affaires des banquiers.

M. Short demande que les mots suivants soient insérés dans la deuxième section entre le mot «quatrième» dans la 7me ligne, et le mot «cinquième» dans la 8me ligne, comme amendement.

"De posséder, de recevoir d'acheter et de vendre par et sous le nom de la corporation toute propriété reelle ou personnelle, qui sera indispensable au but de l'association ; pourvu que le bien immeuble que la dite corporation pourra acheter, posséder et vendre légalement, soit 1o tel qu'il sera nécessaire pour la transaction de ses affaires.

2o Tel qu'il leur aura été hypothéqué en bonne foi comme caution pour emprunts.

3o Tel qu'il leur aura été vendu pour satisfaire aux dettes contractées précédemment, bona fide, dans le cours de leurs affaires ; et 4o Tel qu'ils auront pu l'acheter aux ventes faites par jugement ou pour hypo-

Digitized by Google

thèque leur appartenant, ou dans lequel ils ont un intérêt comme subrogés à des droits, suivant l'article 2157 du code civil. »

M Kenner—Je ne vois pas la nécessité de cet amendement ; mais si le sénateur insiste, nous sommes disposés à l'accepter.

M. King—Je crois que l'amendement est bon et important, et j'espère qu'il sera adopte.

M. Lacey—L'amendement autorise seulement les corporations de banques à recevoir et à aliéner telles propriétés qu'il est nécessaire qu'une corporation ait en sa possession.

M. Kenner—J'apprends que le bill de la Chambre autorise une banque à acheter toutes propriétés foncières à la Nouvelle-Orleans, et spéculer là-dessus autant qu'elle voudra. Lorsqu'elle realise une hypothèque, elle peut acheter la propriété, et, si elle est attaquée à ce sujet, dire qu'elle l'a eue en paiement d'une dette. Ce privilège est beaucoup trop étendu et peut embrasser tous les cas.

M. Short—Je suis disposé à accorder aux banques qui font des affaires regulières le pouvoir d'acheter quand il est nécessaire Je suis disposé à leur accorder tout le pouvoir nécessaire pour se prémunir contre toute combinaison hostile ; mais je ne puis consentir à leur accorder un pouvoir illimité d'achat et de vente ; je ne désire pas leur accorder le privilége de se rendre au marché, et d'acheter et de vendre ad libitum.

L'amendement est adopté.

M Lacey—Je fais la motion d'effacer le mot «leur» et d'y substituer le mot «ses,» cette première expression étant tout-à-fait incorrecte.

M Kenner—Je suis d'opinion aussi que cette section pourrait être exprimée un peu plus grammaticalement.

M. Short—Lisez la définition du mot «banque »

M. Kenner—Je fais la motion que les fautes de grammaire soient corrigées, et que la section soit adoptée telle qu'elle est amendée.

L'amendement est adopté.

La section 4me est prise ensuite en considération.

M. Hodge—Je fais la motion d'effacer les mots, «et dans le journal officiel de l'Etat. » Le journal de l'Etat n'a pas une circulation assez grande ; il n'est qu'à peine lu dans les campagnes. Si une banque est établie dans une paroisse, où est la nécessite de publier les annonces en ville ? Ce serait donner lieu à des dépenses inutiles, aussi j'y objecte.

M. Short. — Naturellement les négociants de la Nouvelle-Orléans prendront des actions des banques dans toutes les parties de l'Etat. Etant publiés à la Nouvelle-Orléans, les avis seront plus generalement lus et les banques elles-mêmes en tireront de l'avantage. Je ne vois pas la necessité d'effacer.

M. Martin. —Je suis en faveur de la publication dans le journal officiel, mais je fais la motion d'effacer les mots « à la Nouvelle-Orléans, » attendu que le journal de l'Etat pourrait un jour être publié à Bâton-Rouge.

Les mots « publiés à la Nouvelle-Orléans » sont effacés et sur motion de M Boatner les mots «pourvu qu'une gazette soit publiee dans cet endroit » sont insérés dans la huitième ligne après le mot «domicile »

M. Hodge. — Avant que le vote soit pris sur cette section, je désire savoir quel sera le prix demandé lorsqu'une banque publiera ses avis dans le journal officiel.

M. Boatner — Le prix ordinaire des annonces.

La section est adoptée telle qu'amendée.

M. King fait la motion d'effacer de la 6me ligne, 5me section, tout ce qui se trouve après le mot «de» jusqu'au mot « pourvu » dans la 7me ligne et de mettre « une majorité dans le montant du capital entier de ladite compagnie. »

La section est alors adoptée telle qu'elle a été amendée.

M. Lacey fait la motion d'effacer les mots « Et que» dans la 3me ligne de la 6me section ce qui est accepté

M. Boatner. — Je propose comme proviso que les commissaires ne soient pas actionnaires.

M Kenner. — Je crois que des actionnaires devraient être nommés. Il est plus à présumer que les personnes intéressées agiront avec plus de prudence que celles qui ne le sont pas.

M. Short. — Je crois que le proviso serait un frein salutaire imposé sur les banques lorsqu'elles ne seraient pas solvables et rendrait plus prudente la direction de ces banques. Mais si les actionnaires sont autorisés à être nommés commissaires, au lieu de protéger les banques ils serviront leurs intérêts personnels au detriment de ceux de ces institutions. Ne l'oubliez pas: « On retire souvent plus de l'animal lorsqu'il est mort que lorsqu'il est en vie. » Sachant qu'ils perdront le navire dès qu'il aura touché au port, ils se garderont bien de l'y laisser aborder et le tiendront à distance

M. Kenner. — L'argument du sénateur revient à ceci : tous les actionnaires de banque sont des coquins. Pour moi, je crois que les actionnaires sont ceux en qui l'on doit avoir le plus de confiance. Si vous doutez deceux qui ont dans les banques un intérêt important qu'espérerez-vous donc de ceux qui ne sont aucunement intéressés.

M. Boatner. — Je crois que les actionnaires ne seraient pas fâchés de cette sauvegarde en leur faveur. Ils devraient objecter à ce que leurs actes et leurs livres soient ouverts à l'examen. Ce serait les placer sur un terrain inaccessible et les mettre au-dessus de tout soupçon. J'insisterai sur l'amendement que j'ai proposé.

M. Wickliffe Je ne vois pas la nécessté de cet amendement. Je crois que le sénateur de Madison se trompe lorsqu'il insinue que certaines influences pourraient determiner le choix des commissaires par les Cours.

M Short—Je nie avoir rien insinué de pareil.

M. King—Dans certains cas, des actionnaires devraient être nommes et dans certains autres, il ne serait pas convenable qu'il en fut ainsi. Je préfércrais qu'on laissât le tout à la discretion des Cours.

L'amendement est rejete.

M. Nicholls fait la motion que les mots suivants soient insérés dans la 7me ligne après le mot liquidation.

«Qui devront fournir un bon et un cautionnement à la satisfaction de la Cour pour l'accomplissement fidèle de leurs devoirs.

M Nicholls—Je ne vois pas pour quelle raison les banques seraient placées dans une toute autre position que les autres debiteurs. Elles auraient le droit de convertir en espèces toutes leurs valeurs, et de la sorte leurs actionnaires se trouveraient fraudes.

L'amendement et la section telles qu'elles sont amendées sont adoptées.

M Martin fait la motion d'effacer de la 8me section à partir du mot «valeur» de la 9me ligne jusqu'à la fin de la section.

M. Wickliffe—Il me semble que des hypothèques sur propriétes foncières seraient tout aussi bonnes que des cautions et aussi sûres pour les affaires de banques que les garanties de la Banque des Citoyens ou de l Union.

M. Kenner présente au sujet des banques du Mississipi quelque observations que le rapporteur ne peut entendre

M. Short—Je n'ai pas l'intention de m'engager dans une discussion approfondie des principes du système de banques en general ni de me référer à ces centaines de banques, qui, a une epoque, avaient obtenu une charte soit dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, soit dans celui du Mississipi. Mais le sénateur a fait allusion aux banques de ce dernier Etat, et je desirerais savoir ce qu'il a dit.

M. Kenner—Je ne vois pas trop où le sénateur désire en venir et je ne comprends pas du tout le but de ses observations. Si j'ai fait allusion à l'Etat du Mississipi, je ne l'ai pas fait dans un esprit de jalousie ou de malveillance. Je n'avais bien certainement pas l'intention de dire que parce que le sénateur est de l'Etat du Mississipi, il ne vaille pas quelqu'autre membre que ce soit de ce corps. Mais moi-même, monsieur, je suis de l'Etat du Mississipi, ou du moins mon grand père en était, et cela revient a peu près au même. Je suis même heureux de dire qu'il y occupait une très belle position. J'ai demeure sur le Mississipi et j'ai bu de son eau presque tous les jours depuis que je suis au monde. Le senateur est-il satisfait de cette explication !

M. Short.—Je croyais avoir entendu l'allusion que j'ai relevée, et je suis heureux que le Sénateur nie l'avoir faite. Quant à l'Etat du Mississipi qu'il me soit permis de dire ici qu'on y peut trouver de brillants exemples à suivre, vous y trouverez des avocats du plus grand talent, de brillants orateurs enfin, des hommes éminents dans toutes les classes et dans tous les rangs. En ce qui concerne les banques établies sur le principe du rachat de la circulation par la vente des propriétés immobilières le Mississipi presente un triste spectacle aux autres Etats de l'Union. Quelques personnes, il est vrai, sont d'avis que sur le sol si riche de la Louisiane les banques de cette nature auraient un sort tout différent. Quant à moi je ne voterai pas en faveur d'un bill qui établirait pour bâse des opérations de banques les garanties hypothécaires. Je pourrais faire pressentir les conséquences de ce système en recourant à l'expérience des vingt dernières années, mais je n'occuperai pas si longtemps l'attention du Sénat. Je veux seulement protester contre cette clause. Un Sénateur a dit, il est vrai, que cette base est aussi bonne que celle sur laquelle reposent les banques des Citoyens et de l'Union ; mais est-ce bien assez ? La foi de l'Etat est jusqu'à un certain point engagée au paiement de ces obligations. Mais allons encore plus loin, consultons l'histoire de ce système et éclairons-nous de l'expérience, rappelez-vous les révolutions cammerciales, les crises financières, l'indignation du peuple témoin des opérations et de la chûte de ce système. Consentirez-vous, si vous n'oubliez pas ces choses, à revenir après quinze ans, à ce même système ?

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe demande l'appel nominal.

M. Kenner.—Avec la permission du Sénat je désirerai expliquer ma position sur cette question.

M. Wickliffe.—Le Sénateur n'est pas à l'ordre.

M. Kenner.—Une simple motion d'appel nominal ne met pas fin aux débats.

M. Wickliffe.—Je réfère le Sénateur aux réglements du Sénat.

M. Kenner.—Je ne vois pas la nécessité de consulter les réglements lorsque nous avons un president qui les connait et peut les expliquer.

Mais revenons. La question a été longuement discutée devant le comité. Une partie était opposée à l'introduction de ce principe, pourtant il fut inséré à la suggestion du sénateur de la Pointe-Coupée. Je votai contre à cause de la difficulté de convertir en argent les propriétés immobilières. Je tiens pour vrai que de l'instant où nous adoptons une base qui soit susceptible d'être immédiatement convertie en espèces, nous acceptons un mauvais principe. On ne doit pas supposer que la simple apposition d'une signature au dos d'un papier imprimé lui donne une valeur égale à celle de l'or ou de l'argent, comme medium de circulation, à moins qu'il ne puisse être facilement et promptement converti en espèces. Le public doit y avoir toute confiance ou bien tout échouera. L'experience en a été faite dans la Grande Bretagne. Dans la seconde moitié du siècle dernier la banque d'Angleterre fit faillite; elle était le réceptacle des revenus du gouvernement et sa principale ressource. Cette banque avait la confiance du peuple et du gouvernement à un point qui n'a jamais eu d'égal, ni avant, ni après. Le parlement passa même une loi déclarant que ses billets seraient reçus comme équivalent de l'or et de l'argent Nonobstant cet acte du parlement, les bills de la Banque allèrent se dépreciant de plus en plus, jusqu'à ce qu'enfin ils tombèrent à 25 0|0 au-dessous du pair. Cela montre combien un acte législatif est impuissant à conserver leur intégrité et leur valeur véritable à des billets de banque De l'instant où ils commencent à déprécier, quelle est la première question que l'on pose comme de juste ? C'est celle-ci: sont-ils convertibles immédiatement en or ou en argent ? Si la réponse est affirmative, la base est bonne; dans le cas contraire elle est mauvaise. Ce système a été expérimenté à New-York et les résultats qui y ont été obtenus ne sont pas de nature à nous encourager à essayer la même chose. Il y avait à New-York un très grand nombre de banques dont les billets étaient garantis par hypothèques sur propriétés immobilières. Treize ou quatorze de ces banques firent faillite en moins d'un an, leurs billets perdirent de leur valeur et les actionnaires perdirent de 15 à 25 0|0. Tel a été le résultat de l'expérience faite à New-York. Je donne ces explications par ce que comme c'est moi qui ai rapporté le bill on pourrait peut-être trouver étrange que je vote contre cette section.

M. Wickliffe.— L'honorable sénateur dit qu'il n'a pas lu les réglements, par ce que nous avons pour nous présider un officier qui les lit.

M. Kenner.—L'honorable sénateur prétend-il que l'orateur ne lit pas les règlements?

M. Wickliffe.—Je ne fais que répéter les paroles du sénateur. Je ne suis pas responsable du sens qu'elles peuvent avoir. Mais je vais lui prouver qu'il ne lit pas les réglements, simplement en l'y renvoyant. Je n'ai pas entendu une seule bonne raison avancée pour faire disparaitre la section. On a dit que les bons de la Banque des Citoyens et de l'Union sont soldés, mais où est la preuve de ce fait? Sont-ce leurs six millions de capital ? Sur quoi sont basés leurs quatorze millions de bons ? N'est-ce pas sur des propriétés foncières et des nègres? Cependant l'on dit qu'elles sont solvables et que leurs bons peuvent, sans danger, servir de base à des opérations de banque, tandis que les mêmes membres cherchent à faire disparaître de ce bill une base de la même nature.

M Kenner —Je croisi pouvoir expliquer la différence à la satisfaction du senateur. Voici comment ces banques ont été établies. Un grand nombre de personnes se sont réunies et ont hypothéqué leurs propriétés. Elles s'adressèrent alors à l'Etat, et l'Etat donna ses bons. Ils envoyèrent ces bons en Angleterre, obtinrent de l'argent en échange de ces bons, firent venir l'argent à la Louisiane, et commencèrent sur cette base des opérations de banque; ce système est loin d'être celui que défend le sénateur. La propriété des actionnaires de la banque des Citoyens n'a pas été hypothéquée pour garantir la circulation, mais le rachat et le paiement des bons.

Le Sénat va aux voix sur la proposition de M. Martin d'effacer, et la proposition est acceptée.

M. Lewis fait la motion d'insérer après les mots «Etats-Unis,» dans la quatrième ligne, ce qui suit.

« Sur des bons de la dette consolidée de la Nouvelle-Orleans. »

M. King— J'offre cet amendement.

Autorises et garantis par la trente-septième section de l'acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans et pour pourvoir au gouvernement et à l'administration de toutes ses affaires «approuvé le 23 février 1852.

Je ferai remarquer que la garantie proposée est aussi bonne que les bons de l'Etat. J'espère que le Sénat se montrera libéral envers la ville de la Nouvelle Grléans, qu'il lui fournira ce moßen d'étendre son crédit et de faire participer les compagnies aux avantages qui lui seront accordés.

M. Wickliffe—Si cet amendement est ajouté à ce bill, j'en aurai un du même genre à presenter. La ville de Baton Sarah est endettée et elle aimerait, sans nul doute, voir ses bons devenir la base d'opérations de banque. Il n'a aucune raison pour admettre les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans, quand les propriétés immobiliers de la compagne ne sont pas considérées comme une garantie suffisante. Je suis opposé à ces distinctions injustes. Si les bons de la ville sont acceptés, que ne prenons-nous aussi les ville sont acceptés, que ne prenons-nous aussi les scrips des chemins de fer, les bons des municipalités et des villes de toute sorte. Ils vaudraient tout autant. Qui nous garantit que ces bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans seront jamais payés ? Ne peut-elle abandonner sa charte quand elle le voudra ? Nous avons entendu dire ici qu'elle se retirerait de l'Etat et se déclarerait indépendante, si on ne lui accordait pas ce qu'elle demande. Le sénateur de la Nouvelle Orléans (M. King) a dit que les bons de la ville sont aussi bien garantis que ceux de l'Etat. Quelle est la garantie ? Pourrons-nous forcer le conseil à imposer une taxe ? Il n'y a aucune clause de cette nature dans la charte.

M. Short—La question qui doit être décidée n'est pas si telle ou telle corporation est solvable. La question est simplement celle-ci : La Louisiane désire en ce moment un système de banques différent de l'ancien système, que l'on a reconnu insuffisant. Nous avons donc à rechercher les moyens d'augmenter notre circulation, en lui donnant une base solide qui empêchera le retour d'une de ces crises qui ont déjà affligé l'Etat et d'autres Etats. Nous devons donc adopter un nouveau système ; et pour satisfaire à cette nécessite, nous voulons introduire dans ce bill un principe différent de celui qui a été appliqué pendant des siècles. A la place de ce système, sous l'empire duquel les banques doivent avoir continuellement en main une certaine quantité d'espèces proportionnelle à leur circulation et le reste de cette circulation est représenté par des traites et des billets à courte échéance, nous allons substituer un système entièrement différent. C'est à nous maintenant de décider de quelle manière nous devons opérer ce changement radical, et le moyen de prévenir tout résultat fâcheux. Quant à moi, si je pouvais appliquer mes propres idées, je voudrais qu'il n'y eût pas de banques Mais je ne suis pas ici pour représenter mes propres idées. Je représente les vœux et les opinions de ceux qui m'ont envoyé ici. J'examinerai donc les différents systèmes qui sont proposés et je verrai si la circulation repose sur une base solide. Je ne considère pas les hypothèques sur les propriétés immobilières et les nègres comme constituant une base sûre, parce que cette base s'est déjà écroulée à ma connaissance.

Digitized by Google

La question qui nous occupe en ce moment est de savoir si les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont sûrs Examinons cette question. Les bons échoient à différentes époques ; ils portent un certain intérêt annuel ; cet intérêt doit être payé chaque année. Pour faire face à ses paiemens, la ville doit établir une caisse d'amortissement. Si nous donnons les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans comme base de la circulation, quel sera le résultat ? Afin de donner plus de facilité pour les opérations de banque, vous créerez un antagonisme d'intérêt entre les contribuables et les capitalistes Aussitôt que les intérêts d'une année auront été payés, il faudra imposer une nouvelle taxe pour payer les intérêts de l'année suivante, et ainsi chaque année vous irez affaiblissant la base de la circulation en la rendant moins sûre exactement dans cette proportion. Vous allez créer une circulation basée sur des bons dont la valeur fluctue autant que celle de n'importe quelle espèce de propriété. Vous établirez votre circulation sur une base inconstante et variable. Par ce système, vous faites qu'il devient de l'intérêt de l'Etat de s'endetter, de rester endetté, afin de maintenir la base de la circulation.

Si, après que vous aurez payé une série de bons, vous n'en émettez pas d'autres, vous changerez la nature de la circulation, vous l'exposerez à des contractions dangereuses et vous conserverez dans tout l'Etat la position respective des débiteurs et des créanciers. Alors, si à la Nouvelle-Orléans, ceux qui désirent se liquider sont plus nombreux que ceux qui désirent rester endettés, vous irez, chaque année, diminuant la base de la circulation. Mais si vous faites cela, les intérêts qui militeront en faveur de la perpétuité du système seront si puissants que les contribuables pourront abandonner toute idée de solder leur dette. En sus de l'incertitude et des fluctuations de la circulation qui seraient la conséquence fatale de ce système, il soumettra l'Etat à la nécessité de répandre ce système d'émission de bons qui a déjà créé tant de difficultés et dont je ne voudrais jamais voir le retour.

M. King.—Les arguments de l'honorable Sénateur s'adressent non seulement aux bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans, mais à tout le système des banques libres. Quand je suis entré dans cette enceinte, (et j'imagine qu'il en a été de même de presque tous mes collègues) je m'étais engagé à soutenir les banques libres. Tel était le desir de mes commettants, et le vœu du pays était exprimé d'une manière trop énergique pour qu'on pût s'y méprendre. Les deux partis s'étaient emparés du principe, les deux l'avaient fait entrer dans leur programme et à la tête de leur programme. Chacun d'eux revendiquait l'honneur de le soutenir avec le plus de vigueur et de sincérité. Ils défendirent ce principe dans leurs journaux, ils le proclamèrent dans leurs assemblées, ils engagèrent leurs candidats à la défense de ce principe par leurs résolutions, ils le mirent même en tête de leurs tickets, au jour de l'élection. Tout cela prouve que les deux partis reconnaissaient que le principe des banques libres était entré fort avant dans l'esprit des masses. Nous sommes venus ici pour discuter la question de savoir si nous devons retourner à l'ancien système de banques, qui est repoussé par une majorité considérable du peuple, ou adopter le nouveau principe qui a eu tant de succès dans d'autres Etats, et que nous nous sommes engagés à soutenir S'il est vrai, comme l'a dit le sénateur, que nous ne devrions pas adopter pour base les bons de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, il s'ensuit, comme conséquence inévitable, que nous ne pouvons adopter aucune base. Les arguments invoqués contre les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont également concluants contre le système entier des banques libres. Eh bien! M. l'Orateur, y a-t-il quelqu'un dans cette enceinte qui nie être venu ici engagé à soutenir les banques libres ? Quant à moi, je me considère tenu moralement de voter pour ce bill. Le peuple a décidé la question ; tout ce qui nous reste à faire, c'est de donner une forme, un langage à leur vœu. Mais devons-nous adopter un bill qui doit seulement en apparence, et non en supstance, représenter cette idee? Aux termes de ce bill, il n'y a que deux sortes de bons qui soient admis comme devant servir de base aux opérations de banque D'abord les bons des Etats-Unis, puis les bons de l'Etat de la Louisiane Pense-t-on que nous puissions faire servir à cet objet les bons des Etats-Unis quand ils sont à une prime de 20 pour cent? Certes chacun reconnaîtra que, quelques sûrs que soient ces bons, personne ne consentira à s'en procurer à une si forte prime. Venons maintenant aux bons de l'Etat.

Chacun sait qu'on ne peut s'en procurer en quantité suffisante, et ceux même qui ont été émis sont, pour la plus grande partie, en pays étranger. Si nous ne donnons pas de plus grandes facilités que cela, nous établirons notre système de banques libres que nous sommes venus ici pour créer, sur une base trop fragile pour soutenir l'édifice. Nous n'aurons pas répondu au vœu du public. Quand on a proposé d'admettre les bons de la Nouvelle-Orleans, j'avais supposé que la question serait celle-ci : Sont-ils sûrs ? Je ne pensai pas qu'aucun sentiment sectionnel porterait les sénateurs à envisager la question sous un autre point de vue, ou les engager à proposer les bons de quelque petite ville pour tuer ceux de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Il y a quelques jours, un sénateur, auquel l'une de ces petites villes est redevable de ce genre de service, m'a dit qu'elle désirait faire abandon de sa charte pour se délivrer d'une dette qu'elle ne pouvait payer. Je ne supposais pas que le sénateur viendrait aujourd'hui proposer de mettre Bayou Sarah sur le même pied que la Nouvelle-Orleans.

M. Wickliffe—La ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans était en faillite il y a douze mois.

M. King—Non, Monsieur, la Nouvelle-Orléans n'a jamais été en faillite. En ce moment ses bons sont aussi sûrs que ceux de l'Etat Je puis même dire qu'ils le sont davantage. L'Etat ne peut être forcé à imposer une taxe pour racheter ses bons. Ses créanciers sont tenus de s'en rapporter à sa bonne foi, aussi bien qu'au pouvoir qu'il a de payer. Mais l'acte de consolidation force la ville à pourvoir au rachat de ses bons, et cet acte ne dépend pas, pour sa durée, de la volonté de la ville. La seule question est donc celle-ci : ces bons sont-ils convertibles immédiatement en espèces? Que l'on examine la question, et l'on se convaincra qu'ils peuvent être convertis en espèces sur demande. Ils sont actuellement au pair et ils pourraient demain être échangés pour de l'argent. Comment pourriez-vous donc les repousser? Vous savez que l'Etat réclame un système de banques libres, et les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont indispensables pour rendre le système possible Voudrez-vous nous sacrifier à de mesquines rivalités? Permettrez-vous que des préventions sectionnelles viennent à l'encontre de l'accomplissement de vos devoirs? L'idée des banques libres deviendra une bulle qui, au moindre contact, crevera et se dissipera dans les airs, à moins que vous n'autorisiez l'Etat à émettre un plus grand nombre de bons, ou que vous n'acceptiez ceux de la Nouvelle-Orléans pour servir en partie de base aux opérations des banques. Ses bons sont excellents, ils sont convertibles en espèces, sa prosperité est identifiée à la prospérité de l'Etat. Entre elle et les campagnes, il y a unité et non antagonisme d'interêts. Elle paie [c'est ce que m'a dit le président du comite de finances] plus que la moitié des taxes d'Etat, et certainement c'est là un fait qui devrait rendre ses prétentions dignes de la faveur et de la considération.

M. Rivers—Le senateur veut-il expliquer comment ces bons sont garantis ?

M. King—Une clause de l'acte de consolidation déclare qu'il y aura un fonds d'amortissement et enjoint au Conseil de lever une taxe pour en payer l'interêt. Cet acte n'est pas révocable par la ville.

M. McCay—Je vais lire la section de l'acte de consolidation qui déclare que la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans sera responsable de la dette des anciennes municipalités. Cette dette est de neuf millions de piastres

Digitized by Google

Il lit la section.

Voyons maintenant de quelle manière il est pourvu au paiement de cette dette Il ne faut pas oublier que cette section ne s'applique nullement aux dettes contractees depuis l'adoption de l'acte.

Il poursuit la lecture.

On verra que tout acte, de quelque nature qu'il soit, est absolument nul, à moins que l'argent ne soit prêt pour payer l'intérêt de ces bons dont nous désirons maintenant faire la base des banques libres. Mais, poursuivons.

Il lit.

Il me smble que ces bons doivent être plus sûrs que ceux de l'Etat. Où et comment est-il pourvu au paiement des bons de l'Etat ? Nulle part et nous n'avons que l'obligation morale de les payer. La Nouvelle-Orleans, au contraire, est forcée par une section spéciale do l'acte de consolidation de payer les siens. Elle ne peut en décliner la responsabilité même si elle désirait le faire. Personne douterait-il que par une taxe speciale elle ne pût percevoir annuellement les $600,000 nécessaires ?

M. Wickliffe—La loi ne peut elle pas être révoquée?

M McCay—Oui, s'il en est de même de la loi des banques libres Mais cette correction ne pourrait affecter en rien les droits des particuliers.

M King—Je sais gré à mon collègue d'avoir lu la loi qui s'applique à ce cas. On voit que les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont garantis par une loi qu'elle ne peut révoquer La Législature de l'Etat peut seule la révoquer. L'Etat n'est tenu que moralement de payer ses dettes ; mais pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, tel n'est pas le cas. Il y a pour elle plus qu'une obligation morale—il y a celle que la loi lui fait.

Qu'il me soit permis ici de dire aux sénateurs qui ont en toute bonne foi l'intention d'établir un système de banques libres, que s'ils ne le font pas, grand sera le mécontentement du peuple, et aussi grand encore il sera, si la loi que nous adoptons n'est qu'un semblant de loi au lieu d'une réalité. Si cet amendement n'est pas absolument nécessaire, du moins il ajoutera une nouvelle force à ce bill.

M Wickliffe —L'ardeur que mettent les sénateurs de Nouvelle-Orléans à la discussion de cette question, me fait l'effet d'une tempête dans un verre d'eau. D'après ce qu'ils ont dit, il semblerait vraiment que nous avons attaqué furieusement la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans. Cela est une erreur. Je n'ai fait aucune attaque contre la ville Je m'oppose à ce qu'on admette ses bons comme base de circulation parceque je considère qu'ils n'offrent pas une garantie assez grande Un sénateur pense que nous ne nous conformerions pas au desir du peuple si nous refusions l'amendement proposé par lui. Je dis, moi, qu'il n'a jamais été question de cela aux dernières élections, et qu'à cette époque on ne songeait guère aux bons de la Nouvelle-Orleans. Le senateur dit que la paroisse de Bayou-Sara est insolvable. S'il en etait ainsi, elle ne serait pas dans une condition pire que celle où s'est trouvee la Nouvelle-Orleans. Je desire seulement obtenir pour elle les mêmes avantages qu'il désire, lui, que nous accordions à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et je ne vois pas pourquoi il serait établi entr'elles aucune différence. Mais, dit-il, j'apprends que le peuple de Bayou-Sara desire renoncer à sa charte afin de s'affranchir de ses dettes

Je crois connaître la source à laquelle il a puisé ses informations; c'est d'un individu du nom de Niles qui tient cela, ce même Nicolas qui, par ses fraudes a mis la paroisses de Bayou Sara dans la position où elle est. Le senateur dit encore que les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont aussi sûrs que ceux de l'Etat Est-ce vrai ? A-t-elle les mêmes ressources ? peut-elle payer autant et aussi bien que l'Etat souverain de la Louisiane ? C'est la qu'est toute la question. Il dit que la ville paie la moitié des taxes de l Etat : il n'en est pas ainsi.

M. King.—J'ai dit que j'avais appris cela d'un membre du comité de finance,

M. Wickliffe.—Peu m'importe la source à laquelle le sénateur a puise ses informations, mais il a bien certainement dit ce que je lui attribue. Je le répète, c'est une grande erreur. et si le sénateur veut se donner la peine de consulter les livres, il verra que la Nile Orléans reçoit plus de l'Etat qu'elle ne verse au Trésor. Il dit aussi que les bons de la ville sont parfaitement garantis, qu'ils sont parfaitement sûrs et qu'on peut y compter en toute certitude comme base des opérations de banque. Mais lorsque la taxe devient écrasante, lorsque le peuple est las de payer tous les ans une somme si considerable, combien il lui serait facile de requerir des representans de faire révoquer la loi! Nous savons tous l'influence que peut exercer la ville de la Nouvelle-Orleans dans la Législature, et si sa representation vient ici unanimement décidee à faire révoquer la loi, nous aurons toute la peine imaginable à contrebalancer son influence. Consultez l'histoire des Législatures en Louisiane, vous y trouverez la preuve de ce que j'avance. Je dois dire que je considère les bons de l'Etat de la Louisiane comme beaucoup plus sûrs que ceux de quelque corporation municipale que ce soit sur la terre.

M Short.—Depuis quelque temps, il n'est question que de banques libres, et j'ai tout lieu de croire que le peuple a eu le loisir se former une opinion à ce sujet. Bien des personnes se sont servies de l'expression et on leur a répondu sans que personne se comprit le moins du monde. Quelque temps après la crise commerciale de 1837 et 38, le peuple de l'Etat etait oppose à tout système de banque, quel qu'il fût. Il s'était brûle à ce feu, et vous connaissez le proverbe: «Chat échaudé craint l'eau froide » Il en résulta cette opposition inconsidérée à tout système de banque, opposition dont l'empreinte est marquee jusque dans la Constitution de 1845. Alors on essaya d'attenuer la repulsion que causait le mot de «banques» en y ajoutant le mot «libres » Cela reussit jusqu'a un certain point et aplanit beaucoup les difficultes que nous avions à surmonter avant de pouvoir faire accepter un système quelconque de banques.

Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, M. King, dit que le peuple demande hautement l'etablissement de ce système. J'admets que lorsqu'un enfant a faim et qu'il demande du pain en pleurant, on doit lui en donner. Mais ce qui est un devoir dans un cas, ne l'est pas dans tous et souvent même notre devoir est de refuser énergiquement la demande de l'établissement des banques. Pourquoi ? Parceque la circulation n'est pas assez grande pour les transactions commerciales ordinaires.

Ici se présente la question d'établir une base qui soit sûre. Vous pouvez construire une colonne dont l'architecture et le style soient splendides, mais moi je désire voir et éprouver la base ; lorsque l'on me retrace en style imagé les beautes d'un système de banque, je désire voir sur quelle base il repose.

Je desire que ce que je disais soit bien compris de tous. En ce qui me concerne personnellement, je n'ai pas joint ma voix à celles qui demandaient des banques libres. J'irai plus loin Lorsqu' un système qui offrira toutes les garanties possibles sera presente, je voterai pour, je le soutiendrai autant que je pourrai. Je considère que le système des banques est très dangereux ; aussi, avant de l'adopter, je desire que toutes les précautions possibles soient prises pour que ses consequences soient moins à craindre.

Mais les arguments que j'avance, peuvent n'être pas suffisants ; je vais donc lire quelques extraits d'un livre ecrit après de longues et mûres reflections par un homme de beaucoup de talent.

Il lit ces extraits.

Réfléchissez bien à ce qui est dit ici. Imaginez quelles seraient les conséquences de l'adoption pour base de votre système, de ce qui ne peut être pris avec quelque doute que pour les prêts a courte échéance. Ce système la vient de New-York et l'on tente maintenant de le faire adopter en Louisiane où il n'est pas possible qu'il puisse être établi.

Considerez la chose en elle-même et cherchez à découvrir quelles en seront les consequences. Nous voulons un système de banques, mais pas un système de banques qui nous plongerait de nouveau dans un abyme de ruine et de calamite. Il y avait une fois un philosophe chinois qui avait imagine que le monde etait place sur le dos d'une tortue. Il pouvait demontrer que le globe pouvait reposer fort commodément sur cette base, mais lorsqu'il s'agissait de trouver sur quoi reposait la tortue, il se trouvait un peu embarrasse. Eh bien, nous nous disposons à prendre le credit pour base, au-dessus de ce crédit nous superposons du crédit et encore du crédit. Le système entier ressemblerait à une figure qui présenterait une très petite circonférence à sa base et au sommet très développé en forme de parasol. Il existe une sorte d'opérations de banques qui sont extrêmement sûres, lorsqu'elles sont confiées à des directeurs honnêtes. Je veux satisfaire aux besoins du peuple, mais pour cela je ne crois pas qu'il soit autant nécessaire d'avoir un système nouveau que d'avoir un système sûr. La question de nouveauté ne doit venir qu'après la question de sûreté.

Digitized by Google

En 1841, pendant la grande crise des banques d'ici et des compagnies par actions d'Angleterre et d'Ecosse [bien que cette crise ait été moins forte en Ecosse à cause du système de crédit individuel qui prevaut en ce pays] la question a été complètement éprouvée.

L'expérience de cette époque a convaincu les banquiers qu'une banque est en péril quand elle a fortement spéculé sur les fonds publics, les bons du Trésor &c. &c Une commission du Parlement fut nommé pour ouvrir une enquête sur ce sujet. Quel fût le résultat de leur examen! Que dans un pays commerçant, les lettres de change sont une meilleure garantie que le papier de l'Inde ou même les bons du Trésor.

(L'honorable représentant lit un passage du rapport de la commission.)

Je préfère donc une banque basée sur le principe primitivement avancé par Adam Smith; c'est-à-dire une piastre en espèces pour chaque deux piastres en circulation, et l'excédant garanti par des traites tirées sur des localités commerçantes solides et par des billets à courte échéance. Ce système est préférable à tout système de banque basé sur des effets publics et des bons.

M. Lacey—En traitant cette question, j'essaierai de montrer cette libéralité qui doit caractériser les opinions de toute personne qui prétend avoir des vues larges et pratiques sur les questions politiques. Je n'amoindrirai ni n'exagérerai les avantages de la mesure qui est en ce moment devant le Sénat. Je ne restreindrai pas mes vues de manière à ce que le système devienne incapable de fonctionner. Je ne les étendrai pas non plus de façon à y introduire le vague et le désordre. Je m'efforcerai d'être assez libéral pour pouvoir contribuer à satisfaire aux intérêts de la Louisiane. Non seulement parce que l'intérêt de l'Etat doit être notre premier soin, mais parce que je me dois à moi-même d'en agir ainsi pour rester conséquent avec moi-même. J'ai l'honneur d'appartenir au parti démocratique, je faisais aussi partie de la Convention qui a établi ce programme auquel le peuple de l'Etat a donné sa complète adhésion. Ce programme a été établi dans des vues larges et libérales. En ma qualité de membre de la Convention, je m'engageai à soutenir tout système de banque qui présenterait les plus grandes facilités en même temps que la plus grande sécurité. Tel est mon devoir pour rester d'accord avec moi-même, en politique, et je m'efforcerai d'être conséquent en politique comme dans mes relations personnelles.

J'étais d'abord résolu à n'accepter que des effets des Etats et de l'Etat. Mais les arguments du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans et le parti qu'ils ont tiré de la loi de 1852 me portent à être en faveur des bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans Je ne désire pas soutenir un système basé simplement sur les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans, bien que je les crois tout à fait supérieurs à ceux de Bayou Sara. Mais je ne suis pas opposé à l'admission des bons émis sous l'empire de la loi de 1852. Il est parfaitement clair que, par l'acte de consolidation, les taxes répondent du paiement de ces bons. Vous pourriez rappeler l'acte, cependant tous les bons émis sous l'empire de cette loi jusqu'au moment de son rappel, seraient garantis d'une manière absolue par les propriétés des contribuables, ou plutôt par les taxes de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Je ne connais pas de meilleure garantie que celle-là. Elle est meilleure même que les bons de l'Etat. Mais comprend-je bien l'acte de 1852? Je demanderai aux sénateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans de me reprendre, si je fais erreur. Selon moi, aux termes de cet acte, la ville s'est obligée de prendre à sa charge les anciens bons émis par les différentes municipalités, et chaque année une taxe de $600,000 doit être imposée pour faire face aux intérêts a payer sur les nouveaux bons. On voit donc qu'il ne s'agit pas de prendre simplement les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans, sans aucune garantie, mais bien des bons qui sont garantis par une loi qui ne peut être rappelée. Je crois que c'est là une base solide. Je ne crois pas que nous puissions raisonnablement demander une meilleure garantie. Je crois qu'il est convenable d'accepter ces bons, surtout lorsqu'on considère que sans ces bons, nous aurions si peu de facilité pour commencer un système de banque. A moins que vous n'étendiez les facilités, le système des banques libres deviendra un zéro, un rêve, une chimère. L'admission de ces bons est nécessaire aussi pour la Nouvelle-Orléans. Je suis fier de cette ville. Elle est la métropole de notre Etat. Sa prospérité a droit à tous nos vœux et à toutes nos sympathies. Je désire autant qu'aucun sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, la voir grandir et prospérer. Mais il y a une chose sur laquelle je voudrais appeler l'attention. Supposez que des bons pour un montant de trois millions soient émis. La Législature pourrait rappeler la loi qui ordonne l'imposition de la taxe avant que ces bons fussent émis. Il s'en suivrait que le paiement de ces bons ne serait pas garanti par la caisse d'amortissement. Ce ne seraient alors que de simples bons, nullement garantis. Je propose donc cet amendement:

« Bien entendu toutefois, qu'en cas ou aucune partie du dit acte du 23 février 1852, serait rappelée, les bons émis après le rappel ne seront pas reçus.

Je vais me faire bien comprendre. Aux termes de la loi qui existe aujourd'hui, une taxe annuelle doit être imposée pour le paiement des bons. Mais si une partie de la loi est rappelée ceux qui seraient émis après ce rappel, ne seraient que de simples bons, dont le paiement ne serait pas garanti Je suis disposé à admettre les bons de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, garantis comme ils le sont par l'acte de 1852; mais s'ils étaient privés de cette garantie, je me refuserais à les accepter comme base d'un système de banques libres. Appuyés sur cette caisse d'amortissement, les livres présentent une garantie aussi solide que toutes celles que l'on pourrait trouver n'importe où Ils sont basés sur les propriétés situées dans cette grande et florissante ville dont nous désirons tous la prospérité, à l'accroissement de laquelle nous sommes tous disposés à travailler chaque fois que nous pourrons le faire, sans porter atteinte aux intérêts des autres sections de l'Etat.

M. Lacey lit un passage d'un rapport officiel pour prouver la vérité d'une assertion faite par lui et contredite par M. Wickliffe.

M. Wickliffe.— Que reçoit la Nouvelle-Orléans?

M. McCay.— J'ai dit qu'elle payait la moitié des taxes de l'Etat. S'il convient à la Législature de faire retourner ces taxes tout entière à la ville, le fait reste toujours le même. C'est là une façon d'épiloguer que je ne comprends pas.

M. Wickliffe.— On se rappellera que j'ai dit que tel n'était pas le fait, en examinant le compte de balance l'on verra que la Nouvelle-Orléans reçoit plus qu'elle ne paie. Le sénateur dit qu'il ne comprend rien à cette façon d'épiloguer. Je puis lui dire que personne plus que lui n'a de facilités pour ce genre de discussion

M. Kenner.— Je pense que personne ne peut se compromettre en votant pour l'admission de ces bons. Nous ne devons certainement pas admettre comme base de la circulation des bons dont nous ne voudrions pas si nous avions à faire un placement. Mais je crois qu'il n'est personne ici qui ne fût plus disposé à placer son argent en bons de la ville que dans ceux de l'Etat. L'Etat a émis des bons en faveur de la compagnie de Desséchement. Que sont-ils devenus? Leur existence est à peine connue. Il a aussi emis les bons du chemin de fer de Nashville. Le chemin de fer a été vendu, il y a quelques années dans les rues de la Nouvelle-Orléans pour la valeur du vieux fer, et personne n'entend parler de bons. Il y a encore les bons du chemin de fer du Golfe du Mexique, les bons de la compagnie du Canal Barataria, Lafourche et d'autres semblables. Qui voudrait de semblables placements? Mais nous admettons que ce sont des bons sur lesquels nous pouvons, en toute sécurité, baser un système de Banques libres. D'un autre côté vous avez les bons consolidés de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, garantis par un acte de la Législature. Cet acte peut-il être rappelé? Non. Les bons doivent être et seront payés par la Nouvelle-Orléans, à moins qu'elle ne répudie ses dettes. Est-il quelqu'un qui admette pour un seul instant que la Nouvelle-Orléans soit disposée à répudier sa dette. Il ne peut-être douteux que ces bons ne soient supérieurs à ceux de l'Etat, bien que ce fait ne soit pas extrêmement flatteur pour notre vanité.

Digitized by Google

M. Short.— La question n'est pas si nous prendrons tels bons plutôt que tels autres, mais si nous en devons prendre aucuns.

M Kenner.— C'est là justement ce que je soutiens. Si vous dites que ni les uns ni les autres ne sont bons, vous devriez faire la proposition de refuser les uns et les autres.

M. Hodge présente l'amendement suivant, comme amendement après ceux de MM. Lewis et King.

Pourvu que tout banquier ou corporation établis d'après cet acte, ait en main en tout temps un montant en espèce égal à un tiers de sa circulation et qu'un manque à ce devoir soit considéré comme forfaiture à leur charte.

M. King—Le sénateur ferait mieûx de présenter cet amendement après le vote sur la question qui est maintenant devant le Sénat.

M Hodge—La raison qui me fait insister pour que l'on en vienne d'abord aux voix sur mon amendement, est que s'il est adopté, je voterai pour l'amendement du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans ; s'il est rejeté, je voterai contre cet amendement. C'est au sénateur à décider pour lui-même la conduite qu'il doit tenir pour remplir ses devoirs envers le parti auquel il appartient. Je n'ai rien à y voir. Ma conduite ne peut être influencée par de semblables motifs. Je pense que l'objet que nous devons surtout nous proposer dans la recherche du système qui devra être adopté, est d'abord la garantie complète donnée aux détenteurs de biens, aux personnes qui peuvent devenir possesseurs des billets émis par une banque. Il est absolument nécessaire qu'elles soient garanties contre toute perte. Ensuite, le second objet que nous devons rechercher, c'est de fournir des moyens qui facilitent les opérations de banque, chose dont le besoin se fait fortement sentir. Bien que je puisse admettre que les bons de l'Etat et les effets sur les Etats-Unis ne forment pas une base suffisante, cependant je ne suis pas disposé à accepter aucune autre base que je ne croirai pas parfaitement solide, à moins que l'amendement que je propose ne soit adopté. La meilleure garantie qui puisse exister, c'est un fonds continuellement en réserve d'espèces, équivalant à un tiers de la circulation. L'expérience a prouvé la solidité de cette base. Elle est démontrée par l'histoire des banques, démontrée aussi par les opérations journalières des banques qui fonctionnent aujourd'hui. Je suis donc en faveur de cet amendement. Je ne pense pas qu'il impose des restrictions injustes aux banquiers : que l'on veuille ou non placer son capital dans ce genre d'actions, peu m'importe. On fera ce placement, si on le juge avantageux. Le grand point pour moi c'est la protection des détenteurs de billets. Je n'appuierai aucun système qui ne garantisse pas cette protection Je ne pense pas que le sénateur de l'Ascension, Mr. Konner, soit dans le vrai lorsqu'il dit que la question est de savoir si on voudra prendre tel ou tel stock. La question, je le repète, est de protéger les individus qui seront porteurs des billets de banque. J'ai entendu avec surprise avancer que les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont préférables à ceux de l'Etat. La Nouvelle-Orléans n'est qu'un élément constitutif de l'Etat. Ses ressources et sa richesse ne sont qu'une partie des ressources et de la richesse de la Louisiane. Les propriétés que l'on dit être affectées à la garantie de ses bons sert déjà de gage pour le paiement de la dette de l'Etat. Puisque le sénateur fait si bon marché de certains bons contre lesquels l'opinion publique s'est élevée, je le renverrai à cette disposition de la Constitution, qui les relève de l'abjection où ils étaient tombés et pourvoit à leur paiement. Mais assez parlé de ces bons, je ne suis en faveur ni des uns ni des autres.

Je suis arrivé à la conclusion que la seule base sûre ce sont les espèces. C'est là quelque chose de substantiel, sur quoi l'on peut compter, ce n'est pas une simple preuve de l'existence d'une dette dont le paiement à venir reste incertain.

M. Short—Il me semble que l'amendement propose, est, quant à ce bill, une tentative de mêler deux systèmes entièrement antipathiques. Si vous exigez, une réserve en espèces qui doive rester dans les voûtes de la Banque, vous rendez le système impraticable C'est exiger trop. Vous demandez qu'on achète des effets publics pour les faire servir pour les faire servir de garantie, puis vous demandez comme garantie additionnelle qu'on enfouisse dans les voûtes une autre partie de son capital. Ce serait le coup de mort porté au système de banques libres.

M. Kenner—Je pensais avoir prouvé à tous les membres du Sénat que si le bill n'était pas parvenu, du moins il avait cherché à garantir les détenteurs de billets. Il y avait deux systèmes devant le comité, L'un fondé sur la base des espèces, l'autre sur la garantie individuelle des actionnaires jusqu'à concurrence du double de leurs actions. ainsi qu'il est réglé par la 24me section. Quelle est la nature de l'amendement présenté par le sénateur de Caddo ? (M. Hodge) Le voici : Si une banque a cent mille piastres de circulation, elle doit toujours avoir en réserve $33,000 où elle perd sa charte. Ce serait là assez pour que n'importe qu'elle Banque perdît sa charte au bout de cinq mois. Le bill qui est devant le Sénat rend les actionnaires responsables jusqu'à concurrence du double du montant de leurs actions. Cette disposition est prise du système Ecossais, bien que le principe en soit peu appliqué ici dans toute son étendue, car, en Ecosse, les actionnaires sont responsables jusqu'à extinction de tout ce qu'ils possèdent. L'application de ce principe a pour resultat que les banques Ecossaise sont toujours prospères. Elles ont résisté aux convulsions qui ont englouti d'autres banques, et conservé leur crédit aux époques les plus désastreuses. Les actionnaires ayant toute leur fortune engagée dans la banque, dépendant de la prospérité et de la stabilité de cette institution, agissent avec la plus grande prudence, la plus grande circonspection. Entre ces deux systèmes nous avons pris un terme moyen. Nous avons pensé qu'après avoir exigé que les banques déposâssent un montant d'effets publics égal à leur capital tout entier, et qu'ils fussent responsables jusqu'à concurrence du double du montant de leurs actions, nous avions établi une garantie aussi bonne que possible. Je le demande au Sénat : cette garantie n'est-elle pas préférable à celle que voudrait nous faire accepter le sénateur de Caddo ? (M. Hodge) En qualité de membre du comité, j'appellerai l'attention du Sénat sur d'autres garanties données par le bill. Du moment qu'un billet est protesté, tout ce que la Banque possède devient le gage des détenteurs de billets; un protêt de l'un des billets équivaut au protêt de tous les billets. Si avec toutes ces garanties le système n'est pas assez sûr, je ne sais pas ce que l'on peut demander.

M. Hodge—Quelle est aujourd'hui la position des banques ?

M. Kenner—Elles sont tenues d'avoir en réserve un tiers en espèces, mais la loi ne porte aucune clause pénale suffisante pour les forcer à le faire.

M. Boatner—Le bill lui-même n'exige-t-il pas que les paiements soient faits en espèces ?

M. Kenner—Oui, monsieur.

M. Boatner—Pourquoi donc alors s'opposer à l'amendement.

M. Kenner—Je vais l'expliquer. Si un individu se présente à la Banque avec un billet et qu'on lui en refuse le paiement, il le faut protester, les intérêts commencent alors à courir à 12 pour cent par an. Si je m'oppose à l'amendement c'est parce que je le crois impraticable. A 9 heures du matin le montant d'espèces exigé pourrait être en réserve et en une demi heure avoir disparu.

M. Hodge.—Le Sénateur dit qu'à 9 heures il pourrait y avoir cette reserve d'un tiers en espèces, et qu'elle pourrait avoir été épuisée en une demi-heure. Mais d'un autre côté, supposez qu'une personne se présente à la banque avec de ces billets pour la valeur de 75,000 piastres et qu'elle demande des espèces en échange de ces billets, à coup sur il faudrait la satisfaire, autrement la banque devrait renoncer à ses privilèges. Quelle est donc la différence en principe. Si le Sénateur veut bien y prendre garde, il verra que son raisonnement est faux. Il verra que même si la banque n'est pas forcée d'avoir une réserve d'un tiers en espèces, cependant si elle a plus de circulation que d'espèces, elle est exposée à perdre d'un moment à l'autre sa charte d'incorporation. J'appellerai l'attention du Sénat sur une autre disposition importante. Au premier abord, il pourrait sembler inutile après avoir forcé les banquiers à acheter des effets publics pour en faire la garantie de leurs opérations, d'exiger d'eux encore qu'ils aient une réserve en espèces comme garantie additionnelle. Mais, après tout, ce n'est pas trop demander. Quand ils achètent ces bons et les déposent, ils reconnaissent six pour cent d'intérêt sur leur montant. Supposant que leurs profits ne soient que de six pour cent, leur gain total serait de douze pour cent. S'ils font leurs prêts à huit pour cent, ce qui est loin d'être un taux élevé, ils feront 14 pour cent. Même, si nous les forçons d'avoir toujours une réserve d'un tiers en espèces vous leur laisseriez (retranchant l'intérêt à 8 pour dent sur cette réserve d'un tiers) un profit de 9 1|3 ou de 11 1|3 selon que leurs prêts seront faits à 6 ou 8 pour cent, ce qui est un profit beaucoup plus considérable que celui que les banques actuelles retirent de leur capital. J'insiste sur mon amendement.

Digitized by Google

Les débats se poursuivent encore quelque temps, puis la question est renvoyée jusqu'à demain.

MESSAGE ENVOYÉ A LA CHAMBRE.

Le secrétaire informe la Chambre que le président a signé les actes suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de Samuel Patterson.

Acte pour venir au secours de Hall Frazier, mulâtre, applicant pour sa liberté, de la paroisse de Claiborne.

Acte pour changer le nom de Suzanne Virginie Haden.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte pour fixer le temps pour faire les ventes de Shérifs et de Coroners et pour d'autres objets » approuvé le 5 mars, 1852.

Acte pour amender l'article 1264 du Code Civil.

Acte intitulé Acte pour autoriser le Recorder dans et pour la paroisse de Carroll à nommer un député, et une Résolution conjointe adressée au Congrès concernant l'érection d'un hopital de marine dans le district du Têche de la Louisiane.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours à l'acte suivant en l'amendant.

Acte pour canaliser et dessécher les terres marécageuses et inondées; données à l'Etat de la Louisiane par l'acte du Congrès intitulé « Acte pour aider l'Etat de la Louisiane dans le dessèchement de ses terres marécageuses » approuvé le 2 mars 1849.

Que le Sénat a adopté un substitut à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour amender un acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et pour pourvoir au gouvernement et à l'administration de ses affaires, approuvé le 23 fevrier 1850.

Que le Sénat a adopté un substitut à un acte intitulé « Acte pour venir au secours des personnes possédant des certificats d'entrée sur les terres marécageuses, émis par les officiers du bureau des terres des Etats-Unis subséquent au 2 mars 1849, et avant le 17 mars 1850.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivants, intitulés :

Acte pour les appropriations et le remboursement de certaines sommes d'argent payées pour des warrans des terres des écoles.

Acte pour amender la 17me section d'un acte pour prescrire la manière de disposer des terres, dont les taxes n'auront pas été payées.

Et que le Sénat demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes intitulés : Acte pour venir au secours de l'Hôpital de Charite.

Acte pour amender l'article 1264 du code civil et une résolution adressée au Congrès concernant l'hôpital de marine dans le district du Têche de la Louisiane.

BILLS ADOPTES.

M. Wickliffe présente un acte émancipant Charles Johnson, de la paroisse Ouest Feliciana.

M. Slark présente un acte intitulé :

Acte pour autoriser le maire et le conseil municipal de la ville de Plaquemines à faire un certain canal.

M. King demande la prise en considération d'un acte intitulé : Acte autorisant les procédures pour forcer les débiteurs quand jugement aura été rendu, à déclarer leur propriétés.

M. Sbort demande la prise en considération d'un bill intitulé : Acte pour venir au secours de William L. Knox.

MERCREDI, 30 mars 1853.

Une communication de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane est déposée devant le Sénat. La communication porte qu'un rapport prétendu de la Banque a été publié dans les journaux, mais que ce document n'a pas été fourni par la Banque.

M. Clifton donne les explications suivantes: Une circulaire avait été préparée dans l'intention qu'elle fut envoyée à toutes les banques. Par suite d'une erreur, cette circulaire n'a pas été envoyée à la Banque de l'Etat. Il y a lieu de croire cependant qu'elle lui est parvenue. Il fait la motion que la communication soit imprimée et annexée au rapport du comité.

La motion est adoptée.

M. King, du comité spécial auquel avait été référé un acte provenant de la Chambre et intitulé : Acte pour prendre le cens de l'Etat, rapporte comme suit :

A l'honorable W. W. Farmer, Président du Sénat.

La majorité du comité auquel avait été référé un acte pour prendre le cens de l'Etat, rapporte qu'il considère les dispositions de cet acte insuffisantes pour prendre le cens de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

La clause, dans la cinquième section, autorisant les assesseurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans a employer des assistants pour faire le recensement, est introduite par ce que d'après des représentations faites par ces assesseurs, qu'ils pouvaient à peine perdre le temps nécessaire pour faire ce recensement.

Il y a grand danger que l'ouvrage ne soit pas aussi bien fait par les assistants que par les chefs, sur qui retombe la responsabilité entière De plus il est possible, d'après les dispositions de cet acte, aux assesseurs de se faire un beau profit, en donnant ailleurs le soin de faire le recensement. Si une pareille chose arrivait, cela serait au détriment des intérêts de la ville. Le recensement ne se ferait que dans les endroits où il est facile de le faire, laissant de côté ceux qui sont difficiles. La conséquence en est que la ville perdrait une partie de sa juste représentation. De plus, il est raisonnable que ceux qui font l'ouvrage en aient la paie. Cela ne peut être qu'en nommant des personnes expressément pour ce but, en leur allouant des émoluments

Pour ces raisons, le comité recommande un changement dans la manière prévue pour faire le recensement de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Cela pourrait s'effectuer en adoptant l'amendement et la section additionnelles suivants:

Dans la 1re section de l'acte imprimé, 2me ligne après le mot « Etat » d'insérer « excepté dans la paroisse d'Orléans. »

Dans la cinquième section, après le mot « énuméré, » dans la 3me ligne d'effacer tous les mots jusqu'à « ladite compensation » dans la 1re ligne.

D'insérer la section suivante qui sera appelée la 9me section, et changer la 9me en 10me.

Sect. 9me. Il est de plus décrété &c; Que le recorder du premier District de la Nouvelle-Orléans nommera trois assesseurs pour faire le recensement de ce District. Le recorder du second District devra en nommer deux pour faire le recensement de ce District. Le recorder du troisième District deux pour faire le recensement de ce District. Le recorder du Quatrième District un pour ce District; et le jury de police de la partie de la paroisse d'Orléans située sur la rive droite du fleuve un pour ce District.

Le District que chaque assesseur devra assesser lui sera particulièrement assigné, là ou plus d'une personne sera nommée pour tout District de la ville.

Lesdits assesseurs pour faire le recensement quand ils seront ainsi nommés devront remplir tous les devoirs qui sont assignés par cet acte aux autres assesseurs, qui pourront faire le recensement, ils devront avoir les mêmes droits et pouvoirs, ils recevront les mêmes émoluments et seront sujets aux mêmes pénalités, et en tout se conformeront à cet acte pour faire le recensement, ils prêteront aussi le serment prescrit par la constitution pour la fidèle exécution de leurs devoirs.

(Signé) WM KING,
Président du Comité.

(Signé) TH. J. McGAY,

Sur motion, ce rapport est lu et est ordonné à l'impression.

M. Barthe du même comité soumet le rapport suivant comme rapport de la minorité, lequel est lu et est ordonné à l'impression en même temps que celui de la majorité.

Digitized by Google

Le soussigné, membre du comité auquel avait été référé l'acte intitulé : « Acte pour faire le recensement de l'Etat » demande la permission de rapporter ce qui suit comme rapport de la minorité.

S'il est vrai comme le dit la majorité du comité que des assistants assesseurs ne pourraient remplir les devoirs de leur place aussi bien que des assesseurs en chef dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, la seule conclusion que l'on puisse tirer de ce fait est qu'il serait nécessaire d'avoir un nombre d'assesseurs principaux pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, suffisant pour accomplir fidèlement cet ouvrage.

Mais le soussigné ne peut voir par quel raisonnement le comité arrive à cette conclusion que parce que des assistants assesseurs seraient insuffisants, il convient de confier la nomination des assesseurs aux recorders pour la Nouvelle-Orléans, tandis que dans tout l'Etat les assesseurs sont élus par le peuple. Aucune raison, bonne ou mauvaise, n'est donnée par la majorité du comité pour faire adopter une telle censure qui mettrait la nomination d'officiers d'Etat entre les mains d'une autorité municipale et laisserait par conséquent les assesseurs sous le contrôle de ladite autorité.

C'est pourquoi le soussigné recommande que la 5me section de l'acte pour prendre le recensement de l'Etat soit amendé de manière que le nombre des assesseurs pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans soit augmenté de ——— assesseurs, lesquels seront élus par le peuple et devront remplir les mêmes devoirs et recevront la même compensation que les autres assesseurs.

(Signé) VICTOR BURTHE.

Le bill du recensement est pris en considération et adopté avec quelques amendements.

AFFAIRES NON TERMINEES.

BILL DES BANQUES.

Le Sénat prend en considération le bill ayant pour objet d'autoriser les banques dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

M. Hodge présente l'amendement suivant à l'amendement de MM. Lewis et King, dans la 8me section : Pourvu que chaque banquier ou compagnie de banque faisant les affaires en vertu de cet acte, ait en mains en tout temps, en espèces, un montant égal à un tiers de ses ou de leurs billets en circulation ; et si à n'importe quel temps le montant des espèces tombait au-dessous du nombre proportionné des billets en circulation, comme il est pourvu par le présent, et reste ainsi pendant l'espace de dix jours. Il ne sera pas légal après cela pour le dit banquier ou compagnie de banque de faire un emprunt ou d'escompter quoi que ce soit, jusqu'à ce que sa ou leur position soit rétablie suivant les termes prescrits par le présent.

Cela est adopté.

L'amendement de MM. King et Lewis est ainsi conçu :

Ou bons de la dette consolidée de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, autorisés et assurés par la 37me section de l'acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et pour pourvoir à l'administration et au gouvernement de ses affaires. Approuvé le 23 février 1852

Pourvu cependant, qu'en cas qu'une partie du dit acte du 23 février 1852 soit rappelée, que les bons emis après ce rappel ne seront pas reçus en vertu de cet acte.

L'amendement de M. Hodge est adopté.

M. King—Je dirai au Sénat qu'hier, en examinant ce sujet, j'ai trouvé dans le bill de consolidation pour la ville de Lafayette une clause qui exige qu'une taxe additionnelle de $50,000 soit levée, ce qui mettrait à $650,000 le montant total de la taxe annuelle, et cette taxe est établie par une loi qui ne peut être rappelée.

M. Martin—C'est là une affaire de chiffres entièrement. Que le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans calcule et il verra qu'il faudra $540,000 pour payer l'intérêt, et que ce qui restera ne sera pas suffisant pour payer les bons.

M. Short—J'ai peu de chose à ajouter à ce que j'ai déjà dit. Je suis opposé à la clause relative à la réserve en espèces présentée par le sénateur de Caddo (M. Hodge). Je voterai pour n'importe quel bill que je croirai présenter les garanties suffisantes. Je ne suis pas certain que je voterai pour un bill qui admettra comme base les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans, mais je voterai certainement contre tout bill qui contiendra la clause de la réserve en espèces. Personne n'ignore que quand une banque est forcée d'avoir une aussi grande réserve en espèces, cette réserve devient un capital mort. C'est autant de capital retiré de la circulation, c'est autant de capital qui ne porte aucun intérêt.

J'adresserai au sénateur une question. Ces bons n'ont-ils pas déjà été emis ?

M. King—Une partie a été émise.

M. Short—Alors la totalité ne vaut guère plus qu'un fétus.

M. Kenner—Une partie a été émise, mais il en reste beaucoup à émettre. Ces bons ne sont donc pas aussi insignifiants que le prétend le sénateur. C'est de bel et bon argent.

L'amendement, avec le sur-amendement, est adopté.

M. Martin fait la motion d'insérer dans la 8e section, après les mots Etats-Unis, dans la 3e et la 4e ligne, les mots « ou de toute corporation municipale ou de tout jury de police de cet Etat.

M. Martin—Je suis persuadé que la majorité du comité sera en faveur de cet amendement, attendu que ces bons sont certainement supérieurs à la garantie donnée par les bons et l'hypothèque ainsi que le portait le bill lorsqu'il est sorti des mains du comité.

M. Derbès.—Je ne vois pas aucune raison qui milite en faveur de cet amendement. Il ne peut conduire qu'à une perte de temps. Le sénateur parle de la solidité de ces bons. Il devrait se rappeler que les bons de la Ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans sont garantis par un gage équivalent à une valeur de $80,000,000 en propriétés. Quand il pourra nous démontrer que la même valeur en propriété sert de gage au paiement des bons des juris de police, je ne soulèverai aucune objection contre son amendement, mais je pense et je déclare en toute sincérité que la proposition du sénateur ne peut que nous faire perdre notre temps.

M. Martin.—Le sénateur se trompe s'il suppose que dans la campagne il n'y a pas de propriétés pour servir de gage à ces bons. La Législature de l'année dernière a passé une autre loi imposant une taxe sur les actes hypothécaires. Ces effets sont aussi solides que les bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans. La ville, dit-on, a pour $80,000,000 de propriétés. Les opinions varient sur ce point ; quelqu'un m'a dit que ces propriétés s'élevaient à $140,000,000. Mais, admettant les 80 millions, il faut encore se rappeler qu'elles sont hypothéquées par une dette qui avait entraîné la faillite de la ville. Les bons de la ville sont simplement la preuve d'une dette ancienne qui n'a jamais été payée. J'ai la satisfaction de représenter une paroisse qui n'a jamais été en faillite. Si elle désire émettre des bons pour des chemins de fer et d'autres travaux d'améliorations intérieures, ces bons seront aussi propres que ceux de la ville à servir de base aux spéculations de banque. Si nous nous lançons dans ce système qui n'est autre chose qu'une légalisation de la fraude, je désire que ma paroisse ait autant de chance qu'une autre. Je ne vois pas pourquoi on établirait des distinctions odieuses. Tout le système est pourri, et l'expérience le prouve d'une manière concluante. Mais si nous devons l'adopter, donnons à toutes les paroisses autant de chances d'en profiter. C'est le même système que celui qui prévaut à la Nouvelle-Orléans—un système de fraude et de vol légalisés.

La 8me, la 9me et la 10me sections sont adoptées.

M. Martin fait la motion d'effacer de la 10me section et de la 8me ligne le mot : « trente » et d'y substituer le mot « trois. »

M. Martin.—Je ne vois pas pourquoi l'on accorderait trente jours, quand le travail peut être fait, et aussi bien, en trois jours,

M. Kenner—J'espère que le sénateur n'insistera pas sur sa motion. Il est évident que la plupart des banques qui doivent être établies sous l'empire de cette loi auront des bureaux à la Nlle-Orléans, tandis que l'Auditeur est établi ici. Trois jours seraient beaucoup trop peu.

M. Martin.—Que le banquier prenne un bateau rapide et vienne à Bâton-Rouge, il verra que trois jours sont plus que suffisants.

La motion est déposée sur le bureau.

M. Martin—Je fais la proposition alors d'insérer 90 jours, au lieu de 30, afin qu'il y ait tout le temps de faire deux ou trois faillites.

Digitized by Google

Cette motion est aussi déposée sur le bureau.

La 11 et le 12e sections sont adoptées.

M. Boatner fait la motion d'effacer de la 13e section, 9e ligne, le mot cinquante, et d'y insérer cinq cents; cette motion est repoussée.

M. Boatner.—Je voudrais adresser quelques questions au sujet de cette section. Quand l'endossement sur le refus de paiement d'un billet est refusé, je voudrais savoir à qui la pénalité revient, et à l'instance de qui le procès doit être institué.

M. Kenner.—J'avoue que ce point n'a pas frappé le comité. La remarque du sénateur est fort juste.

M. Boatner.—Je fais la motion de changer le montant de la pénalité et de le fixer à $500 au lieu de $50.

M. Kenner.—Ce serait beaucoup trop fort. Cinquante piastres paraîtront suffisantes, si l'on considère que la pénalité est encourue pour chaque billet présenté. Si nous la fixons à $500, la somme deviendra si énorme qu'il serait impossible de la payer. Par là nous détruisons notre propre ouvrage.

M. Boatner.—Je pourrai répondre que la somme de $50 est si faible que ce ne serait pas ce motif qui pourra décider n'importe qui à instituer une action. Pour que le motif soit puissant, il faut que la somme soit assez forte. Beaucoup de personnes qui seraient disposées à instituer une action pour $500 ne voudraient pas se donner cette peine pour $50.

M. Short.—La pénalité n'est pas encourue par un simple protêt. Elle n'est encourue qu'en cas de refus de mettre l'endossement requis sur le billet. L'objet de la pénalité est de prévenir ce refus. Il est plus d'un banquier qui consentirait à payer les $50 pour éviter le protêt et gagner du temps. Je pense que la pénalité devrait être plus élevée qu'elle ne l'est dans le bill.

M. Kenner.—Je ne ferai que quelques observations sur ce sujet. Il est vrai que la pénalité n'est recouvrable qu'en cas de refus d'endosser le bill et non en cas d'un simple protêt lorsque l'endossement a eu lieu. Mais il faut se rappeler que chacune des piastres du capital de la banque est affectée au rachat de ces billets. C'est là une garantie suffisante pour les détenteurs de billets. Le sénateur dit qu'un banquier aimerait mieux payer $50, que de voir ses opérations arrêtées. Cela peut-être vrai en théorie, mais n'a pas d'application ici. Car en admettant cette assertion, un homme pourrait présenter de cinq minutes, en cinq minutes, un nouveau billet et se faire payer à chaque fois par la banque, ce qui deviendrait un peu coûteux pour elle. Je crois que $50 sont tout à fait suffisantes pour l'objet que l'on se propose.

La motion d'insérer $500 est perdue.

M. McCay.— J'ai des objections contre cette section du bill. Je trouve qu'elle donne à l'auditeur des pouvoirs judiciaires, et je ne saurais y consentir.

M. Kenner.—Il y a beaucoup de force dans l'objection du sénateur, mais je ne pense pas qu'elle soit entièrement fondée. Il est évident qu'il doit y avoir un protêt. Le moyen adopté dans le bill du Sénat est bien supérieur à celui du bill de la Chambre. Le bill de la Chambre force celui qui veut faire protester d'aller trouver un notaire et il doit payer les frais du protêt. Cela n'est pas juste. Il ne doit pas payer les fautes de la banque. Et puis pour faire des lois pour créer des frais additionnels en faveur d'un officier, quand le même travail peut être aussi bien fait par la banque, par le banquier lui-même, sans qu'il en coûte un sou de frais.

M. McCay—Je fais la motion de retrancher cette portion de la section qui donne à l'Auditeur le droit de décider quand la banque a une défense légale à opposer à la demande du paiement.

M. King—Je m'oppose à ce que cette clause soit retranchée; si nous l'effaçons, la forfaiture de la charte d'une banque en cas de protêt deviendra irrévocable. Dès qu'une banque refusera de payer, qu'elle ait ou non une défense légale, il faut qu'elle ferme. Supposez par exemple que le bill présenté est contrefait.

M. Kenner—S'il est contrefait, ce n'est plus un billet de banque.

M. King—En bien! supposez qu'il ne soit pas contrefait, mais que le banquier pense qu'il l'est, et qu'il ait de bonnes raisons de le croire. De pareils cas se présentent presque tous les jours: quelquefois il est impossible que la banque dise si un billet présenté est ou non l'un de ses propres billets.

Un banquier aurait certainement le droit de refuser le paiement en pareil cas. Cependant s'il le faisait dans l'absence d'une pareille disposition, il ne pourrait faire valoir aucune défense; il faudrait qu'il fermât sa banque, qu'il arrêtât ses opérations, et le décret serait irrévocable.

La motion est adoptée.

M Palfrey présente l'amendement suivant à la 13e section, après les mots: « juridiction compétente, » dans la 10me ligne, insérer « une moitié revenant au propriétaire du billet et une moitié à l'Etat. »

M. Mc Cay présente l'amendement suivant à la même section: après le mot « auditeur, » dans la 13e ligne, effacer tout jusqu'à la fin de la section et mettre à la place « devra procéder à l'avertissement pour vendre à l'encan public dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, les billets ou bons déposés entre ses mains par le signataire ou les signataires des dits billets protestés, et le jour de la vente, lequel ne sera pas moindre de trente jours à partir du jour de l'avis, et le dit avis aura été publié au moins deux fois par semaine dans deux journaux quotidiens imprimés à la Nouvelle-Orléans. »

Après avoir déduit les dépenses des dits avertissements et vente, il devra appliquer les produits de la dite vente au rachat pro rata de tous les billets en circulation ou non protestés, faits et mis en circulation par le signataire ou les signataires des dits billets protestés. Pourvu que rien dans cet acte ne soit considéré comme donnant aucune sûreté où promesse de la part de l'Etat, de faire aucun paiement indépendemment de la fidèle application des dites sécurités déposées entre les mains de l'auditeur.

M. Short fait la motion d'insérer les mots: « sans renonciation au bénéfice d'estimation »

M. Short—Je donnerai les raisons qui m'ont porté à présenter cet amendement. Il arrive souvent qu'un homme, se trouvant embarrassé, s'adresse à l'une de ces corporations pour obtenir un prêt. Il hypothèque sa propriété, et dans l'acte hypothécaire la banque stipule que l'emprunteur renonce au bénéfice de l'estimation. Cette clause a pour effet d'écarter les autres créanciers. En poursuivant ce système, les corporations ont fini par entourer comme d'un réseau un grand nombre de propriétaires de la campagne. Quand un jugement est obtenu, la banque se présente, obtient un ordre de vente, met sur la propriété un prix tout juste suffisant pour couvrir sa créance; et, à l'aide de la renonciation dont elle s'était assurée à l'avance, les créanciers ordinaires ne peuvent rien obtenir.

Je désire donc empêcher que les corporations ne puissent introduire cette clause dans leurs actes hypothécaires. Je sais que ce moyen est fort usité dans les contrats passés d'individu à individu mais les particuliers n'en ont jamais abusé, que je sache, tandis qu'à ma connaissance il a donné lieu à de grands et fréquents abus de la part des corporations. Je ne parle pas sur des idées préconçues, mais sur une connaissance personnelle des faits. Je sais que quelques-unes de ces corporations apportent une grande circonspection dans les prêts qu'elles font, et passent rarement un contrat sans y introduire une clause de ce genre. A l'aide d'un arrangement particulier fait avec l'emprunteur, la propriété doit revenir au débiteur aussitôt que la dette est payée. Jusque là elle reste entre leurs mains. Ce système offre beaucoup d'inconvénients. Il est injuste et préjudiciable aux créanciers ordinaires et je désire qu'il disparaisse. Je ne veux pas voir donner à ces corporations tant d'avantages, en outre de ceux qu'elles possèdent.

M. Kenner—L'amendement du sénateur tendrait à priver la banque ou le banquier d'un droit dont jouissent tous les particuliers; le bill n'accorde à un banquier aucun privilége exorbitant; il ne lui donne aucun pouvoir qui sorte du droit commun. J'espère que le sénateur ne retirera pas un droit ordinaire à un homme qui, après tout, n'est qu'un simple individu.

L'amendement est adopté.

La 13me section est adoptée avec cet amendement.

Les 14 et 15me sections sont adoptées.

Sur motion de M. Kenner, les mots entre guillemets dans la troisième ligne (« payable au porteur ») sont effacés de la 16me section et cette section est adoptée telle qu'amendée.

Les 17, 18 et 19me sections sont adoptées.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, le mot (« seulement ») est inséré dans la 20me section et 3me ligne, après le mot,

Digitized by Google

«maison de banque» et à la fin de la dite section, les mots «seulement à la place où la banque est domiciliée à moins qu'il en soit autrement autorisé par cet acte.»

Sur motion d'adopter la 20me section telle qu'amendée, M. Martin demande qu'elle soit déposée indéfiniment sur le bureau.

La motion du dépôt sur le bureau est rejetée et la section 20me est adoptée.

Les sctions 21 et 22me sont adoptées.

M. Lacey fait la motion d'insérer dans la 23me section, 2me ligne le mot «même» après le mot «lui.»

La 24me section est alors prise en considération.

M. Lewis présente un amendement qui ne rend les actionnaires responsables que jusqu'à concurrence du double du montant des actions non payées.

M. King—Je désire dire quelques mots en faveur de l'amendement présenté par mon collègue. Nous sommes à la veille de faire l'expérience d'un système de banques libres. Déjà à sa naissance ce système est attaqué avec tant de virulence que l'on se demande si son existence sera possible. Nous avons tout lieu de croire que les corporations existantes, ayant des chartes spéciales sont effrayées pour le monopole dont elles ont joui jusqu'ici et regardent d'un œil jaloux les tentatives faites pour leur donner des rivales; nous sommes convaincus qu'ils opposeront toutes sortes d'obstacles à nos travaux.

Donnez à ce système la même chance qu'à ces anciennes corporations, placez-les sur le même pied, ne cherchez pas à l'entraver et à le restreindre d'une façon qui l'empêchera de fonctionner. Le bill tel qu'il est présenté par le comité, rend les actionnaires responsables jusqu'à concurrence du double de leur souscription d'actions. Cette clause ne se trouve dans aucune charte de banque. Dans ces chartes la responsabilité de l'actionnaire est limitée au montant des actions possédées. Si le montant entier des actions n'est pas paye, ils sont responsables jusqu'à concurrence du montant qui reste encore à payer et rien de plus. Si un homme désire placer son argent dans les opérations de banque, ne préférera-t-il pas engager son capital dans une banque où il ne peut perdre plus qu'il n'y a mis positivement, plutôt que de le placer dans une entreprise où il peut perdre le double? Si cette disposition n'est pas changee, personne ne voudra s'engager dans le système des banques libres. Il en est de ce système ici comme dans l'Etat de l'Alabama. Là une loi générale pour la création des banques libres existe depuis plusieurs années, et pas une banque ne s'est formée sous l'empire de cette loi. La même chose arriverait à la Louisiane. La prochaine Législature reconnaîtrait qu'aucune banque n'a été établie, et alors elle serait assiégee de demandes pour qu'elle renouvelle les anciennes chartes et ressuscite les vieux monopoles. Le prétexte serait excellent. L'on répéterait que le système des banques libres a échoué, qu'il nous faut un système de crédit plus étendu et que le seul moyen d'y arriver, c'est de renouveler les chartes des anciennes banques. Vous avez déjà ainsi trop d'entraves dans ce bill. Vous avez donne toutes les garanties nécessaires aux détenteurs de billets. Vous les avez garantis en forçant les banques à avoir un capital en main égal à leur circulation, plus une réserve en espèces égale à un tiers de cette circulation. Autrefois cette seule réserve était jugee une garantie suffisante. Ainsi vous avez deux garanties dont chacune est suffisante par elle-même. Vous parlez de garantie complète, vous voulez que la solidité de la banque puisse défier les événements. C'est là demander l'impossible. Nous pouvons rechercher toutes les garanties possibles, mais penser qu'une banque puisse être si sûre qu'elle puisse braver les vicissitudes et les fluctuations du commerce, c'est prendre une chimère pour la réalité. J'espère donc que les amis du système des banques libres ne souffriront pas qu'il soit écrasé par ce nouveau fardeau dont on cherche à l'accabler. Assez de charges déjà lui ont été imposées.

J'espère que l'amendement sera adopté. Chacun doit en sentir la nécessité. Si le bill est adopté dans l'état où il se trouve actuellement, nous n'aurons fait que perdre notre temps.

M. Short—Je suis opposé à l'amendement. Je pense comme le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King) que le système des banques libres est encore dans l'enfance. Mais cet enfant, je l'espère, n'est qu'Hercule dans son berceau, et j'espère aussi que lorsqu'il sera arrivé à sa maturité, il luttera avec vigueur contre ces vieilles banques qui sont tellement tombées dans l'opinion publique. Jusqu'à présent les banques ont joui d'énormes avantages. J'espère que la position sera changée, et qu'à l'avenir ce seront les particuliers qui auront l'avantage sur les banques Chacun sait que ce qui distingue les banques, c'est qu'elles sont les premières à voir le danger et les premières à s'en garantir. Elles voient l'orage qui s'amoncelle avant que le peuple ait pu discerner un nuage à l'horizon. Elles peuvent par conséquent se garantir bien longtemps avant les autres. Quand une personne engage son capital dans l'une de ces institutions, sachant qu'elle sera responsable jusqu'à concurrence de la moitié de ses actions, c'est là l'indication de la solidité du système. Adoptez l'amendement et vous faites disparaître toute garantie. On dit que sous l'ancien système il devait y avoir une piastre en espèces pour chaque trois piastres en circulation. Pour ma part, je considère que l'ancien système est un système honnête et de beaucoup préférable à tout système basé sur les bons municipaux

M. McCay.—Je suis opposé à l'amendement par la simple raison que je ne le comprends pas. Je suis aussi opposé à la section telle qu'elle se comporte dans le bill. Quel est l'homme qui voudra placer son argent dans une banque, quand il saura qu'il doit être responsable jusqu'à concurrence du double de son capital, et cela pendant une année après que ses relations avec la banque auront complètement cessé. L'amendement porte que l'actionnaire sera responsable jusqu'à concurrence du montant de ses actions non payées. D'un autre côté le bill déclare que le montant intégral des actions doit être immédiatement payé. Par conséquent, cette partie non payée n'existera pas et l'amendement n'aura pas d'application. Si l'amendement, si le but de l'amendement est de porter un coup mortel à la section, je l'appuierai de mon vote; s'il a pour objet de lui donner plus de vitalité, je voterai dans la négative.

M. Lewis retire son amendement.

M. Kenner propose comme substitut à la 24e section:

Qu'aucun actionnaire dans aucune corporation ne sera tenu des dettes de la corporation au-delà du montant des actions prises par lui.

M. Martin propose d'amender ce substitut de la manière suivante:

Tout actionnaire, etc., sera tenu solidairement de toutes les dettes de la dite banque.

L'amendement de M. Martin est déposé sur le bureau.

Le subtitut de M. Kenner est adopté et la 23me section est retranchée

M. Martin fait la motion de retrancher de la 26me section, 2me ligne, les mots «chaque trimestre» et d'y substituer «chaque mois.»

M. Martin—Les banques doivent, dans l'état actuel des choses, présenter un rapport mensuel, et je crois qu'il serait bon d'imposer les mêmes entraves aux petits monstres que nous sommes en train de mettre au jour.

M Kenner—Je ferai remarquer que le rapport mensuel qui est aujourd'hui exigé des banques est loin d'être aussi complet que devront l'être ceux qui seront fournis par ces petits monstres, comme les appelle le sénateur.

L'amendement est déposé sur le bureau.

M. Martin fait la motion d'effacer les mots: «imprimé à la Nouvelle-Orléans,» de la section dans les 17 et 18mes lignes. Cette motion est adoptée sur motion de M. King.

L'amendement suivant est inséré à la fin de la 25e section.

Pour tout faux serment, ou tout faux exposé du fonds capital fait sciemment ou du tableau des affaires de la banque fait d'après cette section, la personne qui se rendra coupable d'une telle mauvaise conduite, ou qui y consentira, aidera, l'encouragera, en sus des peines civiles et criminelles maintenant imposées par la loi pour parjure, en cas que l'offense soit un faux serment, ou autrement, sera responsable in solido de la dette entière de la banque, et toute banque qui refusera de se conformer à cette section dans l'espace de vingt jours, après avoir été notifiée par l'Auditeur le faire le dit tableau, perdra sa charte et devra liquider suivant les dispositions de cet acte.

Digitized by Google

M. Martin—Mon vote est acquis à l'amendement. Je vois que le sénateur a un peu de cette prudence écossaise dont il a été fait mention dans le cours de ces débats.

L'amendement est adopté.

Les sections 27, 23 et 29 sont adoptées.

M. Lacey propose de substituer à la 30me section le paragraphe suivant :

Sect. 30. Il est de plus décrété, &c ; Que tout banquier ou compagnie de banque hors de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, faisant des affaires en vertu de cet acte, et émettant des billets de circulation comme il est dit dans cet acte devra avoir un bureau, ou designer un agent dans la dite ville pour le rachat des dits billets. La nomination du dit officier ou agent sera faite par écrit et mise parmi les dossiers de l'auditeur du bureau de circulation et du recorder des hypothèques, dans lequel se trouve gardé la charte. Pourvu cependant, que rien dans cet acte ne soit compris de manière à autoriser le dit banquier ou compagnie de banque à refuser de racheter ses billets au comptoir de la banque principale conformément à cet acte.

M. Wickliffe—Il me semble que si l'établissement d'une banque sous l'empire de la loi des banques libres est praticable à la Louisiane, toute banque doit nécessairement avoir une agence à la Nlle-Orléans. L'effet alors sera que les banques de la campagne seront forcées d'avoir une réserve de deux piastres en espèces au lieu de la reserve d'une piastre seulement qui est imposée aux banques de la ville. Je suis fatigué du rôle secondaire que l'on veut toujours donner à la campagne.

M. Lacey.—Je n'ai nullement le désir d'arriver à un pareil résultat. Mon dessein n'est pas d'imposer aux banques de la Compagnie l'obligation d'avoir une agence dans la ville.

Le substitut est adopté.

M. Martin fait la motion d'amender le bill en faisant porter la taxe sur le capital et non sur la circulation de la banque.

M. Martin.—La Constitution déclare que les taxes devront être uniformes. Je désire que la taxe porte sur le capital de la banque comme sur toute autre espèce de propriété. Le capital d'une banque devrait être taxé de la même manière que celui d'un particulier.

M. Kenner.—Cela dépend de ce que vous appelez capital. Si vous entendez par là toutes les valeurs possedées par la banque, billets au porteur, lettres de change &c., &c., cette taxe serait extrêmement lourde. Je présume que ce n'est pas là ce qu'entend le sénateur.

M. Martin,—Oui monsieur, c'est précisément là ce que j'entends.

L'amendement est déposé sur le bureau.

Les débats se poursuivent quelque temps et le bill reçoit sa troisième lecture.

MARDI, 31 mars 1853.

Acte relatif aux priviléges sur les récoltes sur pied.

L'acte ayant pour objet de permettre aux habitants de donner des droits de privilége sur leur récolte sur pied est pris en considération.

M. Martin—Je ne vois pas la moindre nécessité à passer ce bill. Je n'y vois, pour ma part, qu'une imputation dirigée contre la population agricole de l'Etat. Dans ma paroisse, il n'est pas un habitant qui ne puisse se procurer la somme d'argent qu'il désire en hypothéquant sa propriété, et il peut avoir toutes les fournitures dont il a besoin sur sa simple parole d'honneur. Je le répète, la nécessité de ce bill ne se fait nullement sentir, et si nous l'adoptons, nous n'aurons fait qu'ouvrir la porte à la fraude.

M. Kittridge—Le bill ne se propose qu'une chose, c'est de mettre l'habitant honnête à même de se procurer les objets dont il a besoin.

M. Lacey—Quand le bill était devant le comité judiciaire pour la première fois, le comité fit un rapport favorable à la mesure. Plus tard ce bill fut renvoyé à un autre comité qui présenta un nouveau bill à la place. Comme ce bill a reçu la sanction du comité, comme il a reçu l'assentiment implicite, au moins, du Sénat, il me semble qu'il devrait être adopté. L'objet qu'il se propose est louable, et je ne doute pas qu'il ne tourne à l'avantage de nos habitants. Ce bill a été l'objet d'une attention toute particulière de la part du comité, et il a reçu une forme définitive qui, je crois, lui assurera l'assentiment du Sénat.

M. Martin—Le sénateur se trompe. Ce bill n'a jamais reçu l'assentiment du Sénat, sous quelque forme que ce soit. Le bill primitif n'a pas semblé bon puisqu'on l'a renvoyé à un comité. Ce bill là n'a certainement jamais reçu soit implicitement soit explicitement l'approbation du Sénat. Le comité alors rapporte un substitut qui est actuellement devant le Sénat. Je suis convaincu qu'aucun de mes commettants n'a besoin d'un pareil bill pour se procurer les objets dont il a besoin. Je suis persuadé que ni moi ni mon collègue n'avons besoin d'engager notre récolte pour nous procurer ce dont nous avons besoin. Les habitants ne sentent pas le besoin d'un pareil bill. Il ne peut leur faire aucun bien, il ne peut tourner à leur avantage. Il peut servir les intérêts de quelques personnes à la Nouvelle-Orléans, pour lesquelles la parole d'un homme d'honneur n'est pas suffisante. Pour moi, je pense qu'une pareille parole doit être considérée comme étant aussi bonne qu'une obligation écrite.

M. Nicholls—Je crois que le bill devrait recevoir un amendement qui consisterait à insérer les mots «créancier ayant obtenu jugement.» Le bill ne mentionne que les créanciers saisissants; mais c'est un fait connu qu'il y a dans les campagnes beaucoup de personnes qui n'ont aucun moyen de faire rentrer leurs créances, si ce n'est la saisie de la récolte de leurs débiteurs. Eh bien, quel sera l'effet d'une loi de cette nature ? Si vous l'adoptez, l'habitant pourra se moquer du créancier qui aura obtenu un jugement. Il ira à la Nouvelle-Orléans, fera là un arrangement avec une personne quelconque et lorsque sa récolte est saisie par un créancier ordinaire, le compère de la Nouvelle-Orléans paraîtra et fera valoir son privilége. Ils prétendront à eux deux que l'affaire a été faite de bonne foi, que la récolte a été transférée à M. Jonhson, à M. Smith; que la propriété immobilière reste, et que les créanciers peuvent agir contre cette propriété. Ce bill, à mon avis, présente de grands dangers. Il est déjà assez difficile de faire rentrer ses créances. Depuis que je suis entré au barreau, j'ai vu qu'il était très difficile de faire payer les jugements; les débiteurs ont tant de moyen d'échapper à leurs créanciers. Je ne désire pas contribuer à leur fournir de nouveaux moyens de se soustraire au paiement de leurs dettes.

M. Wickliffe—C'est un principe général et salutaire que les biens d'un débiteur doivent répondre du paiement de ses dettes. Je suis opposé à toute loi dont le but est de favoriser le débiteur aux dépens du créancier. Comme le sénateur de St-Martin [M. Nicholls] l'a fait remarquer avec beaucoup de justesse, la loi fournit déjà assez d'échappatoires au débiteur. Ses biens doivent rester le gage commun de ses créanciers.

M. Lacey—L'amendement proposé porterait une atteinte mortelle à l'objet que se propose le bill. Quel est le but que se propose le bill ? C'est de permettre au planteur de donner en nantissement sa récolte pendante, en passant un acte notarié dans la paroisse dans laquelle la récolte se trouve, tout comme si la récolte avait déjà été coupée. En d'autres termes il a pour objet de permettre à l'habitant de bonne foi et qui n'a aucun désir de frauder ses créanciers, d'emprunter sur sa recolte pendante en la donnant en nantissement. Voilà le but que se propose le bill. Si nous le repoussons parce que ce gage peut être enlevé au créancier ordinaire, d'après le même principe nous pourrions rappeler toutes les lois hypothécaires. Les priviléges doivent disparaître ; plus d'hypothèques, plus de gage. L'universalité des biens du débiteur doit être divisée et distribuée au pro rata entre les créanciers. Mais tant que nous n'aurons pas fait celà, tant que nous n'aurons pas passé le niveau sur les créanciers, nous ne pouvons admettre l'argument qui nous est opposé. Il n'est pas une partie de la jurisprudence en matière d'hypothèques et de priviléges à laquelle ne puissent s'appliquer les raisons qui ont été avancées. Le bill va assez loin en donnant un droit de préference aux créanciers saisissants. Quel est l'homme qui voudrait prêter son argent quand il sait que d'autres créanciers, ayant obtenu jugement, pouvaient se présenter et absorber la propriété : aujourd'hui, peut-être, il n'y a pas de jugement contre l'emprunteur, mais demain il peut y en avoir, et la personne qui a fait de bonne foi une avance d'argent, se trouvera privée de toute ressource. Je voudrais que ce gage fût à l'abri de toute atteinte Si on peut y toucher, votre loi n'est pas une loi ; elle est sans valeur. Ce bill est tout dans l'intérêt de la population agricole, et comme je désire contribuer autant qu'il est en moi à la prospérité de cette population, je voterai pour ce bill. Ce bill ne touche en rien à mes propres intérêts. Il a été présenté par le sénateur de Lafourche (M. Kittridge), qui est un homme pratique et qui comprend parfaitement la question.

Digitized by Google

M. Martin—Le sénateur veut-il faire entendre que je ne suis pas un homme pratique quand il parle de mon collègue comme d'un homme pratique. Nous avons la même profession, nous avons le même genre d'affaire. Quoiqu'il ait sur moi un avantage sur le rapport des années, je me flatte d'avoir autant d'expérience que lui, et que j'en sais autant que lui sur ce sujet. Le sénateur manifeste une tendresse extrême pour la population agricole; je ne sache pas que les habitants aient besoin de ses sympathies. Je crois que leurs intérêts sont mieux sauvegardés quand ils sont hors de l'atteinte sympathique des avocats. Ils peuvent juger par eux-mêmes de leurs propres intérêts.

M. Short. — Je dois dire que mes prédilections sont en faveur de ce bill. Le but qu'il se propose est excellent, il ne lèse aucun droit, il ne blesse aucun principe de justice. Je n'ai nullement l'intention de prendre sous ma protection les intérêts de la population agricole. Je ne me suis jamais beaucoup occupé d'agriculture, mais j'ai beaucoup de voisins qui m'ont mis à même d'avoir des renseignements. Un de mes collègues a dit que les habitans n'avaient que faire d'une pareille loi pour se procurer de l'argent. Leur parole, dit-on, est suffisante, est aussi sûre ou devrait être aussi sûre qu'une obligation écrite. D'accord, la parole de tout homme devrait être aussi bonne qu'un écrit, mais par le temps qui court, sous le règne de l'autocrate qui a nom « piastre » l'écrit est généralement préféré dans le commerce. Ceux qui ont de l'argent à prêter ne cherchent pas ce qui devrait être, mais ce qui est, et ils désirent presque toujours avoir de bonnes garanties avant d'engager leurs capitaux. Est-il raisonnable de supposer qu'un homme qui vit dans l'intérieur de l'Etat, loin de la ville, pourra obtenir de l'argent sur sa simple parole, lorsqu'il n'est nullement connu. Personne ne saurait le supposer ? Mais si le même individu se présente et dit : « Voici ma récolte, je la donne en nantissement, elle est plus que suffisante pour couvrir la somme que je demande, même dans l'éventualité de pertes causées par les insectes. Si, dis-je, il peut faire une pareille proposition, il pourra facilement obtenir un emprunt qui peut-être lui était absolument nécessaire.

M. Nicholls. — Je demanderai si, aux termes de ce bill, il n'est pas toujours au pouvoir du débiteur d'empêcher le créancier qui a obtenu un jugement de faire exécuter son jugement. Du moment qu'un habitant sucrier ou cotonnier aura le droit de donner sa récolte en nantissement, il aura en ses mains le moyen d'écarter le créancier qui aura obtenu un jugement et de ne rien lui laisser que la propriété immobilière pour exercer ses droits. Il ne pourra saisir que la terre et les esclaves, qui peuvent déjà être grevés d'hypothèques pour toute leur valeur. L'habitant pourra dire : « Vous ne pouvez toucher à ma récolte, elle est donnée déjà en nantissement à un négociant de la Nouvelle-Orléans pour des avances qu'il m'a faites. Vous pouvez saisir mon habitation, mais vous ne pouvez la vendre attendu qu'elle est déjà grevée d'hypothèques qui suffisent pour la protéger contre votre réclamation ? Il ne manquerait certainement pas de donner un privilége sur sa récolte à un ami de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Le Sénat sait combien sont vagues et générales les dispositions de ce bill. Il déclare qu'un habitant aura le droit de donner en nantissement sa recolte pendante pour argent prêté ou toute autre avance. Je demande si le résultat ne serait pas tel que je l'ai dit. Le bill porte que le gage n'affectera pas le créancier saisissant. S'il fait saisir l'habitation, cette saisie embrassera, à coup sûr, la moisson pendante. Mais je ne voudrais pas que le créancier fût obligé de saisir l'habitation; qu'il agisse à son gré, qu'il saisisse soit l'habitation, soit la récolte à son choix.

M. McCay—Je vais donner les raisons qui me portent à voter contre ce bill. C'est un principe bien établi en droit, qu'aucun objet ne peut être donné en gage à moins que le créancier gagiste n'en obtienne la possession. Ce serait la seule exception à cette règle générale. Cette règle existe depuis si longtemps, elle est appliquée d'une manière si générale, qu'elle doit reposer sur quelque base solide. Une autre raison qui me porte à m'opposer au bill, c'est que les biens du débiteur sont le gage commun de tous ses créanciers, ce serait encore une exception à une autre règle générale. Quant a moi, plutôt que d'étendre encore le système des privilèges, je voudrais les abolir tous.

M. Short—Je n'ai qu'un mot à dire sur l'effet qu'aura ce bill quant aux créanciers par jugement. D'abord il ne peut affecter sur le créancier par jugement dont l'hypothèque est antérieure à la date du nantissement. Celui-là donc ne pourrait se plaindre. Le nantissement ne le lèse pas ; son jugement entraîne une hypothèque et ne peut être affecté par aucun nantissement subséquent. La raison tirée de la fraude qui pourrait résulter du bill n'est pas fondée. Le bill lui-même répond à l'objection. Il déclare que les contrats frauduleux et simulés auxquels on a fait allusion seront mis de côté et déclarés nuls. Le raisonnement du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. McCay) consiste à dire que nous créons un gage qui n'existait pas auparavant ; que nous introduisons une exception à certains principes généraux, que nous faisons une innovation en face d'une jurisprudence depuis longtemps établie. Parce qu'un usage a existé pendant des siècles, est-ce à dire qu'il ne doive jamais cesser ? Cela rappelle le petit hollandais qui persistait à porter son blé à l'un des bouts d'un sac et une pierre à l'autre, simplement parce que son père avait fait ainsi avant lui.

M McCay—L'exemple choisi par le sénateur peut être très fort, mais il n'est certes pas neuf. La raison sur laquelle je m'appuie est celle-ci : Je ne désire pas m'écarter d'un principe général lorsque la nécessité d'un changement n'est pas démontrée Si cette nécessité était prouvée, je me rendrais à l'évidence; mais je n'ai pas encore entendu d'argument convainquant. Voilà une chose qui n'a pas encore d'existence et dont vous faites l'objet d'un contrat de gage; vous n'en connaissez pas la valeur, vous ne savez même pas si elle viendra à maturité, peut-il y avoir rien de plus absurde ?

M. King—Je ne crois pas que les objections qui ont été avancées contre le bill soient bien fondées. Je ne vois pas qu'il donne à l'habitant le moyen de commettre des fraudes, d'écarter ou de retarder l'exécution des jugements rendus contre lui. Le bill prévient avec le plus grand soin tous les actes de fraude. Tout ce qui a été fait en violation des droits des créanciers est annulé. Je diffère avec mon collègue quant à la nécessité d'introduire ce changement dans les principes généraux. Je pense qu'il est non-seulement convenable, mais qu'il est nécessaire et qu'il en résulterait un grand avantage pour la population agricole. Le bill a été présenté par le sénateur de Lafourche (M. Kittridge) et j'ai foi en son jugement. Je pense que les habitants ont besoin de ce bill pour obtenir les avances qui leur sont nécessaires. Les négociants-commissionnaires s'en applaudiront aussi. Une des plaintes les plus générales est que lorsqu'un négociant a fait des avances à un habitant, celui-ci donne ordinairement ses affaires à un autre négociant. Ce bill porterait remède à ce mal.

M. Martin—Le sénateur est un avocat distingué, et je voudrais lui adresser une question. Si des avances ont été faites et que la récolte ne soit pas envoyée, l'habitant qui s'est rendu coupable de cet acte de mauvaise foi ne peut-il pas être amené devant la Cour criminelle ? Je me souviens que dernièrement un homme qui tenait dans sa paroisse une position aussi élevée que n'importe qui, fut amené devant une Cour pour un méfait de cette sorte. Je crois que l'accusation était non-fondée, mais je cite le cas pour prouver ce que j'avance Je désire savoir si le fait auquel a fait allusion le sénateur ne constituerait pas ce qu'on appelle en droit « obtenir de l'argent sous de faux prétexte ?» Je sais qu'il y a des habitants malhonnêtes, comme il y a des avocats et des négociants malhonnêtes. Mais je ne crois pas que de pareils cas se présentassent souvent.

Digitized by Google

M. King—Il n'y a pas de loi expresse qui s'applique à ces sortes de cas. Il existe une loi contre l'escroquerie, mais ce ne serait qu'une simple violation de contrat.

M. Wickliffe—Si un homme obtenait un emprunt de $5000 sur sa promesse d'envoyer sa récolte à celui qui fait l'avance, et qu'il ne l'envoyât pas, je voudrais savoir s'il ne pourrait pas être convaincu comme coupable d'avoir obtenu de l'argent sous de faux prétextes.

M. King—Non.

M. Wickliffe—Le contraire a été maintes fois décidé.

M. Hodge—Je vais dire les raisons qui me portent à m'opposer à ce bill. Bien que je sois d'opinion avec le sénateur de Baton-Rouge (M. Lacey) qu'un système judicieux d'hypothèques et de priviléges est très désirable et utile, cependant je ne puis approuver tous les systèmes sur cette matière. Notre système d'hypothèques et de priviléges est trop compliqué. La Louisiane est dans une position toute particulière. Les affaires commerciales y sont très étendues, elle reçoit chaque année une foule d'étrangers qui viennent s'y établir. Des individus viennent ici et dans le cours de leurs relations d'affaires opèrent sur les propriétés immobilières. Nos lois devraient être d'une telle simplicité que tout citoyen d'un autre Etat pût les comprendre, ou notre crédit tombera si bas que notre commerce avec nos voisins cessera complétement.

Le sénateur qui a présenté ce bill dit que les habitans ne peuvent se tirer d'affaire à moins que nous ne l'adoptions, qu'il leur est nécessaire pour qu'ils puissent se procurer les avances et les provisions dont ils ont besoin. Je ne doute pas que le sénateur ne connaisse les besoins du district qu'il représente, mais je crois être dans la même position que lui quant à celui que je représente. Eh bien, je déclare que bien loin que mes commettants sentent la nécessité de ce bill, ils ont tous les moyens de se procurer de l'argent. Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans a négligé l'une des lois les plus importantes qui aient trait à ce sujet. Vous désiriez donner à l'habitant le moyen de se procurer des provisions en engageant sa récolte. Eh bien, elle existe déjà la loi qui lui fournit ce moyen. Le sénateur qui est assis à ma gauche peut m'en remontrer sur la question de la culture de la terre, mais je puis lui donner de temps à autre des renseignements utiles lorsqu'il s'agit de connaître un nouveau principe de droit. Lorsqu'un habitant va à la Nouvelle-Orléans et achète des provisions, le marchand devient son créancier et a un privilège sur la récolte pendante et sur celle de l'année suivante.

Ce bill n'est donc pas nécessaire puisque l'objet qu'il se propose est déjà atteint par les lois existantes. On peut dire qu'il devrait avoir le droit d'engager sa récolte dans le but de spéculer avec l'argent qu'il obtiendra. Je n'ai pas d'objection à ce que les habitans spéculent. Je désire qu'il leur soit permis de faire ce qui leur plaît, tant que ce qu'ils font est juste et convenable. Mais cette proposition est une innovation introduite dans la loi civile à laquelle on n'avait jamais pensé. Ces messieurs ont-ils songé que ce bill crée le droit d'hypothéquer une propriété mobilière? A-t-on jamais entendu pareille chose? Le code porte que le privilège dérivant du gage n'existe qu'autant que l'objet donné en gage passe dans la possession réelle des créanciers ou d'une troisième personne désignée par les parties. La raison de la loi est que la propriété immobilière est supposée accompagner la personne, et la possession est une présomption qui a le titre de propriété. Eh bien, vous voulez rendre l'objet d'un gage, une chose qu'il est impossible de placer entre les mains d'un créancier, quelque chose dont l'existence même et la valeur sont encore problématiques. C'est là non seulement une violation des règles reçues, c'est aussi une violation des principes généraux sur lesquels repose notre système de droit. Et voilà ce que vous voulez faire lorsque le besoin ne s'en fait pas sentir. Vous allez vous engager dans une mauvaise voie, lorsque vous feriez tout aussi bien en restant dans la bonne voie. Le district que je représente n'éprouve pas la nécessité de l'adoption d'un pareil bill. Les habitants de ce district peuvent obtenir toutes les avances et toutes les provisions dont ils ont besoin.

Quand un habitant va sur une habitation et voit la récolte pendante, il est porté à croire que le propriétaire de l'habitation a des moyens. Voilà tout ce que l'on peut désirer. Mais vous voulez introduire un nouveau système par lequel il sera permis d'hypothéquer la propriété mobilière. Le sénateur d'Est-Baton-Rouge (M. Lacey), en parlant ex professo sur les systèmes les plus judicieux de priviléges et d'hypothèques, leur utilité, leur nécessité ne peut que demander que les habitants aient le droit d'hypothéquer leur propriété immobilière, chose inouie jusqu'à ce jour dans la jurisprudence d'aucune partie du monde civilisé. Moi aussi je suis en faveur d'un système judicieux d'hypothèques et de priviléges, mais je ne suis pas désireux de voir commettre une absurdité légale aussi monstrueuse que celle qui serait le résultat de l'adoption de ce bill.

M. Lacey—Je suis opposé à l'amendement du sénateur de St-Martin (M. Nichols), parce que je pense qu'il aurait pour effet de détruire le bill dans l'objet qu'il se propose. Il porte atteinte au principe sur lequel repose le bill. Mais d'où vient l'opposition violente qu'il rencontre? Examinez-le, étudiez-le dans sa généralité et dans ses détails. Il a été primitivement présenté par un sénateur expérimenté et pratique; il a été l'objet d'une étude attentive de la part des membres du comité judiciaire, qui l'ont rapporté au Sénat Examinez, je le répète, le bill, et dites-moi en quoi il est condamnable. Peut-il ouvrir la porte à la fraude? Peut-il donner au planteur malhonnête le moyen de frustrer son créancier trop confiant. Le bill déclare que tout gage empreint de fraude sera nul et non-avenu. Il annulle le gage, lorsque l'intention a été frauduleuse. Je le dis donc de nouveau: ce bill n'ouvre point la porte à la fraude; il ne porte atteinte à aucun droit pré-existant. Le vendeur conserve son droit de préférence; le travailleur son privilège; celui qui a fourni des provisions son droit de priorité. Ainsi donc la fraude est impossible. Si le but du bill était de frustrer le créancier, il faudrait le repousser. Mais pourquoi sommes-nous en faveur de cette loi? Parce que nous voulons protéger les intérêts des classes les plus pauvres de l'Etat. C'est là un but vers lequel devrait quelquefois tendre notre législation. Je désire protéger le riche. Je ne désire pas porter atteinte à leurs droits, mais tout en les protégeant, je considère qu'il est de mon devoir de ne pas tuer les intérêts de ceux qui ont le malheur d'être pauvres. L'homme riche peut se procurer des fonds. Son crédit est bon, il a de vastes ressources. Le pauvre n'a pas les mêmes avantages Je suis disposé à protéger le travail, à encourager et à assister les classes pauvres. Je suis en faveur de ce bill, parce qu'il doit produire ce résultat.

On a dit que la parole d'un habitant est bonne, aussi bonne que son écrit, que sa parole d'honneur est tout ce que l'on peut demander. Quelqu'honnête qu'un homme puisse être, quelqu'honorables que puissent être ses intentions, il peut n'être pas toujours capable de remplir ses promesses. Le créancier gagiste, lorsqu'on lui demandera d'avancer de l'argent sur la parole d'un habitant, pourra répondre avec raison: «La vie est incertaine; j'ai toute confiance en votre probité, mais lorsque l'époque du paiement arrivera, vous pourriez être mort. Je ne puis avancer mon argent sans quelque garantie qui m'assure du remboursement.» Par conséquent il est évident que les classes pauvres ne peuvent obtenir les avantages que confèrent aux classes riches la loi de 1852. Que le Sénat ne repousse donc pas le bill; il prendrait sur lui, en le faisant, une grave responsabilité. Le but de ce bill est excellent, chacun doit le reconnaître. Il est rédigé de façon à réaliser l'objet qu'il se propose. L'attention qu'y a donnée le comité judiciaire en est une garantie suffisante. Adoptons donc ce bill. Il est réclamé par un grand nombre de personnes qui ne peuvent obtenir des fonds lorsqu'ils leur sont nécessaire, et nous ne devrions pas fermer les yeux sur leurs intérêts et leurs besoins.

M. Todd—Je ne puis laisser passer l'occasion d'exprimer mon opinion relativement à ce bill. Je pense qu'il ne doit pas tant venir en aide aux classes pauvres que donner de nouvelles garanties aux négociants-commissionnaires de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Eh bien, le besoin de nouvelles garanties ne se fait pas sentir, surtout si ces garanties doivent être données aux dépens des autres créanciers.

Digitized by Google

D'un autre côté, je ne vois pas l'avantage qui peut résulter de ce bill pour l'habitant. Au contraire, bien loin d'augmenter son crédit, bien loin de l'avantager, il ne pourra que lui causer un tort réel. Si ce bill passe, vous verrez les ordres de séquestre, de saisie provisoire augmenter de cent pour cent, et les procès, ce fléau que l'on ne saurait trop éloigner, se multiplieront. Des hommes qui aujourd'hui se procurent des fonds, ne pourront en obtenir à des conditions aussi favorables, de sorte que l'effet produit par le bill sera juste l'opposé de celui auquel il tend. Lorsque le planteur s'adressera à un négociant et lui demandera à lui prêter de l'argent, le négociant lui demandera invariablement de se conformer aux dispositions de ce bill, en d'autres mots, d'engager sa récolte pendante. Cette demande n'est pas faite aujourd'hui, et conséquemment le bill impose des conditions onéreuses qui n'existent pas actuellement. Je crois que le bill est de nature à donner au négociant-commissionnaire de plus fortes garanties pour le recouvrement de ses créances, mais qu'il ne peut être que nuisible au planteur. Ce sera pour lui une nouvelle source de tracas ; les procès se multiplieront, et aucun avantage n'en résultera pour compenser ces inconvénients. Pour ces raisons je voterai contre.

M. Griffin—Je suis en faveur du bill, parce qu'il doit en résulter un avantage pour le pauvre.

M. Martin—Je m'oppose à ce que le membre s'empare du tonnerre du sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge. Il a l'emploi exclusif d'ami du pauvre.

Le bill est déposé sur le bureau.

LE BILL JUDICIAIRE.

Le bill qui divise l'Etat en districts judiciaires est revenu de la Chambre avec des amendements.

M. Lacoste—Je suis opposé à l'amendement qui constitue en un district Saint-Bernard, Plaquemines et Jefferson. Le district actuel est maintenant trop grand, et en y ajoutant Jefferson, ce serait augmenter ce mal Plaquemines à trente lieues de long, et Saint-Bernard douze. Cela est certainement suffisant.

M. Rivers—Je fais la motion de renvoyer ce bill au comité.

M. Wickliffe—Je ne vois aucune raison qui milite en faveur de ce bill Ce sujet nous occupe depuis six semaines; je ne vois pas pourquoi on en ajournerait la discussion. L'orateur le désire peut être afin de mener à bien le projet qu'il a de ne former que sept districts dans l'Etat, à part la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Rivers—Je dirai à mon collègue pourquoi je désire que ma paroisse soit separée de la Pointe-Coupée.

M. Wickliffe—Il n'y a pas de motif sérieux pour pareille séparation. Ces paroisses ont toujours été réunies, et elles ont paru bien se trouver de cette union. J'espère que le membre de Plaquemines ne fera plus d'opposition à ce bill. J'ai tout d'abord marché avec lui lorsqu'il s'est agi de son district, et je regrette de ne pouvoir plus partager son avis. L'orateur a fait ses preuves pour ses constituants en soutenant au Sénat une lutte opiniâtre, et ce n'est pas de sa faute, s'il n'en est pas sorti victorieux; qu'il se contente des lauriers qu'il a conquis : qu'espère-t-il gagner du rejet du bill ?

Il réussira seulement à nous imposer le système des Districts étendus, et probablement des Cours des Preuves auxquelles il est tout aussi opposé que moi. Si les appointements des juges des Cours des Preuves pouvaient être payés au moyen des droits perçus (fees). Le système pouvait être praticable; mais comme la Constitution défend ce mode de paiement, je ne vois pas comment il peut trouver ici un avocat. Quelle sera notre situation si nous renvoyons ce bill à un comité ? Nous serons dans la même position relativement à un système judiciaire que nous nous trouvions au début. Le Sénat est disposé à en finir et à ajourner. Mais nous ne devrions pas nous laisser arrêter par de petits obstacles. Nous devrions plutôt accepter les amendements de la Chambre, et voter le bill sur le champ. Quant à l'amendement auquel s'expose le sénateur (M. Lacoste) je lui demanderai si, même en réunissant Jefferson à Plaquemines et à St-Bernard, une personne ne pourrait pas, en quelques heures, passer dans les parties les plus distantes du District. Il y a dans l'Etat des Districts qui nécessitent pour le juge des voyages beaucoup plus longs, entraînent beaucoup plus de désagréments, et cependa nous ne recevons aucune plainte du juge. J'ai appuyé d'abord l'orateur lorsqu'il a dit qu'il ne voulait pas placer Plaquemines en mauvaise société, mais puisque le bill nous est revenu de la Chambre avec cet amendement, je ne suis point disposé à une opposition opiniâtre, surtout lorsque cette opposition pourrait perdre le bill. Pour ce qui regarde le membre de Concordia (M. Rivers), je crois que son District est un des mieux formés de l'Etat.

M. Lacoste—Je ne pense pas que la Chambre soit animée de l'esprit que lui prête l'orateur. Je crois qu'elle votera avec nous, si nous refusons même d'accepter l'amendement.

M. Rivers—Je ne donnerai pas mes motifs, quoique je les compte par milliers. Cependant je dirai que j'étais opposé au bill parce que je n'étais pas satisfait de la formation des Districts. Je crois qu'il a été commis une injustice à l'égard de ma paroisse, et le sénateur de Plaquemines (M. Lacoste) a la même opinion relativement à la sienne. Si nous renvoyons le bill à un comité, il reviendra après pour subir sa seconde lecture. Alors nous pourrons le modifier selon nos vues.

Après quelques remarques faites par d'autres orateurs M. Rivers retire sa motion de renvoi.

Le Sénat refuse de voter aucun amendement excepté celui qui réunit la paroisse Claiborne avec les paroisses Bossier et Bienville.

RESOLUTIONS A L'EFFET D'INVITER M. FILLMORE.

Sur motion de M Rivers on prend en considération les résolutions qui invitent M. Fillmore à visiter l'Etat.

M. Wickliffe. — Je n'ai pas d'objections aux résolutions, mais je ne puis voter pour le préambule.

Les résolutions sont adoptées.

On s'occupe alors du préambule suivant :

« Attendu que Millard Fillmore, ex-président des Etats-Unis, doit bientôt visiter le Sud, et attendu que son mérite personnel et son caractère officiel veulent que la Louisiane lui souhaite la bienvenue. »

M. Wickliffe—Je ne voterai jamais pour une résolution à laquelle on pourrait donner le sens d'une approbation du gouvernement de M. Fillmore. Je ne puis louer directement ou indirectement une administration que je n'ai point approuvée. Si je comprends bien les mots : « caractère officiel », ils ont rapport à la façon dont il a rempli ses devoirs officiels, et pour ma part, jamais je ne donnerai un vote approuvant les actes administratifs de l'ex-president.

M. Short—Quand il s'agit d'hospitalité pareille, nous devons tous agir en Américains. Nous devons alors oublier toutes les divisions politiques. Si whigs et démocrates se combattent à la tribune, ils doivent s'unir autour de la table du festin. Ceci doit être considéré comme une fete que ne doit pas troubler la politique.

On procède alors à l'appel nominal.

M Lewis [son nom est appelé]—J'ai sur cette question les mêmes idées que le sénateur de Carroll (M. Short). Il s'agit ici d'une simple invitation faite à un citoyen distingué, qui a occupé les hautes fonctions de president des Etats-Unis.

Le préambule est adopte.

BILL DES BANQUES.

Le bill pour autoriser les banques dans l'Etat de la Louisiane est pris en considération.

M. Martin—Je demande une reconsidération de la première section en vue de l'amender.

M. King—Le sénateur a-t-il voté pour la section ? Je suis sous l'impression qu'il a voté contre toutes les sections.

M. Martin—Le sentiment des convenances m'empêcherait bien certainement de demander la reconsidération d'une chose en faveur de laquelle je n'aurais pas voté. Je connais aussi bien que le sénateur les règles de ce corps.

M. Short—Mon but en demandant une reconsidération est celui-ci. La section autorise l'établissement de maisons de banque sur un capital de $100,000. Ce qui resultera du fait d'autoriser l'établissement de ces petites maisons de banque, sera de mettre en circulation de mauvais chiffons pires que tous ceux que nous avons jamais eus. Comme je désire que les billets des banque de la Louisiane soient égaux au moins à ceux d'aucun autre Etat de l'Union, je voudrais que le minimum du capital fût fixé à $500,000. Nous ne devrions pas consentir à un aussi faible capital que $100,000. Si nous le faisons, nous ne tarderons pas à être inondés de chiffons.

Digitized by Google

M. King—Cette question a déjà été battue et rebattue cent fois, et je ne vois pas la nécessité de continuer plus longtemps cette discussion. Toutes les manœuvres parlementaires possible ont été tour à tour employées. Les sénateurs qui sont opposés au système de banques libres l'ont manifesté autant qu'ils le pouvaient convenablement, et il est temps qu'ils se soumettent enfin puisqu'ils sont les plus faibles. Je ne partage pas l'opinion du sénateur de Carroll [M. Short] Des banques, avec un capital de $100,000, n'amèneront pas du tout la circulation de chiffons. Dans la Nouvelle-Angleterre où les banques sont parfaitement sûres et où les billets en circulation sont aussi bons que ceux d'aucune autre partie de l'Union, il y en a beaucoup dont le capital est seulement de $100,000. Si une personne pense qu'elle peut se livrer avec avantage à des opérations de banques avec un capital de $100,000, pourquoi nous occuperions-nous de ses affaires particulières, de ce qui le regarde seul ? Nous n'avons aucun droit de circonscrire dans un cercle quel qu'il soit, les affaires de banque.

M. Short—Je me lève dans le but de présenter quelques observations qui serviront à expliquer ma position. Je désire convaincre le sénateur que mes remarques n'ont été dictées par aucun sentiment d'hostilité envers le sytème des banques libres en particulier. Mes objections sont contre les banques en général, et personnellement, je n'appuierai jamais aucun système quel qu'il soit. Mais comme je représente ici des constituants dont les idées et les vûes sur cette question sont différentes des miennes, je me trouve dans l'obligation de me prononcer en faveur du système qui présente le plus de sûreté, le plus de garanties. J'espère que le sénateur comprend la langue anglaise ; il me comprendra donc lorsque je dis, lorsque je répète que je ne voterai jamais en faveur d'aucun bill qui admettra comme base des bons municipaux.

La motion de reconsidérer est perdue.

M. Short—Je crois voir que les observations que j'ai faites sont considérées par quelques-uns comme dictées par un esprit d'hostilité aux systèmes de banques libres en général ; je réclame donc pour quelques minutes encore l'indulgence du Sénat, tandisque je vais expliquer en peu de mots la position que j'occupe. Il n'est pas un homme, âgé de trente ans, et je sais que tous les sénateurs ici présents comptent plus ou moins ce nombre de printemps... et d'hivers, qui ne se rappelle l'époque où eurent lieu toutes ces spéculations de banques, commencées en 1835 et dont l'effet se fit sentir par tout le monde commercial.

L'abandon de l'ancien système, par lequel les banques n'étaient que des banques de dépôts et l'adoption du nouveau par lequel elles devinrent banques d'escompte et de circulation, fut fait d'abord par la banque d'Angleterre et eut pour résultat de changer entièrement le système commercial du monde. Les crises se succédèrent jusqu'à celle de 1837. J'avais espéré qu'une expérience si triste, si fatale de ce système empêcherait qu'à tout jamais on songeât à y avoir recours, qu'on se rejetât dans les erreurs du passé. A peine nous avons cessé d'assister au naufrage des fortunes particulières et du crédit public, tristes débris de cette époque de désastres, et voilà que lorsque le courant des affaires fait passer sans cesse devant nous ces restes flottants des fortunes d'alors, on veut encore que nous nous exposions à la même épreuve ! Pourquoi cela ? pourquoi cette folie ? pourquoi cette anomalie ! Elle résulte de la perversion naturelle de l'esprit humain. Est-ce une des idiosyncrases de notre époque ? résulte-t-elle de l'incapacité où l'on est de méditer sur les leçons de l'experience du passé et de s'en éclairer pour l'avenir ? ou bien résulte-t-elle d'une particularité de l'esprit américain sujet à un paroxysme périodique de dix en dix ans ? D'abord nous avons la fièvre, puis le frisson, nous prenons du quinine pendant un an ou deux jusqu'à ce que nous soyons presque guéris, puis nous recommençons de plus belle et la fièvre ne tarde pas à nous gagner de nouveau.

J'étais disposé à voter en faveur d'un bill qui aurait eu pour base des bons de l'Etat au pair, des taxes étant levées pour payer les intérêts, et une caisse d'amortissement étant établie. J'aurais été jusque là pour accéder au désir du peuple de la Louisiane. Mais, qu'allons-nous faire ? A-t-on oublié les anciens bons municipaux de la Nouvelle-Orléans ? A-t-on oublié les billets émis par les Municipalités Nos 1, 2 et 3 ? N'étaient-ce pas là de vrais chiffons ! Quel changement s'est donc opéré dans la ville qui puisse améliorer cette circulation. On répond que la ville a été consolidée et que cela a autorisé son crédit. En d'autres mots, on dit que trois billets municipaux fondus en un seul billet de la ville entière changent de nature et de valeur.

La Louisiane sera inondée de billets qui n'auront pas pour base de faire garantir son propre crédit mais celui de la Nlle-Orléans, pauvre ville qui n'a pas moins de neuf millions de piastres. Quand sera-t-elle libérée ? Le sera-t-elle même jamais ? Elle ne le sera certainement jamais si vous faites de ses dettes la base d'une nouvelle circulation. Prenez pour base les bons de la Georgie ou de tout autre Etat qui soit solvable. J'y consentirai ; mais je ne désire pas voir la Louisiane entreprendre de se relever en accumulant crédit sur crédit, lorsqu'elle n'a pas de base solide sur laquelle puisse reposer sa responsabilité. Je considère que cela est dangereux, bien plus encore par suite de ce que vous voulez obtenir encore, même si la voix du peuple était unanime dans cette démarche, nous ne devrions pas nous laisser emporter au-delà des limites où les principes cessent d'être sûrs.

En même temps que nous représentons ici le peuple nous ne devons passer que des lois qui soient à son avantage. Mais non ! ce bill tel qu'il est maintenant présenté n'offre aucune garantie. Et, du reste, pourquoi l'introduire ? Les habitations sont à bon prix, les esclaves aussi, personne ne se plaint que les propriétés ne se vendent pas assez bien et la seule close qui doive étonner au contraire, c'est qu'elles commandent un prix si élevé. Je ne vois donc pas pour quelle raison nous entreprendrions cette périlleuse tentative.

Je ne prétends pas avoir le don de la prophétie ; je crois pourtant pouvoir lire assez loin dans l'avenir pour voir quels événements se préparent. Déjà à New-York 25 ou 30 banques libres ont fait faillite, la bulle de savon a crevé, un nouveau chapitre s'est ajouté a la triste histoire des banques aux Etats-Unis. Nous voulons en commencer un autre ; nous avons oublié la ruine, le désastre, les banqueroutes qui eurent lieu après la crise de 1837. A peine avons-nous eu le temps de nous relever qu'on veut nous y replonger de nouveau.

Je n'ajouterai plus qu'une chose : si cette section est adoptée, elle fera tomber dans le discrédit le système des banques libres à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Pour que les banques inspirent de la confiance, il faut qu'elles aient du crédit à l'étranger. Nous jouissons maintenant de ce crédit autant qu'aucun autre Etat que ce soit. Mais qu'il soit connu à New-York, à Philadelphie, dans l'Ouest que notre circulation ne repose pas sur le crédit de la Louisiane, mais sur celui de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et toute confiance s'évanouira bientôt. Si la Nouvelle-Orléans réalisait le système qu'elle a entrepris une fois, d'imposer d'une main de fer une taxe impitoyable sur tout le commerce de la vallée du Mississipi, elle pourrait peut-être payer les 9 millions qu'elle doit. Mais cela n'est pas possible ; elle n'a absolument que ses propres ressources, et lorsque ces bons devront être payés, la moindre hésitation tuerait à tout jamais son crédit.

Il y a quelques jours j'étais à la Nouvelle-Orléans ; j'ai vu les murs, les barrières, les portes couvertes de ce placard : « Pas de taxes sur l'ouvrier ! » Il y régnait comme une sorte de tremblement moral, une protestation énergique, générale contre le lourd fardeau des taxes—et vous allez faire des bons de la Nouvelle-Orléans la base de la circulation que vous allez émettre ! En d'autres mots, vous voulez perpétuer une taxe qui déjà est si lourde que le peuple ne peut supporter. Je ne suis pas du tout opposé à un système de banques qui présentera les garanties suffisantes, mais je m'oppose à ce que nous consentions à enfler des ballons qui crèveront avant dix ans.

Un membre demande l'appel nominal sur ce bill.

M. Griffin—Je voterai en faveur du bill quoiqu'il ne me convienne aucunement. Il contient plusieurs choses auxquelles je suis opposé. Cependant puisque le parti démocratique est tenu par ses promesses à l'établissement d'un système de banques libres, et comme ce bill est le seul qui ait été présenté, je voterai pour.

Digitized by Google

M. Neal—Je désire expliquer ma position—je suis démocrate, mais sachant que ma paroisse est formellement opposée aux banques, je voterai contre le bill.

Le bill passe.

MESSAGE ENVOYÉ A LA CHAMBRE.

Le secrétaire informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivants :

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé : Acte pour pourvoir à la manière dont les notices seront servies dans certaines procédures judiciaires, approuvé le 9 mars 1827.

Et avec amendement à un acte pour prendre le recensement de l'Etat.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour un acte intitulé :

Acte pour autoriser le maire et le conseil municipal de Plaquemines à faire un certain canal.

Et un acte pour autoriser les poursuites contre les débiteurs et contre lesquels jugement aura été obtenu pour les forcer à déclarer leurs propriétés.

Et que le président a signé un acte intitulé :

Acte pour fixer les salaires des juges de la Cour Suprême

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande le concours du Senat pour les actes et résolutions suivants :

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par les collecteurs de taxes d'Etat.

Acte pour approuver les titres de John L Davis et Daniel Voorhies sur certaines terres des écoles.

Acte pour autoriser Archibal Borron et Marie Murphy, sa femme, à adopter un enfant nommée Lucie Borron.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte pour incorporer la ville de Bastrop dans la paroisse Morehouse.

Acte pour dispenser du nouvel enregistrement des hypothèques en faveur des commissaires des legs de la succession Poydras dans les paroisses Guest-Bâton-Rouge et Pointe-Coupée.

Acte pour améliorer Big Creek.

Acte pour régler la taxe dans la paroisse de Concorde.

Acte pour diviser l'Etat en Districts judiciaires.

Résolution requérant l'irgénieur de l'Etat de faire un examen soigné des passes dans la Vieille Rivière, entre l'embouchure de la Rivière Rouge et le Mississipi et la Grande-Pointe sur la Rivière Rouge.

Et que la Chambre a donné son concours à l'acte suivant :

Acte pour émanciper John Rhodes de la paroisse d'Orléans.

RAPPORTS DES COMITES.

M. Millard, du comité des réclamations, fait les rapports suivants :

Le comité des réclamations auquel avait été référé l'acte pour venir au secours du capitaine H. Kean pour services rendus comme maître d'un bateau de l'Etat en 1848, ont des temoignages suffisants pour leur montrer que le dit Kean a accepté cette station sous le colonel Williams, ingénieur de l'Etat, dans la croyance que la compensation serait de cent piastres par mois; mais à la mort du colonel Williams que celui ci laissa un contrat par écrit, obligea Kean de recevoir de son successeur M. Wooldridge seulement quarante piastres par mois. Cependant en 1850, le capitaine Kean produisit à la Législature de cette année une réclamation pour la balance qui lui était due et en reçut la somme de mille cent quatre-vingt-trois piastres et trente-quatre cents. La dite somme fut acceptée par le dit Kean, sans qu'il manifestât l'intention de demander une autre balance.

Le comité ne peut considérer l'appropriation faite par l'acte de 1850 pour venir au secours de Kean que comme un réglement final de l'Etat avec ledit Kean. Mais les témoignages respectables produits, prouvent que ledit pétitionnaire n'a accepté ces paiements que par nécessité, croyant toujours qu'une autre Législature lui paierait le montant entier de sa demande.

C'est pourquoi le comité, en vue des nécessités du pétitionnaire, alors et maintenant, et des circonstances qui lui ont été expliquées, retire son premier rapport défavorable, et demande la permission de référer cette affaire à l'examen et l'action du Sénat.

Le tout vous est respectueusement soumis.

[Signé,] ED. M. MILLARD, Président.

Le comité des réclamations auquel avait été référé un acte accordant paiement à Joseph Dubuclet, de la paroisse St-Martin, pour un nègre qui avait été condamné pendant l'année 1824 à la prison pour la vie, est d'opinion que, quoiqu'il ne leur soit pas prouvé que le dit Dubuclet n'ait jamais reçu paiement pour ledit nègre, cependant le laps de 29 ans passés avant que paiement en soit demandé, et le manque d'évidence devant eux, si ce n'est qu'une copie du jugement de la Cour qui a jugé et condamné le nègre, n'est pas un témoignage suffisant pour leur faire voir que la réclamation est correcte.

C'est pourquoi nous recommandons que l'acte pour venir à son secours soit rejeté.

Signé : ED. M. MILLARD, Président.

Dans l'affaire de Louis Dubreuil, de l'Etat du Missouri, le comité des réclamations trouve les témoignages corrects comme le montre sa pétition, laquelle prouve à leur satisfaction, que le dit Dubreuil a été dûment nommé par le Gouverneur de l'Etat de la Louisiane pour demander au Gouverneur de l'Etat du Missouri, l'arrestation d'un certain docteur Mac-Manus qui s'était échappé des mains de la justice de l'Etat de la Louisiane, accusé du crime de meurtre dans la paroisse des Natchitoches, et cela non sans beaucoup de peines et dépenses pour exécuter les ordres du Gouverneur de la Louisiane et quoique n'en ayant jamais reçu aucune récompense.

C'est pourquoi le comité rapporte un acte lui accordant une somme de cinq cents piastres pour le dit service.

Signé : ED. M. MILLARD.

M. Lewis introduit une pétition des marchands, artisans et autres, relativement à la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, laquelle est lue et déposée sur le bureau sujette à l'appel.

M. Lacey, du comité judiciaire, rapporte favorablement les actes suivants :

Acte pour recouvrer des dommages dans certains cas.

Acte pour autoriser l'achat de 175 copies de l'ouvrage d'Eyma intitulé : «Les Lois de la Louisiane sur l'insolvabilité.»

Acte pour émanciper Jane Mary, esclave et fille de Passy, f. c. l.

Et un substitut à un acte pour annuler par prescription certains jugemens et réclamations des autres Etats contre les citoyens de cet Etat.

Acte pour amender l'article 385 du Code de Procédure.

Acte pour régler la place et les devoirs des commissaires de Cour dans les différentes paroisses de l'Etat de la Louisiane, la paroisse d'Orléans exceptée.

VENDREDI, 1er avril 1853.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, le bill ayant pour objet l'accélération des affaires dans lesquelles les droits à un emploi public se trouvent en question est pris en consideration.

M. Wickliffe—Je suis opposé à la première section du bill. Un individu sera poursuivi devant une cour, sa vie dépendra de l'issue de ce procès, et une personne arrivera pour réclamer la prise de possession d'un emploi public, et il aura un droit de priorité.

La section est adoptée après avoir subi un amendement.

M. Lacey présente plusieurs amendements au bill : ils sont adoptés.

M. Short—Je suis opposé à ce bill. Il est évident qu'il y a une tendance à rendre ces sortes d'affaires très nombreuses et elles pourront occuper le temps de la Cour pendant deux sessions. Les gens qui occupent les places ne sont nullement disposés à les abandonner, et ceux qui les réclament insisteront pour en avoir possession. Je suis opposé à ce que ces affaires aient un droit de préférence. Il n'y a pas de raison pour qu'il en soit ainsi. Ce serait une injustice faite aux autres plaideurs. Il ne peut en résulter aucun bien, mais beaucoup de mal.

M. Lacey—Ces affaires intéressent le peuple à un haut degré. Il est impatient de connaître la décision de ces questions. Les intérêts privés doivent passer après les questions d'intérêt public.

M. Short—Les particuliers ont des intérêts aussi graves dépendant des décisions des cours qu'en a cette classe respectable de personnes qui réclament des droits aux emplois publics.

Digitized by Google

M. Lewis—Ce bill ne retarderait pas les autres affaires, attendu qu'une décision réglerait la question pour tous les autres cas.

Le bill est adopté.

Le bill ayant pour objet d'autoriser les opérations de banques, &c., est pris en considération.

M. Lacey fait la motion d'amender le bill en insérant le mot de « libre » après le mot de banques.

M. Martin fait la motion d'insérer le mot de frauduleux. La motion est perdue.

L'amendement de M. Lacey est adopté.

M. Short, de la part de M. Wickliffe, Neal, Boatner et de la sienne, présente le protêt suivant, lequel est lu

Sur motion de M. Short, ce protêt est compris dans le journal du Sénat.

Les soussignés, membres du Sénat, demandent respectueusement la permission de faire entrer dans le journal leur protêt contre l'acte pour organiser les banques libres.

Les principes du système des banques libres, ayant été pendant les trois dernières années un sujet de discussion, et une majorité du peuple ayant manifesté le désir de les adopter, les soussignés étaient disposés à signer une loi pour les mettre en force.

C'est pourquoi en votant contre l'acte, nous ne voulons pas qu'il soit compris que nous avons voté contre le système ou exprimé notre opinion sur l'utilité ou l'inconvenance de l'adoption d'un tel système, mais seulement contre le caractère de l'acte qui a été adopté ; une partie des bons qui sont pris pour la base du système de circulation, nous semble être une base dangereuse et destinée à donner dans peu de temps à l'Etat une mauvaise circulation et à plonger encore l'Etat dans des convulsions spasmodiques, dont il sort à peine.

On peut dire que notre circulation actuelle est en bonne condition. Les propriétés se vendent à haut prix ; le travail reçoit sa juste recompense ; les planteurs de coton et de sucre mettent maintenant le produit de leurs récoltes dans l'achat d'esclaves et autres propriétés, à des prix si hauts qu'ils excitent l'étonnement.

Le caractère de l'acte qui vient de passer, dans notre opinion ne peut qu'inévitablement changer l'état prospère de notre circulation actuelle, et lui donner un faux caractère et élever les propriétés à une valeur fictive, et montrer pendant un certain temps une prospérité apparente, laquelle servira de fondements à des fortunes de quelques semaines, à des crédits individuels et publics, et cela quand l'Etat sort à peine d'échapper à une condition de banqueroute produite par la bancomanie qui dominait de 1834 à 1837. Nous croyons que la passation de cet acte est un mépris des lumières de l'expérience, à un degré qui s'éloigne peu de la folie, tout en respectant fortement les opinions de ceux qui l'ont supporté, l'acte est un de ceux qui ne peuvent qu'exciter l'étonnement, quand nous examinons les effets qu'il produira sur les propriétés foncières et le crédit de l'Etat.

(Signés) H. SHORT.
ROBERT WICKLIFFE.
MITCHEL NEAL.
M. BOATNER.

Suivant l'avis préalable donné par lui, M. Derbès introduit un acte intitulé :

Acte pour diviser l'Etat en Districts congressionnels.

M. Martin. — Je diffère des conclusions du rapport de la majorité, et j'aural l'occasion de présenter un rapport de la minorité.

M. Millard, du comité sur les institutions charitables, présente le rapport suivant qui est lu.

Le comité sur les institutions charitables, dont l'attention a été appelée particulièrement sur des objets et des travaux de charité d'après les investigations que lui imposent ses devoirs, offre ses sincères condoléances aux malheurs du docteur Brigs, et lui souhaite le bonheur que l'on doit éprouver pour avoir rempli une action noble et digne d'éloges, dans le sacrifice de soi-même en guérissant d'une maladie formidable et dégoûtante les étrangers pauvres qui étaient venus chercher un refuge sous son toit. Ils apprécient les motifs d'humanité qui l'ont poussé à empêcher l'extension par ses voisins à ses propres dépens d'une maladie dangereuse et contagieuse.

Cependant le comité croirait dépasser ses pouvoirs en provoquant pour le pétitionnaire une récompense en sus de celle que tout honnête homme doit trouver dans sa conscience en sauvant la vie de ses semblables, et en accomplissant l'acte si digne d'éloges qu'a accompli le docteur Brigs.

Respectueusement soumis.

ED. W. MILLARD,
President.

Le bill ayant pour but d'amender l'art. 30 du Code de procédure est pris en considération.

M. Nicholls. — J'expliquerai en quelques mots l'objet de ce bill. Il est destiné à empêcher que le créancier saisissant qui fournit un cautionnement au shériff ne soit obligé de payer de doubles honoraires d'avocats. Si une partie s'engage à payer tous les dommages que pourrait encourir le shériff, je ne vois pas pourquoi il serait obligé de payer les honoraires de l'avocat employé par un officier qui retire tout le bénéfice de ces procédures.

Le bill est adopté.

M. King demande la prise en considération de l'acte suivant :

Acte pour prolonger la Charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands de la Nouvelle-Orleans.

Sec. 1. Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en assemblée générale, Que la charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands de la Nouvelle-Orléans expirant le second mardi d'avril prochain soit et demeure prolongée jusqu'au 1er de juillet 1854 et pas plus.

Sec. 2. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que ladite banque ne devra pas, après le second mardi d'avril, émettre ou réémettre aucun de ses billets, mais devra faire rentrer, racheter et canceller sa propre circulation.

Sec. 3. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que la défense contenue dans la 12me section d'un « Acte pour réviser la charte des différentes banques domiciliées dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et pour d'autres objets, » approuvé le 5 février 1842, par laquelle il était illégal à une banque de payer à son propre comptoir tous autres billets que les siens, ne s'appliquera pas à la Banque des Marchands et des Artisans, après le deuxième mardi d'avril prochain, mais que ladite banque peut et est par le présent autorisée à payer ses obligations en espèces ou en billets des autres banques incorporées de cet Etat, créés en vertu de la loi, à l'option des personnes qui les présentent.

Sec. 4. Il est de plus decrété, &c., Que cet acte aura force de loi, à partir de et après sa passation.

M. Derbès fait la motion d'amender la première section en effaçant le 1er juillet 1854 et d'insérer le 1er octobre 1853.

M. Short. Je suis opposé à l'amendement. Depuis deux ou trois années l'opinion publique s'est profondément émue sur la question des Banques. On s'est plaint de tous côtés, avec combien de raison, je ne compte pas l'examiner, et je ne crois pas non plus qu'il soit nécessaire de le faire ici, que cet Etat a été obligé d'employer la circulation des autres Etats, n'en ayant pas une propre à lui-même. La Constitution de 1845 était l'expression de la volonté du peuple qui repoussait le système des Banques sous quelque forme qu'il se présentât. Depuis ce temps un grand changement s'est opéré dans l'esprit public. Le peuple a été obligé de se servir du papier des banques du Kentucky et du Tennessee. Bien qu'il soit vrai qu'une grande partie de notre circulation se compose de l'émission de ces banques, et que nous soyons parvenus à nous tirer d'affaire à l'aide de cette circulation, cependant le peuple n'en est pas satisfait. Il est vrai aussi que le désir d'avoir une circulation de papier existe à un degré inconcevable dans l'esprit du peuple Américain. Il serait impossible de l'en déraciner. En ce moment le peuple de l'Etat est en faveur d'étendre les institutions de crédit. Nier ce fait serait prétendre une absurdité. Il est trop tard pour nier ou pour s'y méprendre. S'il s'agissait de l'établissement d'une banque d'escompte, je voterais probablement contre le projet. Mais voici une institution qui a long-temps existé et conséquemment la question est différente. Il nous faut admettre que le peuple désire cette sorte de circulation. Quelques grands que soient les maux qui peuvent en résulter, quoique nous puissions déplorer l'établissement de pareilles institutions, cependant les opérations de cette banque en particulier sont si intimement liés avec tous les intérêts de la société, qu'il serait extrêmement difficile de les en séparer. Ce sont des fléaux; si vous le voulez, ce sont des cancers; mais ce sont des fléaux qu'il est impossible de faire disparaître, ce sont des cancers qui ne peuvent être brusquement extirpés sans danger, pour le corps politique tout entier. L'Etat ayant décidé qu'il veut avoir des banques, que les espèces ne sont pas suffisantes à les remplacer, que nous ne pouvons nous contenter d'une circulation consistant dans les métaux précieux, la seule circulation en faveur de laquelle je sois moi-même, et s'étant aussi prononcé contre l'ancien système des banques, cette question surgit: Comment allons-nous passer de l'ancien système au nouveau ? Quelle doit être la transition la plus sûre ? Cette transition doit-elle être brusque ? Allons-nous détruire d'un coup les institutions existantes ? Devons-nous diriger nos coups contre cette banque en particulier ? Consentirons-nous à vouer en un moment à la destruction une banque en faveur de laquelle parlent si haut son passé, et sa position présente, une banque qui est revenue de toutes ses anciennes erreurs et dont la solidité est reconnue ? La loi sur les banques libres nous promet un état de choses tout nouveau. Si nous passons tout d'un coup à ce nouvel état de choses, si nous ne donnons pas à l'ancien système le temps de s'éteindre graduellement, il en résultera inévitablement un dérangement dans le système de circulation. En d'autres termes, il y aura contraction dans le marché monétaire. Croit-on que les capitalistes vont placer leur argent dans ce système de banques libres ? Pour ma part, je ne crois pas que la loi qui l'a établie puisse satisfaire les besoins existants. Il est beaucoup plus facile d'abattre une vieille bâtisse que d'en construire une nouvelle; il est plus difficile de créer que de détruire. C'est là une maxime bien vieille, mais aussi juste dans son application aujourd'hui que lorsqu'elle fût exprimée pour la première fois, et l'expérience ne sert qu'à en démontrer la vérité. Mais que lors nous voyons la nouvelle bâtisse déjà ébranlée, nous ne devrions pas nous hâter d'abattre l'ancienne. Lorsque nous voyons que le peuple s'égare quant au résultat que doit produire la loi sur les banques libres, nous ne devrions pas annihiler d'un coup l'ancien système. Je suis opposé à ce que la vieille bâtisse soit abattue jusqu'à ce que je sois convaincu qu'on en élèvera, à sa place, une autre qui présente toutes les conditions de solidité. Comment est-on arrivé à agiter la question de mettre tout d'un coup fin aux opérations d'une banque qui vient à nous recommandée par les hommes les plus considérables du commerce, et d'y substituer quelque chose de nouveau, quelque chose qui n'a jamais été éprouvé, c'est ce que je ne puis dire. Dans la partie de l'Etat que j'habite les relations d'affaires de cette banque sont très étendues; à l'aide des facilités qu'elle accorde, les habitants obtiennent un crédit qu'ils ne trouveraient nulle autre part. Ces facilités, si elles désirent, ils en ont besoin, et ils seraient exposés à de grandes pertes si elles leur étaient retirées. C'est cette raison qui a opéré ce grand changement qui s'est manifesté de 1845 à 1853.

Digitized by Google

S'il ne résulte aucun avantage solide du nouveau système qui est proposé, au lieu d'être un bienfait ce sera un fléau. Ce sera un faible édifice chancelant au-dessus de nos têtes, et qui nous menacera à chaque instant de nous ensevelir sous ses ruines. Pour ces raisons je suis opposé à mettre fin aux opérations de la Banque des Artisans et Commerçants. Je suis oppose à une soudaine, et dans mon opinion, fatale transition d'un système à un autre. Accomplissons notre œuvre lentement et nous ne l'aurons achevée que plus sûrement. N'arrachons pas l'existence à cette institution, ne la faisons pas périr en ce moment. Nous ne saurions le faire sans méconnaître les vœux et les intérêts du peuple. Lorsqu'on supposait que le peuple voulait qu'il n'y eût plus de banque, je concourrais d'opinion avec lui. Aujourd'hui il semble que l'opinion a changée. On demande autre chose. Quelle circulation allons-nous substituer à celle que nous fournissent les banques ? Les arguments mêmes que j'ai entendus avancer contre les extensions du système du crédit militent en sa faveur. On dit que si nous étendons la charte, les actions vont s'élever. N'est-ce pas là la preuve de la solidité de cette institution ? Que si, au contraire, vous disiez que les actions sont au-dessous du pair, ce serait la preuve que la situation de la banque n'est pas sûre.

M. McCay—Le sénateur fait-il allusion à une conversation qu'il a eue avec moi.

M. Short—Non, j'ai puisé ces renseignements à une source qui passe généralement pour certaine, les papiers publiés. Cette question a été discutée pendant longtemps; Elle a été débattue par la presse, dans les assemblées publiques et dans les Chambres de la Législature. La décision n'a pas été contraire aux banques J'eusse désiré qu'elle fût hostile à ces institutions. Mais il n'en a pas été ainsi, et nous devons nous soumettre à la volonté du peuple. Il a décidé que tant que les autres Etats auront une circulation de papiers, nous devons en avoir aussi une. Il pense qu'il doit y avoir le système de crédit qui, dans l'espace de quelques années, a donné un si grand élan à l'agriculture du Kentucky et des autres Etats. Il s'occupe peu des maux que peut recéler l'avenir, bien qu'il semble que l'experience devrait nous avoir rendus assez sages. Le peuple de la Louisiane, je le répète, mû par ces diverses considérations, et forcé de se servir du papier des autres Etats qui est apporté dans celui-ci, veut se servir de son propre papier au lieu du papier étranger. Peu importe à un homme qui a un billet, d'où il vient, s'il est bon Mais on dit: s'il faut que nous nous servions de papier-monnaie, n'en pouvons nous en avoir qui nous soit propre ? Pourquoi n'aurions-nous pas ces banques à la Louisiane ? Là, du moins, elles seraient sous notre contrôle, là nous pourrons leur imposer certaines limites et les soumettre à nos propres lois. Telle est la question que l'on pose, et il faut avouer qu'il est difficile d'y repondre.

La question ayant été mise aux voix, l'amendement est repoussé.

M. King fait la motion d'amender la première section en substituant les mots «le 1er Décembre 1853» à ceux-ci «le 1er Juillet 1854.»

M King.—Comme cette question est d'une grande importance pour mes commettants, j'espère que le sénat me pardonnera les quelques observations que je vais lui presenter. Je dois commencer par déclarer que je ne suis pas d'avis de mettre fin tout d'un coup aux operations de la Banque des Artisans et des Négociants. Le senateur de Madison [M. Short] a dit avec raison que le peuple demande une augmentation dans le capital qui sert aux opérations des banques.— J'ai déja dit plusieurs fois et je repète que le peuple s'est exprime à cet egard d'une manière claire et sur laquelle on ne saurait se méprendre. En ma qualité de representant de ce peuple, je crois qu'il est de mon devoir de contribuer a ce qu'il soit fait droit à sa demande. Je n'ai pas le moindre doute sur l'état de l'opinion publique quant à cette question, et je n'hésiterai pas à me conformer à cette opinion.

Si nous mettions un terme en ce moment aux affaires de la banque des Artisans et Négociants, cette mesure aurait pour effet de retirer presque tout le capital de la Banque, qui appartient presque tout entier a des capitalistes étrangers. A moins qu'on n'accorde quelque extension à la Banque, l'effet immédiat sera que le capital sera retiré et qu'il surviendra un trouble dans les affaires pécuniaires. La Nouvelle-Orléans a besoin de capital, et ne peut s'en dispenser sans s'exposer à de grands inconvénients, à sa ruine peut-être. Je regretterais de voir se retirer ce capital dont nous avons un si grand besoin, de voir détruit ce système de crédit que le public demande d'une manière si impérieuse. Si d'un côté, je suis de cette opinion, de l'autre je ne suis pas moins opposé à ce que nous revenions à l'ancien système de Banques ou à ce que nous continuions l'existence de ces anciens monopoles, au-delà du temps qu'il sera strictement nécessaire.— La question se réduit en pratique à ceci: Devons-nous avoir des banques libres ou des monopoles privilégiés ? Allons-nous ouvrir les portes à tout le monde, ou seulement à quelques individus ? Cette question a déjà été décidée par le peuple et je croyais que sa décision avait été finale. Mais je regrette de voir qu'il faut livrer une nouvelle bataille dans cette enceinte, que la question surgit encore au milieu de nous. Qu'il me soit permis de demander aux honorables sénateurs ce qu'ils préfèrent: l'ancien système de monopoles ou un système de banques basées sur des principes véritablement démocratiques et républicaines, un système qui n'a rien d'exclusif, mais qui provoque la concurrence dans les opérations de Banques comme dans tous les autres genres d'affaires et donne au monde entier la chance d'en profiter ? Quant à moi, j'avoue que je crois que l'opinion du peuple de l'Etat est juste, et je suis pour cette raison en faveur des banques libres.

Digitized by Google

Pour ces raisons, je désire voir prolonger l'existence de la banque jusqu'au mois de décembre. Si nous prolongeons jusque là son existence, nous trouverons à cette époque la banque prête à venir en aide à ce système qui est le seul sûr, le seul qui soit adapté à un gouvernement démocratique et républicain tel que le nôtre. Néanmoins, si nous l'anéantissons immédiatement avant même d'avoir adopté la loi générale, son capital nous quittera pour toujours. Nous voulons que cette banque vienne se ranger sous les dispositions de la loi générale. Nous voulons qu'elle serve à démontrer les bienfaits du nouveau système que nous allons adopter Je suis porté à croire d'après les conversations que j'ai eues avec des officiers de la banque qu'elle subira cette transformation. Je crois que nous la verrons à la tête de cette phalange de nouvelle banque, que va créer la nouvelle loi sur les banques et qu'elle sera plus prospère que jamais. Nous la verrons conduire la bataille qu'on va livrer aux banques spéciales. Le poids de son influence sera du côté de la liberté. Ne laissons pas échapper l'occasion d'avoir un pareille champion, nous devons l'accepter comme un allié au lieu de le repousser comme un ennemi. Son crédit, son influence acquis à la cause du système des banques libres, en assurera le triomphe. Dans l'intérêt de notre population commerciale, dans l'intérêt du système des banques libres, par respect pour les vœux et l'intérêt du peuple, que cet amendement soit adopté. Prolongeons l'existence de la banque jusqu'au 1er de décembre. Donnons-lui assez de temps pour qu'elle puisse correspondre à ses actionnaires et leur demander de se ranger sous les dispositions de la loi générale. La loi que le Senat a adopté lui est aussi favorable que les lois actuelles. Je pense qu'elle sera de cette opinion et qu'elle s'y conformera, si seulement nous lui donnons une chance et ne l'étouffons pas tout de suite. J'espère qu'ils nous accorderont cette extension, et alors, après que nous lui aurons donné le temps de la réflexion, si elle ne veut pas prendre le bénéfice de la loi elle rentrera dans les conditions qui, dans mon opinion, doivent être conservées à toutes ces institutions à monopole.

M. Martin.—Puisque le sénateur a fini, je pense que je puis avoir la chance de dire quelques mots. Le sénateur dit que le système des banques libres est un système démocratique. Je puis prouver que la banque des Artisans et Négociants est aussi une banque démocratique. Le bill par lequel elle a été créée fut présenté par le gouverneur Walker, alors membre de la Législature. Elle a été placée sous le contrôle des démocrates, et y est toujours restée depuis. Je ne veux pas que ces monstres démocratiques nous soient attribués. Les démocrates doivent reconnaître leur paternité !

Les whigs ont toujours été opposés aux banques locales Ces institutions sont le fruit des principes démocratiques. Elles ont été créées lorsque le général Jackson et la democratie écrasèrent la banque Nationale. C'est pendant la lutte qui s'engagea alors que les banques furent établies dans la plupart des États, et furent soutenues par les démocrates comme étant, selon eux, plus sûres et moins dangereuses que la banque Nationale. Les whigs n'ont jamais été inféodés aux banques locales.

Cette banque (la banque des Artisans et des Négociants) est une banque democratique. Si les membres du Sénat veulent recourir aux procès-verbaux de 1833, ils verront que c'est à Joseph Walker, ex-gouverneur de l'Etat, qu'en revient la paternité.

M. Short—Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M. King] en a appelé au parti démocratique, et prétend qu'il s'est déjà prononcé sur la necessité d'abandonner l'ancien système et d'adopter le système des banques libres. Je veux bien l'admettre, mais a-t-il décidé qu'on abandonnerait le système actuel afin d'adopter le système que le Sénat vient d'établir ? Je le nie. La Louisiane ne tentera jamais volontairement une expérience de cette sorte. Jamais l'Etat de la Louisiane, ni le parti démocratique ne se sont prononcés en faveur d'un système aussi vicieux. Si un bill convenable avait été présenté, je lui aurait donné mon vote ; mais je n'ai pu consentir à donner mon appui à celui qui a été adopté.

M. King.—Si le vote des trois quarts qui a été donné en faveur du bill ne peut convaincre le sénateur que c'est là le bill que le peuple désire, je puis l'assurer que rien ne pourra avoir cet effet.

M. Short.—Les bons de la ville ont-ils jamais été discutés. Jamais que je sache, au moins dans la partie de l'Etat que j'habite.

Sur motion de déposer l'amendement sur le bureau, M. King demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Barthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Millard, Nichols, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour le dépôt, —11 voix.

MM. Boatner, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Patterson et Thériot votent contre.—11 voix.

Les voix étant égales le président vote pour le dépôt sur le bureau.

Par conséquent la motion est rejetée.

Sur motion d'adopter la première section, l'appel nominal est demandé :

MM. Barthe, Hodge, Kittridge Martin, Nichols, Rivers, Short, Slack et Taylor votent pour l'adoption —9 voix.

MM. Boatner, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Patterson, Thériot et Todd votent contre—12 voix.

Le président déclare que la section est rejetée.

M. Todd ayant voté avec la majorité, demande la reconsidération du vote donné sur l'adoption de la première section de l'acte.

M. McCay demande la reconsidération de l'acte.

M. Nicholls.—Je ne pense pas que le sénateur ait le droit de demander maintenant la reconsidération. Il a déjà été décidé dans cette chambre que lorsque notice a été donnée d'une demande de reconsideration, personne ne peut demander la reconsidération dans l'intervalle.

M. Rivers.—Quel est l'objet d'une reconsidération. C'est évidemment d'avoir l'opinion pleine et entière du Senat ; et que l'on craint de ne l'avoir pas eue à l'époque du premier vote à cause de l'absence de quelque membre. Le sénateur de Worehouse (M. Todd) a donné notice qu'il demanderait demain la reconsideration. Pourquoi ne l'a-t-il pas demandée ? Evidemment parce qu'il ne voulait pas detruire l'objet même qu'il a en vue. Je désire que les sénateurs qui sont maintenant absents puissent avoir la chance de voter. Il n'est pas probable qu'aucun sénateur ait encore changé d'opinion, et, conséquemment une motion de reconsidération, en ce moment serait tout simplement une vraie perte de temps.

M. Derbès—Je ne puis admettre les idées du sénateur sur les principes qui président à sa motion de reconsidération. Son véritable objet est de permettre à une personne qui a vote par erreur, de changer son vote. Il y a quelque temps, je demandai un renvoi, dans le but de donner à quelques membres absents le temps d'arriver ici avant que la question fût mise aux voix. Les sénateurs qui nous étaient opposés se comptèrent, et, pensant qu'ils pouvaient decider la question, repoussèrent la motion. Eh bien ! maintenant qu'ils ont été battus, ils veulent obtenir le renvoi. Quant à moi, je crois qu'ils peuvent demander la reconsideration aussi bien aujourd'hui que jamais.

M. Short—J'espère que les sénateurs ne montreront pas tant d'insistance pour obtenir immediatement la reconsideration. La question qui est devant le Sénat est très importante et demande du temps et de la réflexion. Les votes que je donne ici, je les donne comme senateur et comme démocrate ; je n'en suis responsable que devant mes commettants. Je vois beaucoup de personnes deployer un grand zèle en faveur de mesures qu'elles appellent démocratiques. Elles nous disent que le parti sera detruit, si ces mesures ne sont pas adoptées, mesures que je ne puis m'empêcher de regarder comme fatales à l'Etat et au parti. Elles seront, dit-on, à tout jamais la pierre fondamentale du parti. Je pense que le résultat sera tout different. Les principes démocratiques ne dépendent pas des manœuvres des intrigants politiques. Il y a dans le peuple un fond de bon sens qui le met à même de voir la déception. Quand on proposera une mesure que je croirai utile, je lui donnerai mon appui. Je me suis opposé d'avance au bill sur les Banques qui nous est venu de la Chambre. Je vois ici deux sénateurs, qui, je pensais, devaient être du même côté que moi sur cette question. Mais je remarque que, lorsque je parle du danger de s'endetter, ils évitent de m'écouter, quoi qu'ils se soient elevés sur le même sujet avec plus de force que je ne l'ai jamais fait moi-même. J'ai voté contre l'amendement du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M King], parce que je ne pense pas qu'il aille assez loin. Bien que dans la discussion qui s'est élevée au sujet du système des Banques libres rien n'ait été décidé, pas même que nous devrions quitter un système pour un autre, cependant l'opinion s'est en quelque sorte prononcée en faveur des Banques libres et contre le système des anciens monopoles. Quant à moi, considérant la question comme un démocrate, je ne vois qu'une base sûre et solide pour les opérations de banque. Elles doivent reposer sur un capital véritable. Mais quand je vois présenter une loi qui est pour ainsi dire une arène libre ouverte à tous les combattans qui voudront se présenter, je ne puis m'empêcher d'hesiter. Les Banques doivent avoir pour base un capital solide.

Digitized by Google

Le mot « libre » n'a pas la puissance de rendre une banque plus solide que celles dont nous avons déjà fait l'essai. Il peut y avoir un prestige tout particulier dans ce mot, mais il ne constitue pas un élement de sûreté. Ce mot est une invention de ces personnes qui ont pensé qu'on ne pouvait se passer de banques, mais qui, en même temps, sont opposées à ce genre de banques que nous avions en 1837, et qui ont eu pour résultat la ruine et la désolation. Ils pensèrent qu'ils n'auraient qu'à introduire ce mot pour agir sur l'opinion publique et inféoder l'Etat à un système de leur invention. Mais ce système est-il de nature à satisfaire le peuple? Le bill qui a été adopté par le Sénat établit-il un système conforme aux vœux du peuple de la Louisiane? Si l'on soumettait ce bill au peuple, il serait rejeté par un vote encore plus décisif que celui qui a été donné lors de la candidature du général Scott. Et la proposition qui a été faite dans cette enceinte de prendre des mesures qui tendraient à forcer la Banque des Artisans et Négociants à se conformer aux dispositions d'une loi générale ne serait pas reçue plus favorablement.

L'appel nominal est fait sur la reconsidération :

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Millard, Nicholls, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—11 voix.

MM. Boatner, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Patterson et Thériot votent contre—11 voix

Les voix étant également partagées, le président vote pour la reconsidération.

M. McCay demande que la première section soit déposée indéfiniment sur le bureau.

MM. Boatner, Derbès, Kemp, Lacey, McCay, Neal et Thériot votent pour—7 voix.

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lewis, Martin, Millard, Nicholls, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent contre—15 voix.

Par conséquent, le Sénat refuse de déposer la première section indéfiniment sur le bureau.

Sur motion de M. Rivers, l'acte est alors mis à l'ordre spécial du jour pour mardi prochain 5 avril 1853.

M. Derbès, du comité d'enrôlement, rapporte au Sénat, correctement enrôlés, les actes suivants :

Acte pour autoriser les juges de paix à nommer dans certains cas des curateurs ad litem.

Acte pour autoriser David Brady, de la Nouvelle-Orléans, à changer son nom de David Brady par celui de David Braden.

Acte pour émanciper John P. Montamat.

Acte pour prohiber la circulation des petits billets.

Le secrétaire demande la signature de l'orateur pour les mêmes.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes intitulés :

Acte pour autoriser la Banque dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Acte pour venir au secours de Parvis et Dugué.

Acte pour autoriser les procédures in rem pour recouvrer les pertes et dommages causés par tout manque de soins, ou d'adresse dans la direction, ou le gouvernement de tout bateau à vapeur, barge, chaland, navire ou radeau.

Acte accordant aux Etats-Unis juridiction sur toute cette partie de toute rue, chemin public ou route passant au travers du site obtenu pour l'établissement d'un chantier de marine et d'un dépôt naval, vis-à-vis la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, sur la rive droite du fleuve Mississippi.

Et il informe laChambre que le Sénat a donné son concours à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours de H. Kean.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour rappeler certaines sections d'un acte intitulé : Acte pour prescrire les devoirs des notaires publics dans la paroisse d'Orléans, en passant des actes de vente, de donation et d'hypothèques, approuvé le 21 mars 1850.

Acte pour pourvoir au transfert de certains documents publics de la paroisse de Jefferson à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Substitut à un acte pour unir les bureaux du recorder des hypothèques et du recorder de la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour donner certains pouvoirs au maire de la ville de Port-Hudson.

Acte pour changer le nom de George Ross de la paroisse de Plaquemines.

Acte pour changer les districts du jury de police de la paroisse Concordia.

Acte pour donner le droit au jury de police de la paroisse de Concordia d'étendre ses séances.

Acte pour émanciper Alex. L. Green.

Acte pour abolir la place de l'annotateur des hypothèques dans la paroisse de Jefferson.

Substitut à un acte pour réunir les bureaux du recorder des hypothèques, et du recorder dans la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour empêcher les corporations municipales de cet Etat d'imposer des taxes sur les personnes vendant des articles manufacturés par eux-mêmes dans cet Etat.

Substitut à un acte pour empêcher le conseil municipal de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, d'imposer des taxes sur des personnes vendant des articles manufacturés par elles-mêmes.

Acte pour prendre l'opinion des électeurs qualifiés de la ville de Port-Hudson sur la question d'abolir la corporation, et pour abolir la dite corporation.

Acte pour autoriser la nomination d'un notaire public additionnel dans et pour la paroisse d'Union.

Acte pour réorganiser le jury de police de la paroisse St-Landry.

Acte pour venir au secours de Robert Darpit, de la paroisse Terrebonne.

Acte pour pourvoir et pour régler la place d'avocat-général.

Résolution conjointe relative à l'asile des Sourds-et-Muets et Aveugles.

Resolution pour venir au secours de l'Hôpital de Charité.

Résolution requérant l'ingénieur de l'Etat de faire nettoyer les bayous Darbon, Corney, et de compléter les améliorations qui y ont été commencées.

Résolution de condoléance en l'honneur de l'Hon. Ronquillo, décédé.

Et il informe le Sénat que la Chambre a refusé de donner son concours au substitut du Sénat à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours des personnes possédant des certificats d'entrées des terres marécageuses, émis par les bureaux des terres des Etats-Unis, subséquent au 2 mars 1849, et avant le 17 mars 1852.

Et il demande la signature du président pour les actes suivants, intitulés :

Acte pour l'appropriation et le remboursement de certaines sommes d'argent payées pour des warrants des terres des Ecoles.

Acte pour amender la 7me section d'un acte intitulé : Acte pour prescrire la manière de disposer des terres appartenant à des personnes qui n'ont pas payé leurs taxes.

Acte pour venir au secours de Théodule Labeuve.

Digitized by Google

BILLS ADOPTES.

Acte pour venir en aide à Robert Despit, de la paroisse Terrebonne.

Acte pour organiser le juri de police de St-Landry.

SAMEDI, 2 avril 1853.

M. Hodge présente un bill dont l'objet est d'accorder aux paroisses les amendes et confiscations qui seront à l'avenir encourues pour infractions aux lois pénales.

M. Hodge—J'expliquerai l'objet de ce bill. Aux termes d'actes adoptés à cette session ainsi qu'à la dernière session de l'assemblée générale, les paroisses sont obligées de payer les frais des poursuites qui ont lieu dans leurs limites Ce n'est par conséquent qu'un acte de justice de leur donner les amendes et les confiscations. C'est là une question d'une grande importance, surtout pour la paroisse d'Orléans dans laquelle, bien que les dépenses soient très-considerables, les amendes et les confiscations seraient suffisantes pour les couvrir.

M. Wickliffe—Le bill est excellent, et j'espère qu'il sera adopté.

Le bill est adopté.

« L'acte pour pourvoir à l'engagement des récoltes naissantes est pris en considération.

M. Mc Cay s'y oppose et demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Derbès, Kemp, Kittridge, King, Lewis, Millard, Neal, Patterson, Rivers, Short et Taylor votent pour—12 voix.

Messieurs Hodge, McCay, Nichols, Stack, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—6 voix.

Par conséquent la motion de reconsidérer prévant.

La 1re et la 2me section sont adoptées.

La 3me section qui est conçue comme suit :

Sect. 3me. Il est de plus decrété, &c, Que le privilège que cet acte accorde, ne passera pas avant les privilèges maintenant accordés par la loi, aux créancier, économome, fournisseur de provisions d'habitations et ouvriers, ni ceux d'une saisie faite par un créancier en vertu d'un jugement rendu avant l'engagement.

M. Nicholls fait la motion d'effacer les mots « ni ceux d'une saisie faite par un créancier en vertu d'un jugement rendu avant l'engagement et d'insérer «sur un jugement en faveur du creancier. »

M. Lacey fait la motion de déposer l'amendement sur le bureau et demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Boatner, Derbès, Kemp, Kittridge, King, Lacey, Lewis, Millard, Patterson, Rivers, Short, et Taylor, votent pour—12 voix.

MM. Hodge, McCay, Neal, Nicholls, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—6 voix

Les 4me et 5me sections sont adoptées.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande au Sénat son concours pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du Télégraphe de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de la Rivière Rouge, et du Texas.

Acte pour incorporer l'asile de Ste-Anne, pour venir au secours des femmes pauvres et des enfants abandonnés de toutes les religions.

Et il informe aussi le Sénat que la Chambre a passé la résolution suivante :

Résolu, que l'orateur de la Chambre ait le droit de nommer un membre pour remplir les devoirs du fauteuil pendant sa maladie ou son absence temporaire du siége du gouvernement, quand même ce changement se prolongerait au-delà du temps de l'ajournement, et que le membre ainsi nommé signera tous warrants, actes et autres papiers que l'orateur permanent a le droit de signer.

L'Hon. J. M. Sandidge, de Bossier, est nommé par l'orateur pour occuper le fauteuil pendant son absence.

MERCREDI, 6 avril 1853.

RAPPORTS DES COMITES.

M. Lacey, du comite judiciaire, soumet le rapport suivant qui est lu :

A l'hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieut.-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat :

Le comite judiciaire du Sénat, auquel avait été référée la résolution passée par votre honorable corps, requerrant ce comité de rapporter un acte en conformité aux dispositions de l'article onze de la Constitution, demande la permission de rapporter que le comité, pour se conformer à la susdite résolution, rapporte à votre honorable corps un acte ayant rapport à la résolution ; et dans l'accomplissement de ce devoir, le comité soumet à l'examen du Sénat, l'acte intitulé : « Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des votans de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans en conformité à l'article onze de la Constitution. »

Le comité ne prétend pas dire que l'acte soumis au Sénat est parfait ; mais il croit que le dit acte peut être mieux corrigé dans ses détails par le Sénat que par le comité ; la forme de l'acte vous est soumis et le comité recommande respectueusement son impression.

Le tout vous est respectueusement soumis.

GEORGE S. LACEY,
Président du comité judiciaire du Sénat.

M. Lacey, du comite judiciaire, rapporte favorablement les actes suivans intitulés :

Acte pour pourvoir au changement de venue dans les affaires civiles et criminelles conformément à l'article 112 de la Constitution.

Acte pour restreindre la juridiction de la cour suprême dans les affaires civiles à des points de droit seulement

Et un substitut à un acte intitulé :

Acte relatif aux hypothèques et privilèges.

Lesquels sont ordonnés à l'impression et mis à l'ordre du jour pour vendredi prochain, 8 avril 1853.

Et il introduit, sans en avoir donné avis préalable après en avoir demande et obtenu la permission, un acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des votans de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans conformément à l'article 11 de la Constitution.

Mr. Short, du comité des terres et levées, soumet le rapport suivant :

A l'Hon. President et membres du Sénat.

Le comité des terres et levées auquel avait été référé un acte intitulé : « Acte pour venir au secours de ceux qui ont acheté des terres d'une manière irrégulière, rapporté de la chambre et référé à ce comite le 28 mars, rapporte respectueusement :

Que cet acte a pour but de venir au secours des personnes qui ont acheté de Richard Loucks, ex-anotateur du bureau des terres, des warrants de terre irréguliers. Le comité appellera l'attention du Sénat sur ce qu'ils ont déjà dit dans leur rapport général sur ces certificats inédits ; « il y a une autre classe de personnes « qui possèdent des certificats d'entrées émis par un « Richard Loucks ex-anotateur du bureau des terres, « conformément à une résolution passée le 4 mars « 1852, comme on pourra le voir par un rapport de « l'anotateur actuel du bureau des terres, il notifia les « possesseurs de ces certificats de les présenter, ceux « qui ont été presentés depuis l'avis se montent à « 1002 6|100 acres. Nous croyons qu'il est du devoir « de l'Etat de remettre aux possesseurs de ces certifi- « cats sur leur renvoi le montant de l'argent qu'ils « ont paye. » p. 3 et 4.

C'est tout ce que nous croyons que l'Etat puisse faire, non pas qu'ils insistent que l'Etat soit tenu d'après la loi, de refuser de rendre l'argent que ces individus ont donné d'une manière irrégulière à M. Loucks, lequel n'était pas la personne chargée de recevoir cet argent, en sa capacité d'annotateur, et que ni l'Etat ni les cautions de Loucks ne pouvaient être responsables pour des actes qui ne tombaient pas dans la sphère de ses affaires.

Il était du devoir du trésorier de l'Etat de recevoir l'argent des warrants, approuvés par l'auditeur, et sur le reçu du trésorier, il devenait du devoir de l'annotateur d'émettre un certificat d'entrée en faveur de la personne payant le trésorier ; aucunes de ces formalités n'ont etc remplies, et aucune entrée ne peut être trouvée dans les livres pour montrer l'extension du système de fraude adopté par Loucks pour tromper des personnes innocentes, qui le croyaient l'agent auquel il fallait remettre l'argent des warrants des terres.

Mais en consideration de ce que Loucks avait été nommé officier de l'Etat, et comme tel, avait une espèce d'endossement d'honnêteté, et croyant que les individus qui lui offraient l'argent pensaient qu'il était la personne propre à laquelle ils devaient le remettre, le comite conclut, que l'Etat doit refuser l'argent des individus ainsi trompes.

Digitized by Google

L'existence de ces certificats frauduleux a été appelée à l'attention de la Législature à sa session de 1852, et le 4 de mars, elle passait la résolution suivante:

Il est résolu, que le régister du bureau des terres soit et demeure par le présent autorisé et requis de donner avis pendant six mois dans le journal officiel, aux porteurs de certificats pour des terres lancés par Richard Loucks, ci-devant régister, d'avoir à lui présenter les dits certificats afin qu'il puisse determiner quels sont les porteurs de certificats frauduleux, et le régister est par le présent autorisé à en faire un rapport à la prochaine session de la Legislature.

Il est de plus résolu, &c, Que chaque fois que le régister découvrira qu'aucune des terres vendues frauduleusement par le dit Richard Loucks appartient à l'Etat, il en suspendra la vente à toute personne excepté celle qui en aurait fait l'acquisition par erreur, et si les terres qui n'appartiennent pas à l'Etat et qui sont comprises dans les certificats peuvent être choisies par l'Etat, le régister devra faire le dit choix.

Le régister actuel du bureau des terres n'ayant pas spécifié dans son rapport général des terres mentionnées dans ces certificats d'entrées appartenant à l'Etat où les personnes qui les avaient par vente, où que ces dites terres ne pouvaient être choisies par l'Etat; la seule chose que le comité puisse recommander est le remboursement aux porteurs des sommes versées pour ces certificats, comme le dit leur rapport général

La note adressée au régister ou bureau des terres et sa réponse sont ci-annexées à ce rapport et montrent la condition des terres spécifiées dans les certificats, autant qu'il était à la connaissance du register.

L'acte rapporté de la Chambre et référé à ce comité propose que l'Etat reconnaisse tous les certificats donnés bona fide, à des personnes par Richard Loucks comme régister, et admis comme bons par l'Etat comme s'ils avaient été régulièrement émis, et comme si tous les actes de Loucks avaient été faits conformément aux exigences de la loi, et le régister actuel est requis d'émettre des patentes aux porteurs des dits certificats et la dite mise sur la face du dit certificat est la date à laquelle la patente doit avoir effet, si le certificat a été émis pendant que Loucks était régister, l'accomplissement régulier de ses devoirs.

Le fait est établi maintenant que quand ces certificats furent émis et que Loucks pris l'argent de ces parties, il était dans la décharge irrégulière de ces devoirs il faisait ce qu'il n'avait pas le droit de faire et agissait contrairement aux lois; il ne pouvait émettre régulièrement un certificat d'entrée, lequel montre l'évidence d'un titre, sans le reçu du tresorier, que l'argent avait été payé sur un ordre venant du bureau de l'auditeur ; sur cela seulement, un certificat pouvait être émis d'une manière régulière. Que si ces individus avaient payé cet argent au trésorier, l'Etat n'aurait fait aucune perte et ils n'auraient pas souffert ce qu'ils ont souffert par ignorance de la manière d'obtenir des certificats. L'Etat a le désir de rembourser cet argent, mais quant à confirmer les entrées et donner validité aux certificats qui portent la date sur la face, cela pourrait mettre le trouble dans les titres des autres parties qui n'ont aucun rapport avec les transactions malheureuses provenant de la malhonnêteté de Loucks, c'est ce qu'aucune Législature ne peut sanctionner.

Si la terre entrée par ces certificats n'est pas réclamée par aucun autre porteur de certificat, alors qu'elle reste en sa possession. Mais tout acte en vertu duquel ceux qui ont entré ces terres et donné l'argent du bureau approprié et en ont reçu une preuve de leur titre doivent être dépossédés en reconnaissant la validité d'un certificat antérieur frauduleux. C'est pourquoi le comité ne recommande pas la passation de l'acte tel qu'il est rapporté par la Chambre. Mais pour se conformer à l'opinion émise dans leur rapport général, recommandant la passation d'un acte pour restituer l'argent à ceux qui remettront leurs certificats, à moins qu'une patente ne puisse être émise pour la terre ci-mentionnée dans le certificat qui n'a pas été entré et payé par d'autres parties. Et votre comité rapporte en conséquence un substitut à l'acte venant de la Chambre.

H. SHORT, président.

Bâton-Rouge, 4 avril 1853.

Monsieur.

Voulez-vous voir à la résolution No 110, passée à la dernière session de la Législature dans les actes 1852 p. 86, et dire si aucune des terres vendues frauduleusement par Richard Loucks appartiennent à l'Etat ou si elles appartenaient à l'Etat en tout temps depuis que les certificats vous ont été présentés, et dont parle votre rapport à la Législature; et si ces terres n'appartenaient-pas ou n'appartiennent pas à l'Etat, peuvent elles être choisies par l'Etat suivant les termes de la résolution; ces terres ne sont-elles pas appelées sur ces certificats terres marécageuses et n'ont-elles pas été entrées par d'autres personnes que celles mentionnées dans les certificats.

Votre respect.

Signé H. SHORT,

Président du comité du Sénat des terres et levées

Bureau des Terres de la Louisiane.

6 avril 1853.

Monsieur,

En réponse à votre demande du 4 j'ai l'honneur de dire que j'ai examiné la résolution No 110, adoptée le 4 mars 1852 par la Législature.

Il n'y a dans ce bureau aucune preuve que les terres que l'on prétend avoir été vendues par Richard Loucks, suivant des certificats rentrés à ce bureau, appartiennent à l'Etat ou peuvent être choisies par l'Etat, excepte celles de Lusina Haley, lesquelles ont été confirmées à l'Etat comme terres marecageuses, et celles de James Gibbins, lesquelles ont été choisies comme terres des améliorations intérieures.

Aussitôt que j'eus appris l'état des terres de Mme Haslys, j'écrivis au commissaire du bureau général des terres et en demandai sa confirmation. Je donnai avis aussi à l'honorable M. Bartlett qui est son représentant, qu'elle pouvait maintenant acheter la terre, marquer au crayon son nom sur la carte. Jos. H. Gibbins fut notifié que sa terre avait été choisie comme terres des améliorations intérieures quelques annees avant. Elle paya au trésor le montant qu'elle devait.

Quant à ce qui a rapport aux autres terres dont les certificats n'ont pas éte présentés, en vertu de la resolution, parmi lesquelles me furent présentés l'hiver dernier, les Etats-Unis se sont défaits de leurs titres, et autant que je suis informé, toutes étaient des propriétés privées appartenant à d'autres parties, avant la passation de la résolution ou l'étaient avant la pretendue vente de Loucks

Je suis respectueusement, votre obéissant serviteur,

W. H. CRENSHAW, register.

HON. H. SHORT,

Chambre du Sénat.

M. Kittridge demande la prise en considération d'un acte intitulé :

Acte pour amender la 2me section d'un acte intitulé «Acte pour pourvoir à la souscription par les paroisses et corporations municipales de cet Etat au fonds capital des corporations entreprenant des travaux d'améliorations intérieures, et pour le paiement et la dissolution du capital ainsi souscrit.

M. Marum—Il y a quelque temps je demandai au Senat de vouloir bien ne pas agir sur ce bill afin que je passe, conjointement avec le représentant de la paroisse de Terrebonne, prendre les renseignements nécessaires pour connaître le véritable état des choses. Il ne me paraît pas démontré que ce bill soit l'expression de la volonté de la majorité des propriétaires d'esclaves dans cette paroisse. Le bill présenté par mon collégue crée une taxe qui doit peser sur toute espèce de propriété. Je suis opposé au principe d'imposer les esclaves au bénéfice des chemins de fer, mais si la majorité des propriétaires d'esclaves eux-mêmes le désirent, je n'ai pas d'objection à leur concéder ce point. Mais je ne puis consentir à voir cette taxe frapper les chevaux, les ânes, les mulets, les bêtes à corne, ainsi qu'il arriverait si ce bill était adopté. C'est là étendre beaucoup trop loin le système. Le bill présenté par mon collégue a été rédigé par un citoyen indigne, un homme dont la présence souille la Chambre dont il fait partie. J'ai cause avec un citoyen éminent de la paroisse, M. J. J. Hanne, un homme fortement intéressé dans ces entreprises. Il m'a dit que ce bill n'est pas ce que les habitans de Terrebonne désiraient. Ils veulent que la taxe ne porte que sur la propriété immobilière et les esclaves. M. Hanne, l'homme le plus eminent de la paroisse parmi tous ceux qui sont liés d'interêt au chemin de fer des Opelousas, m'a dit qu'il n'approuvait par le bill presente par mon collégue. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, je suis opposé à la taxe sur les esclaves pour cet objet. La valeur de ce genre de propriete ne reçoit aucun accroissement par l'imposition de cette taxe. Après ces quelques remarques je soumettrai le substitut suivant:

Digitized by Google

M. Martin présente comme substitut l'acte suivant:

Acte pour pourvoir à la souscription par le jury de police de la paroisse Terrebonne au fonds capital de la compagnie du grand chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orleans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest, et au paiement et à la disposition des actions ainsi prises.

Sect. 1. Il est décrété par le Senat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane reunis en assemblée generale, qu'il sera loisible au jury de police de la paroisse de Terrebonne de souscrire au fonds capital de la compagnie du grand chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orleans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest, en se conformant aux dispositions de cet acte.

Sect. 2 Il est de plus decreté &c, Que toute ordonnance passée au sujet de la dite souscription renfermera les dispositions suivantes:

1o. Un état du nombre et du montant des actions qui devront être prises.

2o. La base d'une taxe sur les propriétes foncières et les esclaves compris dans la dite paroisse, suffisante pour payer le montant de la dite souscription, et une spécification du taux de la taxe et de l'epoque ou des epoques auxquelles elle sera exigible.

Sect. 3—Il est de plus décrete, etc., qu'aucune ordonnance passée en vertu des dispositions de cet acte ne sera valide ou ne prendra effet jusqu'à ce qu'elle soit approuvée et ratifiée par une majorité des votants sur les propriétes desquels il est propose d'imposer la dite taxe, et ce, à une election tenue specialement à cet effet par ordre du jury de police de la paroisse Terrebonne, et le dit jury de police prescrira la manière dont la dite élection sera tenue, et procedera aux commissaires de la dite election, une liste dument certifiée des dits propriétaires votants, et la dite election sera precedée d'un avis publié pendant trente jours dans chaque district (ward) de jury de police de la dite paroisse, bien entendu toutefois que dans le cas où la dite ordonnance serait rejetée par une majorité des dits votants proprietaires fonciers et d'esclaves, il sera legal, à toute epoque subsequente, de prendre encore l'opinion des dits votants, de la manière que celle ci-dessus indiquée et à des intervalles qui ne seront pas moindre de six mois

Sect. 3—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Que si le jury de police de la dite paroisse Terrebonne souscrit audit fonds capital en vertu des termes de cet acte, les actions ainsi prises n'appartiendront pas au dit jury de police et ne seront pas administrées par ce corps, mais elles appartiendront aux contribuables qui les auront payées, et le reçu de taxe de chaque contribuable lui donnera droit à un certificat d'action pour un montant égal à celui de la taxe qu'il aura payée, et qui sera transférable sur sa délivrance par la corporation à laquelle il aura été ainsi souscrit, bien entendu toutefois que le dit jury de police aura le droit d'exiger un cautionnement ou bon pour toute somme qu'il jugera convenable, du shérif ou du collecteur qui sera chargé de la collecte de la dite taxe.

Sect. 5—Il est de plus decrété, etc., Que si les personnes payant taxes pour des terres et des esclaves, dans la paroisse de Terrebonne, profitent des dispositions de cet acte, elles seront exemptées des dispositions d'un acte intitulé: « Acte pourvoyant à la souscription par les paroisses et les corporations municipales de cet Etat au fonds capital des corporations entreprenant des travaux d'ameliorations intérieures et pour le paiement et la disposition des fonds ainsi souscrits, » approuvé le 12 mars 1852.

Sect. 6—Il est de plus décrété, etc., Que les taxes qui seront imposées en vertu de cet acte ne seront pas collectées avant que les directeurs de la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest n'aient donné l'assurance au jury de la paroisse de Terrebonne de leur determination de construire une branche du dit chemin à l'embranchement des bayous Terrebonne et Petit Cailloux.

M. Martin—La dernière section du substitut porte que l'acte ne sera pas en force jusqu'à ce que la compagnie ait prouvé d'une manière satisfaisante au jury de police qu'il y aura un embranchement dans la paroisse. Cette disposition a été suggerée par M. Hanne, l'un des directeurs de la compagnie, et elle est, à mon avis, très judicieuse. Elle aura pour effet de creer parmi les habitants de Terrebonne une confiance qui rendra plus facile la perception de la taxe. Ce bill sera avantageux à toutes les parties de la paroisse.

M. Kittridge—Le senateur se refere à une lettre de M. Hanne. M. Hanne a été ici pendant quatre jours. Il a pris connaissance de mon bill et l'a approuvé. Il a été approuvé aussi par toutes les personnes de Terrebonne avec lesquelles j'en ai causé. Le memoire que j'ai presenté à l'appui du bill porte 95 signatures et il n'y a que 135 propriétaires d'esclaves dans la paroisse. Le bill a déjà été amendé de manière à faire justice des objections que l'on a avancées et le substitut est par conséquent inutile. Comme je l'ai dit, 95 propriétaires d'esclaves ont signé le memoire et plusieurs autres qui étaient absents lorsque les signatures ont été recueillies, sont connus pour l'adhésion qu'ils ont manifestée en faveur de ce bill. Il n'y a pas plus de 20 ou 25 proprietaires d'esclaves dans toute la paroisse qui sont opposés au bill Les habitants de Terrebonne ont l'intention de mener un chemin d'embranchement jusqu'à l'embranchement du Petit Caillou, mais c'est à eux de décider de cette question entre eux, au moyen du vote populaire.

M. Martin—L'honorable sénateur se trompe. La lettre à laquelle il est fait allusion ne dit rien au sujet de son bill. Elle demande simplement que la taxe soit étendue aux esclaves. Je ne prétends pas être un avocat, mais je ne crois pas me tromper en disant qu'une preuve écrite est mieux qu'une preuve orale.

M. Kittridge—Le senateur a produit une lettre pour appuyer ses dires. Quel était l'objet de cette lettre? De convertir un membre qui était opposé à la mesure. M. Hanne a été ici pendant plusieurs jours et n'a conseillé aucune modification de mon bill, quoiqu'il en connût parfaitement les dispositions Je le répète. Que les habitants decident comme ils l'entendent du point où devra s'arrêter l'embranchement. Qu'ils en decident quand ils le voudront. Mon bill consiste, tout simplement, dans une reproduction de la loi générale de l'année dernière, modifiée par un amendement relatif à la paroisse Terrebonne.

M. Short—La majorité des propriétaires d'esclaves de la paroisse est-elle en faveur de ce bill?

M. Kittridge—J'ai deja dit que, sur 135, 95 ont signé le memoire, et que d'autres l'auraient signé s'ils avaient été dans la paroisse à l'époque. Il n'y a guère que 20 ou 25 qui soient opposés au bill.

M. Rouge—Sur quel principe le sénateur s'appuie-t-il pour remettre à une majorité d'electeur le droit de decider sur une taxe qui doit peser sur une espèce particulière de propriete.

M. Kittridge—Sur aucun principe, si ce n'est sur celui-ci, que les personnes interessées auront le droit de voter sur la mesure. Mais je rappellerai au senateur la loi de l'année dernière.

M. Palfrey—Je fais la motion que le bill et le substitut soient tous deux déposés sur le bureau. Comme je compte voter contre le bill, si ma motion était perdue, je désire definir clairement et simplement mes vues sur l'effet de cet acte rapproché des lois qui existent déjà sur la même matière. Je ne désire prendre parti ni d'un coté ni d'un autre dans le débat qui s'élève entre les senateurs de l'Assomption: Je considère que c'est une querelle de famille dans laquelle je n'ai rien à voir. Mes remarques seront plus générales et porteront sur quelques questions qui touchent collatéralement au bill.

Je suis opposé aux taxes municipales et paroissiales, imposées dans le but de former un fonds capital pour des entreprises particulières, bien que celles-ci aient pour objet des travaux d'utilité publique. Je voterai donc contre tout bill ayant le caractère de celui qui est en ce moment devant le Sénat. Je regarde comme inconstitutionnelles ces contributions forcées, prélevées dans le but de créer un capital de l'espèce dont il s'agit. Je les considère non seulement comme inconstitutionnelles, mais comme inégales, oppressives et injustes. Je ferai autant que n'importe quel sénateur, autant que la sagesse et la prudence me le permettront, pour mettre en pratique les dispositions de la Constitution qui autorise l'Etat à prêter son aide pui aux Compagnies ou Associations formées exclusivement dans le but d'executer des travaux d'ameliorations intérieures ; parce que la Constitution le dit d une manière positive, mais, comme je l'ai dit déjà, des contributions arrachées aux particuliers, qu'ils y consentent ou n'y consentent pas, n'eusent jamais été approuvées par moi et ne le seront jamais.

Digitized by Google

J'ai dit que je regarde les lois de cette nature comme inconstitutionnelles. Je dirai en quelques mots les motifs sur lesquels s'appuie cette opinion. En se reportant à l'article 105 de la Constitution, on trouve la disposition suivante : «Nulle atteinte ne sera portée aux droits acquis, si ce n'est pour des objets d'interêt public, et moyennant une juste indemnité préalable.» Eh bien ! monsieur le président, permettez-moi d'appeler votre attention sur le resultat pratique de la loi qui impose une taxe partielle, et force ainsi les particuliers à prendre des actions dans des Compagnies individuelles. Je ne m'arrêterai pas pour le moment à l'énormité du principe en lui-même, je viens directement à ce qui doit arriver après que la taxe aura été imposée. La loi déclare que des certificats de la Compagnie seront remis aux contribuables, pour un montant égal à la taxe par eux payée. Il se rencontrera certainement des cas où l'individu taxé sera incapable de payer la taxe, parce qu'elle doit nécessairement être très onéreuse. Il en sera ainsi probablement des mineurs dont les biens ne sont pas en général administrés avec le même soin et la même prudence que les autres biens.

J'en dirai autant de ceux dont les terres sont comparativement dépourvues des accessoires nécessaires à la production d'un revenu; par nécessaire j'entends les bestiaux, les esclaves et les autres objets nécessaires pour exploiter avec fruit une habitation. Il y a un grand nombre de propriétaires dans ce cas. Si les personnes dont j'ai parlé ne paient pas la taxe, la conséquence sera que la propriété taxée sera saisie et vendue par le collecteur des taxes. Voilà, monsieur le president, des droits acquis auxquels il est porté atteinte ! Et pourquoi ? Pour que le fonds capital d'une entreprise privée soit forme; une entreprise qui n'est pas publique, sur laquelle l'Etat n'exerce pas de contrôle, un association d'individus, changeant et se renouvelant de jour en jour au moyen du transfert des actions. Je reconnais, monsieur, que ces chemins de fer sont des travaux d'utilité publique, c'est à dire qu'ils sont utiles au public. Mais il y a un grand nombre d'autres entreprises industrielles qui ne le sont pas moins. Les banques, par exemple, lorsqu'elles sont convenablement organisées, sont considérées par quelques-uns d'entre-nous comme aussi utiles. Eh bien ! que diraient quelques sénateurs qui me sont opposés si on proposait une loi ayant pour objet de forcer les particuliers à contribuer à la formation du fonds capital d'une banque ? Le principe est le même dans les deux cas.

J'arrive à la question de l'indemnité exigee par la constitution. En quoi consiste cette indemnité, sous l'empire de nos lois. La propriété est vendue, les droits acquis ont reçu une atteinte mortelle, et l'indemnité consiste en un certificat de la compagnie pour le montant de la taxe [quand peut-être les actions sont de beaucoup au-dessous du pair dans le marché] et en une somme d'argent pour le reste. Est-ce la une juste indemnité, même en supposant que le prix de la vente atteigne la valeur réelle de la propriété, (ce qui n'est pas probable ; il est a présumer au contraire qu'elle se vendra à perte ?) Ces certificats d'actions sont-ils une monnaie courante qu'un créancier soit tenu d'accepter en paiement de sa dette! La Constitution des Etats-Unis connait-elle d'autre monnaie dont l'acceptation soit forcée, que l'or et l'argent ? Les hommes dont les droits auront ainsi été foulés aux pieds seront-ils réduits au silence, après qu'on leur aura offert en paiement des certificats d'actions dépréciées ? Je le demande, est-ce là une indemnité pleine, entière ? Est-ce une indemnité payée au préalable ? Je reconnais que ces entreprises doivent faire du bien, beaucoup de bien, et je suis disposé à souscrire individuellement au fonds capital de ces entreprises. Je suis aussi disposé, comme membre du Sénat, à faire que l'Etat leur donne tout l'appui que permettent la Constitution et la sagesse ; mais je ne puis oublier le respect que je dois à la Constitution, telle que je la comprends et telle que je la comprendrai jusqu'à ce que l'interprétation qui en aura été donnée par les tribunaux du pays m'aura convaincu de mon erreur Je ne puis fouler aux pieds ce que je considère être les principes immuables de la vérité et de la justice. Je sais, monsieur le président, que je soutiens une opinion qui n'est pas l'opinion populaire. La paroisse que j'ai l'honneur de représenter a voté en faveur d'une taxe pour un chemin de fer. Mais un grand nombre de propriétaires, représentant de grands intérêts terriens dans la paroisse, n'ont pu voter sur cette question : je ne veux pas parler des femmes, des mineurs absents ; et cette dernière consideration jointe à l'invincible repugnance que j'ai à faire plier mes opinions, mes scrupules constitutionnels, a l'expression erronnée, capricieuse d'une opinion publique manifestée d'une manière imparfaite, pour ne rien dire de plus ; ces différents motifs me decident, comme je l'ai dit au début, à voter contre toute loi de cette nature.

M. Kittridge.—Je ne ferai qu'une observation pour répondre à mon collègue. Aucun de ces travaux d'amelioration ne peut avoir lieu avant d'avoir été decidé par la majorité. La Législature autorise les travaux d'ameliorations intérieures. Nous sommes amenés inévitablement a cette conclusion que si la Legislature peut, par un vote de la majorite, ordonner ces travaux, les paroisses devraient avoir le droit de s'imposer elles-mêmes par un vote de la majorite. L'argument est sans réplique. Personne ici ne le niera.

M. Wickliffe.—Je demande le renvoi de la question.

M. Kittridge.—Je m'y oppose.

M. Wickliffe.—Alors je demanderai l'application des réglements, qui defendent à un sénateur de parler plus de deux fois sur la même question.

M. Martin—J'espère que le sénateur ne demandera pas pour moi l'application de ce règlement. Je ne connais personne qui se donne les coudées plus franches à cet égard que le Senateur d'Ouest-Feliciana.

Mon collègue dit, que le principe que la majorité a le droit d'imposer une taxe, ne peut pas être mis en question. Je ne désire pas traiter à fond la question constitutionnelle. Je ne suis pas un avocat de droit constitutionbel, comme il paraît l'être. Aux termes de mon substitut, il n'y a que les parties intéressées qui aient le droit de voter. Les propriétaires d'esclaves désirent que la question soit soumise à eux seuls. Je tiens ce fait de M. J. J. Hanna. Il était ici il y a quelques jours, et est retourné dans sa paroisse pour recueillir des signatures pour le memoire dont parle mon collègue. Le mémoire ne fait nullement mention de son bill. Il y a quelques jours, mon collègue disait qu'il était un des proprietaires de la paroisse Terrebonne. Je ne possède pas de propriété dans cette partie de l'Etat, mais je connais assez bien la localité. La population de la région à travers laquelle l'embranchement doit passer est très dense, et cet embranchement produirait un bois considérable.

M. Kittridge.—J'ai vu presque tout le monde dans la paroisse et je sais que mon bill est ce que désire la population.

M. Martin.—L'objet du bill est de soumettre la question à tous les electeurs de la paroisse. Les proprietaires d'esclaves désirent qu'elle ne le soit qu'à eux-mêmes. Le sénateur dit qu'il a vu tout le monde. Je ne le crois pas. Voilà ce que je dis, qu'il en fasse ce qu'il voudra.

M. Kittridge.—Le bill ne propose qu'un objet, c'est que ceux qui doivent porter le fardeau de la taxe puissent voter. Je fais la motion de déposer le substitut sur le bureau.

M. Martin.—Mon substitut satisfait complétement au vœu de la population de Terrebonne. C'est pour ainsi dire une reproduction littérale de la loi de 1852 qui déclare qu'il n'y aura que les contribuables qui auront le droit de voter. C'est là ce que demandait M. Hanna, qui est parti d'ici pour faire signer le mémoire. Mon collègue le sait. Il n'oserait le nier. S'il le nie, je pourrai prouver qu'il le sait.

[Ici le debat prend une tournure entièrement personnelle.]

Le substitut est déposé sur le bureau.

M. Hodge.—Avant que la question soit mise aux voix, je desire appeler l'attention de la Chambre sur ce fait que le bill a pour but de changer une loi générale de l'Etat quant à son application à des paroisses particulières. Le bill a pour objet, en premier lieu, de changer la loi générale, puis déclare que cette modification ne s'appliquera qu'à la paroisse Terrebonne.

Digitized by Google

Si le bill doit porter atteinte à la loi générale. je le combattrai, et je crois qu'il doit avoir cet effet. Je crois qu'aucune autre paroisse n'a réclamé l'adoption d'une loi semblable à celle-ci. Mes commettants ne la demandent pas. Ils connaissent les dangers qui pourraient en résulter. Si le sénateur présente un bill qui accorde simplement aux habitans de Terrebonne le droit de se taxer pour certains objets déterminés, je ne m'y oppose point, mais tel n'est pas son bill. Celui qu'il propose a pour but de changer la loi générale et de ne faire porter la modification que sur la paroisse de Terrebonne. Le sénateur arriverait tout aussi bien à son but en rédigeant un bill de quelques lignes par lequel les citoyens seraient autorisés à prendre des actions qu'ils paieraient au moyen de taxes sur leurs terres et leurs esclaves. Je ne veux pas que mes commettants puisse penser que je voudrais commettre la moindre violation à la Constitution.

M. Short.—Si jamais la question se présente pour ma paroisse, je serai probablement de la même opinion que le sénateur, attendu que, dans mon opinion, ce bill va au-delà des pouvoirs de la Législature, mais le bill ne change pas, comme il le croit, la loi générale, si ce n'est en ce qui concerne la paroisse de Terrebonne. Si les habitans de cette paroisse désirent que leurs terres, leurs esclaves, soient taxés, libre à eux. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, si jamais la question est soulevée quant à ma paroisse, je combattrai ce principe. Je ne pense pas que nous ayons le droit de forcer le peuple à prendre des actions dans aucune entreprise particulière.

M. Hodge.—Il est dit au commencement du bill que c'est un amendement à la loi de 1852. Si cette déclaration est sans objet, c'est une mauvaise rédaction. Si le sénateur désire en restreindre l'effet à la paroisse de Terrebonne, qu'il rédige un bill qui ne fasse aucune mention de la loi générale. Mais ce bill déclare qu'il est destiné à amender la loi générale, et, conséquemment, il aura un effet plus étendu que le senateur ne se le propose, s'il a le dessein que cet acte ne s'applique qu'à la paroisse de Terrebonne, la rédaction du bill est incorrecte.

M. Short.—L'amendement ne s'applique qu'à la paroisse de Terrebonne. Le bill peut être défectueux dans sa rédaction, mais je n'en puis mais. Je n'y ai aucune part. Je suis disposé à le prendre tel quel.

Le bill est adopté.

BANQUE DES ARTISANS ET DES MARCHANDS.

Le président appelle l'attention du sénat sur le fait qu'un acte intitulé : « Acte pour prolonger la charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands » avait été mis à l'ordre spécial du jour pour hier, mais que le Sénat ne s'étant pas trouvé en quorum ce jour, l'acte par conséquent, ne pouvait être pris en considération

Dans le manque d'autorités pour le guider dans sa décision, le président décide que quand un acte a été mis à l'ordre pour tel jour et que ce jour passe sans que l'acte ait été pris en considération, le dit acte doit prendre sa place parmi les autres actes dans l'ordre suivant le nombre.

M. Hodge—Ce n'est que justice que, quand un bill doit arriver à son tour de rôle, s'il n'y a pas de séance du Sénat le jour pour lequel le bill a été fixé, celui-ci ne doit pas pour cela perdre son tour de rôle. Je ferai la proposition que le bill soit pris en considération, afin d'établir un précédent pour l'avenir. De cette manière il sera entendu que lorsque des bills sont à l'ordre spécial du jour pour une séance particulière, et que cette séance n'a pas lieu, ils devront arriver les premiers à la prochaine séance.

M. McCay—Le seul moyen par lequel le sénateur puisse arriver à son but, c'est de demander une suspension des règlements ou d'en appeler de la décision de la Chambre. Le sénateur veut faire décider par une simple majorité, qu'un bill sera pris en considération quand un vote des deux tiers est nécessaire pour suspendre le règlement. Le sénateur veut que le Sénat agisse comme sous l'empire d'un nouveau règlement. Je veux que la règle soit établie, soit écrite, avant que je consente à la reconnaître. J'ai pris la peine de m'enquérir de la manière dont les questions semblables étaient décidées dans l'autre Chambre. L'Orateur de la Chambre m'a dit que dans ce cas, le bill doit être laissé de côté comme si on n'était pas arrivé jusqu'à lui D'après l'argument du sénateur, comme ce n'est pas par la faute des partisans du bill s'il n'a pas été pris en considération, il devrait revenir à l'ordre par préférence un autre jour. L'on m'a dit qu'au Sénat, à la dernière session, la règle uniformément observée était celle qui existe dans l'autre Chambre.

M. Wickliffe—Qui dit qu'il en était ainsi ?

M. McCay—M. Sandidge, qui était alors membre du Sénat.

M. Martin—C'est une infraction aux règles parlementaires, que d'invoquer les règles et coutumes de l'autre Chambre. Nous avons notre propre règlement auquel nous devons nous tenir. C'est par lui, et non par celui de la Chambre, que nous devons être gouvernés.

M. McCay—Ce n'est pas là tout ce qui peut nous servir de règle. Quand il n'y a pas de précédent, et que nous trouvons une coutume uniformément établie dans l'autre branche de la Législature, cette coutume doit être de quelque poids pour nous, surtout lorsque le Président déclare qu'il ne connait aucun précédent qui puisse le guider.

M. Hodge—J'ai compris que le Président désirerait avoir l'opinion du Sénat sur cette question. J'aimerais à la connaître moi-même et montrer au sénateur que je puis voir d'une manière indépendante, et sans manquer au respect qui est dû au Président. Conséquemment, j'en appelle de la décision de la Chambre.

M. Derbès—Je crois que nous avons un précédent par devers nous. Je me rappelle parfaitement que lorsque le bill des amendemens à apporter à la charte de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans était devant le Sénat, il a été mis à l'ordre le jour où le gouverneur Johnson est mort. Je fus forcé de demander une suspension des règlements pour pouvoir amener le bill devant le Sénat. La suspension fut refusée, et la discussion du bill dut être fixée de nouveau.

M Hodge—Le sénateur reconnaîtra qu'en cette occasion cette question ne soulèva point de discussion. Conséquemment il n'y eut point de décision, et, conséquemment encore, le précédent se réduit à rien.

La question ayant été mise aux voix, la décision du president est maintenue.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion que le bill de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, soit mis à l'ordre du jour pour la séance de demain.

Le Président—La motion, pour être entendu, a besoin d'une suspension des règlements, qui permette que le bill arrive devant le Sénat. Il ne peut être fixé avant qu'il soit devant le Sénat.

M. Martin—Une simple majorité suffit pour mettre un bill à l'ordre du jour.

M. Monton—Le président a déjà décidé qu'une suspension des règlements est nécessaire pour amener le bill devant le Sénat. et une suspension des règlemens exige un vote des deux tiers. Le Sénat a maintenu la décision de la Chambre, et cependant on insiste encore pour que le bill soit pris en considération, contrairement aux règlements.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de suspendre le règlement.

La motion est perdue.

M. McCay fait la motion que le bill soit mis à l'ordre du jour spécial pour mercredi prochain.

M. Wickliffe—Lorsque le bill viendra devant le Sénat, je ferai quelques observations. La motion du sénateur aura pour effet d'empêcher le Sénat de statuer d'aucune manière sur le bill, et par conséquent je voterai contre cette motion.

La motion de M. McCay est mise aux voix.

Lorsqu'on vient au nom de M. Hodge, celui-ci dit ; Je demande que le Sénat me dispense de voter. Je considère que la motion n'est pas sérieuse. Le sénateur qui l'a faite sait que l'effet de cette motion serait de tuer le bill dans l'objet qu'il se propose.

La motion est rejetée.

M. Rinehart, assistant secretaire de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que la Chambre refuse d'abandonner ses amendements à un acte intitulé « Acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts judiciaires.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion que le président nomme un comité de conférence pour se réunir à un comité semblable de la Chambre.

Cette motion est adoptée.

MM. Wickliffe, Burthe et McCay sont nommés de ce comité par le président.

Le secrétaire en informe la Chambre.

Digitized by Google

un examen complet des canaux de la Vieille Rivière entre l'embouchure de la Rivière Rouge et le Mississipi et ceux de Grande Pointe sur la Rivière Rouge.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte pour incorporer la ville de Mandeville. »

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de Vicksburg, Shreveport et du Texas.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

Acte pour autoriser Archibald Boiron et Mary Nunfay, sa femme, à adopter un enfant nommé Mary Lu-Résolution requérant l'ingénieur de l'Etat de faire cy Boiron.

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par les collecteurs de taxes.

Acte pour dispenser de la réinscription des hypothèques données en faveur des commissaires des legs Poydras aux paroisses de Ouest Bâton Rouge et de Pointe Coupée.

Résolution conjointe,

Relative à l'asyle des sourds-muets et aveugles.

Actepour pourvoir et pour régler le bureau de l'avocat général.

Acte pour autoriser l'achat de 175 copies de l'ouvrage d'Eyma intitulé « Lois de la Louisiane sur l'insolvabilité. »

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé :

Acte relatif à l'hôpital de charité, approuvé le 22 mars 1850

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du Télégraphe de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de la Rivière Rouge et du Texas.

PREMIERE LECTURE.

Le Sénat prend alors en considération pour leur première lecture les actes suivants:

Acte pour pourvoir au transfert de certains documens publics de la paroisse de Jefferson à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Substitut à un acte pour réunir les bureaux de Recorder des Hypothèques et de Recorder de Paroisse dans la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour donner certains pouvoirs au Maire de la ville de Port Hudson.

Acte pour améliorer Big Creek.

Acte pour régler l'imposition de paroisse dans la paroisse Concordia.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte pour incorporer la ville de Bastrop dans la paroisse de Morehouse.

Acte pour empêcher les corporations municipales dans cet Etat de prélever une taxe sur des personnes vendant des articles manufacturés par elles-mêmes dans les limites de cet Etat.

Substitut à un acte pour empêcher le Conseil Municipal de la Nouvelle-Orléans d'imposer une taxe aux personnes vendant des articles manufacturés par elles-mêmes.

Acte pour pouvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par les collecteurs de taxes de paroisse.

Acte pour diviser la paroisse de Concordia en de nouveaux districts du juri de police.

Acte pour confirmer les titres de John L. Davis, et David Voorhies à certaines terres des écoles.

Acte pour rappeler certaines sections d'un acte intitulé :

Acte pour prescrire les devoirs des notaires publics dans la paroisse d'Orléans, en passant des actes de vente, de donations et d'hypothèques, approuvé le 21 mars 1850.

Résolution conjointe offrant les remercîments de l'Assemblée Generale au capitaine Ricketts de l'artillerie des Etats-Unis pour avoir tiré un salut en l'honneur des restes mortels de l'ex-gouverneur Johnson.

Acte pour émanciper Alex. C. Green.

Acte pour changer le nom de George Ross, de la paroisse Plaquemines.

Résolution requérant l'ingénieur de l'Etat de faire nettoyer les bayous Darbon et Corney pour compléter les améliorations pour la navigation des dits bayous.

Acte pour autoriser la nomination d'un notaire public dans et pour la paroisse Union.

Resolution pour venir au secours de l'Hôpital de Charité.

Acte pour prendre l'opinion des votans qualifiés de la ville de Port Hudson sur la question d'abolir les corporations et pour les abolir.

Acte pour permettre au juri de police de la paroisse de Concordia d'augmenter ses séances.

Acte pour abolir le bureau des recorders des hypothèques dans la paroisse de Jefferson et servant de substitut à un acte intitulé « Acte pour réunir les bureaux de recorder des hypothèques et de recorder de paroisse dans la paroisse de Jefferson.

DEUXIEME LECTURE.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte pour prevenir plus efficacement les esclaves d'obtenir des liqueurs spiritueuses, sans le consentement de leurs maîtres.

Sur motion, cet acte est déposé indéfiniment sur le bureau.

Acte pour venir au secours de Pierre Onesime Broussard, ex-surintendant de la paroisse Vermillon et amendant un acte pour pourvoir à la manière par laquelle les surintendants de paroisse et leurs sécurités seront relevés de leurs responsabilités, approuvé le 18 mars 1852.

Un substitut ayant été adopté par la Chambre en place du dit acte, sur motion de M. Mouton, le Sénat y donne aussi son concours.

Le bill intitulé: « Acte pour autoriser les planteurs à donner en nantissement la récolte sur pied, est lu pour la troisième fois.

M. Martin—Je crois que ce bill n'est pas réclamé par les habitans. Je suis sûr que le besoin ne s'en fait pas sentir dans la paroisse que je représente. Mon avis est qu'il a été suggéré par quelque ingénieur ou quelque avocat de la Nouvelle-Orleans qui, faisant affaire avec quelque fripon de la campagne, a désiré l'avoir à merci, pieds et poings liés. Lorsque le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey) dit qu'il émane de planteurs, il dit une chose sur laquelle il ne sait rien.

M. Lacey—Mais qui donc a si bien renseigné le sénateur. Ce bill a été présenté par son collègue qui représente le même District et avec certainement autant d'habileté que lui. Je ne sais pas d'où le bill est émané, mais j'ai mes opinions personnelles sur cette question.

« Un bill pour empêcher d'une manière plus efficace la vente de liqueurs fortes aux esclaves, » est pris en considération.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion d'adopter le rapport du comité judiciaire qui est défavorable à la loi.

M. Lacey—Je n'attache pas grande importance à l'adoption de cette loi. Elle a été présentée à la requête de l'avocat-général, qui, par suite de quelques décisions recentes des Cours, a pensé que la loi devait être plus sévère. Il a pensé que le mot « écrite » devait être inseré après le mot « permission, » et qu'aucune preuve quelque forte qu'elle soit, ne devrait remplacer la permission écrite du propriétaire.

M. Hodge—Je demanderai au sénateur si le comité n'a pas été unanimement d'opinion que la personne qui a redigé le bill ne connaissait pas un mot de la loi de 1852.

M. Lacey—Le sénateur voudrait faire croire qu'il a l'omniscience, mais elle n'existe que dans sa vanité. Je dois dire que dans le comité nous avions entièrement oublié l'acte de 1852 jusqu'au moment où elle nous a été rappelée.

M. Hodge—Je n'étais pas présent au moment où le bill a été pris en considération par le comité, mais lorsque j'arrivai et que j'appris de quoi il s'agissait, je fis voir la loi au comité qui se tint immédiatement pour satisfait. Je ne désire rien dire d'offensant pour l'avocat-général, ou qui que ce soit, et je ne prétends à aucun mérite particulier pour mes amis et pour moi.

M. Lacey—Il doit y avoir quelqu'erreur. Je suis disposé à admettre qu'en ce qui concerne la permission écrite la loi de 1852 est suffisante; mais, quant à la défense de remplacer la permission écrite par aucune autre preuve, je la crois défectueuse.

M. Wickliffe—Je dois faire observer que je ne savais pas que ce bill avait été présenté à la suggestion de l'avocat-général, et peut m'importe qu'il en soit ainsi. Je désire que le sénateur comprenne que quand il voudra avoir mon adhésion à un bill qu'il présentera il pourra se dispenser d'y attacher un titre, qui annonce la source dont il émane.

Digitized by Google

M. Hodge—Je demanderai au Sénateur de Madison (M. Short) si le comité a décidé oui ou non, que la personne qui avait rédigé le bill ignorait la loi de 1852.

M. Short—Le comité est arrivé à la conclusion que le bill était superflu attendu que le bill qu'il se proposait avait déjà été atteint par la loi de 1852. (M. Short lit cette loi.)

M. Kittridge ayant voté avec la majorité pour supporter la décision du président sur le sujet de replacer l'acte intitulé « Acte pour prolonger la charte de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands » dans son ordre sur le calendrier, il demande la reconsidération du vote.

M. Derbès demande l'appel nominal.

MM Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent pour—12 voix.

MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans, Kemp, Lacoste, Lacey, Mc Cay et Mouton votent contre—9 voix.

Par conséquent la motion de reconsidér r prévaut.

Sur motion de M. Derbès d'ajourner, M. Wickliffe demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Boatner, Derbès, Evans, Kemp, Lacoste et Mouton votent pour—6 voix.

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—12 voix.

Par conséquent la motion est rejetée.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe demandant l'appel de la Chambre les sénateurs suivants repondent à leurs noms.

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe—13 voix.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, le sergent d'armes est requis de ramener les sénateurs absents.

Après quelques temps le sergent d'armes fait son rapport par écrit comme suit:

Conformément aux ordres du président du Sénat, j'ai cherché et n'ai pu trouver les sénateurs qui se sont absentés.

Signé BERLIN CHILDRESS.
Sergent-d'Armes.

Bâton-Rouge, 6 avril, 1853.

M. Wickliffe offre alors la resolution suivante :

Résolu, que le président du Senat lance des warrans pour arrêter les senateurs qui se sont absentés du senat sans congé ce jour.

M. Mouton—Je desire savoir si le président à un pareil droit.

M. Wickliffe—Le pouvoir est dans la Constitution elle-même. Une minorité peut ajourner de jour en jour et forcer les membres absents de se rendre à la séance.

M. Hodge—Le droit de forcer les membres à assister implique le droit de lancer des warrants.

M. Mouton—Pouvons-nous le faire sans qu'il y ait une loi passée à cet effet?

La disposition de la Constitution est claire et ne peut laisser de doute, s'il y a une loi qui permette de lancer des warrants. Nous avons le droit d'adopter une loi pareille, mais je soutiens que dans l'absence d'une pareille loi, nous ne pouvons exercer ce pouvoir.

La question est mise aux voix.

Lorsque le nom de M. Hodge arrive, il dit: je vote contre la résolution parce qu'il n'y a aucune loi qui nous autorise à lancer des warrants contre les membres absents. Si une pareille loi existait, je conviens que nous aurions le pouvoir.

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor & Wickliffe votent pour—12 voix.

Messieurs Mouton et Patterson votent contre—2 voix.

Le président décide que vu le manque de lois l'autorisant de lancer des warrants, il ne peut le faire.

M. Hodge—Je suis étonné de la conduite tenue par certains Sénateurs et particulièrement par le Sénateur qui a soulevé l'objection. Je fais la motion de faire publier les noms de tous les Sénateurs qui ont quitte leurs sièges.

M. Mouton—Je me suis absenté sans permission et j'en ferai autant si je le jugeais convenable.

M. Wickliffe—Il s'agit d'une question d'ordre. J'aime mieux ne rien entendre que d'entendre un discours.

M. Lewis fait la motion d'ajourner.

M. Hodge—J'appuie la motion, parce que je ne vois aucune probabilité que nous puissions obtenir un quorum, et je désire que ce fait soit distinctement dans le journal de la séance.

La motion est rejetée.

M. Mouton—Je ne vois pas l'utilité de rester ici plus longtemps. Le sergent d'armes a répété qu'il ne peut trouver les membres absents, mais si même il les avait trouvés, il ne pourrait les forcer à se rendre à leurs places. Ils ne doivent compte de leur conduite qu'à leurs commettants. Il n'y a aucune loi qui les force à rester à leur place s'ils jugent à propos de la quitter. Le sergent-d'armes ne pourrait en ramener aucun sans faire usage de la force physique.

Motion est faite d'ajourner.

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nichols, Palfrey, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—10 voix.

Par conséquent la motion est rejetée.

A 3 heures le Sénat s'ajourne jusqu'à demain à 9 heures A. M.

JEUDI, 7 avril.

Le journal de la séance d'hier ayant été lu, M. Martin fait observer qu'il y avait une erreur dans le procès-verbal, où il était dit qu'il y avait un appel de la décision du président. Il n'y a pas eu d'appel. Il y a eu simplement une expression des vues du Senat conformes à la décision du président.

M. Mouton—Le senateur se trompe. Il y a eu un appel de la décision du président.

M. Hodge—Je crois pouvoir expliquer la chose. Le président avait quelque doute relativement à la décision qu'il devait prendre, attendu qu'il n'y avait aucun précédent pour le guider. Il désira avoir le sentiment de la Chambre. Mais il n'y avait aucun moyen d'arriver à avoir le sentiment de la Chambre, si ce n'est par un appel au président. C'est dans ce but que l'appel de la décision de la Chambre a eu lieu. Le journal est correctement rédigé, mais les rapports des débats montreront comment les choses se sont passées.

M. Martin introduit la résolution suivante qui est lue :

Attendu que l'article 19 de la Constitution déclare que chaque Chambre de l'assemblée générale devra être en quorum pour procéder à ses travaux, une majorité des membres de chaque Chambre constituera le quorum. S'il n'y a qu'une minorité présente, elle pourra s'ajourner de jour en jour et sera autorisée par la loi à contraindre les absents de se rendre aux séances.

Et attendu qu'hier le président a décidé qu'aucun warrant ne serait lancé pour arrêter les membres du Sénat qui s'étaient absentés sans permission du Sénat, se basant sur ce qu'il n'y avait pas de lois autorisant l'émission de tels warrants—c'est pourquoi il est résolu que le comité judiciaire est et demeure autorisé à préparer et présenter au Sénat le plus tôt possible, un acte pour forcer les membres absents sans autorisation à se rendre aux séances.

M. Martin—La nécessité d'adopter cette résolution est évidente. Quand il y a peu de membres, une petite fraction peut empêcher la marche des affaires. Il est par conséquent nécessaire qu'il y ait une loi pour forcer les membres absents à se présenter, attendu qu'un doute existe dans l'esprit du président relativement au droit du président d'agir sans autorisation. Je ne pense pas que son opinion soit bien fondée, mais afin qu'il ne puisse y avoir de doutes sur cette question, nous devrions recommander au comité de rapporter un bill à ce sujet.

BILL DES TERRES MARECAGEUSES.

Le Sénat prend en considération un acte intitulé :

Acte pour canaliser et dessécher les terres marécageuses et inondées données à l'Etat de la Louisiane par un Acte du Congrès intitulé :

Acte pour aider l'Etat de la Louisiane dans le dessèchement des terres marécageuses situées dans le dit Etat, approuvé le 2 mars 1849.

[La Chambre avait refusé son concours à l'amendement du Sénat, qui réduisait les appointements des Ingénieurs de $3,000 à $2,000.]

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe—L'amendement du Sénat réduisait les appointements des ingénieurs de $3,000 à $2,000 par an. J'exprimai, ainsi que d'autres membres, des doutes sur la possibilité de se procurer des hommes compétents pour $2,000. Des ingénieurs capables ne voudraient pas se mettre au service de l'Etat pour $2,000, tandis qu'ils peuvent aisément gagner ailleurs $3,000 ou $4,000. La Chambre a refusé son concours à l'amendement du Sénat. Elle pense que $3,000 ne sont qu'une rétribution équitable des charges à remplir. Je connais peu d'hommes compétents qui ne puissent gagner cette somme, et je voterai pour ce chiffre au moins.

M. Hodge.—Combien reçoit l'ingénieur de l'Etat ?

M. Wickliffe.—Trois mille dollars.

M. Hodge.—Et il est nommé pour l'Etat en général? Je voterai contre $3,000.

M. Short.—Les charges que le présent acte impose aux ingénieurs, seront beaucoup plus lourdes que ne l'ont jamais été celles de l'ingénieur de l'Etat. Mon but en proposant $3,000 d'appointemens, est de voir un de ces ingénieurs dans ma section, où nous n'en avons jamais eu, et je veux payer à un prix raisonnable les services rendus.

Sur motion de s'accorder avec l'amendement de la Chambre, remettant la somme de $3,000, ainsi que le portait la 9me section de l'acte, et qui avait été reduite à $2,000 par l'amendement du Sénat, L'appel nominal est demandé.

MM. Boatner, Burthe, Kittridge, McCay, Patterson, Short, Taylor et Wickliffe votent pour — 8 voix.

Et MM. Clinton, Derbes, Hodje, Lacoste, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey et Slack, votent contre,—11 voix.

Par conséquent, le Sénat refuse de remettre $3,000 et maintient son amendement.

M. Derbes fait la motion de reconsidérer le vote qui vient d'être donné.

M. Hodge.—Je ne puis approuver la motion de reconsidération J'ai voté contre l'acte lorsqu'il était devant le Sénat ; parce que je croyais les appointemens demandés beaucoup trop élevés. Je ne conçois pas que des sénateurs puissent disposer ainsi de l'argent de l'Etat, tandis qu'ils savent que le peuple ne veut plus de gros appointements, et son désir mérite bien, je crois, quelque considération.

Pendant la dernière session de la Législature tous les appointemens subirent une réduction importante. Un comité spécial fut nommé pour examiner s'il n'était pas convenable de réduire les appointemens et recommander les réductions qui lui paraîtraient judicieuses. Ce comité établit en principe que les émolumens élevés ont pour résultat de faire rechercher les fonctions publiques, moins à cause du désir qu'ont ceux qui y aspirent, d'occuper une position honorable ou d'être utiles à leur pays, que pour les bénéfices pécuniaires que ces emplois leur procurent. [Il lit le rapport du comité.]

Il me semble que cette expression de l'opinion du comité spécial est digne de l'attention des sénateurs et devrait les faire réfléchir avant d'agir. Le bill dont s'occupe en ce moment le Sénat, propose de faire exactement ce que le comité recommandait de ne pas faire. Il propose un grand nombre de fonctionnaires, de forts appointemens et par conséquent, une forte augmentation des dépenses de l'Etat. Il y a d'abord trois commissaires à $3,000 chacun et un certain nombre d'employés inférieurs. Je n'ai pas fait le cacul de leur nombre, mais il doit être considérable et leurs appointements doivent s'élever en moyenne à $100. Je l'ai dit déjà, je suis opposé aux gros appointemens. Ils ne nous assurent pas les meilleurs fonctionnaires, les hommes les plus dignes et les plus capables. Ils ne servent au contraire qu'à stimuler la cupidité ; à séduire des intrigants ou des hommes qui n'ont d'autre souci que de jouir des émolumens et honoraires attachés aux fonctions publiques. Notre propre Etat nous en donne un exemple: la Louisiane qui paye des appointemens beaucoup plus élevés que ceux d'aucun autre Etat, n'a pas réussi à s'assurer les services des plus grands talents.

Quel effet aura ce bill ? De créer de nouveaux employés par douzaines, des consommateurs au lieu de producteurs, des hommes qui, au lieu d'accroître la richesse de l'Etat par leur travail, vivront d'appointements prélevés sur l'industrie du peuple. Il est vrai qu'ils seront payés sur le fonds des terres marécageuses; mais ce fonds appartient au peuple entier de l'Etat, et nous n'avons pas plus le droit de le gaspiller que s'il provenait des taxes. Quel spectacle s'offre maintenant à nos yeux ! Nous voyons un parti qui s'est toujours vanté de combattre pour l'économie et les réformes ; qui a fait de ces mots son cri de ralliement et qui les a inscrits sur ses bannières dans toutes les processions. Mais dans cette Législature, que précéda une Législature whig véritablement animée de l'esprit d'économie et de réforme, nous voyons ce même parti se livrer aux extravagances les plus outrées. Il crée d'innombrables emplois et il augmente les appointements. Qu'en dira le peuple ? Permettez-moi de vous demander combien vous donnez à nos juges de District. Trois mille cinq cents dollars; et cependant vous leur défendez d'exercer leur profession. Ces ingénieurs et ces commissaires ne seront peut être pas occupés pendant six mois de l'année; pendant le reste du temps il leur est permis de professer leur état, et ils seraient néanmoins aussi bien rétribués que nos juges. Bien des gens trouveront cette somme minime, mais c'est plus que ne gagnent les quatre-vingt-dix-neuf centièmes de nos hommes de loi. C'est être rétribué à raison de huit dollars par jour. Les deux tiers des habitants de la Louisiane en gagnent-ils autant ? On peut arriver à ce chiffre en venant à la Législature et en y remplissant des fonctions que nous avons l'habitude de rétribuer très libéralement. Nos rapporteurs et notre secrétaire gagnent quatorze dollars par jour pendant la session, mais ce sont là de rares exceptions, et d'ailleurs ce sont des personnes qui quittent leurs foyers et sacrifient leurs intérêts particuliers pour servir l'Etat. Mais les fonctionnaires dont il s'agit passeront chez eux six mois de l'année, soit goûtant un doux repos, soit se livrant à d'autres occupations, et il faut cependant qu'ils reçoivent $3,000 par an! Ainsi, nous devrons dépenser pour les appointements d'un petit nombre d'employés, $13,500 par an, ce qui fait 5 ou 6 pour cent sur le capital avec lequel doivent se commencer les opérations. Le fonds se trouvera donc converti en un fonds pour le bénéfice des employés, et les dépenses l'auront bientôt épuisé. Je pense que le bill est contraire au vœu du peuple qui est exprimé dans la Constitution. Nous n'avons aucun droit de nommer trois commissaires quand la Constitution en exige quatre, de même que nous n'avons pas le droit de dépenser follement les fonds publics. Je dis dépenser follement, parce qu'à mon avis c'est l'expression propre. Si les membres du parti oppose persistent à vouloir suivre cette marche, je désire que le peuple sache que le parti qui veut se nommer le parti de l'économie n'est en realité que le parti des extravagances, et que les whigs forment le seul parti des réformes et des diminutions des dépenses.

M. Wickliffe—Le comité auquel l'honorable membre vient de faire allusion était un comité domestique.

M. Hodge—Je vois clairement que le parti qui est maintenant au pouvoir s'efforce d'enlever au peuple, en violation de la Constitution, le droit d'élire ses fonctionnaires pour en gratifier l'exécutif. Jusqu'à présent je n'ai pas encore entendu la réponse à l'argument, que la majorité essaie de retirer du peuple le droit d'élire ses commissaires pour le donner aux membres de l'exécutif, dans le but de faire nommer leurs amis et partisans.

M. Wickliffe—Je crois que l'orateur a émis clairement les motifs pour lesquels il est opposé au bill. C'est parce que le gouverneur est investi du droit de faire les nominations. La dernière Législature a été nommée, la Législature de la réforme et de l'économie, mais ce titre ne lui sera pas accordé longtemps. Le trésorier de l'Etat, qui est un bon whig, lui donne un tout autre nom.

(M. Wickliffe lit un passage du rapport du trésorier.)

Tel est le compte donné par le trésorier whig.

M. Hodge—C'est un honnête homme.

M. Wickliffe—Je le crois aussi et c'est lui qui a donné un nom honnête à la dernière Législature, il l'a baptisée comme elle devait l'être et le peuple dit: Amen!

L'honorable membre prétend que le bill est fait dans le but de donner au gouverneur le droit de faire certaines nominations. Il se trompe. Le bill est fait pour exécuter les provisions de l'acte du Congrès qui accorde les terres marécageuses à l'Etat. J'éprouve du plaisir à soutenir le bill, quoique, comme constituant, je n'y sois pas directement intéresse. Je viens ici pour appuyer le bill. Je cède volontiers ma place à ceux de mes confrères qui ont plus d'expérience et qui sont plus familiers avec la question. Maintenant, où serait le mal si on laissait au gouverneur le soin de faire ces nominations ?

Digitized by Google

M. Hodge—Il en résulterait un très grand inconvénient, comme vous pourrez vous en convaincre en vous rapportant à la Constitution.

M. Wickliffe—Si le gouverneur est un homme capable de faire de bonnes nominations, il n'y aurait pas d'inconvénient. Le parti démocratique a eu confiance dans sa capacité en l'appelant à la charge de gouverneur. Pour ma part je préfère m'en rapporter à son jugement dans une question de cette nature que d'en laisser la décision au peuple. Le sénateur, pas plus que moi, ne s'entend à la science de l'ingénieur. Mais ne sait-il donc pas que pour être ingénieur competent, il faut des études de plusieurs années ? Ne sait-il pas que des ingénieurs capables peuvent se faire $3,000 par an. J'en connais qui gagent jusqu'à $5,000. Cependant l'orateur n'est opposé au bill qui est fait pour exécuter les vues des actes du Congrès, que pour la simple raison que le bill donne au gouverneur le pouvoir de faire les nominations. Je voudrais savoir s'il est dit dans la Constitution que ces fonctionnaires doivent être nommés par le peuple ? Pour ma part, je n'en sais rien. Je le répète, on ne peut pas trouver des ingénieurs compétents pour $2,000 par an.

M. Short.—Les membres qui s'opposent à ce bill se sont tout à fait fourvoyés. Je n'ignore pas que tous les arguments fondés sur des raisons d'économie sont de nature à être favorablement accueillis. Les arguments tirés des bannières et des drapeaux portés en tête des processions politiques sont également fort séduisants. Mais je croyais qu'ils avaient fait leur temps et qu'ils avaient produit tout l'effet qu'on pouvait raisonnablement en attendre. La question est maintenant tout simplement de savoir s'il est possible de trouver des ingénieurs capables pour une somme moindre que celle qu'alloue ce bill ;—de trouver un homme qui veuille remplir la lourde tache que lui impose ce bill, pour moins de $3,000 par an. Le sujet qui nous occupe n'est pas une question d'économie et de réforme. Des discours remplis d'allusions à ces idées, seraient très bien dans des barbecues, dans des assemblées politiques et dans ces processions où l'on deploie ces fameuses petites bannières, mais ils sont tout à fait déplacés en ce moment, pour la simple raison qu'ils n'ont aucun rapport au sujet. La question est celle-ci : Quels appointements devons-nous donner pour trouver un homme honnête, habile et compétent ? Quel somme, enfin, doit être considérée comme une rétribution raisonnable? Quant à ces arguments séduisants, d'économie et de réforme, ils sont absolument étrangers à la question.

Nous n'avons qu'à décider si nous maintiendrons notre amendement ou si nous donnerons notre concours à l'opinion de la chambre.

M. Martin.—J'ai lu une partie de la réprimande que l'ex-trésorier de l'Etat a adressée à la Législature et je la trouve très peu respectueuse. Elle sort tout à fait des limites de ses fonctions et est on ne peut plus déplacée.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il est bon whig, je ne lui conteste pas cette qualité, mais cela ne l'autorise pas à tenir un pareil langage dans son rapport. J'ai un mot à dire sur ce sujet. Ce monsieur dit que le Comité des Economies et des Réformes était un Comité Démocratique. Eh bien, messieurs, M. Baker, un whig, présenta contre les compensations extraordinaires, une résolution à laquelle le trésorier s'opposa de toutes ses forces.

M. Wickliffe.—La résolution n'a-t-elle pas été rappelée à la demande d'un bon whig ?

M. Martin.—Je l'ignore.

M. Wickliffe.—Le journal sera mieux informé.

M. Martin.—Dans ce cas c'était à la dernière séance de la session, lorsque les démocrates étaient en majorité et tandis que M. Burthe et d'autres étaient absents de la salle, occupés à enrôler des billis.

C'est alors que M. Phillips présenta une résolution proposant de payer à M. Hamilton, commis aux enrôlements, une compensation extraordinaire de $100. M. Phillips était démocrate et M. Hamilton whig. Peut-être M. Phillips voulait se concilier ce monsieur, qui, disait-on avait quelque influence dans son district. Cinq whigs et quatre démocrates votèrent affirmativement et trois whigs et cinq démocrates negativement. MM. Burthe et Gardère n'occupaient pas leurs siéges; mais sans eux, il y avait précisément 17 membres présents et votants, sur lesquels il y avait huit whigs et neuf democrates ; d'où il résulte que les démocrates étaient en majorité et eussent pu faire prévaloir leur idées dans le Sénat.

M. Wickliffe.—Je n'ai pas fait allusion aux compensations extraordinaires, mais je suis bien aise que l'honorable membre l'ait fait, je suis charmé qu'il ait fait mention de ces documents parce qu'ils prouveront que les démocrates n'étaient pas en majorité à cette époque. S'il se donne la peine de les examiner, il trouvera qu'une de cette résolution fut présentée par un démocrate, par plaisanterie, afin d'empêcher que la résolution primitive ne fût adoptée.

Je me rappelle, que dans ce moment des occupations importantes avaient éloigné M. M. Burthe et Gardère de la salle ; mais où étaient les autres ? Un membre de plus eût partagé les voix, ce qui eût donné à M. Martin, qui était président, une occasion de décider la question par sa voix prépondérante. Où donc, je vous le demande, étaient les autres membres ? Il y avait certainement plus de onze whigs dans le dernier Sénat.

M. Derbès.—Voici les raisons pour lesquelles je demande une reconsidération du vote : J'ai voté pour réduire les appointements des ingénieurs de $3,000 à $2,500, parce que je croyais que le bill pouvait être renvoyé et qu'alors nous aurions eu quatre districts au lieu de trois. Il est clair que la charge ainsi répartie deviendrait moins forte. Je pense que $5,000 n'est pas un salaire trop élevé, aussi longtemps que nous n'avons que trois districts.

Le vote est reconsideré et le Sénat retire son amendement.

On passe ensuite au proviso du Sénat qui dit : que l'acte serait rédigé de manière à ce qu'aucune des ordonnances de police et de levée existantes ne soit rappeleé (La chambre avait refusé son concours).

M. Hodge.—Je pense que la Chambre a bien agi parce que le proviso enlève de ce département, qui doit être entièrement indépendant, le pouvoir qui dirige et contrôle cette question, pour le reporter sous la direction des autorités paroissiales.

On prend ensuite en considération l'amendement divisant les fonds dans une certaine proportion.

M. Short.—Quand cette section était devant le Sénat je m'y suis opposé parce que la division n'avait pas été faite selon le travail exigible dans chaque district.

L'amendement du Sénat pour emprunter un million de piastres est alors pris en considération, la Chambre ayant refusé son concours.

M. Clifton—Ceci est un amendement très important au point de vue de l'économie et qui doit faire bénéficier l'Etat de 25 ou 30 pour cent. J'espère que le Sénat ne se désistera pas de son amendement.

M. Short—Je pense que le bill dans sa teneur primitive était préférable parce que c'est un arrangement très simple et très convenable que de ne mettre en circulation les bons qu'après l'achèvement des travaux. Je pense que l'amendement doit concilier tous ceux qui sont opposés au système de l'emprunt. Le mecanisme du bill primitif était très simple et devait se recommander à tout le monde.

La section pourvoyant aux machines à piloter est prise en considération.

M. Kittridge—Je considère que cette section vaut toutes les autres, en ce sens qu'elle peut prévenir la destruction de propriétés considérables.

M. Wickliffe—Si nous voulons jeter du ridicule sur le bill il suffit d'y conserver cette machine à piloter. Quel besoin avons-nous de trois ou quatre de ces encombrantes machines stationnant à des endroits où peut-être jamais il n'y aura de crevasse ?

M. Kittridge—L'orateur parle du ridicule qui serait attaché à cette section du bill. Il me semble que la sagesse de l'Etat a été souvent tournée en ridicule pour n'avoir pris aucune mesure pour empêcher la destruction par les crevasses, de propriétés pour une valeur de plusieurs centaines de mille piastres.

Digitized by Google

Banque des Artisans et des Marchands.

M. Derbès—Je désire présenter la protestation suivante signée par moi et d'autres membres, contre la conduite de la majorité du Sénat dans la séance d'hier. Nous n'avons aucune intention de manquer de respect au Sénat ; nous désirons simplement exposer les motifs qui ont dicté notre conduite.

A l'Honorable W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Les soussignés, membres du Sénat, demandent qu'il leur soit permis de représenter, Que le 1er du présent mois ou environ, un acte proposant de prolonger la Charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands fut soumis à la considération de cette honorable assemblée, et que la première section de ce bill ayant été mise aux voix, elle fut repoussée. Cependant la reconsidération de ce vote fut proposée et acceptée par le Sénat. Dans cet état de choses, le bill fut mis à l'ordre spécial du jour pour le mardi, 5 avril 1853. Ce jour, le Sénat ne s'étant pas trouvé en quorum, s'ajourna à mercredi, 6 avril. Mercredi, 6 avril, la motion fut faite de prendre en considération l'acte dont il est fait mention plus haut; mais des objections ayant été faites, le président décida que le consentement des deux tiers des membres présents était nécessaire pour que le bill pût être pris en considération conformément aux réglements du Sénat ; que le bill n'ayant pas été discuté le jour qui avait été spécialement fixé à cet effet, il rentrait dans l'ordre ordinaire, celui qu'indique son numéro, et que sous une autre assignation, il ne pouvait être pris en considération que l'orsqu'on arriverait à ce numéro. Un appel fut fait de la décision du président, et elle fut maintenue par le Sénat. Sur motion de reconsiderer le vote par lequel la décision du président etait maintenue, le Sénat consentit, à une voix de majorité, à le reconsidérer. Le Sénat s'étant ainsi décidé à reconsidérer son vote les soussignés crurent qu'il était de leur devoir, sans avoir l'intention de manquer de respect au corps dont ils font partie, de quitter leurs sièges, jusqu'à ce que d'autres affaires fussent discutées.

Quand la motion de prendre le bill en considération fut faite, l'opinion bien arrêtée des soussignes était, que le bill dont il est question étant à l'ordre du jour pour mardi, 5 avril, et n'ayant pas été discuté ce jour, avait perdu sa priorité, et qu'il devait être reservé pour un autre jour, ou pris en considération quand viendrait son tour de rôle sur le calendrier. L'opinion des soussignés était évidemment appuyée par l'autorité marquée de l'article 149, page 84, du Manuel de Cushing, dont voici le texte : « Les ordres du jour qui n'ont pas été discutés et décidés le jour désigné, perdent leur priorité et doivent être réservés pour un autre jour. Cependant, dit l'auteur, un réglement spécial peut, comme dans les Législatures du Massachusetts, décider que les ordres du jour particuliers resteront en force pendant tous les jours suivants, jusqu'à ce qu'une décision soit prise. On ne prétendra certainement pas qu'il existe pour notre honorable corps un réglement spécial qui change, ou modifie le réglement si clairement établi par l'autorité dont nous parlons. Les justes et légitimes conclusions des soussignés furent soutenues par le président et ensuite par le Sénat par un vote direct pour maintenir la décision du président ; mais quand les soussignés s'aperçurent plus tard que leurs vues étaient méconnues, les autorités parlementaires mises de côté, la décision du président renversée, et l'opinion du Sénat lui-même entièrement changée en moins de temps qu'il n'en faut pour le dire, et tout cela pour faire passer un bill qui était directement opposé aux vues politiques des soussignés, ils crurent qu'ils avaient incontestablement le droit de quitter leurs siéges dans cette enceinte. Si le bill eût été présenté à son tour de rôle, d'accord avec les réglements du Sénat et les exigences des usages parlementaires, tels que les a interprétés le fonctionnaire plein de talent et d'impartialité qui préside dans cette enceinte, les soussignés seraient restés dans leurs siéges, le bill dût-il passer en dépit d'eux ; mais ils ne pouvaient consentir à se laisser dépouiller des droits que leur accorde le réglement du Sénat, tandis qu'il était en leur pouvoir de l'empêcher en se retirant. Les réglements d'une assemblée délibérante sont la seule sauvegarde de la minorité contre les attaques de la majorité, et les soussignés sont et demeurent justifiés par toute mesure qu'ils ont prise ou qu'ils pourraient prendre à l'avenir, pour la défense des droits que leur accorde le réglement. Telle est la justification de notre retraite de cette enceinte, et nous demandons respectueusement qu'elle soit insérée dans les archives de cette honorable assemblée.

C'est ce que vous soumettent respectueusement,

A. DERBES,
GEO. L. LACEY,
P. H. KEMP,
TOM. S. McCAY,
C. H. MOUTON,
CASIMIR LACOSTE,
C. W. CLIFTON,
M. BOATNER.

M. Hodge—Je propose de référer cette protestation au comité judiciaire.

M. Martin—La motion n'est pas à l'ordre. La question est de savoir si nous devons accepter la protestation.

M. Derbès—Si l'hon. membre était dans notre position, je m'opposerais à la motion qu'il vient de faire. Il nous revient de droit d'exprimer les raisons qui nous ont fait agir. Il n'est que trop juste que nos constituants connaissent nos motifs ; on n'abandonne pas son siège au Sénat sans raisons majeures; nous empêcher de les enrégistrer quand nous en demandons le privilége, serait faire preuve d'un manque de courtoisie dont on aurait lieu de s'étonner.

M. Hodge—Je n'ai aucune objection à ce que la protestation soit inscrite au journal, seulement je désire une occasion pour y répondre. Ce document accuse la majorité d'avoir violé les réglements dont la minorité s'était fait un bouclier. Ceci est une accusation que je ne veux pas laisser passer sous silence. Comme je l'ai déjà observé, je trouve naturel que ces messieurs fassent enrégistrer leurs arguments en justification de leur conduite, car en définitive ce sont des arguments quoique ces messieurs n'en fassent qu'une protestation. Je désire une occasion d'y répondre et je donnerai mes motifs.

M. Derbès—Si l'orateur a des raisons à donner il peut le faire maintenant; la question est devant le Sénat.

M. Martin—Mon confrère se trompe, sa suggestion ne serait pas en ordre. La question qui est maintenant devant le Sénat est la réception de la protestation.

M. Mc Cay—Je retire l'objection que j'ai faite à la réception de la protestation.

M Nicholls—Nous ne nous refusons pas à l'enregistrement de la protestation, mais quand ces messieurs nous ont demandé d'enregistrer une attaque faite contre la majorité, ils devraient au moins trouver convenable que nous ayons l'occasion d'y répondre.

M. Mc Cay—Que peut dire le comité judiciaire à ce sujet, je ne vois aucune nécessité d'y référer la protestation et pour cette raison je la retirerai.

M. Hodge—Je répète à ce monsieur que nous ne nous opposons pas à l'enregistrement, du moins la partie du Sénat à laquelle j'appartiens ; il me semble qu'il peut me comprendre, je m'adresse à lui en particulier.

M. Mc Cay—Je n'ai pas fait allusion au sénateur de Caddo, je parlais du senateur de l'Assomption (M. Martin).

M. Martin—Je me suis opposé à recevoir la protestation sans une dispense des règles. Je ne veux pas d'une minorité factieuse qui veuille par sa conduite turbulente imposer l'inscription de sa protestation sur les registres. Je suis decidé à ne pas me laisser entraîner par ces messieurs dans une fausse route.

M. Short—J'avoue que j'étais en faveur de l'enrégistrement de la protestation sur les minutes quoique ce fût une attaque à la majorité. J'ai fait partie de cette majorité, j'étais decidé à voter sur certaines questions mais je n'en ai pas trouvé l'occasion. J'accepte ma position avec toute la responsabilité qui s'y attache et je l'ai prise après mûre considération. Pour cette raison. je suis prêt comme faisant partie de la majorité à supporter toute attaque qui pourrait être dirigée contre elle.

M. Hodge—Je fais la motion de renvoyer la discussion à demain.

M. Mc Cay—Je retire de nouveau ma protestation puisqu'on a objecté à la recevoir.

Digitized by Google

M. Mouton—Je demande aussi à la retirer.

M. Hodge—Je réitère la motion de renvoyer la question à demain.

M. le président décide alors que la protestation n'est plus devant le Sénat.

M. Martin—Sur quel réglement M. le président base-t-il sa décision?

M. le Président—L'hon. membre a le droit de retirer un document de ce genre.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Le Sénat reprend la discussion non terminée sur la décision du président:

Que lorsqu'un acte est mis à l'ordre du jour pour un jour fixé, et que ce jour passe sans que l'acte soit discuté, l'acte prend sa place parmi les autres actes suivant son numéro.

M. Wickliffe—La décision ainsi exprimée est juste sous un point de vue général, mais elle ferait supposer qu'il y a eu en effet une séance du Sénat le jour dont il s'agit. J'admets que s'il y avait eu une séance, le cas eût été fort différent, mais il n'y a pas eu de seance et par conséquence la conclusion à laquelle le président est arrivé est fausse.

M. Lacey—Les raisons sous l'influence des quelles nous avons agi sont exprimées dans la protestation que nous avons présentées aujourd'hui. Cette protestation n'est pas une accusation dirigée contre la majorité, elle n'a d'autre but que de justifier notre conduite, et heureusement nous pouvons citer une excellente autorité à l'appui de notre opinion, je veux parler du livre dont se sert l'orateur Farrar. [Il lit un passage]. Voici une règle générale bien clairement établie. Y a-t-il quelque exception? Les règlements du Sénat n'en font pas que je sache Ils se taisent sur ce sujet, nous devons donc chercher des lumières ailleurs.

Nous trouvons ici, que si un bill est mis à l'ordre du jour pour un jour spécifié, et que ce jour passe sans que le bill soit discuté, quelle qu'en soit la cause, ce bill perd sa priorité, l'ordre est mis à néant et le bill doit prendre place au bas du calendrier d'où il ne peut être retiré que par un vote des deux tiers. Le simple bon sens nous démontre la vérité de ce principe; il suffit d'examiner le sujet avec soin pour en être convaincu. A quoi sert l'ordre du jour? il sert à affecter certains jours à la discussion de certains bills. Adopter les vues des membres qui nous sont opposés sur cette question, serait créer de la confusion, en gênant la marche des ordres du jour suivant: Il me semble donc que même sans précédents, sans autorité, en ne prenant pour guide que des principes généraux et ce que nous dicte le bons sens, il est évident que lorsqu'un bill est mis à l'ordre spécial du jour, et que ce jour passe sans que le bill ait été discuté, ce bill perd sa priorité et doit prendre place sur le calendrier général. Mais nous avons des autorités, nous avons le livre dont se servait l'orateur Farrar, un parlementaire accompli. Si le manuel de Jefferson donne une décision différente, je me range de son avis; mais Jefferson ne dit pas un mot sur ce sujet, nous sommes donc forcés de chercher ailleurs des renseignements.

Il résulte de là que nous avons une autorité importante en faveur de notre position et qu'elle justifie pleinement la détermination que nous avons prise de quitter la salle du Sénat, lorsque nous nous aperçumes que la majorité était decidée à s'écarter des réglements parlementaires. Je veux que les réglements soient observés; je ne veux pas qu'ils soient enfreints. Ils sont faits pour la protection de la minorité aussi bien que pour celle de la majorité. Je suis déterminé, aussi longtemps que mes forces physiques me permettront de sortir, à jouir des avantages que m'assurent les réglements et les usages de cette assemblée.

M. Short—Je n'ai pas l'intention de m'étendre longuement sur ce sujet. L'autorité que l'honorable membre a citée n'a pas trait à la question. On se rappellera que le Sénat avait mis le bill à l'ordre spécial du jour pour mardi. Si le Sénat se fût assemblé, il aurait pu agir en sa capacité officielle et adopter ou rejeter le bill. Il aurait pu renvoyer l'ordre du jour à un jour ultérieur. Mais le Sénat ne fut pas en séance mardi, il ne fit rien qui prouvât un changement dans d'intentions, et son intention était de s'occuper de ce bill d'abord. Ne devrions-nous pas le maintenir à l'ordre du jour? A-t-il été discuté? S'est-on occupé d'aucune affaire mardi? Si le Sénat se fût assemblé ce jour-là, s'il se fût occupé de quelqu'affaire, s'il eût en quelque manière que ce fût manifesté un changement dans ses intentions, le cas serait bien différent; mais rien de tout cela n'a eu lieu.

M. Wickliffe—Ce n'est pas à moi de me plaindre de la conduite des sénateurs qui ont jugé convenable de s'absenter de la salle lorsque leur présence était nécessaire pour faire un quorum. Quant à moi, il n'y a pas de circonstance qui me ferait quitter mon siége quand mon absence détruirait le quorum. Il pourrait arriver, ce qui du reste a déjà eu lieu ici, que la minorité prit possession des places.

M. Wickliffe est appelé à l'ordre.

M. Hodge—J'ai quelques mots à dire sur la question qui occupe le Sénat en ce moment, en réponse à l'argument ingénieux du membre d'Ouest Bâton-Rouge (M. Lacey.) Je suis fâché de devoir différer d'opinion avec le président. J'ai autant de respect pour les décisions du président que qui que ce soit, mais comme je vois que presque chaque sepateur a dit quelques mots sur la question, je me dois à moi-même de donner quelques explications pour justifier mon vote contre cette décision. D'abord, je ne pense pas que l'autorité citée par M. Lacey le conduise à ses fins, parce qu'il dit que dans une question de ce genre nous devons procéder avec ordre. L'honorable membre est trop bon avocat pour exiger que nous fassions une chose impossible. Comment l'ordre du jour pourrait-il être maintenu? Mais alors la minorité pourrait à chaque instant détruire le quorum pour empêcher l'adoption d'un bill auquel elle serait opposée. Ce serait mettre la majorité entièrement au pouvoir de la minorité. En supposant que nous ayons eu une séance mardi dernier, les mêmes membres qui ont déjà rompu le quorum pourraient avoir fait de même alors, et de cette manière en suivant la théorie de mon confrère, le bill aurait dû reprendre l'ordre régulier, et n'aurait peut-être pas pu être discuté avant mardi prochain quand il sera trop tard.

M. Derbès—La même chose n'arriverait-elle pas si nous agissions ainsi à tout propos.

M. Hodge—L'honorable membre a des réparties très heureuses; mais qu'il considère la question plus à fond. Je ne pense pas qu'il pourrait détruire le quorum aujourd'hui, quoiqu'il l'ait fait hier. Ainsi, selon moi, quand une minorité factieuse rompt le quorum, nous aurions aussi une garantie en ce sens qu'on pourrait reprendre la discussion d'un billl, à moins que la minorité ne mette fin tout-à-fait à la session.

Maintenant, quoique nous n'ayons aucun précédent direct, nous avons une autorité qui vaut tout autant que celle d'un livre que l'on trouve partout sans qu'on sache d'où il vient. Je citerai, comme exemple, la Législature du Massachussetts, un des meilleurs corps délibératifs du pays, et les usages des Cours.

M. McKay—Il n'en est pas ainsi dans les Cours de la ville. Quand une affaire n'est pas prête au jour fixé, elle est portée au bas du dossier et elle perd sa priorité.

M. Hodge—Dans ce cas il y a des privilèges de priorité, même dans cette ville. Dans mon pays les Cours sont plus arriérées, elles s'efforcent de rendre justice quand elles peuvent, si elles n'ont pu disposer des procès au jour qui leur était assigné.

M. Lacey—Je sais que quand on cite une autorité il faut qu'elle ait du poids, sans cela elle ne peut pas produire grand effet. Si mes adversaires sur cette question peuvent me montrer, dans le manuel de Jefferson, rien qui soutienne leur opinion, je m'y rends volontiers; mais ils n'ont rien produit qui milite en faveur de leurs vues, et comme toutes les autorités qui ont été produites donnent du poids à cet ouvrage, nous devons soutenir que l'avantage reste de notre côté.

Je vous ferai également observer que cet ouvrage, loin de contredire le Manuel de Jefferson, le prend au contraire pour base. Je vous en lirai la préface, afin de vous faire voir dans quel but il est écrit (Il lit la Préface.) Eh bien! Messieurs, l'orateur Farrar donnait tant de poids et d'autorité à ce livre, qu'il s'en servait comme d'un manuel. Qui révoquera en doute la capacité de M. Farrar comme président d'une assemblée délibérante, son impartialité et sa profonde connaissance des usages parlementaires? Je prétends qu'un ouvrage dont l'autorité lui semblait suffisante, doit être considéré comme tel par nous. Voilà l'autorité que nous alléguons. (Il lit un passage.) Ainsi, si une affaire dont la discussion se prolonge peut mettre à neant un ordre du jour, le manque de quorum peut produire le même résultat, parceque dans ces deux cas l'ordre n'a pas été soumis à l'attention de l'assemblée ; et ce principe s'applique à un défaut de quorum aussi bien qu'à tout autre cas. Telle est sans doute l'opinion de plusieurs sénateurs. Quelquefois, pour éviter ce dilemme, un bill est mis à l'ordre spécial du jour pour un jour fixé et tous les jours suivants, jusqu'à ce qu'une decision ait été prise. Tel est le réglement adopté par la Législature du Massachusetts. Je puis assurer une chose à mes collègues, c'est que le jour où ce bill sera discuté, ils me trouveront sur mon siége, prêt à voter sur le bill. Je voterai contre, mais je voterai.

Digitized by Google

L'appel nominal est fait et la décision du Président est renversée par 13 voix contre 10.

M. Wickliffe.—Je propose de prendre en considération le bill de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, et j'espère que les démocrates resteront sur leurs sièges et donneront leur attention à la question.

M. Mouton.—Selon ma manière d'envisager la question, le bill devait être discuté hier. D'après la décision du Sénat, s'il s'est occupé d'affaires ce jour-là, le bill perd sa priorité. Or, il s'est occupé d'affaires hier, et la question de savoir si le bill peut être pris en considération aujourd'hui se présente de nouveau.

Le Président décide que le bill doit être discuté aujourd'hui.

Le Président décide que l'acte intitulé : « Acte pour l'enregistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées, lequel avait été mis à l'ordre spécial de mardi, comme premier sur la liste de ce jour, était à l'ordre pour aujourd'hui, d'après la cassation de sa décision.

M. Hodge fait la motion de le déposer sur le bureau sujet à l'appel.

L'acte suivant mis à l'ordre spécial du jour pour mardi dernier, est alors pris en consideration et lu comme suit :

Acte pour prolonger la charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands de la Nlle-Orléans.

Section 1ère. Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en assemblée générale :

Que la charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands de la Nlle-Orléans, expirant le second mardi d'avril prochain, soit et demeure prolongée jusqu'au 1er juillet 1854.

Sect. 2. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que la dite Banque ne pourra pas, après le dit second mardi d'avril, emettre ou remettre aucun de ses propres billets, mais devra racheter et emoceller ses billets en circulation.

Sect. 3. Il est de plus décrété &c., Que la défense contenue dans la 12me section d'un acte pour remettre en force les chartes des différentes banques domiciliées dans la ville de la Nlle-Orléans et pour d'autres objets, approuvé le 5 février 1842, par lequel il était illégal à une banque de payer de ses comptoirs d'autres billets que les siens propres, ne s'appliquera pas à la dite Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, après le deuxième mardi prochain. Mais que la dite Banque peut et est autorisée à payer ses obligations en espèces ou billets d'autres corporations de cet Etat, créées par la loi, à l'option des personnes.

Sect. 4. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que cet acte aura force de loi immédiatement après sa passation.

M. Lewis propose d'amender la 1ère section en substituant «le 1er Décembre 1853» à «le 1er Juillet 1854.»

M. Hodge.—Le Sénat a déjà décidé cette question. J'en appelle au journal pour le prouver. Je demande la question préalable.

M. Lewis.—Dans ce cas, je propose de mettre : «Novembre.»

M. Hodge—J'ai la parole et j'ai demandé la question préalable

M. Kittridge.—Je demande à dire quelques mots pour définir ma position. J'ai toujours été porté à accorder une prolongation de temps à cette Banque, mais je ne veux pas causer la perte du bill. Je désire agir conformément aux intérêts de mes commettants. Je crois que la destruction immédiate de cette Banque causerait des pertes considérables, et vouloir amender le bill maintenant, équivaudrait à le rejeter. Je préfère donc occuper le temps le plus long à ne pas en avoir du tout.

M. Hodge demande la question préalable.

M. Mouton demande l'appel nominal sur la question.

La question préalable sera-t-elle prise en considération ?

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—12 voix.

MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton et Neal votent contre—11 voix.

Par conséquent, la question préalable est emportée.

Sur motion d'ajourner, M. Wickliffe demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Lacoste, McCay, Mouton, Neal et Patterson pour—9 voix.

MM. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—13 voix.

Sur motion d'adopter la 1re section, M. Wickliffe demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Lacy, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—13 voix.

Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Mouton et Wickliffe votent contre—9 voix.

M. Neal est dispensé de voter.

La section est adoptée.

M. Lacey fait la motion de reconsidérer le vote ci-dessus.

M. Hodge demande que cette motion soit déposée sur le bureau et demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—11 voix.

Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, Neal, Patterson et Wickliffe votent contre—13 voix.

La motion est rejetée.

M. Hodge demande l'appel nominal sur la reconsidération.

Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, Patterson et Wickliffe votent pour—12 voix.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent contre—11 voix.

Mr Neal ayant fait un compromis avec M. Rives, est dispensé de voter.

Par conséquent la motion de reconsidérer prévaut.

M. Derbès fait la motion d'amender la 1re section en substituant aux mots : « 1er juillet 1854 » les mots « décembre 1853. »

M. Hodge demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay et Mouton votent pour—10 voix.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—13 voix.

Par conséquent l'amendement est rejeté.

Sur l'adoption de la 1re section, M. Mouton demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—12 voix.

Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton et Wickliffe votent contre—11 voix.

Par conséquent la 1re section est adoptée.

Sur l'adoption de la 2me section, M. Lacey demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—12 voix.

Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton et Wickliffe votent contre—11 voix.

Par conséquent la 2me section est adoptée.

Sur l'adoption de la 3me section, M. Lacey demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—12 voix.

Digitized by Google

Et Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, et Wickliffe votent contre—11 voix.

Par conséquent la 3me section est adoptée.

Sur l'adoption de la 4me section M. Lacey demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor et Todd votent pour—12 voix.

Et Messieurs Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton et Wickliffe votent contre—11 voix.

Par conséquent la 4me section est adoptée.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants :—

Acte pour venir au secours de Barney McFeely.

Acte pour amender les différents actes relatifs à la police et au gouvernement de la ville de Franklin, paroisse de Ste-Marie.

Acte pour autoriser Mélite Dussan, f. c. l. de la paroisse St-Jean Baptiste, à émanciper un esclave.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie à feu des Opelousas.

Acte relatif aux avis judiciaires.

Substitut à un acte concernant les avis par les shérifs.

Résolution relative aux funérailles de l'ex-gouverneur Johnson.

Et que la Chambre a donné son concours aux amendemens à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir au jugement plus rapide des procès dans lesquels le droit à une place est impliqué

VENDREDI, 8 avril.

RAPPORT DES COMITES.

M. Derbès, du comité des réclamations, présente les rapports suivants :

A l'Hon. W. W Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Le comité auquel avait été référé la réclamation de la compagnie appelée « Good Institute Tow boat Company, » demande la permission de rapporter qu'il a examiné cette réclamation et est convaincu qu'elle est juste, en tant que les services rendus intéressent l'Etat, et il laisse au Sénat le soin de fixer le montant de la compensation. A cet effet il présente l'acte suivant.

Signé : A. DERBES,
Président pro tem.

A l'Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Les soussignés membres du comité auquel avait été référé la réclamation de Manuel Fernandez, constable de la cinquième Cour de juge de paix de la paroisse d'Orléans, rapportent qu'ils ont dûment examiné ce sujet et qu'ils sont d'opinion que le Sénat doit la rejeter, son compte se montant à près de neuf cents piastres, pour des services rendus à l'Etat en sa qualité de constable. Le comité a vainement cherché une loi autorisant le paiement de semblables commissions, et en l'absence de cette loi, ils ne désirent pas etablir un précédent qui mettrait l'Etat dans une législation sans fin et le forcerait à faire des appropriations de sommes d'argent considérables. C'est pourquoi ils demandent à être déchargés de tout autre examen du même sujet

Signé : A. DERBES.
W. R. TAYLOR.

A l'Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Le comité des réclamations auquel avait été référé la pétition de William H. Dinkgrave, collecteur de taxes d'Etat pour la paroisse Ouachita, demande la permission de la rapporter favorablement et soumet l'acte suivant : [Suit l'acte.]

Signé : A. DERBES,
Président pro tem

A l'Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Le comité des réclamations auquel avait été référé la pétition et le mémoire de B. K. Stephens, demandant à être relevé du paiement d'un bon de six cents piastres pour la comparution en Cour d'un certain Thomas H. Hannersly, accusé de vol, demande la permission de rapporter en faveur de la remise de la moitié, savoir : trois cents piastres, et demande à être déchargé de tout autre examen du même sujet.

Signé : A. DERBES.
W. B. TAYLOR.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande la signature du président pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour punir toute tentative de dommage aux levées ou digues de toute rivière ou cours d'eau de l'Etat.

Acte pour, pourvoir au jugement plus rapide des procès dans lesquels le droit à une place est impliqué.

Et il informe le Sénat que l'Orateur a signé les actes suivants, intitulés :

Acte pour émanciper John Rhodes, de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Acte pour venir au secours de l'arpenteur-général.

Et il demande le concours du Sénat pour :

Un acte pour venir au secours des directeurs des Ecoles de la Paroisse de Soto.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

M. Derbès, du comité d'enrôlement, rapporte les actes suivants comme correctement enrôlés, et l'assistant-secrétaire demande la signature de l'Orateur pour les dits actes.

Acte pour venir au secours de Pierre Onésime Broussard, ex-surintendant de paroisse pour la paroisse de Vermillon, et amendant un acte intitulé : « Acte pourvoyant à la manière dans laquelle les surintendents et leurs sécurités seront relevés de leur responsabilité.—Approuvé le 18 mars 1852.

Acte pour autoriser Frédérick Stokel et Marie Prujer sa femme, à adopter Louisa Wilhelmine Garner.

Acte pour amender un acte pour le réglement uniforme des élections dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, les paroisses d'Orléans et de Jefferson exceptées, approuve le 1er juin 1846.

Et il informe la Chambre que le président a signé les actes suivants :

Acte pour donner un local au siége de la justice de la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour venir au secours de William L. Knox.

Acte pour venir au secours de H. Kean.

L'assistant-secrétaire demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivans :

Acte pour émanciper Jane Mary esclave et fille de Patsy f. c. l.

Acte pour autoriser les actionnaires de l'association de l'Ecole des demoiselles d'Iberville, à faire une liquidation.

Acte pour autoriser Théodore Helveston et Eliza Peel sa femme, à adopter Thomas Whelan, orphelin.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte pour amender et remettre en vigueur la 35me section d'un acte intitulé : « Acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et pourvoir au gouvernement et à l'administration de ses affaires.

Acte pour amender les différents actes relatifs à la police et au gouvernement de la ville de Franklin, paroisse de Ste-Marie.

Ainsi que les actes suivans en les amendant.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de Vicksburg, Shreveport et du Texas.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

Et que le Senat a donné son concours à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours des créanciers et des légataires de la succession d'Abner Robinson.

Et que le Sénat a adopté l'amendement de la Chambre à un acte intitulé :

Acte réglant les devoirs des notaires en dehors des limites de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

EXPLICATION.

M. Mouton—Ayant voté en faveur de la prolongation de la Charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, je crains que ce vote ne me fasse considérer comme étant favorable à la prolongation de la Charte de la dite Banque. Afin qu'on ne puisse pas se méprendre sur mes intentions, je demande, de concert avec d'autres membres qui ont voté dans le même sens que moi, la permission de soumettre l'explication écrite suivante de notre vote, et nous demandons qu'elle soit insérée au procès-verbal.

Digitized by Google

Les soussignés, en votant pour l'amendement, proposant de prolonger la charte de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands jusqu'au 2 décembre prochain, l'ont fait parce qu'ils préféraient cette période au temps déterminé dans l'acte original. Ils avaient l'intention de voter sur la passation finale de l'acte, contre toute prolongation de la charte de ladite banque.

Signé : C. H. MOUTON,
GEO. L. LACEY,
M. BOATNER,
T. S. McCAY,
A. DERBES,
C. W. CLIFTON.

Le Sénat ordonne que le manifeste soit inséré au procès-verbal.

MESSAGE DU GOUVERNEUR.

M. Hatch, secrétaire privé du Gouverneur, informe le Sénat que le Gouverneur a approuvé et signé les actes suivans :

Acte pour venir au secours de la branche de la banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane, à Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour émanciper William F. Glassecock.

Acte pour venir au secours de F. P. Hall et l'administrateur de la succession Wyley J. McElroy, décédé.

Acte pour créer un juge de paix dans et pour la paroisse des Rapides.

Acte relatif au serment exigé par l'article de la Constitution.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé : « Acte pour amender les différents actes relatifs à la police et à la ville de Bâton-Rouge.

Résolution relative à l'établissement d'une certaine voiture à l'usage de la malle pour le Congrès.

Résolution pour venir au secours de Jérôme Tourné.

Résolution requérant l'ingénieur de l'Etat d'examiner les chûtes de la Rivière Rouge.

Résolution autorisant l'ingénieur de l'Etat à faire un examen de l'embouchure du Bayou Plaquemines.

Acte pour prohiber la circulation des petits billets de banque.

Acte pour autoriser David Brady, de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, à changer son nom de David Brady en celui de David Braden.

Acte pour autoriser les juges de paix à nommer dans certains cas des curateurs ad litem.

BILL DES CHEMINS DE FER.

Le Sénat passe à la discussion des bills des chemins de fer, et à leur réconsidération dans le but d'y faire certaines corrections.

M. Short propose un amendement qui n'accorde le privilége de couper du bois qu'aussi longtemps que les terres appartiendront à l'Etat.

M. Hodge.—Le privilége dans ce cas n'en serait pas un, car aussitôt que la route sera tracée, il se présentera des personnes qui prendront possession des terres, ce qui rendrait la concession sans aucune valeur.

M. Hodge présente un amendement accordant le privilége de couper du bois sur les terres publiques, pendant l'espace de cinq ans.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Acte pour l'enrégistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

M. Hodge.— Attendu que le sénateur d'Ascension (M. Kenner) est absent, qu'il porte un vif intérêt à ce bill et désire faire quelques remarques sur cette question, je fais la motion de déposer le bill sur le bureau, sujet à l'appel.

M. King.—J'ignorais que le sénateur de l'Ascension portât un intérêt si particulier à ce bill. Ce n'est pas en s'absentant le jour où il doit être pris en considération qu'il en donne la preuve. Il n'est, que je sache, ni malade, ni forcé de s'éloigner pour une affaire urgente. Il est absent pour s'amuser et je pense que les travaux du Sénat ne doivent pas être interrompus et retardés pour la convenance ou les plaisirs d'aucun sénateur.

M. Martin.— Je m'étonne que M. King fasse la remarque que M. Kenner est absent pour ses plaisirs, tandis que lui-même ne fait que d'arriver de la Nlle-Orléans, où il est soupçonné de n'avoir été que pour se distraire.

M. Hodge.—Je répète ce que j'ai déjà dit ; et pour prouver quel intérêt M. Kenner prend à cette question, je vous rappellerai que pendant la dernière session de la législature, M. Benjamin présenta un bill de la même teneur que celui-ci, et que M. Kenner se prononça contre le bill et prononça un discours à l'appui de son opinion.

M. Boatner.— L'argument de l'honorable membre pourrait être appliqué au bill de la banque qui lui tient tant au cœur car me trouvant en ville la semaine passée, M. Kenner me dit qu'il était opposé à ce bill et qu'il regrettait de n'être pas ici pour faire un discours contre ce bill.

M. Hodge.—Eh bien ! je veux bien écarter ce motif, et avouer que je demande une remise parce que je désire donner la préférence au bill de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, pour la raison qu'il nous reste fort peu de temps, et que si nous ne nous en occupons pas à présent, il se peut que nous n'ayons plus le temps de le faire du tout. Si le bill ne passe pas avant mardi prochain, il devient inutile, puisque c'est le jour où la charte de la banque expire.

Nos adversaires ont passé toute la matinée à faire des motions frivoles, telles que je n'en ai encore jamais vue dans une assemblée législative. J'ai souvent assisté à ces assemblées, quoique je n'en fasse partie que depuis peu de temps, et je dois dire que jamais je n'ai vu demander la lecture des bills à leur première lecture, dans le seul but de causer du délai. Je répète que je désire donner la préférence au bill de la Banque ; c'est pour cela que je voudrais mettre le bill qui est maintenant devant le Sénat au bas du calendrier, et vous pouvez en tirer le meilleur parti possible.

M. King.— J'avais cru d'abord que l'honorable membre demandait un délai, pour la raison que certain sénateur qui porte un vif intérêt au bill est absent.

M. Hodge.—C'était là une partie de mes raisons.

M. King:—Il me paraît que c'était votre raison tout entière, au moins n'en ai-je pas entendu donner d'autre. Maintenant l'honorable membre désavoue ce motif et en allègue un autre tout différent. Quant à l'insinuation du membre d'Assomption, que je me suis absenté pour me divertir, je croyais que l'état de ma santé était assez profondément gravé sur mes traits pour me mettre à l'abri d'une pareille attaque. Mais si l'honorable membre se plaît à s'égayer à mes dépens, je ne l'en empêche pas, seulement je m'abstiendrai de répondre à des insinuations faites dans un esprit qui ne se manifeste pas aujourd'hui pour la première fois.

J'espère que le bill sera pris en considération, vu qu'il est fort important, beaucoup plus important pour mes commettants que le bill de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands.

M. Lacey.—Si le but du sénateur qui a fait la motion de différer la discussion de l'ordre du jour est de s'occuper du bill de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands, je voterai contre cette motion. Je suis opposé à ce bill et je donnerai mon vote à toute motion pour l'annuler. Je vote pour la prise en considération de l'ordre spécial du jour, qui est très important, beaucoup plus important, comme l'a très bien dit le Sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King), que le bill pour accorder une prolongation à la banque des Artisans et des Marchands. J'essayerai de tous les moyens parlementaires pour défaire ce bill, et s'il passe ce ne sera pas à mes efforts qu'il en sera redevable. S'il passe ce sera parce qu'aucun moyen parlementaire à ma connaissance, ne pouvait empêcher ce résultat. La remise de la discussion sur l'ordre spécial du jour est demandée parce que certain sénateur est absent. Quelle a été votre conduite à mon égard dans un cas semblable ? Vous vous rappellerez qu'un jour fut fixé pour la discussion de mon bill des terres marécageuses ; j'étais absent lorsqu'il fut pris en considé-ration et j'appris le résultat du vote, la défaite de mon bill, au pied du lit de ma femme malade. Aucun égard ne me fut témoigné; mon absence ne parut pas une raison suffisante pour remettre la discussion d'un bill qui pourtant était présenté par moi et alors qu'un devoir sacré me tenait éloigné de mon siége. Je suis opposé en principe à cette banque des Artisans et des Marchands. J'ai voté contre le bill quand la Chambre nous l'a envoyé et je persisterai jusqu'à la fin à voter dans ce sens.

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe.—Je dois dire que quand je votai pour déposer sur le bureau le bill des terres marécageuses présenté par l'honorable membre, je n'avais pas connaissance de la maladie de sa femme, quoique, l'eussé-je su, j'aurais voté dans le même sens, attendu que la motion de dépôt sur le bureau avait été faite avant que mon honorable collègue ne quittât la salle du Sénat.

M. Martin.—L'honorable membre dit qu'il est opposé en principe au bill de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands. Je dis que pour lui l'affaire dont il s'agit n'est pas une question de principes. Hier il soumit une protestation contre notre conduite de la veille. Cette protestation se prononçait contre toute prolongation de la charte de la banque, et cependant l'honorable membre a voté en faveur de sa prolongation jusqu'en décembre. Il a donc concédé le principe, et comme affaire d'utilité, il ne s'est occupé que de la question de temps. La seule question pour lui était, si la durée de la charte devait être prolongée jusqu'en décembre ou jusqu'en juillet.

M. Derbès.—L'honorable membre doit se rappeler que lorsque je fis la motion de prolonger la charte usqu'en décembre, je dis que je le faisais parce que je croyais que c'était tout ce que nous pouvions obtenir, mais que nous ne voulions rien céder sur la question de principes.

M. Martin.—Le seul sénateur dont la conduite ait été conséquente dans cette affaire est le membre d'Ouest-Féliciana (M. Wickliffe); il a été opposé au bill depuis le commencement jusqu'à la fin, mais il n'a pas fait une opposition factieuse.

M. Mouton.—Mon honorable collègue dit que le sénateur d'Ouest-Féliciana est le seul qui se soit montré conséquent dans l'affaire de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands. S'il veut se donner la peine de consulter le procès-verbal, il y trouvera que lorsque je votai en faveur de l'amendement pour prolonger la charte de la banque jusqu'en décembre, j'agis ainsi parce que je croyais que nous ne pouvions demander davantage, sans rendre le bill inacceptable aux membres de l'autre partie. C'est pour prendre note de ce fait, que nous avons ce matin soumis nos raisons par écrit, et le Sénat a consenti à ce qu'elles fussent insérées au procès-verbal.

M. Lacey.—J'ai cédé ma place à plusieurs sénateurs pour qu'ils pussent donner des explications sur ce sujet. Je reprendrai maintenant la parole, mais pour un instant seulement. L'honorable membre dit que voter pour l'amendement dont il s'agit, c'est abandonner la question de principe. Ce n'est pas mon opinion. Je m'y décidai afin de rendre le bill plus acceptable au cas qu'il passât. Si les votes eussent été pris sur la passation finale de l'acte, nous eussions prouvé que nous étions opposés à accorder un seul instant de prolongation.

M. McCay.—Je proposai de déposer sur le bureau le bill des terres marécageuses présenté par mon honorable collègue, parce que je ne pense pas que dans la législation du Sénat, il faille prendre en considération l'absence fortuite de quelque sénateur que ce soit. Mon vote le prouvera aujourd'hui.

Le bill pour l'enregistrement des hypothèques est alors pris en considération.

M. King.—Ce bill, monsieur le président, est de la plus haute importance, et traite d'un des sujets les plus délicats dont la loi ait connaissance. Il a été rédigé avec tout le soin et l'attention possibles. Il fut présenté au commencement de la session et le Sénat en ordonna l'impression, afin que tous ses membres en connussent parfaitement les principes et les détails. Des exemplaires en furent envoyés aux juges et aux avocats les plus distingués de l'Etat. L'opinion de ces messieurs fut demandée, non pour la forme, mais afin de provoquer une critique juste et impartiale. Je les prie de renvoyer ces bills avec les critiques et les avis qu'ils jugeraient convenables. Plusieurs personnes répondirent à mon appel. Le bill fut ensuite soumis à l'examen critique du comité judiciaire. C'est donc le fruit de longues réflexions, de nombreuses consultations et de mûres délibérations qui est présenté au Sénat. S'il n'a pas atteint la perfection, au moins s'en rapproche-t-il autant qu'il est possible pour un bill de cette espèce. Voici en quelques mots quel en est le but général: débarrasser la propriété foncière des entraves dont elle est maintenant grevée, et mettre les propriétaires à même de capitaliser leurs propriétés foncières et d'emprunter de l'argent sur ces propriétés. Dans l'état actuel des choses les connaissances légales les plus profondes ne suffisent pas pour qu'on puisse avec sécurité acheter ou vendre des biens fonds ou prêter de l'argent sur ces biens. Un homme qui prête de l'argent sur des propriétés foncières ou qui en achète, découvre souvent trop tard une hypothèque tacite qui détruit son titre, ou lui enlève toute sécurité. Ce vice de notre législation empêche les capitaux d'affluer dans notre Etat, parce qu'il en rend le placement peu sûr. Je veux capitaliser les biens fonds; je veux qu'ici comme ailleurs ils soient considérés comme la meilleure garantie possible. A New-York ou à Londres, un propriétaire peu emprunter sur ses biens fonds une somme presqu'égale à leur valeur, et cela au plus bas taux d'intérêt.

Dans la Louisiane, au contraire, grâce à notre désastreux système d'hypothèques tacites qui rend les biens fonds un placement dangereux, il est presqu'impossible d'obtenir de l'argent sur ces hypothèques, ou si l'on peut s'en procurer, c'est à un taux d'intérêt ruineux. Outre la propriété, on exige un garantie personnelle et puis il faut payer 18 pour cent par an d'intérêt. En capitalisant les biens fonds, ou, en d'autres termes, en en facilitant la conversion en capital, nous pourrions obtenir de l'argent dans la Louisiane à un taux aussi bas que n'importe où. L'adoption de ce bill attirera les capitaux étrangers, et accroîtra la prospérité de l'Etat et la valeur de nos propriétés.

Tous les sénateurs, j'en suis certain, apprécient l'importance de ce sujet. Si j'étais sûr qu'ils m'écoutassent sans parti pris, je m'étendrais davantage sur ce bill, mais je suis persuadé que chacun d'eux a déjà une opinion arrêtée et mon état de faiblesse ne me permet pas de grands efforts. Tout ce que je puis dire est, que ce bill a subi l'examen des hommes de loi et qu'il a reçu leur approbation. Il ne vise pas à détruire les droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées, mais au contraire à les assurer, en enrégistrant les preuves des hypothèques en leur faveur. Il est évident pour tout le monde qu'une hypothèque enrégistrée a plus de valeur qu'une hypothèque tacite. Ce bill n'enlève rien aux droits des femmes mariées et des mineurs; il ne fait que les sauvegarder plus efficacement.

M. Barthe présente un substitut au bill.

M. Barthe—Je ne veux pas différer l'action du Sénat sur ce sujet, mais je crois que le bill que je présente est de beaucoup supérieur à celui qui lui est maintenant soumis; je propose donc qu'il soit imprimé.

M. King—Je crois que ce bill est le même que M. Benjamin présenta l'année dernière et que le Sénat, à mon avis fit bien de ne pas adopter. Nous avons conservé de ce bill tout ce qu'il y avait de bon et nous avons ajouté différentes améliorations, de sorte que nous l'avons beaucoup perfectionné. Nous avons comblé les lacunes et élagué les choses superflues. La motion n'a d'autre but que d'écarter notre bill et de faire passer le bill avorté de l'année passée, que le Sénat refusa à juste titre de voter. Je propose de déposer indéfiniment le substitut sur le bureau.

M. Barthe retire le substitut.

M. Mouton propose un amendement portant que les hypothèques seront enrégistrées dans la paroisse qu'habite la personne intéressée.

M. Wickliffe—Ce serait détruire les droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

M. Short—Le but du bill est de convertir les hypothèques inconnues en hypothèques connues. Nous voulons sauvegarder les droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées en faisant enrégistrer les reçus dans chaque paroisse où la personne intéressée a des propriétés.

M. Boatner—Je suis opposé à la section toute entière. Elle exige qu'un homme fasse ce que sa conscience lui défend, c'est-à-dire de donner un reçu pour une chose qu'il n'a pas reçue et de le faire sous serment.

Digitized by Google

L'amendement est rejeté.

M. Mc Cay—Je propose de reconsidérer la première section.

M. Wickliffe—Pour quelle raison ?

M. Wickliffe—Puisque l'honorable membre refuse de faire connaître ses raisons, je propose de déposer la motion sur le bureau.

M. Mouton—Je n'aime pas tant de serments ; si le tuteur est un honnête homme, un seul doit suffire. S'il fait le serment de remplir fidèlement les obligations, tous les autres sont superflus. Il suffit qu'il affirme sous serment qu'il a fait enrégistrer l'hypothèque.

Le bill passe à sa 3me lecture.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

BANQUE DES ARTISANS ET DES MARCHANDS.

Le bill de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands est pris en considération.

M. Lacey—Je propose de renvoyer le bill au comité des banques et maisons de banque.

M. Hodge demande la question préalable.

L'appel nominal étant fait, M. Hodge dit: Je vote pour la négative parce que je vois qu'on veut obtenir un vote pendant l'absence des Sénateurs qui ont quitté la salle pour un instant.

M. Evans—J'étais sorti avec M. Rivers, pendant la discussion de cette question, mais je voterai pour le renvoi, parce que je suis opposé au bill. Peut-être M. Rivers sera-t-il ici quand on en reprendra la discussion.

La motion de reconsidérer est adoptée.

SAMEDI, 9 avril 1853.

RAPPORT DES COMITÉS.

M. Martin, du comité du commerce, de l'agriculture, etc., rapporte un substitut à un acte qui avait été référé à ce comité et intitulé :

Acte pour empêcher l'extension des maladies et des infections contagieuses apportées par les navires arrivant de la Baie de l'Atchafalaya et ses tributaires.

Sur motion de M. Palfrey, après dispenses des règles, le substitut est adopté

M. Derbès, du comité d'enrôlemens, rapporte comme correctement enrôlés, les actes suivans:

Acte pour punir toute tentative pour détruire les levées ou digues de toute rivière naviguable dans cet Etat.

Acte pour pourvoir au jugement plus rapide des affaires dans lesquelles le droit à une place est impliqué.

Et le messager spécial du Sénat, M. Steward, informe la Chambre que le président les a signés.

M. Todd, suivant l'avis préalable donné par lui, introduit un acte intitulé :

Acte pour créer deux notaires publics additionnels dans et pour la paroisse de Morehouse.

Sur motion de M. Todd, après dispense des règles, l'acte subit ses différentes lectures et passe.

M. Clifton, du comité des finances soumet le rapport suivant :

A l'Hon. W. W. Farmer, président du Sénat, etc.

Le soussigné, membre du comité de finances, auquel avait été référé un acte intitulé: « Acte pour mettre en force d'une manière plus efficace un acte intitulé : « Acte pour le progrès de l'éducation médicale dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, » approuvé le 21 mars 1850, rapporte qu'il diffère de la majorité du dit comité et présente le rapport de la minorité contre l'adoption du dit acte.

Il appert, d'après l'acte de 1850, cité ci-dessus, et que cet acte mettra en force d'une manière plus efficace la loi passée, appropriant la somme de vingt-cinq mille piastres à l'effet d'acheter des appareils d'anatomie et autres, dessins de médecine, etc., à l'usage de l'Université de la Louisiane, et requérant le doyen de la faculté de médecine de fournir un catalogue de tous les articles achetés en vertu des dispositions de l'acte de la Législature : et aussi de faire un rapport entier et détaillé de la dépense faite par la faculté en vertu de cet acte.

Le soussigné a vainement examiné les journaux de la Législature pour trouver une preuve que les dispositions de cet acte ont été remplies par l'Université de la Louisiane, excepté le reçu des vingt-cinq mille piastres qui se trouve dans le rapport du trésorier. Les documens ne montrent aucun catalogue des articles achetés, « aucun rapport entier et détaillé des dépenses faites par la faculté comme l'exige là 4me section de l'acte de 1850. Et cependant l'Université, dans le but de remplir plus efficacement l'acte de 1850, introduit un acte demandant une autre appropriation de $6,000. Il n'y a pas un membre de votre honorable corps qui soit plus jaloux que le soussigné de la cause de l'éducation publique, du progrès et de la propagation des connaissances scientifiques, ou qui ne reconnaisse plus entièrement le devoir de l'Etat d'étendre son aide et sa protection bienfaisante sur les institutions établies pour ce but, mais en même temps, le gouvernement a un devoir à remplir en faisant tous ses efforts pour alléger le peuple du poids qui pèse maintenant sur lui, et qui souffre d'une taxe à un taux aussi élevé, avec la perspective de la voir augmenter par la Législature présente, pour pouvoir être à même de répondre à ses engagements. Dans l'opinion du soussigné, l'Université a déjà reçu une proportion suffisante de la protection de l'Etat, pour la mettre en état de vivre de ses propres ressources, sans avoir recours à un trésor épuisé pour une autre appropriation.

Le tout vous est respectueusement soumis.

C. W. CLIFTON.

M. Martin—Je désire présenter une résolution requérant le secrétaire de se rendre à la Chambre et de demander que le bill permettant d'engager les récoltes sur pied, nous soit renvoyé. Je crois pouvoir prouver à la satisfaction d'un chacun que ce bill a été voté par suite d'un malentendu.

M. King—Le sénateur qui a présenté ce bill et qui y attachait beaucoup d'importance, est absent, et je crois la mesure que propose l'honorable membre peu généreuse envers lui.

M. Martin—Je ne veux pas profiter de cette circonstanse pour hâter la discussion de cette affaire; je n'ai pas la moindre objection à ce qu'elle soit discutée en présence de mon collègue ; seulement je voudrais que le bill soit renvoyé maintenant.

M. King—Ce serait une manière de procéder fort irrégulière. Un bill a été adopté par le Sénat et n'est plus en sa possession. Il est maintenant soumis à l'autre Chambre, et l'honorable membre demande qu'il nous soit renvoyé. Une telle conduite prolongerait la législation à l'infini.

M. Martin—Je ne révoque pas en doute que les connaissances légales de mon collègue soient beaucoup plus vastes que les miennes; mais mon expérience parlementaire me dit que la mesure que je propose n'a rien d'inaccoutumé.

M. King—Je crois que le bill a déjà été référé à un comité dans la Chambre.

M. Martin—Ce n'est pas là une discussion.

M. King—Il me semble que oui.

M. Martin retire sa résolution.

Sur motion de M. Todd, un acte pour pourvoir au jugement des affaires dans lesquelles les juges seront récusés, est pris en considération.

M. Todd—Il est indispensable qu'une disposition quelconque soit faite, pour le jugement de ces affaires. Les difficultés sont quelque fois si grandes qu'elles équivalent à un refus absolu de justice. Il est urgent que des mesures soient adoptées pour hâter le jugement de ces affaires. Plusieurs des districts ruraux sont très étendus et quelquefois les routes sont peu praticables, de manière que les juges des districts voisins ne peuvent assister à l'audience. Il en résulte souvent que des affaires récusées sont remises à l'infini et ne se jugent jamais. Voici mon plan : Un membre du barreau sera choisi par les avocats et dans le cas où ils ne parviendraient pas à s'entendre le juge en nommera trois dont un sera désigné par la voie du sort pour décider l'affaire, et le juge de district en signant cette décision lui donnera force de loi.

Le comité judiciaire fait un rapport contre ce bill, basé sur des principes constitutionnels. Le comité fait ressortir l'impossibilité d'investir une personne de fonctions que la Constitution a dévoulu au juge de district. Ceci est vrai, mais ce n'est pas ce que nous faisons. Les membres du barreau choisis ne sont autorisés qu'à nommer des arbitres, mais le jugement n'a de valeur que lorsqu'il est signé par le juge de district. Cet arbitrage n'est qu'accidentel, le juge seul rend la décision valide. La Constitution du Kentucky et du Mississipi, et d'autres Etats, contient une disposition analogue, et partout on en a reconnu l'efficacité. J'espère que les sénateurs reviendront de leurs objections et qu'ils adopteront le bill. Qu'ils considèrent les faits, ils reconnaîtront qu'il est urgent d'établir un mode plus facile pour juger ces affaires.

Digitized by Google

M. Lacey—Je suis prêt à voter en faveur du bill, et à en laisser la constitutionnalité à la decision des cours de justice. Le mal exige évidemment un remède. Mon district en a considérablement souffert.

M. Nicholls—Il en est de même de mon District. Je connais des affaires qui sont pendantes depuis 1845. Ceci, comme l'a dit fort bien l'honorable membre, équivaut à un refus de justice.

M. Todd—Je ferais observer que dans la convention j'ai tâché d'introduire dans la Constitution une clause de ce genre et l'opinion générale du comité judiciaire était qu'elle était inutile.

M. Boatner—Le bill étant inconstitutionnel, je voterai dans la négative, jusqu'à présent je n'ai entendu aucun argument qui fasse changer mon opinion. L'article de la Constitution est clair et formel. Les juges des cours inférieures doivent être élus par le peuple. Le sénateur de Morehouse (M. Todd) soutient que cet article n'est pas applicable, attendu que le juge signe le jugement. Il me paraît que la condition essentielle est que le juge examine et décide l'affaire. Si la simple signature du jugement est suffisante, il me semble que la définition exacte de juge est restée jusqu'à présent incomprise. L'article de la Constitution est formel. Les fonctions judiciaires ne peuvent pas être déléguées à des tierces personnes. Il peut exister des cas difficiles mais nous devons nous conformer à la Constitution.

Le bill est adopté.

Le Président soumet au Sénat le rapport suivant de l'Ingénieur de l'Etat, lequel est lu, et est ensuite référé au comité des améliorations intérieures.

BUREAU DE L'INGENIEUR DE L'ETAT.
Bâton Rouge, 7 avril 1853.

A l'Hon. Sénat et Chambre des Représentants de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Messieurs,

Par la seconde section d'un acte approuvé le 18 mars 1852, il a été alloué à l'ingénieur de l'Etat un fonds contingent annuel de $1,000 pour frais de voyages et de bureaux.

Je ne sais pas dans quel but cette loi a été passée parceque je ne puis m'imaginer comment l'ingénieur peut voyager plus que le travail de son bureau l'exige, et comment il peut dépenser plus d'argent qu'il est nécessaire pour son bureau. Qu'elle qu'ait été l'intention de la législature, je suis sûr qu'elle ne peut être d'aucune utilité pour l'Etat autant que cela touche à ce département, spécialement comme ce bureau a toujours en main les preuves nécessaires pour montrer et expliquer de qu'elle manière il s'est servi des moyens placés à son crédit, et de plus tous les warrants sont approuvés par le Gouverneur ou le Secrétaire d'Etat. Si vous considérez ce qui est exigé, vous trouverez que la somme est bien petite.

Ce bureau doit tenir un compte exact de tous ses débours tous les ordres doivent être copiés dans un livre pour ce but, toutes les lettres doivent être enregistrées, et pendant l'absence de l'ingénieur de l'Etat et de son assistant, une personne doit rester au bureau pour exécuter les ordres qui pourraient venir pour les différentes divisions de l'Etat. Pour remplir ce travail un bon commis a été longtemps employé et jusqu'à présent est nécessaire pour remplir les devoirs de cette place.

L'ingénieur de l'Etat doit voyager, non seulement assez pour faire les plans et les examens exigés par votre honorable corps ; mais il doit surveiller et diriger le travail des forces de l'Etat, de telle manière qu'il jugera le plus nécessaire. Les besoins réels de ce département sont si grands et on en a parlé si souvent qu'il est peine inutile de les mentionner de nouveau.

Dans le but d'accomplir dans un temps raisonnable, l'ouvrage le plus important et le plus utile, cela exige une augmentation considérable de ses forces. Si ces forces étaient augmentées suffisamment, nous pourrions non seulement nettoyer les bayous et les rivières, mais nous pourrions à l'aide d'écluses placées sur nos rivières et bayous, les rendre navigables, quand maintenant c'est impossible si ce n'est dans les eaux hautes. Nous pourrions aussi faire des chemin en planches ou de fer pour une somme moitié moindre que celle qu'exige le travail exécuté par des blancs.

Les forces de l'Etat sont si bien enseignées maintenant, que pour faire des travaux qui sont purement mécaniques, nous n'avons besoin d'un chef par eux. Pour les écluses du Canal Barataria et de Lafourche, nous avons seulement un ingénieur, plus un maçon lequel est maître charpentier. Pour la construction des ponts sur les chemins en planches de Grosse-Tête à Bâton-Rouge, la compagnie n'emploie qu'un charpentier, et presque tous les travaux purement mécaniques, peuvent être exécutés par les esclaves à un quart meilleur marché que celui des blancs. Combien seraient utiles à l'Etat trois ou quatre cents hommes ainsi. La paie des charpentiers est de deux à trois piastres par jour, quand ces forces ne coûteraient qu'une seule fois à l'Etat et ne demanderaient que la nourriture et l'habillement. Le prix de support n'augmenterait pas en proportion des esclaves employés, car un surintendant peut, dans plusieurs cas, diriger aussi bien 50 que 25 hommes.

Dans le but de tenir ouverts les nombreux cours d'eaux qui augmentent le Mississipi en passant par l'Atchafalaya et Plaquemine, de manière à les faire écouler plus promptement vers le Golfe du Mexique, pour ne pas inonder cette partie importante de l'Etat ; il est nécessaire d'employer constamment à cela un bon bateau servant à nettoyer les rivières. Nous trouvons là un grand bassin naturel, destiné à recevoir les eaux venant de plus haut, et on devrait diriger son attention non seulement à la navigation, mais aux qualités nécessaires pour des projets de dessèchement.

Nous avons les machines en mains, et pour que les forces de ce département soient utiles, il faudrait construire deux bons bateaux pour les recevoir. Cela exigerait une somme de $10,000 et pour faire les changements nécessaires au «Florida» il faudrait $2,000. Je voudrais faire quelques améliorations dans la construction des dits bateaux ainsi que dans leurs machines, lesquelles leur permettraient non seulement de voyager d'une partie de l'Etat à une autre avec une plus grande facilité, mais d'être plus utile pour l'ouvrage. L'année est tellement avancée, que pour les avoir prêts pour les eaux basses, il faudrait les commencer sans perdre de temps.

Je recommande respectueusement qu'une somme de $12,000 soit appropriée pour la construction et la réparation des bateaux, et je dois dire que sans cela, nous n'avons pour le service de cela qu'un bon bateau. Je donnerai aussi avis que la loi ci-dessus citée soit rappelée.

L'appropriation annuelle sera à peu près suffisante pour les salaires et les dépenses de ce département, même si les deux bateaux sont fournis.

Très respectueusement,
Votre obéissant serviteur.
GEO. W. MORSE,
Ingénieur de l'Etat.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que la Chambre a amendé les amendements du Sénat aux actes suivants, intitulés :

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du Chemin de Fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du Chemin de Fer de Wicksburg, Shevreport et du Texas.

Et il demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants, intitulés :

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du Chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

Acte pour venir au secours de A. M. Gray, de la paroisse des Avoyelles.

Acte pour autoriser l'auditeur et le trésorier d'Etat à placer certaines sommes d'argent au crédit des personnes qui y ont droit.

Acte relatif à la sauvegarde et à la conservation des armes de l'Etat, dans les arsenaux publics de la Nlle-Orléans.

Substitut à un acte No 288 pour incorporer les actionnaires de la Compagnie du Chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans et de Bâton-Rouge.

Digitized by Google

LUNDI, 11 avril 1853.

Acte pour l'enregistrement des hypothèques, &c.

Le bill pour l'enregistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées, est pris en considération.

M. Nicholls—Ce bill est d'une grande importance ; il intéresse tous les mineurs et les femmes mariées de l'Etat. Bien que l'auteur du bill dise qu'il a atteint toute la perfection dont une œuvre humaine soit susceptible, il n'en est pas moins évident que son projet a besoin d'être amendé. Renvoyons-le au comité, afin qu'il y introduise les amendements nécessaires.

M. King—Je soupçonne l'honorable membre d'avoir en vue la défaite du bill, plutôt que son amendement.

M. Nicholls—Je prie mon collègue de ne parler que pour lui-même. Je n'attaque les motifs de personne et je ne souffrirai pas qu'on conteste les miens.

M. King—L'honorable membre approuve donc les principes du bill ?

M. Nicholls—Oui, Monsieur. Cependant je crois que ce bill, loin d'être parfait, est un des plus imparfaits qui ait jamais été soumis à une assemblée législative.

M. King—Je prêtais à mon collègue l'intention de défaire le bill, parce que je le croyais opposé aux principes sur lesquels il est basé. Est-il favorable à l'abolition des hypothèques tacites ?

M. Nicholls.—Pas à leur abolition, mais à l'enregistrement des pièces qui en font foi, ainsi que l'implique le titre du bill.

M. King—C'est absolument la même chose, car lorsque les preuves d'une hypothèque sont enregistrées, elle cesse d'être tacite. Mon collègue dit que ce bill est un des plus imparfaits qui ait jamais été soumis à une assemblée législative. Je lui demanderai la permission de n'être pas de son avis ; je pense précisément le contraire. Ce bill est rédigé avec le plus grand soin ; il a été soumis aux avocats les plus distingués de l'Etat, dans le but de connaître le jugement qu'en porteraient des hommes compétents. Il a subi ensuite l'examen du comité judiciaire qui y a donné une attention toute particulière, qui l'a analysé et pesé ligne par ligne. Il a reçu l'approbation du comité et de tous ceux à qui il a été soumis. Quand je dis qu'il est aussi parfait que l'intelligence humaine peut le faire, je veux dire qu'il est aussi parfait qu'aucun bill qui ait jamais été présenté dans cette enceinte. Il vise à l'abolition d'un grand abus. L'hypothèque tacite est un manteau qui couvre bien des fraudes, bien des malversations, auxquelles ce bill coupe court. Il se peut que de loin en loin il agisse au détriment de quelqu'un ; mais quelle est la loi dont on ne puisse en dire autant ? Je puis sans inconvénient citer les noms de quelques personnes auxquelles le projet a été soumis, et qui l'ont approuvé. M. Rosélius, après un examen approfondi, a déclaré que le bill était bon et qu'il espérait le voir adopté. Il a été également soumis à M. Micou, qui m'a autorisé à citer son nom. Loin de le trouver incomplet il a dit qu'il était excellent et qu'il faisait des vœux pour son adoption. Il a trouvé que les droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées y étaient suffisamment protégés. J'espère donc qu'on n'aura pas recours à cette attaque détournée contre le bill ; le renvoyer au comité équivaut à le déposer sur le bureau.

M. Short—Il se peut que ce bill soit d'un caractère compliqué ; mais si l'on prend en considération la nature complexe du sujet qu'il prétend régler, on verra qu'il n'en pouvait être autrement. Il a pour but de convertir les hypothèques inconnues en hypothèques connues, en en faisant enregister les titres. Ce bill est complexe parce qu'il prétend résoudre une question embrouillée; faire sortir l'ordre du chaos et régler une foule de difficultés. Comme je l'ai déjà fait remarquer, ce bill a pour objet de convertir les hypothèques inconnues en connues, autant qu'une loi peut assurer ce résultat, par l'enregistrement des titres. Il y a certaines hypothèques en faveur des mineurs qui n'offrent rien qui puisse être enregistré. Ce bill pourvoit seulement à l'enregistrement de la pièce qui prouve l'hypothèque, quand cela peut se faire. Je crois qu'il ne peut en résulter aucun inconvénient.

M. Palfrey—Je ne suis pas avocat et je n'ai pas de prétentions à la connaissance du droit, mais il faut avoir la vue bien courte pour ne pas voir une objection sérieuse à ce bill. Par exemple, il ne contient aucune provision pour la nomination d'un tuteur dans les paroisses où des propriétés pourraient être acquises après la nomination primitive. Je proposerai un amendement pour obvier à cette difficulté, et afin de le faire insérer, je voterai en faveur du renvoi du bill

La motion de renvoyer le bill est perdu, et le bill est adopté.

M. Mouton donne avis qu'il fera la motion de reconsidérer le bill demain.

M. Lacey—Il a été décidé que ce n'était pas un manque de courtoisie de demander la reconsidération immediate, et certainement, pour ma part, je ne voudrais pas manquer d'égards à mon ami de Lafayette. Ce bill est très important et devrait être décidé sans délai. C'est pourquoi je demande qu'il soit reconsidéré maintenant.

M. Rivers—Je prends la parole pour une question d'ordre. Est-il permis à mon collègue de faire une motion de ce genre ? Ne détruit-elle pas le but dans lequel une reconsidération est proposée ?

M. McCay—Je désire avoir quelques renseignements à ce sujet ; je demande si une motion ne passe pas avant un simple avis de l'intention d'en faire un. L'honorable membre pourrait changer d'idée demain et ne pas faire sa motion. Le sénateur d'Ouest-Féliciana a actuellement fait la motion, et elle doit être prise en considération ; ce cas a déjà été décidé par le Sénat.

M. Rivers.— L'objet d'une reconsidération n'est-il pas annulé si on enlève aux sénateurs le droit et le privilége de faire connaître leur intention de faire une motion ? Ce cas n'a pas été décidé par le Sénat comme le prétend mon honorable collègue, mais dans un sens tout-à-fait contraire. Si le président siégeait, il déciderait la question dans le même sens.

M. King.— Il me semble que cet arrangement plaide en faveur de la conclusion à laquelle mon collègue de la Nouvelle-Orléans est arrivée. Un avis n'est pas une motion, ce n'est qu'une information que le membre donne au Sénat. Une motion, faite doit nécessairement avoir la priorité. Le droit de demander une reconsidération existe pendant deux jours, à moins qu'une motion du même genre n'ai déja été faite; dans ce cas c'est la première motion qui doit être prise en considération et la décision est définitive.

M. Rivers.— Si le sénateur d'Est-Féliciana eût fait sa motion le premier, elle eût pu être mise aux voix maintenant. Mais un autre membre en ayant donné avis la question est remise à demain. Quel est le but d'une reconsidération ? C'est de soumettre une question à une nouvelle épreuve, alors que les sénateurs qui étaient absents au moment du vote sont présents. Nous n'atteindrions pas ce but en reconsidérant maintenant, et de plus nous porterions atteinte aux droits du sénateur qui a fait la motion.

Le président décide que la motion de reconsidérer n'est pas en ordre.

M. Mouton.— Mon dessein n'est pas de causer du délai ; je ne demande qu'à exercer mes droits comme sénateur. Mon but en donnant avis que demain je demanderai la reconsidération, est de faire subir une nouvelle épreuve à la question en donnant aux membres le temps de réfléchir. Si nous votons maintenant, le résultat sera le même que le précédent, et le bill sera indubitablement adopté, parce qu'il est connu que la majorité des sénateurs présents l'approuve. Mais demain ces membres occuperont peut-être leurs siéges, ce qui fait changer le résultat. Mon collègue dit que mon avis n'est que l'expression d'une intention. Il n'en est pas ainsi. C'est comme avis que je ferai la motion. Je désire que le vote soit donné par un Sénat plus nombreux et alors je suis persuadé que le bill sera rejeté, malgré toutes ses perfections. Mon but est de soumettre le bill a une nouvelle épreuve, et l'honorable membre ne peut l'empêcher que par un appel de la decision du président, soutenu par le Senat.

M. Short.—Cela ne prouve pas qu'un simple avis doive l'emporter sur une motion. Je voterai pour la reconsidération immédiate.

M. Boatner— Je voterai pour soutenir la décision du président et cela pour deux raisons. D'abord par respect pour le membre qui a donné avis. Il dit que demain il présentera la motion, et je crois qu'il le fera. Il se base sur ce qu'il voudrait que le vote fut pris en présence d'une assemblée plus nombreuse, cela ne causera pas nécessairement la perte du bill; ce n'est que le remettre d'un jour. Ma seconde raison est, que je ne veux pas me rendre coupable d'un manque de courtoisie envers le président. Il est à présumer que le fonctionnaire qui nous préside connait les réglements du Sénat et que ses décisions sont justes. Je voterai donc pour maintenir la décision du président.

Digitized by Google

M King.—Mes collègues ne me semblent pas avoir une idée juste du but de la reconsidération. Il n'est pas d'avoir un Sénat plus nombreux, ni de donner l'occasion de voter à ceux qui ont pu se trouver absents; mais simplement de permettre à ceux qui auraient voté en erreur, de changer leur vote.

M. Griffin.— Je voterai pour maintenir la décision du président. J'ai lu les comptes-rendus des séances du Congrès et jamais je n'y ai vu qu'un avis de ce genre fut mis de côté par une motion de reconsidérer immédiatement. Je n'ai jamais rien vu de pareil et je ne pense pas que le Sénat le permette maintenant.

M. Boatner.— Si un sénateur annonçait son intention de présenter un bill, ne serait-il pas fort inconvenant qu'un autre membre le présentât immédiatement.

M. Palfrey.— Un de mes collègues a parlé de justice. Les intérêts de milliers de femmes mariées et de mineurs sont affectés par ce bill et la justice que nous leur devons exige qu'il soit soumis à l'opinion et au vote de tous les sénateurs

La décision du président est maintenue.

L'acte suivant est alors pris en considération et lu.

Acte pour amender l'article 312 du Code de Procédure.

Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en Assemblée Générale., Que l'article 312 du Code de Procédures, lequel est comme suit : si trois jours après que le premier jugement aura été rendu le défendeur ne paraît en cour ou ne fait pas sa réponse, un jugement définitif sera alors rendu en faveur du demandeur, pourvu qu'il prouve sa demande. Que cette preuve exigée dans tous les cas, soit et demeure amendée comme suit : si deux jours après que le premier jugement aura été rendu, le défendeur n'apparait pas en cour ni ne fait sa réponse, un jugement définitif sera alors donné en faveur du demandeur, pourvu qu'il prouve sa demande. Cette preuve est exigée dans tous les cas.

M. King.—Je trouve que le bill s'applique à la Nlle-Orléans aussi bien qu'aux paroisses rurales. Comme aucun changement n'est nécessaire dans cette ville, il me semble que la Nlle-Orléans devrait être exceptée des dispositions de cet acte.

M. Todd.— Je consens à ce que le bill soit amendé de manière à exclure la Nlle-Orléans.

M. Lacey.— Je propose d'exclure aussi les paroisses d'Est-Bâton-Rouge et de Livingston.

M. Short.—J'espère que l'honorable membre n'insistera pas sur son amendement. Je pense que la Nouvelle-Orléans est la seule paroisse qui ait droit à cette exception.

M. McCay.— Je ne vois pas pourquoi la Nouvelle-Orléans serait exceptée. Je voudrais même aller plus loin que le bill, et dispenser de la production des preuves, attendu qu'en faisant défaut le defendeur admet la justice de la demande.

M. King.—Si l'opinion de mon collègue prévalait, elle autoriserait un système général de spoliation. Mes commettants ne désirent aucun changement. La loi actuelle est bonne et ne donne lieu à aucune objection. Quand le peuple connaît une loi et qu'il y est accoutumé il ne faut pas la changer sans des raisons graves et importantes.

L'amendement est repoussé, et l'acte rejeté.

COLLEGE CENTENAIRE.

Le bill pour obliger les administrateurs du Collége Centenaire à payer la pension des jeunes gens pauvres qui y sont envoyés par l'Etat, est pris en considération.

M. Rivers.—J'espère, monsieur, que ce bill ne sera pas adopté. Il aura pour effet de faire peser une charge de plus sur le Collége Centenaire. Cet établissement est déjà obligé d'élever à ses frais un certain nombre de jeunes gens, et maintenant voulez qu'en outre il les loge et les nourrisse gratis. Cette demande aurait mauvaise grâce de la part de l'Etat, surtout si l'on prend en considération la perte occasionnée à l'établissement par l'incendie qui vient de dévorer une partie des bâtiments.

M. Boatner.—J'espère que le bill sera adopté. L'Etat a accordé $100,000 au collége, et je crois qu'il peut bien supporter cette charge, qui est d'ailleurs la seule que nous voulions lui imposer. Il n'en coûte pas beaucoup d'instruire les jeunes gens pauvres que nous y envoyons et l'intention évidente de la loi, lorsque la donation fut faite, était que l'entretien de ces jeunes gens fut à la charge du collége, pendant le séjour qu'ils y feraient. Sans cela les avantages qu'accorde la loi seraient illusoires, puisque ceux qui désireraient en profiter ne pourraient le faire à cause des dépenses. Le feu gouverneur appela votre attention sur ce sujet dans son message. L'incendie d'une partie des bâtiments du collége ne le dispense pas de remplir les obligations que la loi lui impose. Comme toutes les corporations, il est tenu à se conformer à l'esprit et non à la lettre de la loi.

M. Rivers.—Je ferai voir à l'honorable membre qu'il a agité une question qu'il ne comprend pas. Toutes les places dont l'Etat peut disposer dans le collége sont remplies, puisqu'il y a dix jeunes gens qui y sont élevés gratuitement. Pourquoi nous montrer exigeants avec le collége maintenant, et vouloir lui imposer de nouvelles dépenses lorsqu'il se trouve dans une position difficile et qu'il a essuyé des pertes. Mon collégue dit que des jeunes gens indigents ne peuvent pas profiter des avantages qu'accorde la loi parce qu'ils ne peuvent pas payer leur pension. Ce n'est pas là l'histoire des jeunes gens pauvres de ce pays. Remettez la décision de cette affaire de quelques jours et je me fais fort de prouver qu'on ne peut pas, avec justice, accuser cette institution de n'avoir pas rempli le contrat qui l'oblige à élever dix jeunes gens pauvres. Adopter ce bill en présence des pertes que l'incendie a causées à cet établissement lorsque nous savons que ses agents parcourent l'Etat pour solliciter des souscriptions pour lui venir en aide, et lorsque nous avons voté un bill qui lui permet de vendre une partie de ses terrains superflus, adopter ce bill maintenant, dis-je, serait nous rendre coupables d'oppression et d'injustice.

M. Short.—Je ne sais pas le montant de l'indemnité accordée au collége, mais si elle est de $100,000, je ne crois pas que ce que demande ce bill soit déraisonnable.

M Wickliffe.—Le comité d'instruction a fait un rapport favorable à ce bill parce que l'année dernière l'Etat a fait au collége un don considérable.

M. Rivers.— Je ne crois pas qu'il ait reçu un sou. Et quand même cela serait, nous avons fait un contrat et maintenant nous trouvons que nous avons accordé au collége des conditions trop avantageuses. Outre l'éducation de ces jeunes gens nous voulons qu'il se charge de leur pension. Nous pourrions tout aussi bien obliger le collége à les habiller et à leur fournir de l'argent pour leurs menus plaisirs et des voitures pour se promener le soir.

Le bill est renvoyé à un comité spécial.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

M. Stewart, messager spécial du Sénat, informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivants ainsi qu'aux amendements de la Chambre.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de Vickaburg, Shrevsport et du Texas.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que l'orateur a signé les actes suivants :

Acte pour émanciper Laura Ann Robb, épouse de Perry Dorman.

Acte pour amender un acte pour le réglement uniforme des électeurs dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, les paroisses d'Orléans et de Jefferson exceptées, approuvé le 1er juin 1846.

Acte pour créer un juge de paix et un constable additionnels dans et pour la paroisse des Rapides.

Acte pour émanciper Nancy Virginia Peck.

Acte pour autoriser Frédérick Stockel et Marie Prufer, sa femme, à adopter Louisa Wilhelmina Gerage.

Digitized by Google

Acte pour émanciper Charles Johnson, de la paroisse Ouest-Féliciana.

Et il demande la signature du président pour les dits actes.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants:

Acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriations pour l'année finissant le 31 mars 1853 et un acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat (le 1er district judiciaire excepté.)

MESSAGE DU GOUVERNEUR.

M. Hatch, secrétaire privé du gouverneur a approuvé et signé les actes suivants:

Acte pour venir au secours de l'arpenteur général de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriations pour les procédures criminelles jusqu'au 31 novembre 1852.

Acte pour émanciper John P Montamat.

Acte pour émanciper John Rhodes, de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Acte pour autoriser Frederick Stockel et Maria Prufer, sa femme, à adopter Louisa Wilhelmina Garner.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé: Acte pour le réglement uniforme des élections dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, les paroisses d'Orléans et de Jefferson exceptées, approuvé le 4er juin 1846.

Acte pour créer un juge de paix et un constable additionnels dans et pour la paroisse des Rapides.

Acte pour émanciper Nancy Virginia Peck.

Acte pour émanciper Laura Ann Robb, épouse de Perry Dorman.

Acte pour émanciper Charles Johnson, de la paroisse d'Ouest-Féliciana.

PESEURS DE COTON ET DE SUCRE.

Le Sénat prend alors en considération l'acte suivant qui est lu section par section.

Acte pour nommer des peseurs de sucre et de coton dans et pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Sect. 1ère—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en assemblée générale:

Qu'il sera nommé tous les deux ans par le Gouverneur par et avec le consentement du Sénat, douze peseurs de sucre et de coton pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Sect. 2me—Il est de plus décrété &c., Que les dits peseurs, après avoir été assermentés pour la fidèle exécution de leurs devoirs comme le prescrivent les dispositions de cet acte, devront fournir au trésorier d'Etat une sécurité suffisante pour la somme de mille piastres chacun pour l'accomplisement fidèle de leurs devoirs.

Sect. 3me.—Il de plus décrété &c., Que chacun des dits peseurs est par le présent autorisé à nommer un ou plusieurs députés qui seront assermentés, pour l'aider et l'assister dans l'exécution des devoirs de cette place, et chaque peseur sera responsable de la conduite fidèle de son député, en vertu de cet acte.

Sect. 4me—Il est de plus décrété &c., Que lesdits peseurs de sucre et de coton sont autorisés et requis de prélever un droit de dix pour cent pour chaque boucaut de sucre pesé par eux.

Sect. 5me—Il est de plus décreté &c, Que chaque balle de coton et chaque boucaut de sucre seront marqués du nom du peseur, le poids entier, sous peine d'une amende de dix piastres par chaque boucaut de sucre ou balle de coton pesé et non marqué par eux, recouvrable du dit peseur commettant ce délit, par devant toute cour compétente, au bénéfice de la personne qui le poursuivra pour le dit délit.

Sect. 6me—Il est de plus décrété &c, Que les dits peseurs recevront la compensation suivante et pas plus, payable par le propriétaire, le consignataire ou tout autre personne important ou faisant venir ledit coton ou sucre dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, savoir:

Dix sous pour le pesage de chaque boucaut de sucre ere et de chaque balle de coton.

Sect. 7me—Il est de plus décrété &c, Que les dits 12 peseurs dont et constitueront un bureau appelé «Bureau des Peseurs Publics.» Le dit bureau nommera ses officiers de son propre corps pour servir pendant la durée de leur temps, à moins qu'ils ne soient changés pour cause par un vote du bureau.

Sect. 8me—Il est de plus décrété &c, Que les devoirs de chacun des membres dudit bureau de peseurs seront également répartis et qu'à la fin de chaque mois, le montant des honoraires reçus par ledit bureau pour pesage de sucre et de coton, sera après en avoir retiré toutes les dépenses, également divisé entre ses membres.

Sect. 9me—Il est de plus décrété &c, Que tous les propriétaires, consignataires ou autres personnes important ou faisant venir le coton et le sucre dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, devront faire peser ledit coton ou sucre par un peseur du bureau des peseurs, quand ledit coton ou sucre sera vendu, sous peine d'une amende de dix piastres par chaque boucaut de sucre ou balle de coton non pesé et marqué par ledit bureau, recouvrable dudit propriétaire, consignataire ou autre personne ainsi en faute, par devant toute cour de juridiction compétente au bénéfice du dit bureau des peseurs publics.

Sect. 10me—Il est de plus décrété &c, Que toutes les lois contraires aux dispositions de cet acte sont et demeurent abrogées par le présent.

Sect. 11me.—Il est de plus décrété &c, Que cet acte aura force de loi immédiatement après sa passation.

M. King—Je n'ai pas entendu exprimer le désir d'un bill de cette espèce dans la société où je vis. Autrefois ces sortes de places existaient, mais elles ont été abolies depuis. Je suis opposé à cette politique incertaine et changeante, et je voterai contre le bill à moins que de bonnes raisons ne soient alléguées à son appui.

M. Nicholls—Ce bill n'est pas présenté pour le bénéfice de la Nouvelle-Orléans, mais pour celui des habitans des campagnes. Personnellement, je n'y ai pas le moindre intérêt, je ne suis en aucune manière intéressé dans les plantations. Mais les planteurs de mon Distriot m'ont instamment prié de rédiger un bill de cette espèce et de faire tous mes efforts pour qu'il soit adopté Il a pour but de les protéger contre les fraudes dont souvent ils sont victimes.

M. Todd—Je suis opposé à ce bill. Il ne présente pas une plus grande sécurité contre la fraude que ne le fait le système actuel. Les peseurs nommés par l'Etat sont aussi susceptibles de faire des erreurs que les autres. Le système des peseurs nommés par l'Etat a été essayé et abandonné aussitôt après. Il a été découvert que la fraude était plus grande alors que sous le système des peseurs ordinaires. Maintenant les peseurs sont responsables, ils sont choisis par les négociants intéressés, qui, par conséquent choisissent ceux en qui ils ont le plus de confiance.

M. Palfrey—On pourrait tout aussi bien faire un nouvel essai. Il y a un defaut dans la manière dont est pesé le sucre à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Quelques planteurs envoient leur sucre directement au Nord, et d'après les rendements du poid ils prouvent que leur sucre y pèse plus que celui qu'ils envoient à la Nouvelle-Orléans, quoique le sucre doive peser davantage à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Il y a là de quoi surprendre et il est certain qu'il existe à la Nouvelle-Orléans un défaut quelconque.

M. McCay—Je ne puis dire si je suis prêt à voter pour ou contre le bill attendu que je ne l'ai pas examiné. Mon opinion au sujet de ce bill est basée sur celle que m'a suggéré le pesage du tabac. Autrefois il y avait un comité de peseurs et d'inspecteurs de tabac, mais il a été aboli en 1848 ou 50. En présentant le mémoire contre l'abolition du système de peseurs volontaires, j'ai eu occasion de comparer les deux systèmes. Tous les négociants expéditeurs, acheteurs ou vendeurs de tabac, sans exception, ont protesté contre le rappel du système de peseurs volontaires. L'honorable membre dit que le bill n'a pas pour but de favoriser les négociants de la Nouvelle-Orléans, mais bien les planteurs. En 1848 nous avons reçu des pétitions de cultivateurs des différentes parties de l'Ouest, demandant l'abolition du système de l'inspection. Je suis prêt à prouver que maintenant ils sont opposés au rappel du système volontaire. Il y a donc parfait accord et identité d'intérêts entre les producteurs et les facteurs. Une autre objection au système officiel est que la mise en pratique coûtera le double de l'autre. Les planteurs du Mississipi ne veulent pas confier le pesage de leur coton à un comité de ce genre et les planteurs de cet Etat n'ont pas plus de raison qu'eux d'être en sa faveur. Je pense que les négociants devraient pouvoir employer qui bon leur semble; mais avant de savoir comment je vo-terai, j'ai besoin d'examiner le bill dans tous ses détails.

Digitized by Google

Avant de finir je désire faire une dernière remarque sur l'inspection du tabac.

J'ai eu occasion d'examiner le montant des réclamations et j'ai trouvé que sous le système officiel il dépassait dix fois celui des réclamations sous le système volontaire.

M. Nicholls—L'inspecteur ne fixait-il pas la qualité ?

M. McCay.—Oui.

M. Nicholls.—Alors mon objection n'est pas applicable. La question est de savoir si nous aurons un fonctionnaire responsable nommé par l'Etat qui apposera sa marque sur chaque boucaut de sucre ou chaque balle de coton, ou bien, si le pesage sera fait par une personne non responsable.

M. McCay.—Je fais la motion de faire imprimer le bill. Je veux l'examiner et le prendre en considération avant de donner mon vote.

M. Wickliffe.—Je désire établir un fait. Je fus requis par quelques-uns de mes commettants de présenter un bill de ce genre dans la dernière session. Ils disent que leur coton pèse plus chez eux qu'à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et c'est une plainte générale dans tout l'Etat. Je voterai en faveur du bill parce que selon moi, il fera beaucoup de bien et peu de mal.

M. Nicholls.—Je suis opposé à l'ajournement de ce bill parce que je crois qu'il a été imprimé. Le tabac ne se trouve pas dans le même cas que le sucre et le coton. C'était le devoir des inspecteurs de tabac, non seulement de le peser mais de le classer. D'après le bill en question le peseur n'a pas à s'occuper de déterminer la classification du sucre et du coton. La question est de savoir si nous aurons des peseurs de coton et de sucre responsables. Pour ma part je n'ai aucune expérience pratique ni aucun intérêt particulier, si ce n'est de servir ceux de mes constituants qui m'ont envoyé ici. Ils m'ont demandé de présenter un bill de ce genre. Ils m'ont assuré qu'il y avait de la fraude et de la corruption à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Je désire qu'ils soient garantis contre ces abus autant qu'il dépend de la législation de le faire. Je suis convaincu que ce bill préviendra la fraude et sera très profitable à nos planteurs.

M. Slack.—Je puis parler pour les intérêts des producteurs de sucre, et je n'hésite pas à dire qu'ils ont besoin de protection. Pour ce qui est du coton je n'ai rien à dire. Ce qui a été dit au sujet du tabac ne s'applique pas à la question. Nous dépendons maintenant de la probité des peseurs. Les réclamations ne sont pas garanties sous l'ancien système. J'ai acheté des barils de porc et le vendeur lui-même ne pouvait pas me garantir que les barils continssent du porc. Ceci démontre que sous l'empire du système volontaire il n'y a point de certitude. Il nous faut des peseurs responsables, nommés pour marquer chaque boucaut de sucre et chaque balle de coton afin d'éviter toute erreur. Nous avons le droit de le réclamer.

M. Tood.—Je pense qu'il s'est passé assez de temps pour connaître le mauvais côté du système volontaire. La question est de savoir si le bill y remédiera.

M. Nicholls.—Je ne tiens pas particulièrement à ce bill. Qu'il soit considéré par section et que des amendements, suivant les objections, soient faits en conséquence. Si dix cents est de trop n'en donnons que cinq, et si douze peseurs ne suffisent pas, prenons en d'avantage. Je suis prêt à modifier le bill de manière qu'il convienne à tout le monde.

M. King.—J'ai quelques mots à dire à ce sujet. D'abord il y a un principe auquel je m'attache beaucoup: c'est celui de laisser tout le monde faire ses affaires comme il l'entend. Nous ne devons nous occuper que de ce qui concerne le gouvernement. Je professe la liberté du commerce dans toute l'acception du mot, aussi bien sur terre que sur mer. Le bill est en contradiction avec ce principe. En quoi consiste le système actuel ? Plusieurs de mes collègues disent que des fraudes considérables se commettent. Mais, comme l'a fort bien dit le sénateur de Morehouse, y a-t-il une certitude que le bill proposé préviendra les abus? L'acheteur et le vendeur ont le droit de choisir leurs peseurs. Il en est de toutes les transactions comme du commerce de chevaux; si tout le monde est d'accord, tout est bien. Dans le cas contraire l'affaire ne se fait pas. Je ne vois pas l'utilité de demander l'intervention de la Législature pour décider leurs différends. Qu'elles décident eux-mêmes. L'honorable membre dit qu'on commet des fraudes. S'il en est ainsi, je lui conseillerai de changer de commissionnaire. Si le négociant favorise la fraude au détriment des planteurs, c'est un malhonnête homme qui ne mérite pas la confiance d'autrui. Si l'on ne peut pas trouver un seul honnête homme à la Nouvelle-Orléans, que mon collègue aille y vendre son sucre lui-même. Je suis d'avis de laisser la chose entièrement aux soins du vendeur et de l'acheteur. C'est eux qu'elle regarde. Doit-on supposer qu'un homme deviendra meilleur peseur parce qu'il sera nommé par l'Etat. Ne voyez-vous pas qu'en nommant un employé dont la parole est la loi elle-même et dont la décision est sans appel, vous stimulez la fraude et vous encouragez la corruption? Vous fournissez l'occasion d'apposer frauduleusement une marque, supérieure ou inférieure au poids réel. Comme les choses vont maintenant, le peseur agit comme agent du vendeur et de l'acheteur. Pour ce qui est de la Nouvelle-Orléans: si j'avais proposé les nominations de dix ou douze peseurs, on aurait pu dire que j'avais quelques personnes à faire nommer; mais je parle en faveur des neuf dixièmes des commissionnaires de la ville. Le système actuel protège le planteur parce qu'il est représenté par son agent à la Nouvelle-Orléans. Si ces messieurs ont eu la main malheureuse en choisissant leurs commissionnaires, ils n'ont qu'à en changer. Le salaire de ces douze peseurs s'élèverait au moins à $1,500 chacun. Si j'avais demandé la nomination d'une douzaine d'employés aux appointemens de $1,500 par an chacun, on m'aurait certainement accusé de demander pour la Nlle-Orléans plus que ce qui lui revient, Le pesage du sucre reviendra annuellement à environ $12,500 et celui du coton à $2,500. Cette somme est assez ronde et vaut bien la peine qu'on se la dispute. Si j'étais sûr d'être en faveur auprès du gouvernement je me porterais candidat moi-même.

(Ici un membre du Sénat dit que le taux fixé par la Chambre de Commerce est maintenant de 10c.

M, King—La Chambre de Commerce ne fait pas de lois. L'usage est de faire payer un certain taux, mais il n'y a là rien d'officiel. Je puis même dire qu'il y a des lois contre les pesages frauduleux.

M: Wickliffe.—L'honorable membre dit qu'il représente les neuf-dixièmes des commissionnaires de la Nlle-Orléans. Je dois lui dire que nous représentons les dix-dixièmes des planteurs de la Louisiane, Si le planteur désire un homme responsable nommé pour peser son coton et son sucre, je ne vois pas que le commissionnaire ait le droit de s'en plaindre. Ce n'est pas lui qui paiera la taxe. Mon collègue dit qu'il y a des lois qui punissent les pesages frauduleux. Il y en a pour toute espèce de fraude; mais ici nous avons une garantie, une sécurité. Le peseur est forcé de fournir une caution. Si son poids est faux, la caution devient responsable. Je dis que les commissionnaires ne représentent pas les intérêts du planteur. Du moment où la récolte est expédiée, il est de leur intérêt d'en obtenir le plus qu'ils pourront Je ne veux pas insinuer qu'ils commettent des fraudes, mais je nie que leurs intérêts soient les mêmes que ceux des planteurs.

M. Mouton.—Je trouve le bill bon, à l'exception de la somme considérable à payer. Le bill est utile aux planteurs, mais $15,000 par an, c'est beaucoup trop, malgré qu'il s'agisse des intérêts du planteur. L'honorable membre nous a conseillé de changer nos commissionnaires ou de vendre notre sucre nous-mêmes, si on nous trompe. Il sait que nous ne pouvons le faire. Le commissionnaire est un mal nécessaire. J'espère que nous pourrons nous en débarrasser quand les chemins de fer seront établis et que nous pourrons nous rendre plus facilement à la Nlle-Orléans.

M. Taylor fait la motion de mettre l'acte à l'ordre du jour pour mercredi prochain, et qu'il soit ordonné à l'impression.

M. Nicholls demande que cette motion soit déposée indéfiniment sur le bureau et demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Dupré, Griffin, Lacey, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack et Wickliffe votent pour le dépôt—12 voix.

Messieurs Evans, King, Lauve, Lewis, McCay, Taylor et Todd votent contre—7 voix.

Digitized by Google

Conséquemment, la motion de déposer sur le bureau est rejetée

Sur la motion de M. Taylor d'effacer dans la 1ère section : «12 peseurs de sucre et de coton» et de mettre : «vingt.»

M. Taylor demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs King, Lauve, Mouton, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack et Taylor votent pour—9 voix

Messieurs Boatner, Dupré, Evans, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, McCay, Neal, Short, Todd et Wickliffe votent contre—11 voix.

Par conséquent la motion d'effacer est rejetée.

Sur motion d'adopter la première section, M. Lacey demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Dupré, Evans, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, Lewis, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor et Wickliffe votent pour—15 voix.

Messieurs Evans, King, Lauve, McCay et Todd votent contre—5 voix.

Conséquemment la première section est adoptée.

Sur motion, la 3me section est amendée en insérant dans la 2me ligne après le mot «nommer» les mots «un ou plusieurs» et, sur motion, la section est adoptée telle qu'amendée.

Sur motion d'adopter la 4me section, M. King demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Dupré, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor et Wickliffe votent pour—14 voix.

Messieurs Evans, King, Lauve, Lewis, McCay et Todd votent contre—6 voix.

Conséquemment, la quatrième section est adoptée.

Sur motion de M. Palfrey, ce vote est repris en considération.

M. Palfrey fait la motion d'effacer toute la 4me section.

M. Griffin demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Dupré, Kemp, King, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent pour—17 voix.

Messieurs Evans, Griffin et Mouton votent contre—3 non.

Conséquemment la 4ème section est rejetée.

M. Griffin fait la motion de déposer l'acte indéfiniment sur le bureau, et demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Evans, Griffin, King, Lauve, Mc Cay et Todd votent pour—6 voix.

MM. Boatner, Dupré, Kemp, Lacey, Lewis, Mouton, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor et Wickliffe votent contre—14 voix.

La motion de déposer l'acte indéfiniment sur le bureau est rejetée.

Sur motion de M. Taylor, les mots « sans aucun droit de pesage sur les boucauts de sucre » sont insérées dans la 5me section, 3me ligne après le mot «peseur» et le mot «entier» est inséré dans la même ligne. La section telle qu'amendée est adoptée.

Sur motion, le mot «cinq» est effacé de la 6me section dans la 5me ligne et «huit» est inséré.

M. Mouton fait la motion d'effacer «huit» et de mettre «six» et demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Boatner, Griffin, Lauve, Mc Cay, Mouton, Neal, Palfrey, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe votent pour—10 voix.

MM. Dupré, Evans, Kemp, King, Lacey, Lewis, Nicholls, Rivers, Short et Slack votent contre—10 voix.

Les voix étant également partagées le président vote contre.

Conséquemment la motion d'effacer est rejetée et ces mots «huit cents» par boucaut de sucre et cinq cents par balle de coton est adoptée.

La 6me section est alors adoptée telle qu'amendée.

La 7me section est adoptée.

La 8me section est rejetée.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, le vote donné sur le sujet de la 8me section est reconsidéré, et sur motion, cette section est adoptée.

La 9me section est adoptée.

Sur motion, l'acte passe tel qu'amendé.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de reconsidérer le vote donné sur la passation finale de l'acte.

M. Lacey demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Evans, King, et Todd votent pour—3 voix.

MM. Boatner, Dupré, Griffin, Kemp, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack et Wickliffe votent pour—16 voix.

Par conséquent le Sénat refuse de reconsidérer le vote donné.

Sur motion, le Sénat s'ajourne jusqu'à demain à neuf heures A. M.

BILLS ADOPTES.

Acte pour amender l'article 911 du Code de Procédure.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin en planches de Grosse-Tête et de Bâton Rouge.

M. Todd demande la prise en considération des actes suivants et auxquels le Sénat donne son concours.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de Wicksburg, Shreveport et du Texas.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par les collecteurs de taxes d'Etat.

Acte pour venir au secours de Charles W. Boyce de la paroisse des Rapides.

Acte pour pourvoir au transfert de toutes les affaires maintenant pendantes devant la Cour Suprême de l'Etat, établi d'après la constitution de 1845 à la Cour Suprême établie en vertu de la Nouvelle Constitution.

Acte pour pour venir au secours de Henry Parish et John Moore Norman de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Acte pour autoriser les femmes mariées absentes de l'Etat à nommer des agents dans certains cas.

Acte pour venir au secours de E. H. Skillman.

MARDI, 12 avril 1853.

Judiciaire de l'Etat.

M. Wickliffe demande la prise en considération de l'acte suivant :

Acte relatif au Judiciaire de l'Etat. (Le premier district excepté.

Sect. 1re—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en assemblée générale, qu'il sera élu dans et pour chaque district judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district judiciaire excepté, par les votants qualifiés des dits districts, un juge, qui servira pendant quatre ans, lequel recevra un salaire de deux mille cinq cents piastres par an, payable par quartier, sur son propre mandat de tout fonds du tresorier non autrement approprié.

M. Mouton fait la motion d'effacer de la 1re section dans la huitième ligne, «deux mille cinq cents piastres» et d'insérer «trois mille piastres.»

J'ai voté pour donner trois mille cinq cents dollars aux juges de la ville Puisque le système que nous avons adopté impose de nouveaux devoirs aux juges de la campagne, nous devons augmenter leurs appointements. Il n'y a pas de raison pour une telle disproportion entre la rétribution que nous donnons aux juges de la ville et celle que reçoivent ceux de la campagne. Ces derniers auront presque autant d'occupations que les premiers, et leur charge n'exige ni moins de talents, ni moins d'instruction. Je ne vois donc pas pourquoi ils ne seraient pas placés sur un pied d'égalité.

M. Todd—Je suis opposé à l'amendement. Les juges n'auront guère plus d'occupations ; et si nous avons accordé des émoluments trop élevés aux juges de la ville, ce n'est pas une raison pour que nous fassions la même chose pour les juges de la campagne. Je suis d'ailleurs convaincu qu'on peut se procurer les services des hommes les plus capables pour deux mille cinq cents dollars.

M. Short—Si les juges n'étaient pas obligés de tenir quatre termes au lieu de deux, je ne me prononcerais pas en faveur d'une augmentation d'appointements. Mais en abandonnant le système des grands districts, en refusant d'établir des Cours des Preuves, et en exigeant quatre termes par an, nous avons multiplié les travaux des juges. Au lieu de leur donner moins qu'aux juges de la Nouvelle-Orléans, qui ne sont jamais forces de quitter leurs foyers et qui ont comparativement une tâche facile, nous devrions les payer davantage.

Digitized by Google

M. Boatner—Le système que nous avons adopté n'établit qu'un district de plus que l'ancien et n'impose que fort peu d'obligations aux juges. Ils ont eu coutume de recevoir deux mille cinq cents dollars, et ils peuvent tout aussi bien se contenter de cette somme sous le régime du système actuel. Quelques-uns de mes collègues ont fait grand bruit des dépenses immenses qu'occasionnerait le système des grands districts. Ils ont beaucoup parlé d'économie, et d'épargner à l'Etat quelques milliers de piastres, et ils sont les premiers à proposer une augmentation de dépense de huit ou neuf mille dollars. Je n'en vois pas la nécessité. Les devoirs à remplir ne sont pas beaucoup plus onéreux et il y a fort peu de districts de plus de trois paroisses C'est une tâche que peut aisément accomplir un homme compétent. Les juges de la campagne auront beaucoup moins à faire que ceux de la ville ; deux mille cinq cents dollars sont une somme amplement suffisante, et un chiffre plus élevé ne nous assurerait pas des hommes plus capables.

M. Mouton—Je sais qu'on se figure généralement que toutes les mesures tendant à accroître les dépenses de l'Etat, sont impopulaires. Les hommes politiques s'en emparent, pour s'en faire un cheval de bataille aux élections. Mais je ne crains pas de prendre cette responsabilité, quand ces mesures sont nécessaires pour nous assurer des fonctionnaires compétents ; quand il s'agit d'obtenir les services d'hommes, entre les mains desquels nous remettons nos droits et nos libertés. Ce sont des fonctions importantes et qui imposent de lourdes responsabilités. Elles ne doivent pas être confiées à la légère à des personnes qui ne sont pas à la hauteur de cette tâche. Il nous faut pour la remplir des hommes dont la valeur morale égale l'intelligence et le savoir, et nous ne pouvons obtenir de tels fonctionnaires qu'en leur donnant de bons appointemens. Trois mille piastres n'est certainement pas trop. L'argument que deux mille cinq cents dollars est assez, se fonde sur ce que nous avons eu de bons juges pour cette somme. Il est vrai que nous en avons eu de bons dans quelques districts, mais cet argument n'est pas valable ; nous voulons de bons juges dans tous les districts. J'ai voté trois mille cinq cents piastres aux juges de la ville ; pourquoi en donnerions-nous mille de moins à ceux de la campagne ? N'ont-ils pas les mêmes devoirs à remplir ? Ne faut-il pas qu'ils aient le même talent ? Ne doivent-ils pas être des hommes respectables et compétents ? Et s'il en est ainsi, pourquoi établirions-nous une différence dans leurs appointements ?

M. Wickliffe—J'entends avec surprise les objections présentées par le sénateur de Catahoula. Il était en faveur du système des grands districts qui eût occasionné une dépense de plus de cent mille piastres par an. Maintenant que nous avons accru les obligations des juges, il objecte à ce que nous leur donnions $3,000 par an. En admettant que les appointements soient fixés à cette somme et que l'honorable membre soit comme nous partisan des économies, ce sera encore soixante mille piastres ou environ soixante pour cent de moins que sous le système qu'il défendait avec tant de chaleur ; et je ne doute pas que, sur une question d'économie, l'honorable membre ne soit de notre avis. Dans mon district, le juge peut à peine suffire à l'expédition des affaires ; il lui faudra neuf mois d'un travail incessant pour y arriver et il est décidé à le faire, s'il a le bonheur d'être élu par le peuple.

M. Palfrey.—J'approuve l'amendement. Le sénateur de Morehouse dit que les juges n'auront pas beaucoup plus d'occupations, pour peu qu'ils en aient davantage, nous devons augmenter leurs appointements. La rétribution doit être proportionnée au travail. Il faut aussi que nous ayons des hommes capables et expérimentés. Nous devons donc leur offrir des émoluments qui puissent les décider à quitter leur clientèle. Quand un avocat renonce à sa clientèle pour une place de juge, il y renonce pour toujours. Il ne la retrouvera pas, si jamais il retourne au barreau; il ne la reprendra pas où il l'a laissée—tout sera à recommencer. Personnellement je n'ai pas le moindre intérêt dans la question, je ne suis pas avocat, mais je désire voir nos lois bien administrées et voir siéger dans nos Cours des hommes compétents, qui soient l'ornement de notre ordre judiciaire et dont les décisions inspirent du respect à la société. Il n'y a qu'un moyen d'arriver à ce but. Nous ne pouvons espérer d'avoir de bons juges, si nous ne leur offrons que de minimes appointements. Payons donc une somme raisonnable et nous aurons de bons juges.

M. Todd.—Cette question a souffert déjà beaucoup de retard et si nous adoptons l'amendement, nous en causerons encore davantage. Il se peut que la Chambre n'y donne pas son concours et dans ce cas le différent ne pourra se régler sans une grande perte de temps. Mes collègues parlent du surcroît d'occupations que ce système impose aux juges ; je prétends qu'il n'y a pas de surcroît du tout. En tenant quatre termes par an le travail n'est pas augmenté, seulement les affaires s'expédient plus rapidement. Il n'y a pas de raison pour qu'en Louisiane nous payions plus que partout ailleurs. La tâche est plus lourde dans d'autres Etats, et nous n'avons pas, que je sache, des juges plus capables ici. La vie n'est pas plus chère. Il est temps que nous commencions l'œuvre de la réforme et que nous prêtions l'oreille aux vœux du peuple qui nous demande une admistration plus économique de ses affaires. Sommes-nous devenus tellement mercenaires qu'on ne recherche une place, ou qu'on ne l'accepte que dans la seule vue des émolumens qui y sont attachés ? N'y a-t-il pas d'autre motif, pas de plus noble attrait, pas d'ambition plus elevée ? Nous devons, il est vrai, établir dans les appointements une gradation qui nous permette de nous adresser à des hommes de talent, mais nous devons nous arreter à ce point. Il n'y a pas de raison pour que nous élevions les appointements de nos juges maintenant. La somme qu'on payait était regardée comme suffisante autrefois, et elle doit l'être aussi pour l'avenir.

M. Boatner.—Je ne sais pas sur quoi le sénateur de West-Feliciana [M. Wickliffe] a basé ses chiffres ; mes calculs me donnent un résultat entièrement différent. La différence entre son calcul et le mien se monte à $70,000. Ce système des grands districts n'aurait coûté que $80,000, au lieu de $150,000 comme le disait l'honorable membre. Je me suis declaré en faveur de ce système parce que je croyais que c'était le vœu du peuple. D'autres ont été d'un avis contraire et je ne doute pas qu'ils ne fussent sincères dans leurs convictions : quand le peuple désire une chose, il est du devoir d'un représentant de faire tout son possible pour l'obtenir, il représente l'opinion de ses commettans, non la sienne propre. Je soutiens qu'il n'y a aucune raison pour élever les appointements des juges. Les districts ne sont pas plus étendus qu'ils ne l'étaient autrefois, chaque juge n'a pas un espace plus considérable à parcourir et les charges n'ont pas été rendues plus lourdes. Il est vrai qu'ils sont obligés de tenir quatre termes, mais mes collègues se rappelleront que lorsque ce système judiciaire fut d'abord établi sous l'empire de la constitution de 1845, les juges devaient tenir quatre termes, ce qui dura jusqu'à ce que les avocats présentassent une pétition pour que le nombre des termes fût réduit, se fondant sur ce qu'il n'y avait pas assez d'affaires pour en occuper autant. Il y avait alors des avocats qui s'estimaient heureux de devenir juges, et qui acceptaient leur siége sans murmurer contre la modicité des émoluments. On ne prétendait pas que nous ne pouvions obtenir des hommes compétents sans augmenter les appointements. Si les membres de l'autre parti peuvent me produire une seule bonne raison, je consens à voter avec eux. Mais je ne puis me défendre de croire que les appointements sont assez élevés, quand je vois des hommes de talents dans nos cours. Deux d'entre eux ont été promus à la Cour Suprême, ce qui me semble parler assez haut en faveur de leur capacité. Cela prouve que nous pouvons nous procurer des hommes compétents aux appointements actuels. Le sénateur de West-Feliciana (M. Wickliffe) parle du rude travail qui pèse sur le juge de son district ; je ne révoque pas en doute ce qu'il dit, mais dans ce cas, ce district doit être une exception. Le sénateur de Morehouse [M. Todd], nous a dit que dans son district la Cour ne siégeait quelquefois pas plus d'une semaine par an ; et cependant vous voulez donner au juge $3,000—trois mille piastres pour une semaine de travail ! Mes collègues ne trouvent-ils pas cela un peu exhorbitant ? Ne leur semble-t-il pas que ce soit un peu trop ? Devons-nous payer une aussi grosse somme pour d'aussi minces services ? Je le répète, je ne vois aucun motif pour une augmentation d'appointements. Je crois avoir voté contre la pro-le, ition tendant à accorder $3,500 aux juges de la vi-possinon, j'aurais dû le faire.

Digitized by Google

M. Short.—J'ai un mot à dire en réponse. Mon collègue demande quelles charges additionnelles nous imposons aux juges. S'il était obligé d'aller deux fois au moulin tandis qu'il n'y allait qu'une fois auparavant, ne le considérerait-il pas comme une charge de plus. S'il devait aujourd'hui traverser à la nage un bayou, qui fût deux fois aussi large qu'il l'était hier, ne croirait-il pas faire un travail double. Constatons les faits. Dans mon district, composé des paroisses de Tensas, Madison et Carroll, il y a deux termes par an dans chaque comte. Quand ce système judiciaire fut établi sous l'empire de la Constitution de 1845, il y avait quatre termes par an dans chaque paroisse. Ce plan a été abandonné depuis.

L'honorable membre sait-il qu'il y a dans ce district des avocats qui aspirent à l'honneur de devenir juges, mais qui sont positivement trop pauvres pour l'accepter ? Et maintenant nous avons porté le nombre des termes à quatre. Comme les Egyptiens qui demandaient aux Hébreux une quantité double de briques pour la même quantité de paille, nous demandons précisément le double de travail pour des appointements moindres ; et cela aux juges de la campagne pour lesquels les dépenses occasionnées par leurs fonctions doivent être considerables. Par exemple, dans mon district, le juge est obligé de prendre le bateau à vapeur pour aller d'une paroisse à une autre, ce qui lui coûte six piastres par l'aller et autant pour le venir, un item qui compte. L'honorable membre n'a-t-il jamais songé à ces dépenses ? S'il l'a fait, qu'il calcule qu'elles sont doublées ; que le travail est doublé ; que dans le cours de ses pérégrinations l'infortune juge est forcé de supporter toute sorte de désagrémens; de loger dans des auberges écartées dont la monotonie n'est rompue que par les vives attaques des puces et des punaises, et d'endurer d'innombrables privations.

M. Wickliffe.—Mon collègue parle de son district.

M. Short.—Je parle des endroits que j'ai parcourus comme avocat pratiquant depuis 1836.

J'ai eu à combattre l'alliance des puces et des punaises combinées ; j'en parle avec connaissance de cause ! Et vous proposez de doubler tout cela et de ne donner que $2,500 par an.

L'amendement est adopté et le bill passe.

Message de la chambre.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la chambre, demande la signature du président pour un acte intitulé :

Acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts judiciaires et il demande le concours du Sénat pour un acte intitulé : Acte pour retirer de la vente, de la location et du droit de préemption certaines terres appartenant à l'Etat.

Judiciaire de la ville.

M. King demande la prise en considération du bill de la chambre intitulé :

Acte pour organiser les cours de district pour la paroisse et ville de la Nlle-Orléans.

Un amendement est présenté, référant le jugement des affaires peu importantes aux recorders.

M. Todd.—Il y a contre cet amendement une objection tirée de la Constitution, qui dit que tout procès doit se faire sur accusation ou poursuite.

M. McCay.—L'objet de l'amendement est simplement de donner juridiction sur ces affaires aux recorders, ce qui n'implique pas nécessairement que les procès ne doivent pas se faire sur accusation ou poursuite.

L'amendement est adopté.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des hypothèques, etc.

Conformément à l'avis préalable donné par lui, Mr Mouton fait la motion de de réconsidérer le vote donné hier sur un acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

M. Nicholls—J'espère que la motion de reconsiderer le vote adoptant le bill intitulé :

« Acte pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement des titres des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées »—prévaudra. Il n'a encore été soumis à cette législature aucun bill aussi important que celui-ci, aucun où le peuple de l'Etat soit aussi généralement et aussi immédiatement intéressé ; aucun qui exige un examen aussi approfondi, et dont la décision précipitée ou nuisible aux intérêts du public, soit de nature à entrainer des pertes et des désastres aussi étendus. Cependant chose étrange, on a laissé passer ce bill sans amendements et sans débats. On propose un changement important, radical, dans nos lois et nos institutions, et on ne donne au peuple aucune raison pour un tel changement. Pourquoi cela ? A cause des éloges donnés au bill par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans (M. King.) Le sénat croit-il avoir trouvé enfin cette merveille, qu'il n'a pas encore été donné au monde de contempler,—un bill parfait ? Est-ce parceque M. Rosélius et d'autres avocats l'ont approuvé, que nous devons l'adopter sans discussion, et qu'il ne nous est pas permis d'en examiner les dispositions ? Devons-nous soumettre notre jugement au leur ? Pas une voix ne peut-elle s'élever dans cette enceinte ? J'espère pour ma part que la réflexion reprendra ses droits et que le bill sera reconsidéré. Je dois dire que les honorables membres ont pris l'ombre pour la réalité. En voulant faire enrégistrer les titres d'une certaine classe d'hypothèques de manière à sauvegarder les intérêts de l'acheteur de bonne foi, ils ont dépassé de beaucoup le but qu'ils se proposaient. Le bill est intitulé : « Acte pour pourvoir à l'enrégistement des titres des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées. » Il n'y a rien à redire à ce titre et si le corps du bill y correspondait, qui pourrait s'opposer à son adoption ? Il est également évident que le peuple veut protéger les droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées, et qu'un sénateur qui se déclarerait opposé à ce désir et qui s'efforcerait de détruire la garantie qu'ont maintenant ces droits, n'oserait plus se représenter devant ses constituants. Il a été reconnu qu'un système d'hypothèques tacites était le mode le plus sûr et le meilleur, pour protéger et sauvegarder ces intérêts. Ce système est aussi vieux que notre jurisprudence et il nous a régi jusqu'à ce jour. Nous avons grandi sous ce système, un long usage nous y a accoutumés et nous ne l'abolirons que lorsque nous serons certains de pouvoir le remplacer par un meilleur. Je ne nie pas qu'il n'en resulte quelquefois des injustices et des difficultés ; que parfois, même souvent, il peut causer la ruine de personnes innocentes. Mais ce sont là des abus qu'il appartient au sage législateur de réformer et de corriger. Je suis prêt à donner mon appui à toute mesure qui arrivera à ce résultat, en convertissant ces hypothèques inconnues en connues. J'appuierai un bill qui oblige les curateurs et les tuteurs à enregistrer toute pièce dont puisse résulter une hypothèque, dans toutes les paroisses où leur pupille à des propriétés ; et je consens à punir sévèrement toute négligence à remplir cette obligation. Mais tout en protégeant l'acheteur de bonne foi, je ne puis oublier que les mineurs et les femmes mariées ont des droits que je ne sacrifierais jamais par mon vote : quel effet aurait ce bill ? Il dit aux maris, aux curateurs et à tous ceux auxquels les biens des mineurs et des femmes mariées sont confiés : si vous manquez à votre devoir, si vous ne remplissez pas les obligations que la loi vous impose, la peine en tombera, non sur vous qui êtes les coupables mais sur ceux qui sont innocents. Qu'importe qu'ils ne puissent pas agir par eux-mêmes, qu'importe que la faute soit à d'autres, il faut qu'ils soient victimes, parce que la loi l'a disposé ainsi. La Louisiane a vu au firmament une aurore boréale, et il faut qu'elle entre dans une voie nouvelle. Y êtes-vous préparés ? Consentirez-vous à ce qu'une femme perde son hypothèque, parce qu'un mari indigne, négligé ses devoirs! à ce qu'un mineur soit abandonné à la tendre merci de personnes intéressées et irresponsables, parce qu'un commis négligent aura omis d'enrégistrer les titres ? La loi serait donc une dérision ! Il y a plus : non content de priver les mineurs et les femmes mariées de tout autre droit que ceux que le mari ou le tuteur voudra bien leur accorder en se conformant à la loi, l'auteur du bill veut encore lui donner un effet rétroactif et en étendre les dispositions à toutes les hypothèques maintenant existantes. Peu importe que le mari dissipe la fortune de sa femme, s'il a négligé de se conformer aux prescriptions de la loi ; peu importe que ces droits soient des droits garantis et que la constitution déclare qu'on ne sera pas dépouillé de ces droits : tout doit céder devant ce bill parfait. Il faut s'incliner devant la nouvelle doctrine et se résígner à leur perte. Je crois que le Sénat n'a pas compris le tendance de ce bill quand il l'a adopté.

Digitized by Google

Examinons-le un peu plus à fond. Il exige qu'à un jour fixé, les commis des Cours consultent leurs registres, afin de s'assurer du nom des personnes qui ont été tuteurs, curateurs, &c. Ils doivent ensuite lancer des citations, sommant les dites personnes d'enregistrer les titres des hypothèques sises sur leurs propriétés ; et faute à eux de comparaître, d'autres doivent être nommés à leur place. Avez-vous réfléchi aux conséquences probables de ce plan ? Pouvez-vous dire quel en sera le résultat. Quelle garantie avez-vous si le tuteur a quitté l'Etat et ne peut pas se rendre à la citation ? Le mineur perd-il son hypothèque, perd-il ses droits ? Il faudrait que nous nous adressions à un Yankee pour deviner où l'enregistrement doit être fait en pareil cas, puisque le bill exige qu'il soit fait dans chaque paroisse où le tuteur ou curateur absent est supposé avoir des propriétés. Et puis quelle garantie a le mineur si le tuteur a pris possession des biens et les a dissipés ? Quel recours lui laisse la loi ? Si un homme épouse une veuve, quelle garantie lui donne cet acte. Pour ma part, je crois que l'ancien système avec tous ses défauts, réels et imaginaires, est de beaucoup préférable à celui que propose ce bill. Je ne suis pas irrévocablement attaché au système des hypothèques tacites ; je suis au contraire en faveur de l'enregistrement des titres de toutes les hypothèques, je veux que l'acquéreur puisse faire son acquit avec quelque sûreté. Mais ce que je n'approuve pas est qu'on dise aux maris, tuteurs, curateurs, &c., vous ferez telle et telle chose, et si vous négligez de le faire, la peine en retombera sur des innocents. J'aime à croire que le bill sera reconsidéré.

M. Lacey—Je n'ai pas l'intention d'entrer dans une longue discussion sur ce bill, cependant je ne puis m'empêcher de dire quelques mots en faveur de son adoption. Tout le monde admet que ce bill est de la plus haute importance et qu'il vise à la destruction d'abus dont l'existence est généralement reconnue. Je ne doute pas que l'honorable préopinant ne soit favorable au principe qui est mis en avant dans le bill. Mais s'il est reellement en faveur de ce principe, s'il désire sincèrement porter remède aux abus qui soulèvent tant de plaintes et causent tant de dommages, j'espère qu'il ne persistera pas dans une voie qui ne peut manquer de conduire le bill à sa perte ; le reconsidérer équivaut à le rejeter. S'il a besoin de perfectionnements, je ne doute pas que le Sénat n'aide l'honorable membre à rédiger un bill additionnel. Quand ce bill fut soumis au comité judiciaire, nous y donnâmes toute notre attention ; il fut approuvé par la majorité du comité ainsi que par nombre d'avocats distingués qui, ainsi que nous l'apprend le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M. King], furent consultés sur ce sujet. On ne peut nier, ce me semble, qu'il atteigne le but dans lequel il a été présenté. S'il est imparfait, c'est que c'est une œuvre humaine. Quand l'homme a-t-il jamais produit quelque chose de parfait ? Où trouverez-vous un être humain qui soit infaillible ? Quoique l'honorable membre veuille faire pour la protection des droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées, mon appui lui est acquis, pourvu qu'il nous donne ses idées sous la forme d'un bill. Il dit que le système actuel se recommande par son ancienneté. Je me soucie fort peu de l'ancienneté d'une loi ou d'un système. Peu m'importe qu'une institution arrive jusqu'à nous marquée au sceau du temps. Ces considérations n'ont aucune influence sur moi. Si les progrès des idées et la marche des améliorations nous ordonnent de renoncer aux traditions du passé, je le ferai de grand cœur. Le système des hypothèques tacites est mauvais ; c'est un fait reconnu. Il est évidemment de notre intérêt de favoriser l'entrée des capitaux dans notre Etat. Mais il ne faut pas y songer aussi longtemps, que les hypothèques tacites, cette entrave qui pèse sur nous, s'opposera à nos plans et à notre prospérité. Aussi longtemps qu'elles existent, pouvons-nous espérer que les capitalistes se laisseront engager à placer leurs fonds ici. Il est de notre intérêt de donner aux capitalistes une garantie qui les mette à couvert et qui ne puisse pas être levée sans leur consentement. Si nous y parvenons, nous aurons obtenu tout ce que nous pouvons désirer, nous aurons conquis un avantage immense. Nous devons nous décider à faire de deux choses l'une. Nous devons conserver le système actuel qui oppose une barrière infranchissable à notre prospérité et qui couvre les fraudes les plus grossières ; ou exiger que les tuteurs et tous ceux qui ont la gestion des biens d'autres personnes, déclarent toutes les hypothèques dont leurs propriétés sont grevées. Y a-t-il rien d'injuste dans cette mesure ? Est-ce être trop exigeant que de forcer un homme à enregistrer les titres des hypothèques sises sur ses propriétés ? Il me semble que c'est une chose qui doit se faire, et l'exiger me paraît de beaucoup préférable à la continuation d'un système qui encourage la fraude, qui retarde notre prospérité et qui est opposé aux intérêts les plus chers de la Louisiane. J'espère que ce bill sera adopté. Si nous pouvons le perfectionner et sauvegarder plus efficacement les intérêts des mineurs par un bill supplémentaire, je promets à l'honorable membre d'y donner mon appui. Mais j'espère qu'il ne s'obstinera pas à perdre ce bill. Je n'attaque pas les droits des mineurs et des femmes mariées, je ne veux amoindrir en aucune manière les garanties dont ils jouissent actuellement ; je désire au contraire les protéger de tout notre pouvoir, comme ils le sont dans d'autres Etats. Je veux les protéger par tout moyen autre que celui-ci, que je regarde comme nuisible. Je souscrirai à toute mesure qui sera proposée en faveur des veuves et des orphelins. Mais je ne puis pas approuver ce qui, dans mon opinion, encourage la fraude, ce qui est opposé aux intérêts de la Louisiane. Je veux que le capital et le travail soient protégés et quand nous pouvons le faire, j'espère que nous n'y manquerons pas. Je ne m'occupe pas de la législation de l'autre Chambre. Je n'en franchis jamais le seuil, je ne m'y montre jamais soit pour faire réussir, soit pour faire échouer quelque bill que ce soit. Que ce bill soit soumis à l'autre Chambre, et j'ai toute confiance qu'une juste appréciation des intérêts de l'Etat en assurera l'adoption.

M. Short—Le sénateur de Ste-Marie (M. Nicholls), prête à ce bill un but que certainement il n'a pas et dont je ne voudrais pas me porter le défenseur. Je ne demande pas l'impossible. Je demande seulement l'enrégistrement des hypothèques que la loi accorde aux mineurs et aux femmes mariées sur les propriétés des maris, tuteurs, curateurs et autres. Mais quand un homme épouse une femme, il n'y a pas d'acte écrit, rien qui donne une hypothèque qui puisse être enrégistrée. C'est donc une loi nouvelle. La question est de savoir si nous commencerons l'œuvre de la réforme maintenant, ou si nous la remettrons à une époultérieure

M. Wickliffe—Je demande à poser une question à l'honorable membre. Supposons qu'un homme donne dix mille piastres à une femme en présence de son mari, et elle en donne un reçu. Il n'en résulte pas une hypothèque. Ensuite, dans un autre endroit, elle donne cet argent à son mari, là commence l'hypothèque.

M. Nicholls—Et si le reçu était perdu ?

M. Short—L'honorable membre sait que les documents perdus sont exceptés.

M. Nicholls—Dans ce cas je suis opposé au bill, car il donnera naissance à une foule de distinctions légales et de procès, et certainement nous en avons assez maintenant. Si les avocats, voyant leurs affaires diminuer, se formaient en convention pour aviser au meilleur moyen de les ranimer, ils ne pourraient trouver un meilleur moyen que celui qu'offre ce bill. Je ferai donc la motion d'amender le titre du bill, de manière à le rendre conforme à ce cas particulier.

M. Short—La question est déplacée ici. Mon but est de pourvoir aux besoins les plus impérieux de l'Etat. La chose n'est pas bien difficile. Faisons un pas en avant. Eclairons ceux qui viendront après nous; si faible que soit notre rayon, émettons-le. L'argument tiré de la longue existence du système actuel est usé jusqu'à la corde. Nous pouvons dire avec le poète : « En ceci, l'ancienne forme des choses a bien changé. » Mais il est nécessaire qu'elle change. Il y a des abus qui doivent être reformés. Faisons au moins un pas, et le premier pas fait, le second nous paraîtra plus facile.

Le bill est reconsidéré.

M. Martin—Je présume que l'objet qu'on a en vue en reconsidérant le bill est de l'amender de manière à détruire les objections qu'on y oppose. Dans ce but,

Digitized by Google

Je proposerai de renvoyer le bill au comité afin qu'il y introduise ces amendements.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

M. J. D. Stewart, messager spécial du Sénat, informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivants :

Acte pour définir la manière dans laquelle les votes donnés dans toutes élections pour avocat-général, secrétaire d'Etat, trésorier d'Etat et surintendant de l'éducation publique, seront comptés et comment le résultat en sera publié.

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par des collecteurs de taxes d'Etat

Acte pour venir au secours de Charles W. Boyce de la paroisse des Rapides.

Acte pour autoriser les personnes mariées, absentes de l'Etat, à nommer des agents dans certains cas.

Acte pour venir au secours de Henry Parish et John Moore Norman de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour autoriser les juges de district à se récuser dans certains cas.

Acte pour pourvoir au jugement des affaires dans lesquelles les juges se seront récusés.

Acte pour régler et pourvoir au paiement des dépenses de la bibliothèque de l'Etat.

Acte pour venir au secours de B. K. Stephens.

Acte pour venir au secours de W. H. Dinkgrave, collecteur de taxes de la paroisse d'Ouachita, pour les années 1849 et 1850 et de ses sécurités.

Acte pour venir au secours de E. K. S killman.

Acte pour pourvoir au transfert de toutes les affaires maintenant pendantes devant la cour suprême de cet Etat, établie en vertu de la constitution de 1845, à la cour suprême établie par la nouvelle constitution.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin en planche de Grosse-Tête et de Bâton-Rouge.

Et il demande la signature de l'orateur pour les actes enrôlés suivants :

Acte pour autoriser Théodore Helveston et Anne Eliza Pell, sa femme, à adopter Thomas Whelan, orphelin.

Et il informe la Chambre que le président a signé l'acte enrôlé suivant :

Acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts judiciaires.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour autoriser le recorder dans et pour la paroisse de Carroll à nommer un député.

Acte donnant à Julien Deshautelle le droit d'avoir un bac dans la paroisse des Avoyelles.

Acte pour changer le nom de Salomon Zucker.

Résolution recommandant au gouverneur d'obtenir du secrétaire d'Etat, s'il est possible, des copies de toutes les cartes, plans, niveaux, &c.

Acte pour régler les corporations pour transmettre les avis par le télégraphe électrique.

Et il informe le Sénat que l'orateur a signé les actes enrôlés suivants :

Acte pour le paiement des commissions dûes au register et receveur du bureau des terres à Bâton-Rouge, pour ventes de terres des améliorations intérieures.

Acte pour le paiement des commissions dûes au register et receveur du bureau des terres à Bâton-Rouge pour ventes de terres marécageuses.

Acte pour venir au secours des directeurs des écoles de la paroisse De Soto.

Acte pour réduire le temps requis pour la confirmation des jugements.

M. Todd demande la reconsidération du vote donné hier sur un acte intitulé :

Acte pour amender l'article 312 du Code de Procédure.

Cette motion est adoptée.

M. Todd.—Quelle objection peut-on présenter à cet amendement ? Supposons par exemple que la cour se réunisse le lundi. Cela donne au défendant jusqu'au samedi. S'il a une réponse à faire il peut la présenter tout aussi bien le mercredi, et il n'en résulterait d'inconvénient pour personne. Voici ce qui a eu lieu sous le système actuel dans quelques paroisses de la campagne. Une affaire est jugée le lundi et le dossier est épuisé. Il ne reste rien à faire jusqu'au samedi. Le juri reste de service pendant tout ce temps. Puis se présentent d'autres affaires pour le juri et l'affaire est remise au terme suivant : C'est là un désavantage sérieux pour plusieurs districts de l'Etat. J'espère que le bill passera.

Le bill est adopté.

2ME LECTURE.

Acte pour exempter de la taxe la propriété des directeurs du bureau des publications presbytériennes à la Nouvelle-Orléans ainsi que toutes les autres institutions semblables de toute dénomination dans cet Etat.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de déposer l'acte indéfiniment sur le bureau.

M. King.— Je m'oppose au dépôt de ce bill sur le bureau. L'institution dont il s'agit a un caractère particulier et rentre dans la catégorie des églises et autres établissements de cette espèce qui ont toujours été exemptés de la taxe. Sa charte lui défend de s'engager dans aucune affaire dans des vues de lucre. Pourquoi lui refuser cette légère faveur ? Pourquoi faire une exception à son détriment, quand nous avons exempté vingt corporations qui y avaient moins de titres que celle-ci ? Peut-être objectera-t-on au mot « Presbytérien ; » pour ma part, je n'ai aucun préjugé de secte. Comme sénateur, toutes les sectes me sont égales et ont des droits égaux. Je ne vois pas pourquoi nous baserions des distintions sur un nom. Puisque nous sommes si généreux dans quelques affaires, ne nous montrons pas parcimonieux dans celle-ci. Nous avons fait exactement la même chose dans des cas de la même nature : pour les « Odd Fellows » les « Francs-Maçons » et d'autres.

M. Palfrey—L'honorable membre dit que les églises sont exemptées de la taxe, en est-il certain ?

M. King.—Oui, monsieur.

La motion de déposer le bill sur le bureau est repoussée.

M. Mouton présente un amendement portant que la même faveur sera accordée à toutes les institutions de la même espèce, à quelque dénomination qu'elles appartiennent.

M. McCay.— J'apprends que le comité des finances a fait un rapport défavorable à ce bill. J'étais absent lorsqu'il l'a fait et je n'ai pas été consulté sur ce sujet. J'ignorais la décision du comité, avant que mon collègue ne m'en informât.

M. Clifton—J'ai prié le greffier de notifier les membres du comité qu'une assemblée devait avoir lieu ce soir-là. J'ignore si le membre de la Nouvelle-Orléans était présent ou absent, mais je me souviens qu'il y avait un quorum du comité.

L'amendement est adopté ainsi que le bill.

L'Acte pour pourvoir au recouvrement des dommages occasionnés dans certains cas est alors pris en considération.

M. King.—Il y a des objections sérieuses à ce bill. Le bill est plus important au fond qu'il ne le paraît. Il rendra impossible à toute compagnie ou à tout individu riche l'exploitation d'un chemin de fer ou d'un bateau à vapeur. Ce bill entreprend de faire ce qui est humainement impossible. Il nous lance dans le domaine de l'infini. Il est aisé de parler de deux ou trois cents mille piastres, mais souvent deux ou trois millions ne suffiraient pas, si pour le moindre accident on devait payer des dommages. Si l'une des personnes intéressées était pauvre et l'autre riche les dommages seraient estimés à un chiffre si exhorbitant que personne ne voudrait posséder des actions de chemins de fer ou de bateaux à vapeur. Ce serait entraver le commerce et provoquer des conséquences fatales. Je m'oppose à ce bill et j'espère que le Sénat se joindra à moi pour le rejeter.

M. Lacey.—Mon collègue est opposé au bill à cause du montant des dommages. Il doit savoir que les dommages ne sont pas réglés par le bill. C'est la cour qui décide. Que ce soit une piastre ou un million, les tribunaux décideront ce qu'il faudra payer lorsqu'un individu perdra la vie par la négligence des propriétaires ou agents d'un chemin de fer ou d'un bateau à vapeur. L'honorable membre pense que les intérêts des améliorations intérieures sont froissés par ce bill, et par conséquent il veut que les compagnies de chemins de fer fassent ce qu'elles veulent parce qu'en les contraignant, nous nuirions aux intérêts du commerce. Mon collègue a raison en général, mais dans ce cas il se trompe. Il ne veut pas du bill parce qu'il en résulterait des dommages par millions et parce que c'est contre l'intérêt des améliorations intérieures.

Digitized by Google

Je n'admets pas que les compagnies aient le droit de tuer autant de personnes qu'elles veulent, sans qu'elles soient tenues responsables. Ce bill est fondé sur la loi de l'Illinois et c'est à mon avis une excellente loi. La Cour Suprême a décidé que tant qu'il reste une étincelle de vie il y a droit à dommage, mais qu'en cas de mort, il n'y a pas lieu de poursuivre. Ce qui veut dire que plus les blessures sont graves, moins on recouvrera de dommages. Je pense que l'inverse devrait avoir lieu ; c'est ce que nous dicte le bon sens. Si un homme est tué, sa femme et ses enfans, qui ont le plus grand intérêt à son existence, devraient avoir le droit de poursuivre. La justice et l'équité l'exigent, mais il paraît que la Cour Suprême en a décidé autrement. Je pense donc que le bill devrait être adopté.

M. McCay—Ce sujet a été minutieusement examiné dans l'affaire de Hubseh contre la compagnie du chemin de fer de Carrollton. Il a été décidé que d'après les lois de la Louisiane, il n'y a pas lieu de poursuite quand une personne est tuée. Ce bill est identique à la loi de l'Angleterre dont la loi de l'Illinois tire son origine. Toutes les deux ont été mentionnées dans la décision de la Cour Suprême. Il n'y a pas de raisons pour qu'une famille dépendant entièrement d'un individu pour son soutien et sa protection, n'ait pas le droit de demander des dommages, pour la mort de cette personne. Il est vrai qu'il n'y a pas moyen d'estimer exactement le chiffre des dommages, mais la même difficulté existe dans d'autres affaires. Telle est la loi de l'Angleterre et de l'Illinois, j'ignore jusqu'à quel point elle est appliquée. Ce n'est pas la loi du Mississipi, parce que la décision de la Cour Suprême de cet Etat déclare qu'il n'y a pas lieu à poursuivre dans ces affaires. La cour a décidé ici que si un homme vit vingt minutes après l'accident, juste le temps nécessaire pour consulter un avocat et rédiger une pétition, le droit d'intenter une action en dommages lui est accordé, mais que si la mort est instantanée tout droit de poursuite cesse.

Plusieurs cas se présentent à la Nouvelle-Orléans, dans lesquels nous devrions avoir le droit d'intenter une action civile puisque les cours criminelles refusent de les juger.

M. King— Cette considération montre combien peu il convient de porter des procès de ce genre devant les cours. Hubseh était ingénieur du chemin de fer de Carrollton, il se fit sauter par sa propre négligence. Sa femme intenta un procès en dommages et la Cour de District lui fit recouvrer $5,000. Et sur quoi se basait la demande ? si ce n'est que la compagnie devait avoir des locomotives qui fussent à l'abri de ces accidents ? Prenons pour exemple un propriétaire de bateau à vapeur. Il n'est pas à bord. Il arrive que par un accident que l'on ne pouvait empêcher, le bateau fait explosion, toutes les femmes qui sont devenues veuves par la catastrophe reclameront et obtiendront des dommages énormes, parce que le défendeur est un homme riche. Il est clair qu'un pareil système enlèverait toute sûreté aux propriétaires de bateaux à vapeur. Dans le cas que mon collègue vient de citer, l'ingénieur s'est fait sauter. Sous l'influence de ce sentiment erroné qui égare la société, vous vous écrierez: il faut venir au secours de la veuve et vous lui donnerez une forte somme d'argent puisée dans les coffres de la compagnie, et qu'elle dépensera en toilette au lieu de pleurer son mari.

L'honorable membre dit que les tribunaux estimeront les dommages. Ils n'en feront rien, si nous ne le faisons pas. La Législature romaine sur laquelle la nôtre est basée, disait que la vie d'un homme ne pouvait pas être estimée. La loi de Moïse, qui est d'origine divine, dit : Vie pour vie. C'est la loi qui a été proclamée du haut du Mont Sinaï. Telle a été la loi jusqu'à ce que la cupidité des veuves éplorées ait fait estimer la vie de leurs maris en piastres et cents. Ceux qui ont causé la mort doivent être punis s'ils sont reconnus coupables. S'il y a préméditation, c'est un meurtre ; si c'est par négligence, c'est un homicide. Ce sont des crimes que les lois criminelles punissent. Mais je ne veux pas faire de tort au commerce pour rétribuer les veuves d'après la valeur qu'elles donnent à l'existence de leurs maris.

M. Short.—Je n'ai qu'un mot à dire. Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans se trompe. Il paraît croire que si le bill est adopté, les ingénieurs prendront à tâche de se faire sauter pour le profit de leur famille. Il sait cependant que dans ce cas il n'y aurait pas lieu à recouvrer des dommages. L'intention du bill est de pourvoir à ce qu'une action puisse être intentée contre les propriétaires ou les agents de bateaux à vapeur ou de chemin de fer, qui par leur négligence auraient occasionné la mort d'un individu. Il est plus probable qu'une personne sera tuée par la négligence des autres que par sa propre volonté. Pourquoi ne leur accorderions-nous pas le droit de demander des dommages ?

Quand une personne est tuée n'est-il pas évident que sa famille perd le profit de son travail et de ses talents. Elle y est directement intéressée et son soutien dépend entièrement de lui. Il faut donc qu'elle ait le droit d'intenter un procès. Je ne vois pas qu'il faille faire une distinction entre l'homme qui est mutilé et celui qui est tué. Dans le premier cas il a droit à une action, dans le second on la lui refuse, comme si le plus grand de ces deux malheurs avait des conséquences moins fatales que le moindre. J'espère que le bill sera appuyé.

Le bill est adopté.

MERCREDI, 13 avril.

Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane

M. Clifton soumet la lettre et l'exposé suivants du caissier de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane. Ces pièces sont lues, et sur motion de M. Clifton, le Sénat ordonne qu'il en soit imprimé cinq cents exemplaires.

BANQUE DE L'ETAT DE LA LOUISIANE.

Nouvelle-Orléans, 9 avril 1853.

A l'honorable Sénat et à la Chambre des Représentants de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Messieurs,

Dans l'exposé transmis au comité conjoint des banques et maisons de banque, il s'est glissé une erreur involontaire de $200,000, qui diminue d'autant la masse active de cette banque. Cette erreur provient de ce que nous avons omis dans l'exposé de la situation de la branche à Bâton-Rouge, le montant dû à cette branche par la mère banque ; c'est une erreur commise par un employé, et dont il est facile de s'apercevoir en se référant à l'exposé général de la banque et de ses branches, que j'ai fourni au comité.

J'ai l'honneur de vous transmettre ci-inclus un exposé exact en place de celui qui contient cette erreur, et je demande respectueusement qu'il lui soit substitué.

Je suis avec respect,
Votre obéissant serviteur,
Signé RICHARD RELF, Caissier.

Exposé de la situation de la Branche de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane, à Baton-Rouge, le 12 fevrier 1853.

Capital		$100,000,00
CAPITAL IMMOBILE :
Prêts sur sécurité personnelle	6,828 00
Prêts sur hypothèques à longue échéance	124,945 06
Effets protestés	6,606 00	137,879 06
MOUVEMENT : Obligations comptantes.
Dépôts payables sur demande	635,779 22
Bons des branches.	106,650 00	742,429 22
VALEURS COMPTANTES
Espèces	41,895 54
Billets de la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane	39,755 00
Billets payables à 90 jours	314,896 33
Balance due par la Banque de l'Etat de la Louisiane	314,002 95	710 589 82

Signé RICHARD RELF, Caissier.

Digitized by Google

M. Clifton—Le rapport du comité paraît correct. Il est basé sur les données publiées par la Banque elle même, et le comité n'est pas responsable de cette erreur. Je demande que cinq cents exemplaires de la lettre soient imprimés pour la justification du comité.

M. Wickliffe, du comité de l'éducation publique, présente le rapport suivant :

A l'honorable W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Le comité de l'éducation publique auquel avait été référée la pétition signée par de nombreux bons citoyens de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, demandant une distribution plus égale des sommes d'argent sagement appropriées par l'Etat de la Louisiane au support des écoles publiques gratuites, et montrant les difficultés qui naissent de la manière actuelle de distribuer les fonds provenant de la taxe et consacrés aux écoles publiques, demande la permission de rapporter —qu'ils ont soigneusement examiné la dite petition, avec le désir de faire droit à la prière des dits pétitionnaires, si cela pouvait se faire sans porter préjudice à la cause de l'éducation publique, et après un examen attentif de ce sujet, le comité conclut qu'il ne peut voir aucune bonne raison pour que la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans ne soit pas divisée en districts scolaires; pourquoi les votans qualifiés de ces districts n'auraient pas le droit d'élire les directeurs des écoles,—pourquoi les directeurs des écoles n'auraient pas les pouvoirs que la loi accorde aux directeurs des écoles dans tout l'Etat de la Louisiane, au lieu d'en investir, comme le fait la loi actuelle, le Conseil municipal de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans ; en un mot, pourquoi le système qui a satisfait les paroisses de la campagne ne serait pas adopté pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

C'est pourquoi le comité présente l'acte suivant à l'examen favorable du Sénat et lui renvoie la dite pétition.

Respectueusement, &c.,

Signé ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE,
Président.

Acte pour diviser la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans en districts scolaires.

M. Martin demande la prise en considération d'un acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir à la vacation des emplois qui sont occupés contrairement à l'article 122 de la Constitution.

M. Mouton—Ne serait-il pas possible de rédiger le bill de manière à ce qu'il empêchât les shérifs de vendre des propriétés saisies par arrêt de la Cour ? Je présente un amendement dans ce sens.

M. King—L'objet principal du sénateur de la paroisse Assomption est, si je ne me trompe, d'empêcher que les greffiers des Cours n'agissent comme encanteurs.

M Martin—J'ai dit les greffiers principalement; mais je voudrais que le bill s'appliquât à tout le monde.

M. King.—Il est superflu de passer une loi pour un cas auquel la Constitution elle-même pourvoit. Je me proposais de voter pour le bill tel que je l'avais compris d'abord. Il ne me semble pas convenable de rétribuer les services d'un greffier et de lui permettre ensuite d'agir comme encanteur en vendant des propriétés. Mais l'erreur de l'honorable membre est de croire qu'un encanteur patenté soit un fonctionnaire de l'Etat. Il y a des personnes qui ont une patente pour vendre des épiceries, d'autres pour vendre des liqueurs, mais personne ne prétend qu'elles soient des fonctionnaires de l'Etat. Je ne consentirai pas à voter en faveur d'un bill qui occasionnerait des inconvénients dans plusieurs parties de l'Etat.

M Martin.—L'argument que mon collègue met en avant m'étonne. Il veut nous faire croire qu'un épicier est un fonctionnaire de l'Etat. Il n'en est pas ainsi. Leur patente n'est qu'un reçu de taxe sous une autre forme. Ce bill est dirigé contre ceux qui acceptent plus d'un emploi de l'Etat, excepté celui de juge de paix. Je désire prévenir le cumul des places. Voilà ce que j'ai en vue. J'approuve l'amendement du senateur de Lafayette (M. Mouton). Je ne veux pas gêner les sheriffs dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, mais faire mettre à oxécution l'article 122 de la Constitution. Il n'y a pas de clause touchant la vacation des places dans cet article. Il est necessaire qu'il y en ait une, quoique le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orleans [M. King] dise que c'est une mesure superflue.

M. Rivers.—Je citerai à l'honorable membre l'exemple d'un cas analogue dans le Mississippi. La Constitution de cet Etat défend d'introduire des esclaves pour les y vendre, mais comme cet article n'a pas été mis en force par un acte législrtif pour en punir la violation, il est resté sans effet.

M. King.—Je suis très bien informé sur cette question. La Constitution déclarait que la Législature passerait une loi sur ce sujet, et cette dernière a négligé de le faire

M Rivers.—Ici non plus, il n'y a pas de pénalité pour la violation de l'article 122 de notre Constitution.

M. King.—La pénalité est l'incapacité de remplir deux emplois à la fois. Quand un homme en accepte un, il se démet virtuellement de celui qu'il pouvait occuper précédemment. C'est ce que nous dit la loi. Je désire présenter un amendement qui, je le crois, répondra à toutes les exigences. Nous ne devons pas faire des lois contre des abus dont on ne se plaint pas. Je ne voterai par pour un bill qui aura de grands inconvénients dans quelques paroisses de la campagne où la place de greffier rapporte si peu de chose, que sans ce privilége, ils ne gagneraient pas de quoi subvenir à leurs besoins.

M. King présente le suivant comme substitut.

Il est decrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en assemblée générale :

Qu'aucun greffier ou deputé greffier n'agira comme encanteur dans les ventes qui seront ordonnées par la cour de laquelle il est greffier ou député-greffier, ou qui auront rapport de quelque manière que ce soit avec ses devoirs de greffier ou de député-greffier.

M. Todd introduit le suivant comme proviso à l'amendement de M. King.

Pourvu que les lois relatives aux greffiers n'empêchent pas leurs députés de vendre à l'enchère publique, les propriétés des successions qu'ils sont par la loi autorisés à administrer.

Le substitut et le proviso sont adoptés.

L'acte suivant est pris en considération :

Acte pour mettre en force d'une manière plus efficace un acte intitulé :

Acte pour le progrès de l'éducation médicale dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

M. Short.—Je propose un proviso portant que le collége médical continuera à instruire gratuitement un étudiant de chaque paroisse de l'Etat. Je crois que le temps pour lequel l'arrangement avait été conclu est écoulé.

M. Wickliffe—Quant il s'agira de la passation du bill, je dirai quelques mots sur ce sujet. Le Collége Médical demanda l'annee passée à la Législature une somme de $5,000 qui, après discussion, lui fut refusée. Je suppose que c'est à cause du refus de l'année passée, qu'il en demande mille de plus maintenant. Je crois que le College n'a aucun droit à cette donation. Je désire que le bill soit renvoyé au comité des réclamations.

M. McCay—L'honorable membre dit que le Collége n'a aucun droit et cependant il propose de renvoyer le bill au comité des réclamations. Il admet donc l'incompétence de ce comité. Je suis opposé à un nouvel ajournement du bill. Nous en connaissons tous l'importance et nous savons qu'il ne souffre pas de délai. La majorité du comite des finances a fait un rapport favorable à ce bill : le président seul y était opposé. Voici en peu de mots l'histoire de la question : La Législature appropria vingt-cinq mille piastres à l'achat d'un Musée Anatomique et d'une collection complète d'instruments pour le Collége Médical. Une personne fut envoyée en Europe pour acheter ces objets. Elle réussit à acheter à un prix très modique un exemplaire du célèbre cabinet anatomique de Florence. Cependant il y eut un déficit à cause des frais de transport et autres dépenses nécessaires. C'est pour combler ce déficit que le Collége demande une appropriation à l'Etat. Les dépenses etaient nécessaires et on ne pouvait s'en dispenser même avec la plus stricte économie. Le Collége Médical a depuis dix ans, reçu et instruit des étudiants pauvres dans chaque paroisse de l'Etat; sous ce rapport il a fidèlement rempli ses engagements. Il ne s'est même pas borné à recevoir un seul élève de chaque paroisse, il y en a qui en ont envoyé jusqu'à trois et quatre. La nécessité de cette appropriation est évidente, pour peu qu'on se donne la peine d'examiner la question. Les avantages qui resulteront de l'acquisition d'un cabinet complet tel que celui que nous possédons, sont incalculables. Ce sera un honneur pour l'Etat, et il aidera puissamment les élèves à acquérir une connaissance parfaite de leur profession.

Digitized by Google

M. Wickliffe—Quel était l'objet de l'acte de la Législature dont parle l'honorable membre ? L'acte dit: Pour le progrès de l'éducation médicale dans l'Etat de la Louisiane. Cela veut-il dire : Pour l'achat de figures en cire pour l'amusement des élèves et des professeurs ? Comme si la grande ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans n'offrait pas des cas pratiques de toutes les maladies possibles. Mais il faut que les professeurs aient une quantité de poupées en cire pour les montrer aux élèves et leur faire voir des choses que des sujets humains démontreraient beaucoup mieux. Je voudrais bien savoir combien cet établissement a déjà reçu de l'Etat. $25,000 en argent comptant, les terrains, les bâtiments ; et maintenant il demande $6,000 de plus pour payer ces figures en cire, tandis qu'il y a à la Nouvelle-Orléans de meilleurs sujets vivants qui, pour toute démonstration pratique, sont infiniment préférables à toutes les poupées de cire du monde. Si le but du bill est comme l'indique le titre «pour mettre en force les provisions de l'acte de 1850,» qu'il soit envoyé au comité des reclamations ; que le comité fasse un rapport sur les sommes que cet établissement a déjà reçues et sur celle à laquelle il a encore droit. Je desirerais aussi savoir pourquoi la demande a été augmentée de $1,000 depuis l'année passée.

M. McCay—Parcequ'il a été démontré que le surcroît des dépenses de transports s'élevait à ce chiffre.

Le bill est adopté avec quelques amendements.

L'acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des votants de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans est pris en considération.

M. King—Je propose de référer le bill à un comité spécial.

M. Martin—Si l'honorable membre désire des renseignements, qu'il fasse lire le bill. Le bill a été déjà soumis à un comité. Il est fort important et la Constitution exige que nous le passions pendant la présente session.

M. King—J'espère qu'on ne passera pas ce bill à la hâte. Il n'intéresse que la Nouvelle-Orléans et personne de nous ne l'a encore ni vu ni lu.

La discussion du bill est remise.

L'acte pour venir au secours de ceux qui ont acheté de l'Etat de la Louisiane des terres d'une manière irrégulière est pris en considération.

M. Martin—Je ne puis pas voter en faveur de ce bill. Je faisais partie du comité nommé l'année dernière pour examiner cette affaire. Une des personnes qui demandaient du secours était un juge de district qui certainement ne devait pas ignorer la loi et se laisser tromper par un homme tel que Loucks. Je veux parler du juge Selby. C'est lui qui a porté toute cette affaire devant la Legislature.

M. Wickliffe—Ces personnes croyaient en payant leur argent, recevoir une valeur réelle. Si l'Etat n'a pas reçu l'argent, la faute en est à l'Etat.

M. Martin—Je ne vois pas comment la faute pouvait en être à l'Etat. La loi règle le mode de veate des terres publiques et on doit en être informé. S'ils ont assez de confiance dans le régistraire pour déposer de l'argent entre ses mains et qu'il soit assez malhonnête pour le garder, il faut qu'ils en subissent les conséquences.

M. Wickliffe—Si l'Etat a un mauvais fonctionnaire c'est sa faute autant que son malheur.

M. Short—Il est vrai que l'Etat n'est pas légalement responsable pour cet argent. Mais quand l'Etat nomme un fonctionnaire, ce choix fait présumer que c'est un honnête homme. Si donc, dans l'exercice de ses fonctions publiques il trompe quelqu'un, l'Etat est, sinon légalement, au moins moralement responsable de ses actions. Si nous érigons cette idée en principe, les hauts fonctionnaires deviendront plus circonspects dans leurs nominations. Le comite recommandait en principe de payer ces sommes, quoiqu'il ne voulût pas aller aussi loin que la chambre qui voulait que les titres prissent date du jour où l'argent avait été payé. L'Etat doit se montrer juste dans cette affaire. Quand à M. Loucks, le register, il a touché le produit de 1002 acres de terre. Il a vendu son honneur à bien bas prix. Je connais le juge auquel le sénateur d'Assomption [M. Martin,] fait allusion. Je le connais depuis nombre d'années. Il est aussi susceptible d'être trompé quand il a autant confiance quetout autre, mais pas davantage. C'est un homme d'intelligence et de talent, et le fait d'avoir été trompé par M. Loucks, n'est pas une preuve du contraire.

M. Martin.—Nous punissons les criminels quand bien même ils ignoreraient l'existence de la loi qui les condamne, pourquoi excepterions-nous de l'application de ce principe général un individu qui soutient des dommages par suite de son ignorance de la loi ? D'après la loi qui régit la vente des terres, le prix doit en être versé entre les mains du Trésorier. L'Auditeur en donne un reçu, et alors les titres sont remis. Ces formalités sont necessaires pour prévenir la fraude. Dans le cas dont il s'agit, ces formalités n'ont pas été remplies. L'argent a été payé à Loucks qui se l'est approprié. Je ne vois pas pourquoi l'Etat serait victime de l'ignorance d'un individu et de la mauvaise foi d'un autre. C'est un précédent que je ne veux pas établir.

La discussion du bill est ajournée.

BANQUE DES ARTISANS ET DES MARCHANDS.

M Martin.—Je voudrais savoir quand le comité des Banques et Maisons de Banque compte présenter son rapport sur le bill de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands.

M. Palfrey.—Le comité a tenu une séance ce matin, mais le Psesident ne lui a pas soumis ce bill.

Le bill pour permettre aux avocats des autres Etats de plaider devant les Cours de cet Etat, est pris en considération.

M. Short.—S'il y a des objections contre ce bill, je serais bien aise de les connaître. Pour ma part, je désire qu'il soit adopté. L'état actuel des choses donne lieu à de grandes difficultés. Quant à moi, je n'ai jamais plaidé devant aucune Cour, sans avoir préalablement obtenu l'autorisation requise par les lois existantes. Mais je ne pense pas que cela doive être exigé. J'ai toujours eté d'opinion que lorsqu'un avocat a un diplôme qui lui permet de plaider à la Cour Suprême d'un autre Etat ou devant les Cours Fédérales, le même droit devrait lui être accordé dans tous les autres Etats. Le simple fait qu'un homme est autorisé à professer le droit, n'est pas une preuve qu'il possède une capacité supérieure dans sa profession. On a dit que comme la Louisiane est le seul Etat qui ait une loi civile, nous devrions obliger toute personne qui veut y professer le droit, même les avocats des autres Etats, à suivre un cours d'études et à obtenir un diplôme en règle ici. Mais, voudriez-vous y forcer un homme qui aurait professé le droit pendant trente ans? Voudriez-vous le soumettre à cette épreuve et à ces délais, avant de lui permettre d'exercer sa profession ? Le code civil est-il donc une chose si ardue qu'il faille faire passer un examen aux avocats à la Nouvelle-Orleans avant qu'il leur soit permis d'y pratiquer? Je me rappelle avoir subi cette épreuve, immédiatement après l'examen d'un jurisconsulte qui occupe maintenant une position élevée dans l'Etat voisin, de Mississipi. Néanmoins, il fut rejeté, et je croyais que si un homme aussi instruit et aussi distingué que lui échouait, je ne pouvais pas espérer un résultat plus heureux. Cependant, je me livrai à l'étude avec ardeur. Je lus Domat, le Code Civil, Justinien et une foule d'autres livres, entr'autres le chapitre 44 de Gibbon, afin de savoir qui a compilé les livres de Justinien et d'apprendre l'Histoire de Tribonien. Je savais que si j'ignorais qui était la femme de Tribonien et combien d'enfants il a eu, je serais infailliblement rejeté. Je soutiens que si un avocat n'est pas compétent, il ne trouvera pas de clientèle. Il l'acquiert par un jugement sûr et la confiance qu'on a dans sa capacité.

Emploierons-nous un homme à conduire un bateau à vapeur parcequ'il a un certificat de bonne vue ? Non, nous l'employons parceque nous savons qu'il a de l'expérience. Je voudrais voir ces restrictions abolies et nos Cours ouvertes aux avocats des autres Etats. Je ne veux pas qu'un comité puisse déclarer qu'un homme n'est pas avocat parcequ'il ne sait pas qui étaient la femme et les enfants de Tribonien.

M Derbès.—Il y a contre ce bill une objection qui

Digitized by Google

est passée inaperçue. Nous avons dans notre Université une Faculté de Droit que ce bill rendra entièrement inutile. Ceux qui voudront s'épargner le travail et les dépenses qu'entraînent les études universitaires ou éviter les difficultés qu'offre l'examen, iront dans quelqu'autre Etat, où il y ait à peine quelques formalités à remplir et s'y procureront un diplôme

M. Todd.—Je m'oppose au bill. Un avocat peut avoir pratiqué pendant vingt ans dans un autre Etat, et cependant,n'être pas en etat d'exercer sa profession dans la Louisiane, où le Code Civil est en vigueur. Le public n'est pas à même de distinguer un avocat d'un autre Etat, et souvent il emploierait, à son grand détriment, un homme ignorant et incapable. L'épreuve qu'il faut passer maintenant porte à l'étude, et elle est au moins la garantie d'une certaine somme de connaissances légales. Le bill favoriserait l'empirisme et le charlatanisme et serait nuisible aux intérêts du public.

M. Wickliffe.—Je voterai pour ce bill avec plaisir, et je le ferai pour les mêmes raisons qui m'ont fait voter pour le bill qui dispense les médecins d'avoir un diplôme. Je ne pense pas que, parce que cet Etat est le seul où le code civil est en vigueur, il doive seule faire exception à la règle de courtoisie qui est adoptée par tous les autres Etats. Quelle nécessité y a-t-il pour le système actuel ? En sommes nous arrivés au point que les membres du barreau de la Louisiane ont besoin de protection contre la concurrence des avocats des autres Etats ? Je prétends que la loi actuelle n'est basée sur aucune raison solide. Nous imaginons-nous que si nous passons ce bill, les avocats des autres Etats fondront sur nous comme une bande de loups sauvages et qu'ils détruiront la loi civile ? Je voudrais entendre un bon argument contre le bill

M. Lewis.—Un bon argument est que ce bill permettrait à des hommes qui ont dû quitter notre barreau, de revenir dans la Louisiane et d'y pratiquer le droit.

M. McCay.—Comme c'est moi qui ai présenté le bill, je voudrais dire quelques mots pour sa defense. Tous les autres Etats de l'Union, à deux exceptions près, admettent un avocat à plaider, pourvu qu'il présente une autorisation de la Cour Suprême de l'Etat auquel il appartient. La simple politesse et une juste réciprocité nous dictent de traiter les autres avec la courtoisie dont ils font preuve à notre égard. L'argument mis en avant par quelques membres, que les Cours suprêmes des autres Etats et celles des Etats-Unis ne sont pas compétentes pour décider si un homme est capable de professer le droit, me paraît un peu fort. Ils disent qu'il faut qu'il soit examiné par un comité. Eh bien, messieurs, ces examens sont une duperie insigne Je n'ignore pas que le comité est composé des hommes les plus distingués de l'Etat, mais je sais aussi que quelquefois de bons avocats sont rejetés et des ignorants admis. J'ai vu quelques uns de mes amis, qui avait fait des études consciencieuses et qui connaissaient bien les lois, essuyer un échec et se voir refuser un diplôme, tandis qu'un homme qui n'avait étudié que pendant quelques mois, sortait triomphant de l'épreuve. Si le but que nous nous proposons est, que tous ceux qui passent soient capables, ce n'est pas au comité que nous pouvons nous en rapporter. Je fus moi-même examiné par ce comité et je fus principalement redevable de mon succès, à l'opinion favorable d'un des membres du comité, avec qui j'avais étudié. J'avoue que j'etais alors fort peu versé dans le droit et cependant je passai un examen brillant. Je présume qu'un examen a pour but d'obtenir des avocats capables et instruits ; reste à savoir si ce moyen conduit à ce résultat plus sûrement qu'aucun autre. Je voudais même aller plus loin que ce bill, je voudrais suivre l'exemple de New-York, et ouvrir la carrière du droit à tous ceux qui veulent y entrer.

M. Lewis.—Je demanderai à l'honorable sénateur si le bill contient une clause contre les avocats étrangers qui seraient admis à plaider dans d'autres Etats.

M. McCay.—De quelques pays que vienne un homme, sous quelque soleil qu'il ait vu le jour, je l'admettrais pourvu qu'il possédât les qualités requises.

M. Nicholls présente un substitut permettant à chacun d'exercer la jurisprudence.

M. King.—Je supposais bien qu'on en viendrait là, à la fin. La question a déjà ete débattue et je ne veux pas l'approfondir. Je crois que le système actuel est nécessaire a la protection des gens sans expérience. C'est pour les mettre à l'abri de l'imposture qu'il faut que les procureurs aient un diplôme. J'admets que si le droit coutumier était admis dans tous les Etats, le certificats des juges de ces Etat serait une garantie suffisante ici. Je consentirais alors à ce qu'une veuve sans secours remette ses intérêts entre les mains d'un avocat d'un autre Etat, porteur d'une lettre de recommandation d'un juge qui garantit sa capacité. Mais maintenant, elle serait victime de l'injustice et de la rapacité. Je suis d'avis que les médecins aussi devraient avoir un diplôme, parce qu'une même responsabilité pèse sur eux et sur ceux qui se présentent devant les cours pour défendre les droits d'autrui. Si nous abolissons toutes les formalités, le public deviendra la proie des fraudes les plus grossières. Dire que parce qu'un avocat est en état de professer le droit dans le Mississipi, il doit être à même de le faire ici, est absurde. Le fait que le gouverneur du Mississippi n'a pu se faire admettre, prouve simplement qu'il a eu du malheur. L'exemple du bateau à vapeur n'est pas plus heureusement choisi Supposez qu'un pilote connaisse la rivière Hudson depuis sa source jusqu'à son embouchure, celà prouve-t-il qu'il serait capable de guider un bateau à vapeur à travers les bancs de sable et les chicots du Mississippi. Le fait qu'un homme comprend le droit coutumier ne prouve pas qu'il connaisse le droit civil. Les connaissances requises ailleurs ne sont les mêmes que celles qui sont exigées ici. Quant à l'examen dont on a parlé, il ne peut pas effrayer un homme capable; s'il est capable, il le passera.

M. McCay—La possession d'un diplôme est-elle une preuve de capacité ?

M. King—Je ne soutiens pas qu'il en soit toujours ainsi, mais c'est la meilleure que nous puissions avoir. Il va sans dire que ce n'est pas toujours une garantie certaine, puisque l'honorable membre dit qu'il a été admis quand il eût dû être rejeté. La question de courtoisie ne peut pas s'appliquer à nous. Les autres Etats suivent le droit coutumier et nous sommes regis par le droit civil. En franchissant la frontière, on trouve un système totalement différent. Nos lois ressemblent beaucoup à celles de la France. Devons-nous admettre à les professer, ceux qui les ignorent entièrement ? S'il en est ainsi, pourquoi nous borner à recevoir des citoyens des Etats Unis ? Pourquoi ne pas admettre des Chinois et des Tartares?

M. King—L'honorable membre croit-il que tout le monde a assez de perspicacité pour n'être jamais trompé ? Je suis, autant que qui que ce soit, ami du progrès, mais pas de cette espèce de progrès qui ressemble beaucoup à celui de l'écrevisse. Toutes les figures de rhétorique possibles ne parviendront pas à changer les faits.

M. Martin—L'honorable membre appartient au parti de la liberté du commerce et de la concurrence. Il est en faveur de l'admission du sucre étranger qui fait concurrence à mon sucre, à la production duquel j'applique toute mon intelligence. Il faut avoir autant d'intelligence pour produire du sucre que pour être avocat, et je suis en faveur de la liberté du commerce du droit, aussi bien que pour la liberté du commerce du sucre.

M. Short—Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans a parlé de figures de rhétorique. Peut-être le temps viendra-t-il où ces explications tirées de la rhétorique seront mises au ban de cette respectable assemblée; mais maintenant, je demande de nouveau pourquoi nous employons tel ou tel pilote ? C'est parce que nous savons qu'il est capable; parce qu'il a conduit son bateau à bon port par mainte nuit couverte d'un épais brouillard. Pourquoi beaucoup d'affaires sont-elles confiées à l'honorable membre de la Nouvelle-Orléans ? C'est parce qu'il a conduit à bonne fin maint procès couvert d'un épais brouillard. Quand un pilote demande une place, on l'interroge sur son expérience; s'il n'en a pas, on ne veut pas de lui; il pourrait faire côte au Tournant-du-Diable, ou échouer le bateau sur un banc de sable. Il en est de même des avocats: S'ils ne sont pas reconnus capables, ils ne se font pas de clientèle. J'ai connu dans ma jeunesse un jeune homme d'une rare intelligence et d'une solide instruction, qui étudiait le droit. Il se présenta devant un comité dont faisait partie un vieil homme de chicane, dont les idées ne s'élevaient pas au-dessus d'un cas d'assaut et batterie ou de vol. On l'interrogea sur Turner, sur Remainders et puis sur les cas de Shelley. Peut-être ne se rappelait-il pas tout ce que contiennent ces ouvrages érudits; en tout cas il fut rejeté. Un nouvel examen eût le même résultat; mais il était aussi pauvre et fier qu'il était rempli de talent. Il fit un troisième effort et il fut admis. A son premier procès il se trouva avec le vieux chicaneur qui avait fait tout son possible pour l'empêcher de réussir, et la présence d'un homme si profond fit sur lui une telle impression, qu'il lui fut impossible de faire un discours digne de lui. Six mois après il se trouva de nouveau face à face avec son ennemi, mais il avait acquis de l'expérience depuis leur première rencontre, et il obtint un triomphe complet. Se retournant alors vers son adversaire, il s'écria: Est-il possible qu'un homme comme vous m'ait fait peur pendant si longtemps? J'ai vu plus de talent, éloigné du barreau par le système actuel, que n'en couvre tout le parchemin auquel vous semblez attacher tant de prix.

Digitized by Google

Sur motion de M. Dupré, toute l'affaire est déposée sur le bureau.

JEUDI, 14 avril.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

ACTE POUR L'ENREGISTREMENT DE LA PREUVE DES HYPOTHÈQUES, &C.

Le comité judiciaire rapporte le bill sur l'enregistrement des hypothèques sans amendements.

M. Nicholls.—J'ignorais que ce fût l'intention de la majorité du comité de présenter un rapport par écrit aujourd'hui. Le comité a eu une conférence hier, et les opinions étaient tellement partagées qu'il a été impossible d'arriver à une décision. Je m'étonne que le bill soit maintenant renvoyé, avec l'approbation du comité. Je croyais qu'il devait être renvoyé avec avis que le comité n'avait pu parvenir à s'entendre.

M. Lacey.—Le rapport renvoie simplement le bill au Sénat. La majorité du comité n'a pas voulu l'amender parce que le comité judiciaire l'a examiné avec un soin tout particulier; il a purement et simplement renvoyé le bill au Sénat. Comme ledit le sénateur, les différences d'opinion dans le sein du comité étaient trop tranchées pour qu'il fût possible d'arriver à une conclusion.

M. Nicholls.—N'eût-il pas suffi que le comité annonçât simplement ce fait? Il était inutile qu'il se donnât tant de peine pour défendre le bill.

M. Lacey.—Si l'honorable membre avait lu le rapport il n'y aurait trouvé aucun argument, ni pour, ni contre le bill. Il ne fait que donner respectueusement les raisons pour lesquelles le bill est renvoyé sans amendements.

Le bill, dont suit le texte, est pris en considération pour la seconde lecture.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement de la preuve des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

Sec. 1 Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, reunis en assemblée générale;

Qu'à partir du 1er janvier 1854, aucune hypothèque n'existera contre une troisième personne agissant de bonne foi, à moins que l'acte, la nomination, le reçu ou tout autre document par écrit, donnant naissance à une hypothèque, ne soit dûment enregistré. Cet enregistrement sera fait dans le but de peser sur les propriétés foncières et les esclaves dans la paroisse où ladite propriété est située et, sur d'autres esclaves dans la paroisse où le débiteur a son domicile ou sa résidence ordinaire.

Sect. 2. Qu'il sera du devoir du notaire public, ou de l'officier exerçant les fonctions de notaire public, de faire enregistrer dans le bureau du recorder des hypothèques de la paroisse dans laquelle les personnes intéressées demeurent, et contre lesquelles l'hypothèque créée existe, tout acte passé par devant lui, dans lequel, en vertu des lois existantes de l'Etat, une hypothèque légale est donnée en faveur de la femme sur la propriété du mari; soit que l'acte soit un contrat de mariage ou tout autre acte qui existera pour montrer les sommes d'argent ou toute autre propriété que la femme a apportées en dot au temps de son mariage; ou les reçus ou autres actes servant à montrer le montant de l'argent ou toute autre propriété reçue par elle, ou par son mari pour son compte durant le mariage.

Sect. 3. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toutes les fois que des femmes mariées auront des droits à une propriété ou à une somme d'argent par héritage ou par testament, il sera du devoir des exécuteurs, curateurs ou administrateurs, par l'entremise desquels la propriété ou l'argent sera reçu de prendre du mari un reçu authentique de l'argent ou de la propriété, lequel sera enregistré comme hypothèque contre le mari dans la paroisse où il demeure s'il demeure dans cet Etat; mais la propriété ou l'argent ne sera pas délivré au mari jusqu'à ce qu'il prête serment que ledit reçu a été enregistré dans la paroisse où il demeure, et toute autre paroisse de l'Etat dans laquelle il aura des propriétés immobilières. Pourvu que cette section ne s'applique pas au cas où la femme est séparée de biens de son mari, et administre elle-même ses propriétés; pourvu, de plus, que ledit reçu ne soit pas une preuve que ledit mari ait reçu ladite propriété ou ledit argent, à moins que ledit reçu ne soit endossé, payé par la personne recevant le paiement ou la délivrance, lequel endossement devra être daté subséquemment à l'enregistrement.

Sect. 4. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toutes les fois qu'un tuteur de mineurs, ou un curateur d'absent ou de personne interdite, sera nommé par le juge ou toute autre personne ayant droit de nommer des tuteurs et des curateurs, le greffier de la cour devra délivrer à la personne ainsi nommée ou à son agent, ou avocat, une copie de la nomination, pour qu'elle soit enregistrée au bureau du recorder des hypothèques, conformément à cet acte, et les lettres de tutelle et de curatelle ne seront pas données jusqu'à ce que ledit ordre ait été enregistré, et que la personne nommée tuteur ou curateur n'ait prêté et signé le serment suivant:

Je [A B] tuteur de l'enfant [ou des enfants] nommé —ou curateur de————absent ou de————interdit, selon cas, jure solennellement (ou affirme si la personne a des scrupules de conscience de faire un serment) que j'ai fait enregistrer ma nomination dans le bureau du recorder des hypothèques de la paroisse dans laquelle je demeure, et de toutes les paroisses où j'ai des propriétés immobilières.

Lequel serment sera enregistré par le greffier dans son bureau.

Rien dans cet acte n'empêchera les tuteurs de donner une hypothèque spéciale en place de l'hypothèque générale en faveur des mineurs dans la manière prescrite par la loi; mais dans tous les cas semblables, chaque tuteur, avant d'entrer dans l'exercice de ses fonctions, à la place de la dernière clause de l'affidavit ci-dessus, devra prêter serment que l'hypothèque spéciale a été enregistrée dans la paroisse ou les paroisses, selon le cas, dans cet Etat où est située la propriété ainsi spécialement hypothéquée.

Sect 5. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que toutes les tutelles, curatelles d'absents, et de personnes interdites, maintenant existantes dans l'Etat, expireront le 1er juillet prochain, à moins que dans l'intervalle, tout dit officier ne fasse enrégistrer les lettres de tutelle ou de curatelle qui lui auront été premièrement données, ou les copies desdites lettres, ou un certificat du greffier montrant la date de sa nomination, dans la manière prescrite dans la section précédente de cet acte, pour l'enrégistrement des nominations, et aura prêté le serment exigé, lequel serment sera enrégistré comme il est prescrit ci-dessus. Lesdites lettres quand elles seront enregistrées, seront la preuve de l'existence d'une hypothèque à partir de la date de la nomination première dudit tuteur ou curateur. Si un tuteur remplit ce devoir, en donnant une hypothèque spéciale, dans la manière prescrite par la loi, en place de l'hypothèque générale sur ses biens, ledit tuteur continuera à agir comme tel, après avoir prêté serment, dans l'intervalle du temps ci-dessus prescrit, que ladite hypothèque spéciale a été enrégistrée de la manière prescrite dans la section précédente, pour l'enrégistrement des hypothèques spéciales.

Sect. 6. Il est de plus décrété; &c.; Que le premier de juillet ci-dessus mentionné, il sera du devoir de tous greffiers dans cet Etat, (les greffiers de la Cour Suprême exceptés) dans les bureaux desquels les documents des nominations des tuteurs et curateurs de personnes interdites ou absentes seront gardés, de faire un examen exact des dits documents, et dix jours après ledit 1er de juillet ils devront faire une liste exacte de toutes lesdites tutelles ou curatelles que les dits régistres prouveront exister encore ; laquelle liste désignera les noms des mineurs et des personnes nommées tuteurs ou curateurs, qui n'ont pas rempli les formalités exigées par cet acte, avec la date de leur nomination. Cette liste ainsi achevée sera conservée comme faisant partie des archives de la Cour.

Digitized by Google

Il sera de plus du devoir du greffier de faire trois copies de ladite liste dont une restera affichée en évidence dans son bureau pendant l'espace de quarante jours; une autre à la porte ou dans l'intérieur de la salle du palais de justice pendant un laps de temps égal; et l'autre sera remise au juge de sa Cour, ou de la Cour qui a juridiction sur ces affaires, immédiatement, si la Cour est en session, sinon, au premier terme qui sera tenu subséquemment. Le greffier recevra pour la confection desdites un dollar pour chaque tutelle ou curatelle.

Il sera de plus du devoir dudit greffier s'il a le pouvoir voir de lancer des avis, si non, du juge ou toute autre personne ayant d'après la loi, l'autorité compétente pour le faire, d'ordonner au greffier d'émettre des avis, lesquels seront servis par le shérif de la manière que les citations sont servies aux tuteurs ou curateurs résidant dans la paroisse qui auront manqué de remplir ces formalités, d'apparaître cinq jours après le service dudit avis, par devant ledit greffier ou juge, ou toute autre autorité compétente, pour être réelus d'après cet acte.

Si le shérif néglige de servir ledit avis dans les affaires dans lesquelles le service peut être fait par lui, ou de faire le retour certifié du service de ladite notice quand il aura été fait dans un intervalle de cinq jours de sa date, en outre d'être responsable des dommages et frais que les mineurs et autres personnes intéressés pourront encourir, il sera sujet à une amende de vingt piastres imposée par le juge au bénéfice des mineurs, pour chaque fois qu'il ne servira pas la notice ; et si la notice ne peut être servie, le shérif devra en faire le retour dans vingt jours à partir du temps qu'elle lui a été donnée, la même amende sera imposée au shérif pour avoir négligé de remplir les devoirs qui lui sont imposés par cet acte.

Si un tuteur ou curateur apparaît en Cour avant le terme désigné, et demande à être renomme, il devra remplir les formalités exigées par cet acte, prêter le serment prescrit dans la 4me section précedente, et de plus il devra prêter serment qu'il a fait enregistrer dans la paroisse de sa résidence ou dans toute paroisse de cet Etat où il aura des propriétés immobilières une copie des lettres de tutelle ou curatelle qui lui auront été premièrement envoyées, ou un certificat du greffier, montrant la date de sa nomination, les dites lettres ou certificats du greffier, ainsi enregistrées, serviront comme hypothèque spéciale sur ses propriétés à partir de sa première nomination. Mais si le tuteur a donné une hypothèque spéciale, il devra alors prêter serment que la dite hypothèque spéciale a été spécialement enregistrée dans la paroisse dans laquelle est située la propriété hypothéquée. L'enregistrement exigé par le présent acte, doit être fait dans un intervalle de 40 jours après que le tuteur aura été renommé.

Si le tuteur ou curateur n'apparaît pas en Cour dans le temps spécifié, ou si après sa comparution, il ne remplit pas dans quarante jours les formalités requises, le greffier, s'il en a le pouvoir, ou le juge ou toute autre autorité compétente, devra procéder à la nomination d'un autre tuteur ou curateur, selon le cas, à sa place, ayant égard aux préférences qu'accorde la loi dans le choix des tuteurs ou curateurs, lequel remplira les formalités exigées dans cet acte, dans un intervalle de quarante jours, et il sera de son devoir immédiatement de demander au greffier copie des lettres de tutelle ou de curatelle qui ont été données premièrement à la personne qui aura manqué de remplir les nouvelles formalités, ou un certificat montrant la date de la nomination première de son prédécesseur, lesquelles lettres ou certificats il fera enregistrer, à moins que les mêmes ne l'aient déja été dans la paroisse où résidait son prédécesseur, ou s'il est mort dans la paroisse où il résidait, ainsi que dans toutes les paroisses de l'Etat, dans lesquelles il présume que son prédécesseur possède ou possédait des propriétés immobilières, et si son prédécesseur a donné une hypothèque spéciale, qui n'a pas été enregistrée en place de l'hypothèque générale, il sera de son devoir de faire enregistrer la dite hypothèque spéciale dans la paroisse ou les paroisses de cet Etat, dans lesquelles les propriétés sont situées ; il sera de son devoir de faire enregistrer de la même manière les mêmes preuves de toute tutelle ou curatelle antécédente ou de toute hypothèque spéciale antécédente, lesquelles seront considérées comme une hypothèque sur les propriétés de tous tuteurs ou curateurs precedents à dater de leur nomination respective.

Pour toute négligence des devoirs imposés par cette section, le tuteur ou curateur ainsi nommé sera responsable envers les mineurs ou autres personnes qui y sont intéressées, de tous les dommages et frais qui pourront être encourus, et il sera de plus sujet, en cas de perte ou de dommage que le mineur pourrait soutenir, aux lois criminelles décrétées contre les tuteurs qui détourneront les fonds de mineure, et sur conviction du dit délit, après une poursuite légale en due forme, il sera condamné aux travaux forcés pour un temps n'excédant pas deux ans.

Il sera de plus du devoir de tout tuteur ou curateur, nommé d'après cette section, de poursuivre s'il est nécessaire tous les tuteurs et curateurs précédents, pour recouvrer ce qui pourrait revenir aux mineurs ou personnes dont il aura eté nommé tuteur ou curateur—pourvu qu'avant que le tuteur ou curateur nouvellement nommé ait rempli les formalités requises, il sera à la discrétion de la personne exerçant le pouvoir de nomination de nommer le tuteur ou curateur précédent apparaissant en cour et montrant qu'il n'etait coupable d'aucune négligence et offrant de remplir les formalités requises par cet acte.

Sect. 7. Il est de plus décrété &c. ; Que lorsqu'un tuteur ou curateur viendra à changer de paroisse, ou ne résidera pas dans la paroisse dans laquelle il aura été primitivement nommé, l'avis exigé dans la section précédente, sera envoyé par le greffier au shérif de la paroisse dans laquelle le dit tuteur ou curateur demeure, et il sera accordé vingt jours pour apparaître et faire son application pour son retablissement, et il sera accordé au shérif quarante jours pour faire son retour, mais il devra toujours faire son retour dans un intervalle de vingt jours après le service de l'avis.

Tout shérif qui négligera de se conformer aux devoirs prescrits par cette section, sera passible des peines prescrites pour une négligence semblable dans la section precédente.

Sect. 8. Il est de plus décrété &c. ; Que toutes les fois qu'un tuteur ou curateur nommé antérieurement aura changé ou ne résidera pas dans la paroisse de sa nomination première, et que sa nomination sera inconnue, s'il ne paraît pas et ne réclame pas un rétablissement dans un intervalle de quarante jours après le 1er de juillet prochain, il sera du devoir de l'autorité compétente de procéder à une nouvelle nomination de tuteur ou de curateur, selon le cas ; pourvu qu'il soit établi dans les procédures pour la nomination que la résidence du dit tuteur ou curateur absent est inconnue.

Sect. 9. Il est de plus décrété &c. ; Que toutes les fois qu'un tuteur ou curateur nommé en second lieu, change de paroisse au temps de la nomination, il sera de son devoir, à moins qu'il n'ait donné une hypothèque speciale en place de l'hypothèque générale contre lui immédiatement après son changement de demeure, de faire enrégistrer les preuves des hypothèques existant sur ses biens comme tuteur ou curateur dans la paroisse où il vient demeurer et devra faire de même pour tout changement de demeure.

En cas de négligence de remplir les formalités requises par cette section, il sera du devoir de tout tribunal compétent, de changer le dit tuteur ou curateur et d'en nommer un autre à sa place.

Le dit tuteur ou curateur sera de plus condamné à payer à la personne nommée à sa place, pas moins de cent piastres, et pas plus de mille piastres, laquelle somme sera recouvrable pardevant tout tribunal compétent.

Si le mineur ou les mineurs, ou absents, ou personnes interdites, venaient à éprouver une perte ou un dommage occasionné par le le fait tuteur qui ne fait pas enrégistrer l'hypothèque existant en faveur des dits mineurs ou absents ou personnes interdites, en changeant sa résidence d'une paroisse à une autre, en outre d'être responsable civilement envers le mineur absent ou personne interdite, de tous les dits dommages, le dit tuteur sera juge coupable de détournement de biens et sur conviction sera condamné à une amende et emprisonné à la discrétion de la cour.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 10. Il est de plus décrété &c; Qu'il sera légal pour toute personne, en payant les frais légaux, de demander l'inscription dans tout bureau d'hypothèque, de tout acte ou document montrant l'existence d'une hypothèque légale, et aussi tous documens ou certificats qui sont, par cet acte, la preuve de l'existence d'une hypothèque, et il sera du devoir de tous les recorders des hypothèques, sur ladite application, d'enregistrer les dits actes ou preuves de l'existence d'une hypothèque.

Sect. 11. Il est de plus décrété &c; Que tout greffier de cour de cet Etat, qui négligera de remplir les devoirs qui lui sont imposés par cet acte, ou sera coupable d'une négligence préméditée des dits devoirs, sera renvoyé de sa place par le juge de la cour dont il est le greffier, et sera de plus responsable de tous les dommages que pourraient encourir les mineurs par la dite faute ou négligence de remplir ses devoirs, avec un droit d'appel du dit jugement à la Cour Suprême de l'Etat.

Sect. 12. Il est de plus décrété &c; Que tout juge ou officier judiciaire, qui manquera de remplir les devoirs qui lui sont imposés par cet acte, sera trouvé coupable de mauvaise conduite dans sa place et pourra être renvoyé sur une dénonciation ou pétition.

Sect. 13. Il est de plus décrété &c; Qu'il ne sera pas nécessaire de faire enrégistrer de nouveau, après le laps de temps de dix années, la preuve de l'hypothèque légale en faveur des mineurs, de femmes mariées, ou de personnes interdites ou absentes, mais l'inscription une fois faite, sera valide jusqu'à ce que l'hypothèque cesse par payement, prescription ou autrement.

Sect. 14. Il est de plus décrété &c; Que toutes les lois ou parties de lois contraires aux dispositions de cet acte soient et demeurent abrogées par le présent.

M. Hodge—Ayant été absent pendant plusieurs jours durant la discussion de ce bill, je n'ai pas eu l'occasion de préparer un amendement qui réponde à mes vues sur cette question. Je ne puis pas affirmer non plus que je voterai contre le bill tout entier. Je crois qu'il est inutile d'entrer dans de longs raisonnements sur ce sujet. Les sénateurs ont pesé la question et voteront selon la conclusion à laquelle ils sont arrivés après mûre déliberation. Afin que mon vote soit compris, j'expliquerai les raisons qui me guideront en le donnant.

Il n'y a pas le moindre doute sur l'utilité du principe général qui exige l'enrégistrement de tout acte ou droit possédé par un citoyen et de nature à affecter les interêts d'un autre citoyen. Tout droit, hypothèque, privilége ou prétention, doit être inscrit de manière à ce que d'autres personnes puissent en avoir connaissance. J'admets volontiers que nous devons rendre la propriété profitable en la mettant dans des conditions qui permettent de découvrir aisément les droits qui existent sur ces biens. Mais tout en l'admettant, je soutiens qu'il est du devoir de la Législature de rester fidèle à une politique de protection, en faveur des classes qui ont été pendant si longtemps sensées incapables de se protéger elles-mêmes. La politique constante de la Louisiane depuis qu'elle est entrée comme Etat dans l'Union a été de sauvegarder les intérêts des mineurs et des femmes mariées. Je crois qu'aucun sénateur n'oserait dans cette enceinte, se montrer disposé à depouiller ces classes des droits dont elles jouissent et des garanties dont la loi les entoure. Si cette politique que nous avons suivie pendant si longtemps est equitable et juste, la question se réduit à une question de pure utilité, à savoir: si nous devons détruire les garanties qui existent maintenant, pour soulager la propriété au détriment de femmes et d'enfants sans defense.

Devons-nous faire des lois dans le seul but de permettre aux particuliers de réaliser des capitaux avec lesquels ils puissent entreprendre des speculations ? Devons-nous le faire sans examiner s'il n'y a aucun autre intérêt qui ait droit à notre consideration. S'il en est ainsi, effaçons de nos lois tous droits, hypothèques et privilèges, et que celui qui, pour le moment, est en possession du proprieté, en soit le propriétaire dans tous les cas. C'est une conséquence logique. Mais aussi longtemps qu'il y aura des classes dont les intérêts ont besoin de protection, je combattrai toute tentative de ce genre. Je ne m'oppose pas à ce que tous ces droits et réclamations soient rendus publics; mais si j'en veux l'inscription, je ne puis consentir à ce que, si cette formalité est négligée, la peine en retombe sur les mineurs et les femmes mariées. Si l'honorable membre présente un bill pourvoyant à ce que la peine tombe sur le fonctionnaire qui aura negligé de faire son devoir, il ne trouvera pas d'appui plus décidé que le mien. Je sanctionnerai de mon vote les penalités les plus rigoureuses pour forcer les fonctionnaires à remplir leurs obligations, mais jamais une mesure qui tend à priver de ses droits une classe nombreuse de notre population. Examinons l'effet que produira ce bill. Il déclare qu'après le 1er janvier 1855, il n'y aura plus que des hypothèques conventionnelles, legales ou judiciaires. D'où il résulte qu'à moins que le tuteur ou curateur n'enrégistre l'hypothèque, le mineur perd ses droits. Qui, permettez-moi de vous le demander, qui veillera a ce que le greffier ou le recorder de la paroisse fasse son devoir ? Sera-ce le mineur ? Non, sans doute. Qui est chargé des intérêts du mineur ? Le tuteur qui, certainement, se souciera fort peu de veiller à l'execution d'une formalité qui engage ses propriétés. La loi sera donc une lettre morte en tant que la protection des intérêts des mineurs est concernee ? Plus tard, quand le mineur devient majeur, il demande ses propriétés à son tuteur. Nous savons tous qu'il n'y a pas un tuteur sur cent qui s'acquitte fidèlement de ses devoirs. Il est reconnu que l'administration des biens qui leur sont confiés est pour eux une affaire de spéculation et qu'ils ne consultent guère d'autre intérêt que le leur propre. Quand donc, comme je le disais, le mineur demande ses propriétés à son tuteur, celui-ci répond qu'elles sont sans valeur: Il les a dissipées ou vendues, ou il les a hypothéquées en faveur de quelqu'agent de change de Wall street. Le document n'a pas été enrègistré et il n'y a pas de recours. Le capitaliste étranger qui vient acheter des propriétes ici et qui les revend se met à couvert par une hypotheque conventionnelle. Il aura la préference sur le mineur et la femme mariée de notre propre Etat. Cela est-il juste ? Une loi obligeant les greffiers des cours à enrégistrer ces hypothèques et les rendant responsables pour les dommages resultant de leur négligence, ne satisferait-elle pas l'honorable membre ? C'est tout ce qu'en bonne justice on peut demander. Nous pouvons obliger le greffier à envoyer, dans les vingt jours, la copie d'une obligation au bureau du recorder, et s'il néglige de remplir cette obligation, le rendre responsable en dommages, pour l'obligation. Si le greffier ne fait pas son devoir il n'en resulte pas de perte. Je vais au bureau du recorder et je vois que telle propriété est libre de toute hypothèque. Je l'achète. Le mineur, plus tard, me poursuit pour avoir porté atteinte à son hypothèque tacite. Je m'adresse au greffier et j'ai recours à son obligation. Si elle ne suffit pas pour m'indemniser, la faute n'en est pas à la loi. L'obligation est supposée bonne. Si elle ne l'est pas, c'est un mal que la legislation ne peut pas atteindre. Quand le greffier saura qu'il est responsable pour tous les dommages qui résulteraient de sa negligence, il sera plein d'activité et de vigilance. Il n'est pas un enfant et il peut avoir soin de ses intérêts. Il n'en a aucun dans la propriété des mineurs. Il n'a d'autre intérêt à sauvegarder que les siens propres, et l'on est généralement fort soigneux quand c'est l'intérêt personnel qui est en jeu.

La protection des intérêts des mineurs a certainement peu d'importance pour les greffiers et les recorders, mais si vous en faites leur affaire en les tenant personnellement responsables de leur négligence, le cas change tout-à-fait d'aspect ; il n'y aura pas un oubli sur mille cas. Voilà en peu de mots le système que je propose ; mais je ne prêterai pas mon appui à un bill qui viole le droit et la justice. Pour ma part, je ne vois pas que les hypothèques tacites aient les resultats fâcheux qu'on leur attribue. Ce n'est qu'un épouvantail. Je n'ai jamais vu d'exemple d'un acquéreur qui ait été dépouillé de ses droits par suite d'une hypothèque tacite en faveur d'un mineur. Nous ne pouvons pas en dire autant du système que propose ce bill. C'est une attaque directe et violente aux droits de tous les mineurs et femmes mariées de l'Etat. Je voterai en faveur de l'enrégistrement de cette sorte d'hypothèques. J'irai même plus loin. Je consens à ce que les femmes mariées n'aient pas d'hypathèques tacites qui puissent nuire aux intérêts d'autrui. Mais je ne sanctionnerai jamais la destruction des garanties dont la loi entoure les droits des mineurs. Partout les mineurs sont exposés à être dépouillés et opprimés, et cependant on nous demande d'abattre le rempart qui les protège. Pour ma part, je n'y prêterai jamais les mains. Nous voulons donner des garanties à l'acquéreur de bonne foi, rien n'est plus juste, mais nous n'avons pas le droit de le faire aux dépens des intérêts des autres. C'est ce que fait le bill de l'honorable membre.

Digitized by Google

« Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim. »

En voulant éviter un extrême, il tombe dans l'autre. M. Nicholls fait la motion d'effacer tout ce qui se trouve dans la première section, après le mot « reunis » dans la troisième ligne, jusqu'au mot « enrégistré » dans la septième ligne, et d'insérer le substitut suivant :

Qu'aucune hypothèue n'aura force de loi ou n'existera contre une troisième personne agissant de boane foi, lorsque le dit acte, nominat on, reçu ou autre document par écrit, donnant naissance à cette hypothèque, sera daté postérieurement au 1er janvier 1854, à moins que l'acte, la nomination, le reçu ou autre document ne soit dûment enrégistré dans le bureau du recorder des hypothèques.

M. King—Le changement proposé aurait pour résultat de différer les avantages qu'on attend de ce bill, jusqu'à ce que toutes les hypothèques tacites existantes aient expiré par limitation ou aient été éteintes de quelqu'autre manière, et ce délai détruirait l'objet que le bill a en vue. Le but du bill est que les registres fassent foi de toutes les charges qui existent sur toutes les propriétés de l'Etat. Cette mesure doit entrer en vigueur en 1854. Nous n'avons pas voulu qu'elle fût mise en force immédiatement, parce qu'on eût pu le consideror comme une atteinte aux droits acquis ; mais la période fixée laisse une marge amplement suffisante et débarrasse le bill de toute objection de cette nature. J'espérais qu'alors les registres indiqueraient la condition de toutes les propriétés de l'Etat, et qu'il serait mis un terme aux fraudes nombreuses qui jusqu'à ce jour ont été commises au détriment de tierces personnes innocentes. D'après le substitut présenté par le sénateur de St-Martin, ces avantages ne pourront être réalisés avant que tous mineurs de l'Etat n'aient atteint leur majorité et que toutes les femmes mariees ne soient décedées. Ce serait faire des lois pour les générations futures au lieu d'en faire pour le présent. Ce serait nous priver nous mêmes des avantages que nous accordons à ceux qui viendront après nous. Je désire augmenter la nature des propriétés foncières, les rendre convertibles en argent et inspirer aux capitalistes étrangers une confiance qu'ils ne possèdent pas maintenant. Le bill originel assurera ce résultat, mais le substitut l'empêchera.

M. Hodge—Un mineur en faveur duquel il existe une hypothèque, perdra-t-il ses droits dans le cas où l'hypothèque ne serait pas enregistrée ?

M. King—Nous croyons que le bill que nous avons présenté assure l'enregistrement de ces hypothèques. Notre but est d'assurer les droits d'un chacun et nous soutenons que ce bill le fait beaucoup plus efficacement que le système actuel. Supposons, par exemple, qu'il y ait une hypothèque sur un nègre. Aucun régistre public n'en fait foi. Le nègre est vendu à une tierce personne qui après toutes les recherches nécessaires, ne trouve aucune hypothèque. Quelques années plus tard elle découvre qu'une hypothèque tacite existe sur ce nègre. Elle se hâte de l'envoyer au Texas ou dans quelque autre endroit où il ne puisse pas être découvert, et l'hypothèque devient sans valeur. Ainsi cette hypothèque tacite tant vantée, qui pèse sur les biens-fonds et nuit au commerce, n'atteint même pas son but. Celui qui a acheté des propriétés honnêtement et de bonne foi ne les abandonne pas volontiers, il mettra en œuvre tous les moyens possibles pour empêcher qu'elles lui soient enlevées. Notre bill accorde à tout le monde une protection plus efficace. Nous voulons que les régistres mettent les hypothèques en évidence devant le monde entier. Mais les fraudes dont nous sommes témoins tous les jours deviendront impossibles. C'est là un des grands avantages de ce bill. Je préférerais pour mes enfants une hypothèque enrégistrée à une hypothèque tacite. Mais toutes les fois que des intérêts garantis sont en question, il convient d'accorder un temps raisonnable pour cet objet. Nous devons rassurer ceux qui tremblent pour les droits de leurs enfants, et avoir égard aux desirs des parents agés qui, voyant une nombreuse famille s'élever autour d'eux, attendent avec anxiété le sort de ce bill qui doit assurer leurs biens à leurs enfants et empêcher qu'ils ne soient dépouillés par leurs tuteurs ou curateurs.

M. Nicholls—Je partage en tout point les sentimens exprimés par le sénateur de Caddo [M. Hodge]; ce sont ceux que j'ai émis il y a quelques jours. Mais si le Sénat est decidé à se prononcer sur le principe du bill, je désire qu'il soit le moins possible sujet à objection.

C'est dans ce but que j'ai présenté l'amendement. L'honorable membre de la Nouvelle-Orleans (M. King) dit qu'il détruira l'objet que le bill a en vue; que ce serait faire des lois pour la postérité. Et quand bien même nous le ferions, où serait le mal ? Est-il hors de propos de faire des lois pour nos neveux ? La différence qu'il y a entre nous est, que tandis que je veux en faire pour nos descendants, il veut en faire pour nos ancêtres. Il veut rétrograder et dire que les droits qu'assure la loi cesseront d'exister. Une hypothèque existant aujourd'hui en faveur d'un mineur est aussi solide qu'une hypothèque conventionnelle.

La Législature a-t-elle le droit de dire aux parties contractantes : « Vos droits seront annulés, vous ne jouirez plus du bénéfice de cette hypothèque. » Supposons que dans le but d'avancer les intérêts du commerce, la Législature s'avise d'ordonner que toute vente de propriétés foncières faite ou à faire dans la Louisiane, sera enrégistrée dans tous les Etats de l'Union et que si l'enrégistrement n'en est pas fait dans un temps donné, la vente sera nulle. Je vous demande si un bill de cette espèce mériterait un instant de considération. Et cependant, la portée du bill qui nous occupe est la même Si la loi actuelle garantit les droits, il n'est pas possible de les assurer davantage.

Nous ne pouvons pas rendre un droit parfait, plus parfait. Si le tuteur dissipe les biens qui lui sont confiés, le mineur a une hypothèque qui le met à couvert. Ni la présente Législature, ni vingt législatures futures ne pourraient invalider ce droit ainsi acquis, et existant en vertu de lois antérieures. On nous parlera de lois de recours et de prescription. mais le cas qui nous occupe est fort différent. Le bill attaque des droits et non des recours.

Il y a des gens qui désirent un changement. Ils ne savent pas si le nouveau système protégera les mineurs, s'il favorisera l'acquéreur, ou s'il violera des droits acquis. Ils veulent un changement. Nous n'ignorons pas cependant que les changements ne sont pas toujours avantageux. Je connais les avantages du système proposé, mais ils ont été grandement exagérés par ceux qui veulent ici faire plier tout sous le joug de fer du commerce, qui proclament, qui voudraient nous persuader que le commerce doit régner en souverain et qui veulent nous forcer à nous incliner devant les intérêts commerciaux de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Je consens à toute mesure qui tend à accroître la prospérité de la Nlle-Orléans, pourvu que vous ne me demandiez pas de fouler aux pieds les intérêts qui me sont les plus chers. Vous voulez arriver à vos fins au milieu des gémissements des orphelins et des pleurs des femmes mariées.

Devons-nous accepter cette législation ? Etions-nous appelés à une discussion de ce genre ? Les membres de la campagne qui désirent un changement sont sur le point de s'assujettir au joug du commerce. Le seul argument qui ait été présenté est, que le commerce serait favorisé et que les capitalistes acquerront de la confiance. Et pour ces considérations nous devrons sacrifier les droits de nos enfants et de nos femmes. J'ai pratiqué à la campagne pendant 10 ans et je n'ai eu que rarement occasion de voir des abus résulter du système des hypothèques tacites. J'ai vu rarement des honnêtes gens expropriés sous l'empire de ce système. Celui qui achète des propriétés foncières est un homme arrivé à l'âge de raison, et à même de faire toutes les recherches nécessaires. S'il est lesé par une hypothèque non-enregistrée, c'est un malheur pour lui. Mais c'est un mal moins sérieux que de mettre le mineur à la merci de son tuteur, et de lui ôter tout recours contre ceux qui auraient dissipé ou vendu ses biens illégalement. Vous me direz que le subrogé tuteur veillera aux intérêts du mineur, mais nous savons qu'il ne le peut pas, attendu qu'il est généralement considéré comme l'espion du tuteur.

Digitized by Google

Je dis que la législation de ce pays n'est pas préparée à un tel changement. Il nous reste trop peu de temps pour discuter ce bill et les sénateurs admettent eux-mêmes qu'ils ignorent quels en sont les effets. Il vaut donc mieux nous en tenir au sytème existant que de nous embarquer dans des spéculations dont la fin serait peut être désastreuse. Une proposition a été faite à la Chambre pour référer la question à un comité avec instructions de raporter à la prochaine Législature un bill pour parer aux inconvénients du système des hypothèques tacites. Laissons cette question à des mains plus habiles. Refléchissons et voyons si les changements que nous voulons faire ne seraient pas plus nuisibles qu'utiles. Est-il donc nécessaire que la question soit resolue immédiatement ? Jusqu'à présent le système des hypothèques tacites ne nous a occasionné aucun préjudice. Réflechissons donc avant d'adopter un nouveau système dont les suites pourraient être fâcheuses.

M. Short—Je ne pensais pas qu'un travail approfondi fut necessaire pour découvrir que le système des hypothèques tacites peut avoir de défectif et pour developper les changements qui devraient y être apportés. Ce qui, pour moi, est le plus important, c'est de faire connaître ce qui est resté ignoré jusqu'à present. Il est vrai, comme le dit mon collègue, que nous devons nous montrer généreux pour l'avenir et ne pas nous occuper à faire des lois pour le bénéfice de nos ancêtres; mais précisément ce bill fait l'un et ne s'inquiète pas de l'autre. Notre but est de poser des règles pour les actions des hommes et gouverner leur conduite dans leurs rapports entre eux.

Nous voulons que ces règles régissent particulièrement leurs transactions afin que l'acquereur d'une propriété puisse être certain qu'il n'en sera pas dépouillé. Ces règles sont pratiques et équivalent aux lois. Toutes les fois que la législature pose des règles pour gouverner uniformément les hommes, elle fait un pas en avant dans la législation. Mais il a été dit que nous ne pouvions faire le pas. Et pourquoi donc ? Depuis nombre d'années il existe en Louisiane un système d'hypothèques qui est inconnu dans tout autre Etat. Pourquoi n'adopterions-nous pas un système uniforme ? Les changements ne sont pas aussi radicaux que mon collegue se le figure. Quand le comité a examiné le bill tous les membres l'ont considéré avec la plus grande attention, mais le sénateur n'a fait alors aucune mention de ses objections. Je m'étonne qu'avec le talent et le jugement sûr que nous lui connaissons, il nous conseille de remettre cette question à des mains plus habiles. Croit-il donc que ceux qui viendront après nous seront d'une race supérieure à la nôtre ? Il a été reconnu depuis longtemps que les inconvénients du système des hypothèques tacites sont insupportables, cependant mon collègue n'approuve pas ce bill, tout en admettant que la fraude se pratique maintenant, et quoiqu'il soit reconnu que le système actuel est un de ceux qui la favorisent le plus.

Le vieux système anglais des reliquats contingents qu'un jurisconsulte seul pouvait comprendre, était loin d'encombrer les propriétés et de multiplier les procès comme le fait le système des hypothèques tacites. Je ne veux pas que l'on croie que l'amour des innovations seul me pousse à attaquer ce vénérable système; mais si nous en trouvons un meilleur, mon lespect pour une vieille erreur ne l'emportera pas sur r'espoir des bienfaits qui doivent résulter d'une innovation On dirait que lorsqu'il n'y a que deux ou trois pas à faire, on ne veut pas en faire un seul, et qu'on consent à supporter les maux dont on se plaint, sans chercher à y porter remède. Mais nous ne voulons pas dépasser la limite qui sépare le connu de l'inconnu, ni échanger les maux que nous avons, contre d'autres que nous ne connaissons pas. Nous cherchons à améliorer notre système et nous le rendre pire. Nous voulons faire un pas que nous croyons dirigé vers le progrès, et que pour cette raison il est de notre devoir de faire.

M. Hodge.—Je désire savoir si un tuteur qui vendrait les biens qui lui sont confiés serait responsable civilement ou criminellement.

M. Short.—Si un homme vend un bien sur lequel il sait qu'il existe un droit superieur, il se rend certainement coupable d'une certaine espèce de fraude, mais ce n'est pas comme s'il les eût obtenus sous de aux prétextes.

M. Hodge.— Je prouverai à l'honorable membre qu'il est dans l'erreur. [Il lit un article du Code.] Il est donc évident que si le tuteur le faisait, il serait un escroc, et pourrait être poursuivi comme tel.

M. Short.— Un tuteur ne donne jamais d'hypothèque sur les propriétés d'un mineur; il ne peut le faire qu'avec le consentement d'un conseil de famille.

M. Hodge.—L'honorable membre se trompe. Le Code contient l'article suivant. [Il lit.]

M. Short—C'est vrai, mais ce bill a en vue de remédier aux défauts de la loi, c'est pour remédier au système des hypothèques tacites qu'il a été presenté. L'honorable membre prétend-il que ce système n'a pas d'inconvénients; veut-il nous faire croire que le systeme des hypothèques tacites est le seul supportable. Prenons un exemple : Un homme épouse une femme qui a trente ou quarante mille piastres; ils vont a New-York ou ailleurs et depensent cette somme. La femme a sa part des jouissances et du luxe que donnent quarante mille piastres, et je crois que pour cet argent on peut se procurer une somme assez considérable de plaisirs Elle revient ici et dit que son mari dépense son argent, que ses biens dotaux et paraphernaux sont en danger. Elle obtient un jugement pour $25,000, et son mari eût-il vendu ou hypothéque la plantation, elle n'en peut pas moins l'enlever au créancier. Voilà le mal auquel nous voulons porter remède; nous voulons empêcher que la femme puisse aider son mari à frustrer ses créanciers; nous ne voulons pas qu'un homme descende du rôle de chef de famille a celui de sommelier; nous ne voulons pas qu'après avoir dépensé sa propre fortune une femme puisse enlever celle de son mari à ses créanciers. Y a-t-il personne qui soit assez aveugle pour ne pas apercevoir les abus qui peuvent résulter de ce système, abus tellement clairs et palpables qu'on en voit des exemples tous les jours. Je le répète, je ne veux pas un changement pour le seul amour des innovations Je demande seulement que ces hypothèques qui jusqu'à ce jour sont restées inconnues, soient rendues publiques. Si après cela l'acquéreur ignore l'hypothèque, il n'a pas le droit de s'en plaindre, il n'avait qu'à ouvrir les yeux. Mais ne punissez pas une personne innocente, une personne qui n'a en son pouvoir aucun moyen de connaître l'existence d'une hypothèque.

M. Hodge.— Je dirai quelques mots en réponse aux remarques que vient de faire le sénateur de Carroll. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, j'ai été absent pendant quelque temps et je n'ai pas pu donner au sujet toute l'attention qu'il mérite. J'ai dit déjà qu'il ne se pratique pas sous le système actuel autant de fraude qu'il le suppose, parce qu'il y a une loi qui déclare, que si un tuteur qui vend ou hypothèque ses propriétés, ne fait pas connaître l'existence de l'hypothèque tacite dont elles sont grevées, il sera considéré coupable d'escroquerie. Le Code Civil est explicite sur ce point. Et puisque nous parlons du Code, permettez-moi de vous dire que jamais le monde n'a vu d'œuvre aussi éclairée, aussi admirable, que celle que nous devons aux esprits vraiment dignes de faire ces lois pour un peuple libre et intelligent, qui ont rédigé notre Code.

Le Code indique les differentes espèces d'hypothèques et la maniere dont elles doivent être faites. Il appelle celle qui nous occupe, tacite, non pas parce qu'elle n'est pas inscrite, mais parce qu'elle est créée sans qu'il intervienne un contrat special. Le Code prescrit des règles pour l'inscription de toutes les classes d'hypothèques, excepté celles en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

L'article suivant exige que tous les actes créant des hypothèques soient enrégistrés. Tout fonctionnaire public qui passe un acte d'où il résulte une hypothèque doit le faire enrégistrer, que l'hypothèque soit conventionnelle ou qu'elle soit légale. Il ordonne aussi aux juges de faire enrégistrer la nomination des tuteurs, curateurs, &c.

Ainsi tout acte qui donne naissance à une hypothèque, sinon l'hypothèque elle-même, doit être enrégistré, et celui qui néglige de remplir cette formalité est responsable pour les dommages qui pourraient en résulter. L'argument de l'honorable membre tombe devant le fait que la loi de 1854 déclare, que toute personne qui empruntera de l'argent sur des propriétés sans déclarer préalablement les hypothèques dont ces biens pourraient être grevés, sera considerée coupable d'escroquerie. Je n'ai jamais eu connaissance d'un cas où un tuteur ait obtenu de l'argent par ce moyen par ce qu'aucun tuteur ne voudra s'exposer à subir les pénalités que font encourir la violation de cette loi. La loi est assez sévère et avec quelques légers amendements elle suffirait à toutes les exigences. Je veux que le procès-verbal fasse foi que moi pour ma part, je refuse de sanctionner par mon vote, la destruction des droits de ceux qui sont incapables de les defendre eux-mêmes.

Digitized by Google

M. Short—Si l'honorable membre a découvert dans le code ou dans la loi de 1821 un remède aux abus dont on se plaint, il a fait une découverte precieuse et le peuple lui en devra la plus grande reconnaissance. L'honorable membre dit qu'un homme qui ne déclare pas l'existence d'une hypothèque sur ses propriétés est sujet à poursuite. Rien de plus vrai, quand il a connaissance de l'existence de cette hypothèque ; mais quand il l'ignore et doit l'ignorer, peut-on le déclarer coupable d'escroquerie? Aucune cour dans le monde civilisé ne l'entendrait ainsi. Il ne peut être considéré coupable qu'en tant qu'il a connaissance de l'hypothèque. Mais qu'il soit sujet à poursuite pour ne pas avoir déclaré une chose qu'il ignore, voilà une doctrine que je n'admettrai jamais.

M. Hodge—L'honorable membre ne me comprend pas. Tout tuteur ne sait-il pas qu'il y a une hypothèque sur ses propriétés ?

M. Short—Prenons l'exemple d'un jeune homme qui épouse une femme qui a $25,000. J'ignore l'existence d'une hypothèque sur sa propriete, je l'achète ou je lui prête de l'argent sur cette propriété ; quelques mois après sa femme se présente, et, grâce à son hypothèque antérieure, elle me l'enlève ou m'empêche d'y exercer mes droits. La Cour Suprême a décide que si un homme va dans le Kentucky ou le Mississipi et s'y marie, si les parties contractantes ont déclaré leur intention de venir ici, l'argent reçu par le mari constitue une hypothèque sur les propriétes. C'est un autre mal que je voudrais prévenir.

M. King—Je crois que le Sénat comprend maintenant la portée du substitut ; le voici en peu de mots : Les avantages du bill que nous voulions realiser immédiatement seront différés de telle sorte que la génération présente ne pourra pas en jouir. Peut-être pas un de nous ne vivra pour voir le jour où le grand mal qui nous afflige maintenant, qui retarde notre prospérité et diminue la valeur de nos propriétés, cessera d'exister. Nous voulons avoir le benéfice de ce bill en 1854. Le substitut l'ajourne indéfiniment.

Adopter ce substitut, ce serait tromper la juste attente du peuple et manquer à ce que nous devons à nos commettants; ce serait les bercer d'espérances flatteuses et en renvoyer indéfiniment la réalisation.

M. Wickliffe—Avez-vous jamais entendu un mineur ou une femme mariée se plaindre du système des hypothèques tacites ?

M. King.—J'ai entendu des femmes mariées dire qu'il leur était fort désagréable d'être obligées de faire des renonciations et de remplir d'autres formalités qui maintenant sont necessaires; telles que d'aller au bureau des hypothèques et beaucoup d'autres choses qui répugnent à des femmes. Je vois maintenant que les differences qui existent dans nos opinions sont irréconciliables. Je représente les interêts et les désirs de mes commettants auxquels ce bill sera d'un avantage plus réel que tous les chemins de fer et toutes les banques que cette Législature peut créer. Un sénateur a dit qu'il ne connait pas un seul cas où une hypothèque tacite en faveur d'un mineur ait agi au detriment d'une tierce personne. La maison dans laquelle loge l'honorable membre fut achetée par un honnête artisan qui la paya de son argent et la croyait bien sa propriété, quand tout à coup il s'en vit dépouille par l'existence d'une hypothèque tacite. Si l'honorable membre a ignoré ce cas, je ne m'étonne pas qu'il soit si oublieux de ce qui se passe dans sa propre paroisse ! Pourquoi remettre cette affaire ? Il prétend qu'il n'y a pas sujet de plainte, et cependant il propose de référer le bill à comité d'avocats.

Mais ce bill a été composé par des avocats, rédigé par des avocats, examiné par des avocats, et approuvé par des avocats les plus distingués de l'Etat; et non pas par un ou deux, mais par vingt au moins. A la dernière session de la Législature, un bill de la même teneur que celui-ci fut presenté au Sénat par M. Benjamin. Ce bill-ci est base sur son aîné, mais il pourvoit à plusieurs cas qui n'étaient pas prévus dans l'autre Je suis autorisé à citer les noms de quelques avocats distingués qui ont donné leur approbation à ce bill. D'abord je nommerai M. Benjamin parce que le présent bill est fondé sur le sien; puis M. Micou, un avocat distingué, et les juges Eustis et Strawbridge. Je suis fier aussi de citer mes collègues du comité judiciaire, MM. Lacey et Short, Je crois que sur une question de jurisprudence les noms que je viens de citer doivent être une autorité suffisante pour tout le monde. Je ne prétend pas que le bill soit parfait. On peut imaginer des cas difficiles qui pourraient se présenter sous le régime de ce bill; mais où est la loi qui soit exempte de ces objections? Ce que je soutiens est que ce bill porte remède au mal qui existe et qu'il est aussi exempt de toute conséquence fâcheuse qu'on peut raisonnablement l'espérer de quelque loi que ce soit.

M. Todd.— Je suis opposé au substitut. Je crois qu'il détruirait l'effet du bill à cause des raisons alleguées par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Ce serait en effet faire des lois pour la posterité, au lieu d'en faire pour la génération présente, qui certainement a droit à notre sympathie et à notre considération. Il est hors de doute que le système actuel pèse lourdement sur la propriété et s'oppose à la libre transmissibilité des biens, ce qui est une des conditions essentielles d'une société prospére. Il y a dix ans que le peuple réclame à hauts cris l'abolition de ce système. Les membres qui nous sont opposés sur cette question avouent qu'il favorise la fraude, ils admettent au moins implicitement qu'elle pèse comme un cauchemar sur la propriété de la Louisiane ; qu'il empêche l'entrée des capitaux et diminue la confiance que, sous un autre régime, les étrangers auraient en nos lois.

Ils admettent tout cela, et cependant ils refusent de porter remède au mal. Je veux qu'on brise les liens de la victime et qu'on la rende à la liberté. Il est du devoir de cette Législature d'adopter cette mesure. Si notre œuvre n'est pas parfaite, on la perfectionnera plus tard. Je porte aux orphelins et aux femmes mariées un intérêt aussi vif que qui que ce soit dans cette enceinte, mais je crois avec le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans que ce bill les protége plus efficacement que le régime actuel. Guide par ces idées et persuadé que l'intérêt de la Louisiane demande impérieusement un changement dans ce système actuel, je voterai en faveur du bill.

M. Hodge—Je prie l'honorable membre de me dire si une hypothèque qui n'aurait pas été enregistrée sera perdue, tandis qu'elle a pris naissance sous le régime d'une loi qui n'en exigeait pas l'enregistrement. S'il en est ainsi, le bill serait-il constitutionnel ?

M. King—Il n'y a pas le moindre doute que nous n'ayons le droit d'exiger l'enregistrement de toutes les hypothèques. Mais si vous le croyez inconstitutionnel, faites objection au bill. Cela ne peut nuire en rien à votre théorie. S'il est inconstitutionnel, il ne peut pas être mis en vigueur et par conséquent ne peut causer aucun mal.

Le substitut est déposé sur le bureau.

M. Hodge—J'avais demandé que la section fût déposée sur le bureau, mais ensuite j'ai retiré ma motion, afin que la section pût être soumise à un vote direct, quoique cette courtoisie soit rarement faite à notre parti.

M. Mouton propose d'étendre le temps jusqu'au premier avril 1854.

M. King—Le bill satisferait-il alors l'honorable membre ?

M. Mouton—Non, mais j'y aurai moins d'objections.

M King—Je ne vois de bonne raison pour l'amendement à moins que l'honorable membre veuille donner à la prochaine Législature l'occasion de rappeler la loi.

M. Mouton—L'honorable membre se trompe, ce n'était pas là mon intention.

M. King—Eh bien, j'accepte l'amendement.

M. Palfrey—Je voudrais savoir si le bill contient une disposition qui exige que le tuteur fasse enregistrer l'hypothèque sur ses propriétés immobilières dans différentes paroisses immédiatement après leur acquisition. D'après la loi actuelle, l'hypothèque existe sur une propriété immobilière aussitôt qu'elle est acquise dans quelque partie de l'Etat que ce soit

Digitized by Google

Quelque système que nous adoptions, je considère cette clause comme essentielle. Supposons qu'un tuteur qui n'a pas de propriétés soit nommé. Il dispose des fonds de son pupile comme il l'entend. Quelle garantie la loi offre-t-elle dans ce cas ? Pourvoit-elle à ce que le tuteur fasse enregistrer l'hypothèque dans différentes paroisses ? Cela est absolument nécessaire pour prévenir les malversations.

M. King—Il y a une section du bill qui pourvoit à ce cas

M. Palfrey—Cette section fait de l'omission de l'enregistrement une offense pénale. Mais nous ne demandons pas des pénalités, nous voulons des garanties qui protègent les mineurs. Si le tuteur venait à mourir quelle garantie y aurait-il ? Quel recours aurait le mineur ? Vous ne pouvez pas punir les morts.

M Nicholls—Je trouve la remarque du sénateur de Ste-Marie parfaitement juste.

M. Taylor présente l'amendement suivant, pour être ajouté à la fin de la troisième section, lequel est adopté :

Il sera du devoir des greffiers des cours dans lesquelles il existera dans ce temps une preuve d'une hypothèque legale sur les biens du mari en faveur de sa femme, si ladite preuve n'est pas déjà enregistrée, de l'enregistrer dans le bureau des hypothèques; et si un greffier négligeait de le faire, vers ou avant le 1er avril 1854, il sera responsable envers toute femme mariée, des dommages qu'elle pourrait encourir par la dite négligence, et de plus il sera passible d'une amende de cent piastres, une moitié au bénéfice de la personne intentant le procès,—ledit greffier recevra pour cet enregistrement un salaire d'une piastre et demie pour chaque enregistrement.

La 3ème section est alors adoptée telle qu'amendée.

La 4me section est adoptée.

M. Palfrey présente l'amendement suivant, comme section additionnelle.

Sect. 5.— Il est de plus décrété, etc., Qu'en outre des bureaux d'hypothèques maintenant établis par la loi, il sera établi au siége du gouvernement de cet Etat, un bureau central pour l'enregistrement de toutes les hypothèques projettées par cet acte, soit en faveur des femmes mariées, soit en faveur des mineurs, et toutes les hypothèques projetées par les dispositions de cet acte seront enregistrées dans leur bureau, comme il est pourvu dans cet acte pour l'enregistrement des mêmes hypothèques dans les autres bureaux.

Et aucune reconnaissance de reçu d'argent ou de propriété de la part du mari, ne sera considérée comme preuve de la délivrance de ladite propriété ou dudit argent, à moins qu'elle ne soit accompagnée d'un certificat de l'officier occupant ledit bureau central des hypothèques pour montrer que ledit reçu a été duement enregistré dans son bureau, et aucune lettre de tutelle ou de curatelle ne sera donnée à des personnes demandant lesdites lettres, jusqu'à ce que le certificat de l'officier dudit bureau central des hypothèques ait été exhibé et montrant que l'ordre de ladite nomination a été duement enregistrée dans son bureau, et l'enregistrement dudit reçu du mari ou dudit ordre de nomination dudit tuteur ou curateur, selon le cas, aura force de loi comme hypothèque générale sur les propriétés immobilières et les esclaves dudit mari ou dudit tuteur ou curateur, selon le cas, et contre des troisièmes personnes à partir du temps de l'enregistrement dans ledit bureau.

M. Short.—Je n'approuve pas la création d'un bureau central tel que le propose la section additionnelle proposée par le sénateur de Ste-Marie. Le siége du gouvernement est tellement éloigné de quelques parties de l'Etat, qu'avant qu'un homme puisse venir ici pour obtenir un certificat, une autre personne aura pu obtenir une hypothèque Ce serait accroître les difficultés que nous nous efforçons d'aplanir et surcharger le bill, qui est déjà assez long maintenant. J'espère que l'honorable membre n'insistera pas pour en augmenter les proportions et le surcharger de sections additionnelles et inutiles. Si l'honorable membre présente beaucoup d'amendements de ce genre, il finira par écraser le bill. J'espère sincèrement qu'il ne montrera pas ces dispositions à l'égard d'un bill qui a été si amplement considéré.

M. Palfrey.—Quelque temps que nous ayons mis à la considération du bill, il n'est pas encore mûr. L'honorable membre nous a dit et répété que l'objet du bill est de convertir des hypothèques inconnues en connues, et c'est là précisément le but de son amendement.

M. King.—Il y a une objection solide à l'amendement. Il faudrait aller à Bâton-Rouge pour obtenir un certificat de toutes les hypothèques, ce qui occasionnerait une grande perte de temps, sans que nous soyons mieux renseignés sur la situation de la propriété de l'Etat.

Le bill qui nous est soumis exige que le tuteur fasse enregistrer l'hypothèque dans toutes les paroisses où il a des propriétés et décrète des pénalités contre toute négligence de cette formalité.

M. Nicholls.—Mais quelle garantie offre-t-il aux mineurs ?

M. King.—La garantie est en ce que l'enregistrement et l'hypothèque sont assurés, au moins c'est là notre opinion.

M. Palfrey.—Le bill ne pourvoit à l'enregistrement d'aucune hypothèque après la nomination du tuteur. Je reconnais l'existence des abus dont se plaignent les défenseurs de ce bill, mais que sont-ils auprès de la destruction des droits des mineurs ?

L'amendement est repoussé.

La cinquième section est adoptée.

La sixième section est prise en considération.

M. Nicholls. — Cette section prétend protéger les droits des mineurs. Il n'en est rien. Au lieu d'être une protection, elle n'est qu'un manteau pour couvrir un odieux système de contributions et cela lorsque le peuple est déjà écrasé de taxes. Il exige que les greffiers somment tous les tuteurs d'enregistrer les hypothèques pesant sur leurs propriétés. L'honorable membre sait-il quelles dépenses cette mesure entraînerait ! Je n'exagère pas en disant que dans mon district il y a au moins 500 cas de cette espèce et les frais de greffier et de shériff se monteraient à dix piastres pour chaque cas. 500 multiplié par 10 donne pour la paroisse de St-Martin seule une taxe de $5,000. Quand le receveur des contributions fera sa tournée pour toucher ces comptes et dira aux veuves et aux orphelins : Votre bourse est bien mince, mais les officiers de la loi la mettent de nouveau à contribution ; quand le collecteur des taxes se présentera à nos portes, les défenseurs du bill pourront-ils résister à la force de l'opinion populaire?

Le bill dit qu'il sera du devoir du greffier de citer une personne quand il aura des raisons pour croire que cette personne a été tuteur, etc Les dix piastres qu'il doit toucher pour chaque citation ne seront-elles pas une raison suffisante pour qu'il se croie peut-être trop souvent tenu de le faire.

De la sorte la taxe serait considérablement augmentée et si vous ajoutez les honoraires des procureurs elle sera plus que quadruplée. Eh ! messieurs, si les avocats s'étaient assemblés en conseil pour aviser aux moyens de multiplier les procès, ils n'auraient pas pu en trouver un meilleur que celui qu'offre ce bill. Peut-être aurais-je part moi-même à la curée. Mais nonobstant cela, je dois protester contre ce système d'impôt qui au lieu de subvenir aux besoins du gouvernement ne ferait que remplir les poches d'un tas de misérables employés, et faire la fortune d'une bande d'avocats rapaces. Le peuple de mon district veut bien prêter ses propriétés au soutien du crédit de l'Etat, mais il ne consentira jamais à prodiguer son argent à un tas d'employés avides. La provision est écrasante, oppressive, odieuse ; la contribution qu'elle impose est onéreuse au possible. Elle nuira à notre crédit et fomentera le mécontentement. L'honorable membre croit qu'elle est destinée à relever notre crédit. Comment en serait-il ainsi quand elle impose une charge de cinq ou dix milles piastres à chaque paroisse Je n'ignore pas qu'on dira que je présente un tableau exagéré, mais je suis prêt à répondre à cet argument. Ces hypothèques remontent à 25 ans et dans la paroisse de Ste-Marie il y en a au moins 500. Ce côté du bill est odieux et jamais je ne pourrai l'accepter. Pourquoi ne pas adopter une mesure dont l'influence bienfaisante se fasse sentir dans tout l'Etat, au lieu de celle-ci qui tend à dépouiller les mineurs et à accabler le peuple? Je dis que ce bill donnera naissance à un monstrueux système de pillage et de fraude au détriment des mineurs et des femmes mariées, tel qu'on n'en a jamais vu sous le régime d'aucun bill qui ait jamais été adopté. Voulez-vous que le shérif parcoure l'Etat en proclamant que toutes les successions seront rouvertes et réglées de nouveau, et que de nouvelles taxes seront imposées, et tout cela pour la sécurité du capital et le plus grand avantage du commerce. Le commerce ! le commerce ! le commerce le veut, le capital l'exige ; tout doit céder. Qu'importe ceux qui sont ruinés ! qu'importe ceux qui sont dépouillés ! qu'importe ceux qui sont foulés aux pieds.

Digitized by Google

quid non mortalia pectora cogis,
Auri sacra fames !

Les défenseurs de ce bill nous disent que le système des hypothèques tacites nuit au commerce et gêne les capitaux ; cela se peut mais ce sont des maux qui m'affectent moins que de voir les droits des mineurs anéantis et d'innocents orphelins dépouillés de leurs proprietes. Je m'y opposerai de tout mon pouvoir, de toutes mes forces, et j'espère qu'un jour viendra où le peuple découvrira dans quel but ce bill a été adopté.

M. Short—L'honorable membre vient de tracer un tableau très brillant, et je suis vraiment désolé de devoir détruire l'objection sur laquelle son imagination l'a brodé à si grands frais. Le bill ordonne simplement que certaine chose soit faite. Il n'y a pas de citation, pas de frais, pas de taxe. L'honorable membre nous a peint les énormites de ce bill ; il nous a montré la Louisiane se débattant dans les griffes de fer du commerce ; ce spectacle me serait certainement fort penible, si je ne croyais qu'il n'est autre chose qu'un fantôme créé par l'imagination exaltée de l'honorable membre. C'est un tableau magnifique mais l'ho membre ne nous a pas dit dans quelle galerie il a l'intention de le placer. J'ai un petit amendement à presenter qui, je le ponse, ne peut manquer de satisfaire mon honorable collègue ; c'est de faire payer les frais au tuteur. En somme tout se réduit à ceci : la loi ordonne au tuteur de faire une chose et s'il ne la fait pas, c'est lui qui en souffrira. L'intention de l'honorable membre etait je crois, de faire la motion de deposer la section sur le bureau. Je ne l'en empêcherai pas en faisant un long discours. Je voulais seulement faire voir que les objections qui ont été presentees contre ce bill n'y sont pas applicables, je voudrais depouiller le bill de tout semblant de taxes et d'honoraires d'avocats. Si nous pouvions passer une loi pour nous débarrasser tout à fait des avocats tout n'en irait que mieux. C'est un résultat que nous devrions appeler de tous nos vœux, quoiqu'alors je pourrais dire en toute vérité « Otello n'a plus d'occupation. »

M. King—L'honorable membre a évoqué un fantôme de son imagination pour nous effrayer. A quoi aboutirait sa motion d'effacer la section ! Nous avons déjà voté une section qui oblige les tuteurs et curateurs à faire enrégistrer ces hypothèques avant le 1er avril 1854. Cette section-ci pourvoit au mode d'enregistrement et le senateur qui s'est constitue le champion particulier des mineurs (quoique je pense qu'il n'en a pas beaucoup à sa suite) qui a rêvé oppression et fraude et qui a découvert ces vices précisement là où en est le remède, ce même sénateur dis-je, veut effacer cette section. Si nous adoptons son amendement, au premier avril prochain les droits de tous les mineurs de l'Etat seront annihilés d'un seul coup et sans qu'il leur reste aucun recours. C'est ce que je veux éviter. Si cependant l'honorable membre voulait le faire, je me verrais forcé de lui disputer la défense de ces intéressantes créatures qu'il a prises sous sa protection spéciale. Si mon collègue voulait se donner la peine de compulser les régistres de son district, il trouverait que presque toutes les hypothèques sont enregistrées, et tout tuteur honnête s'empressera de remplir les formalités requises par ce bill. S'ils ne le font je voudrais pouvoir les punir au centuple de ce bill. Un tuteur qui serait assez indifferent ou assez coupable pour négliger les droits sacres qui lui sont confiés, merite le châtiment le plus sévère. Cette section a en vue la protection des mineurs. Si le tuteur manque à ses devoirs, il en portera la peine. Je croyais qu'il allait sans dire que les cours condamneraient aux frais un tuteur qui aurait failli à ses devoirs ; mais pour rendre ce point plus certain, je voterai avec plaisir pour l'amendement du sénateur de Carroll [M. Short.]

M. Nicholls—L'honorable membre dit que cette section a en vue la protection des mineurs. S'il en est ainsi c'est la protection que le loup accorde à l'agneau.

La section est adoptée:

Finalement le bill est adopté section par section.

BANQUE DES ARTISANS ET DES MARCHANDS.

M. Palfrey, du même comité, soumet le rapport suivant de la minorité :

Le soussigné, membre du comité des banques et maisons de banques, auquel avait été référé l'acte intitulé : Acte pour prolonger la charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, de la Nouvelle Orléans, différant d'opinion avec la majorité du comité dans le rapport qu'ils ont fait sur ledit acte, demande la permission de rapporter, qu'en justice, la manière dont cette institution, a été administrée et conduite jusqu'à sa fin, en donnant une circulation bonne et valable, et des facilités financières libérales aux intérêts du commerce et de l'agriculture, aussi bien que les considerations d'utilité qui s'opposent à ce qu'on retire subitement une quantité si considerable de numéraire au commerce de notre Etat, recommande qu'il soit permis par le dit acte à la dite banque de terminer ses affaires de manière à ne causer aucun embarras dans sa liquidation ou au commerce en rappelant trop soudainement les paiements dûs à la Banque.

Signé : P. W. PALFREY,
Chambre du Sénat,
14 avril 1853.

M. Clifton, du comité des banques et maisons de banque, présente le rapport suivant :

A l'Hon. W. W Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur.

De la part du comité des banques et des maisons de banque, auquel avait été référé un « Acte pour prolonger la Charte de la Banque des Artisans et des Marchands, » le soussigné demande la permission de rapporter que comme la Charte de la dite Banque expire le 12 avril prochain par prescription, et comme aucune action du comité ne pourrait affecter cet acte, le dit comité le renvoie au Senat sans amendement ou commentaire.

Signé : C. W. CLIFTON,
Président.
14 Avril 1853.

M. Martin—Je demande l'impression de 500 exemplaires des rapports. Mon but, en proposant le renvoi du bill était de l'etouffer. C'était une ruse parlementaire et je veux que le peuple en soit informé.

Le Sénat ordonne l'impression de 500 exemplaires du rapport.

M. Lacey introduit la résolution conjointe suivante:

Il est résolu par le Senat et la Chambre des Representants de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en Assemblée Générale :

Que nos Sénateurs au Congrès soient requis et nos Représentans priés d'employer leur influence et de faire tous leurs efforts pour obtenir l'établissement d'un bureau de poste additionnel dans la paroisse de Livingston, Etat de la Louisiane, devant être situé sur la residence actuelle de Robert Brulon ou près de là.

Resolu—Qu'une copie de ces résolutions soit envoyée par le Gouverneur, à chacun de nos Sénateurs et Représentants au Congrès.

M. Martin.—Je propose d'effacer le mot « requis »

M. Mouton.—Je m'oppose à la motion. Je crois que nous avons le droit de donner des instructions.

M. Martin.—C'est precisément pour cela que je fais la motion. Je ne crois pas que nous ayons ce droit.—Requerir nos Sénateurs de faire une chose, est simplement ridicule.

L'amendement est adopte.

M. Rivers demande la prise en considération d'un acte intitulé :

« Acte pour l'achèvement des bâtisses dans le Pénitentiaire de la Louisiane. »

Sur motion d'adopter la première section conçue comme suit :

Sec. 1.—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en Assemblée generale :

Que la somme de dix mille piastres soit et demeure appropriée par le présent à l'effet d'achever la nouvelle chambre de cellules dans le Pénitentiaire de la Louisiane.

Et après quelque discussion, le bill est adopté.

Digitized by Google

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Sénat informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

«Acte pour émanciper Alexander Green.»

«Acte pour autoriser Aachibald Baron et Mary Murphy, sa femme, à adopter un enfant nommé Mary Lucy.»

«Acte pour donner certains droits au Maire de la ville de Port Hudson.»

«Acte pour empêcher les corporations municipales de cet Etat de lever des taxes sur des personnes vendant des articles manufacturés par elles-mêmes dans les limites de cet Etat.—Substitut à un «Acte pour empêcher le Conseil Municipal de la Ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans de lever une taxe sur les personnes vendant des objets manufacturés par elles-mêmes.»

Acte pour punir toute tentative de dommages aux levées ou digues de toute rivière navigable de cet Etat.

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du télégraphe de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de la Rivière Rouge et du Texas.

Acte pour améliorer Big Creek.

Acte pour autor ser Rufus D. Killgore et sa femme Sarah C. Killgore à adopter Robert Bliss Read, et pour changer son nom en celui de Robert Read Killgore.

Acte pour émanciper François Nicholas.

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par les collecteurs de taxes de paroisse.

Résolution conjointe présentant les remercîments de l'Assemble Générale au capitaine Ricketts, de l'artillerie des Etats-Unis, pour avoir tiré un salut en l'honneur des restes mortels de l'ex-gouverneur Johnson.

Résolution requérant l'ingénieur de l'Etat de faire un examen exact des canaux de la Vieille Rivière, entre l'embouchure de la Rivière Rouge et le Mississippi, et ceux de la Grande Pointe sur la Rivière Rouge.

Résolution pour venir au secours de l'Hôpital de Charité.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivants du Sénat :

Acte pour mettre en force d'une manière plus efficace les dispositions d'un acte intitulé :

Acte pour le progrès de l'éducation médicale en Louisiane, approuvé le 21 mars 1850.

Acte pour venir au secours de Mme Joseph Dubuclet, de la paroisse de St-Martin.

Acte pour incorporer la Compagnie du chemin en planches de Bâton-Rouge et de Clinton.

Acte pour empêcher les greffiers de Cours et leurs députés, d'agir dans certains cas comme encanteurs.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, demande la signature du président pour les actes enrôlés suivants :

Acte pour réorganiser le jury de police de la paroisse St-Landry.

Acte pour amender les différents actes relatifs à la police et au gouvernement de la ville de Franklin, paroisse de Ste-Marie.

Et il demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour réorganiser les écoles publiques dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Acte pour régler l'élection des avocats de districts, le Ier district judiciaire excepté.

Acte pour émanciper Geo. Millette.

Acte pour mettre en force les principes contenus dans l'article 28 de la Constitution.

Acte pour assurer la collecte et le paiment des deniers publics.

Acte pour définir d'une manière précise les limites entre les paroisses d'Orleans et de St-Bernard.

Acte pour pouvoir à l'enregistrement des étampes et marques d'animaux.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'appropriation et au remboursement des sommes payées pour des warrants de certaines terres des écoles, vendues pour location dans le district du Sud-Est.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte intitulé, Acte pour pourvoir à l'expropriation des terres pour chemins de fer et autres travaux d'utilité publique, approuvé le 8 mars 1852.

Acte pour venir au secours de John Rains, de la paroisse de Morehouse.

Acte pour venir au secours des propriétés des banques en liquidation.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'accomplissement des devoirs des recorders de paroisse en cas de vacance.

Résolution recommandant à nos sénateurs et priant nos représentants au prochain Congrès d'obtenir l'abrogation de tout réglement refusant l'admission dans l'hôpital de marine des Etats-Unis, à tous marins ou autres personnes attaquées de maladies supposées incurables, et que la Chambre a donné son concours à un amendement.

Acte pour venir au secours d'Emile La Sère, imprimeur de l'Etat.

Et que la Chambre a donné son concours à une section additionnelle au substitut du Sénat à un acte de la Chambre intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours des personnes possédant des certificats d'entrée ou warrants émis par Richard Loucks, arpenteur du bureau des terres.

Et que la Chambre a donné son concours à l'acte suivant émanant du Sénat :

Acte pour créer deux notaires publics additionnels dans et pour la paroisse de Morehouse.

Et que la Chambre a refusé de donner son concours aux amendements du Sénat à un acte de la Chambre intitulé :

Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district judiciaire excepté.

Il demande le concours du Sénat à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour l'achèvement des constructions dans le pénitentiaire de la Louisiane.

VENDREDI 15 avril 1853.

M. Martin obtient la permission de presenter un acte imposant sur les nègres et sur les mulâtres libres, une taxe destinée à creer un fonds pour pourvoir à leur transportation en Liberie.

M. Martin—Je présente ce bill à la requête de l'orateur qui a fait un discours sur ce sujet aux citoyens de Bâton-Rouge, avant-hier. Il m'assure que cette méthode a été adoptee avec le plus grand succès en Virginie.

M. Wickliffe—Je propose de référer le bill au comité des affaires paroissiales.

La motion est repoussée.

M. Short—Il y a bien des années que la société de colonisation a été établie dans les Etats du Sud. Si le bill n'avait pas été présenté par le sénateur d'Assomption et s'il n'avait pas reçu la sanction de la Virginie, je l'aurais pris pour un projet de quelque ville du Nord dans les Etats du Sud.

Le bill est adopté.

RAPPORTS DES COMITES.

M. Lewis du comité spécial, auquel avaient été référes les actes suivants intitulés :

Acte relatif aux avis judiciaires.

Acte relatif aux avis publics.

En fait un rapport favorable.

M. Short, du comité de conférence nommé pour se joindre au comité de la Chambre, d'après une résolution conjointe passée à cet effet, par rapport à une différence d'opinion entre le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentants sur les amendements du Sénat à un acte de la Chambre intitulé :

Acte pour canaliser et dessécher les terres marécageuses et inondées—présente le rapport suivant, lequel est lu.

A l'honorable Président du Sénat de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Le comité de conférence nommé pour se joindre à un comité de la Chambre en vertu d'une résolution passée à cet effet, par rapport à une différence d'opinion entre le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentants sur les amendements du Sénat à l'acte émanant de la Chambre intitulé :

Acte pour canaliser et dessécher les terres marécageuses et inondées, rapporte respectueusement :

1o Qu'ils ont eu une entrevue avec le comité de la Chambre et qu'il a été décidé que la Chambre accéderait aux amendements de la 11me section du dit acte, lesquels la Chambre avait repoussés.

2o La Chambre accepte le substitut du Sénat à la section 12me comme proviso après le mot «compensation» et commençant par le mot «pourvu,» ajou-

Digitized by Google

tant à la fin du substitut les mots «en ce qui concerne les levées maintenant existantes.»

3o La Chambre accepte les amendements du Sénat à la 16me section en ajoutant les mots «pourvu que la dite compensation s'applique aux travaux construits en vertu des dispositions de cet acte.»

4o La Chambre accepte le substitut du Sénat à la section 19me.

5o La Chambre accepte l'amendement du Sénat, en retranchant la 20me section.

6o Le Sénat retire sa section additionnelle No 28.

(Signé) SHORT.

Le rapport est adopté.

M. Kenner, du comité des Banques et Maisons de Banque, présente le rapport suivant:

Le comité des Banques et Maisons de Banque, rapporte le bill suivant, auquel des amendements seront présentés par une partie du comité, et dont l'autre partie du comité demande l'adoption.

D. F. KENNER, Président.

Acte pour autoriser la Banque des Citoyens de la Louisiane, à convertir des actions garanties par hypothèque, en actions au comptant.

M. Kenner—J'ai rapporté ce bill dans le but de mettre la Banque des Citoyens à même de convertir certaines actions en comptant. Je ferai observer verbalement qu'il existait une grande différence d'opinion dans le sein du comité.

M. Lewis—Je voudrais voir la discussion de ce bill ajournée jusqu'à ce que nous ayons pu prendre quelques renseignements sur ce sujet.

M. Kenner—Je suis opposé à ce retard. Il y a plusieurs semaines que le bill est devant la Législature et nous avons eu tout le temps de l'examiner. Je tâcherai d'expliquer l'objet du bill. La Banque a été créée en émettant des bons et l'Etat est responsable de ces bons si la Banque n'était pas en état de les payer; des considérations d'équité et de justice l'y obligent. Le capital se monte à $6,000,000 dont $5,800,000 sont placés en prêts à longue échéance, de cinq à trente ans. C'est ce qu'on appelle capital immobile; il ne peut pas servir aux opérations de la Banque. Il porte un intérêt très faible, à peine plus élevé que celui du bon. Il ne reste donc plus que $5000,000 de capital actif. Comme ce chiffre est insuffisant aux opérations de la Banque, elle demande le léger privilége, de disposer d'une partie de ses actions jusqu'à concurrence de $1,000,000, ce qui élèverait son capital actif à $1,000,000. Cela équivaut à transférer $1,000,000, du capital immobile au capital actif de la Banque. Tel est le but pur et simple du bill. Je m'étonne qu'aucun sénateur puisse soulever la moindre objection à cette mesure. L'année dernière un acte fut adopté, autorisant les commissaires à faire rentrer $12 par action, ils ont déjà fait rentrer sept dollars par action et cette mesure a été fort onéreuse pour les actionnaires. S'ils faisaient rentrer le montant entier il s'élèverait à $740,000, presque le total de la somme demandée. Les nouveaux actionnaires auraient dix mille voix, en d'autres termes le quart du nombre total, c'est un avantage offert aux acheteurs.

M. Short.—L'objet de ce bill à ce qu'il paraît, est de convertir une certaine somme du capital immobile en capital actif, afin de mettre la Banque à même de faire face au paiement des bons garantis par l'Etat. L'Etat a émis des bons dont $7,500,000 sont tenus en Europe. Les prêts à longue échéance sont, comme l'a dit l'honorable membre, un capital immobile, et le capital actif de la Banque est insuffisant à faire face aux paiemens des bons. L'Etat est intéressé aux affaires de la Banque au moins en tant qu'il s'agit de le délivrer de cette responsabilité. Les hypothèques primitives données par les actionnaires s'élevaient à quatorze millions de dollars. On comptait émettre des bons pour douze millions et l'on croyait qu'ils seraient garantis par les hypothèques, mais il n'en fut pas émis pour plus de sept millions. Ainsi ces bons sont garantis par des hypothèques sur des propriétés d'une valeur de 14 millions. Il ne peut donc y avoir aucun inconvénient à convertir un million du capital immobile en capital actif. Ce sera un avantage pour l'Etat et pour le commerce. Il me semble que le plus chaud partisan de la circulation des espèces métalliques ne pourrait pas avoir d'objections à ce bill.

M. Lewis.—J'insiste sur ma motion de différer notre décision.

M. Kenner.—J'espère que l'honorable membre n'insistera pas sur sa motion. S'il veut des renseignemens, il lui sera facile de se les procurer. Si les partisans du bill ne pensent pas pouvoir le rendre assez clair maintenant, ils ne le pourront jamais. Ajourner le bill équivaut à le rejeter.

M. King.—Il me semble que le mot « additionnel » devrait être effacé du bill. Nous ne faisons que changer la nature d'une partie du capital; nous n'y ajoutons rien. Bien des gens sont opposés au système des Banques et à toute augmentation de leur capital.

M. Kenner.—Nous n'augmentons pas le capital de cette Banque; nous ne faisons que lui permettre de convertir un million de ses propres actions en fonds profitable.

M. Lacey.—Je demande l'appel nominal sur la motion qui occupe le Sénat, attendu qu'il se peut que je sois absent quand le vote sur le passage final du bill aura lieu.

M. King.—L'augmentation d'un million dans le capital actif de cette Banque, augmenterait d'autant ses ressources, bien qu'elle n'élève pas le chiffre de son capital. Comme l'Etat est dans une forte mesure responsable pour les bons de cette banque, il occupe vis-à-vis de cette Banque une position plus particulière que vis-à-vis de celles où il n'est pas intéressé.

M. Wickliffe.—Cet acte accroîtra-t-il les garanties de l'Etat?

M. King. — Certainement, puisqu'il augmente la masse active la Banque d'un million, tandis que la garantie reste la même.

M. Mouton —A quoi ce million de dollars est-il destiné? Est-ce à accroître d'autant la circulation de la Banque?

M. Kenner.—Non. Seulement à augmenter d'autant son capital actif. Elle est déjà autorisée à émettre des billets jusqu'à concurrence de telle somme qu'elle voudra, pourvu qu'elle ait en mains un tiers de cette somme en argent comptant et un tiers en effets à courte échéance; cela garantit la circulation.

M. Mouton.—Donc, en ayant plus d'espèces dans ses caveaux, elle pourra émettre plus de billets.

M. Kenner.—Messieurs, le seul but de ce bill est de tirer les actionnaires de la position difficile où ils se trouvent. C'est comme pour nourrir un cheval; si vous ne lui donnez rien à manger il faut qu'il meure. Si vous ne mettez pas la Banque à même de payer, nous devrons payer nous-mêmes, ou répudier la dette. Voilà où il faudra en venir.

M. Wickliffe.—Ce n'est pas cette raison qui me fera voter pour le bill. L'année passée un acte fut adopté pour autoriser la Banque a se procurer $1,728,000, en faisant un appel de $12 par action. L'on disait que cela suffirait et que les facilités accordées par l'acte mettraient la Banque à même de continuer ses opérations. Ce bill aurait pour effet de retirer la direction des affaires des anciens actionnaires qui ont eu à combattre toutes les difficultés, pour la donner aux nouveaux.

M. Mouton présente ce qui suit comme substitut à la cinquième section du bill:

Qu'avant que ledit acte ait force de loi, il faudra que la majorité des actionnaires en nombre et montant, signifient leur assentiment à l'article 118 de la Constitution et qu'ils seront obligés de se conformer aux dispositions dudit article de la Constitution.

M. Kenner.—Le substitut détruira l'objet que ce bill a en vue.

M. Rivers propose de déposer le substitut sur le bureau.

M. Mouton.—Le sénateur de Concordia veut-il me permettre de dire quelques mots en défense du substitut avant d'insister sur sa motion? Le but de ce bill, si je le comprends bien, est de permettre à la Banque des Citoyens de tirer un capital additionnel de $1,000,000, de ce qu'on appel le capital immobile de la Banque Par cette opération, elle aura les moyens et le pouvoir d'augmenter sa circulation actuelle de $1,000,000 et d'émettre de nouveaux billets. Voilà la raison pour laquelle je voudrais contraindre la Banque à se conformer à l'article 118 de la Constitution. Quelle objection peut-on y présenter. Je ne vois pas comment nous pourrions autoriser la Banque à augmenter son capital actif et à émettre des billets, sans exiger qu'elle se conforme aux dispositions de l'article 118 de la Constitution.

Le bill est adopté.

Digitized by Google

L'acte pour organiser les écoles publiques dans l'Etat de la Louisiane est pris en considération.

M. Dupré fait la motion d'excepter les nègres libres de la taxe.

M. Mouton—Il me semble que l'amendement est juste. Nous ne devons pas leur faire payer l'éducation des enfants des autres, tandis que les leurs sont privés de cet avantage.

M. Rivers—D'après ce principe nous devrions excepter aussi toutes les personnes qui n'ont pas d'enfants.

La motion est rejetée.

Après l'échange de quelques mots, le bill est adopté.

SAMEDI, 16 avril 1853.

M. Derbès, du comité des réclamations, présente un rapport du dit comité et un acte pour venir au secours de Shaderick Brooks et de David Sherley, lequel subit sa première lecture.

M. Short—Le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge ayant été obligé de s'absenter de la ville, m'a prié de présenter le bill suivant, avec demande qu'il soit référé au comité judiciaire:

« Acte pour régler les procédures dans les Cours de District. »

Le bill est référé au comité judiciaire.

M. Griffin—Je suis autorisé par le comité des affaires paroissiales à rapporter favorablement à l'adoption de l'acte pour pourvoir à la representation uniforme de la paroisse de St-Jacques dans le jury de police de la dite paroisse.

Après dispense des règles, l'acte subit sa 3me lecture et passe.

M. Wiekliffe demande la prise en considération d'un acte émanant de la Chambre, et intitulé:

Acte pour autoriser l'achat &c. de 250 exemplaires d'une édition revue du Code Civil, du Code de Procédure et des Rapports de la Louisiane par Thomas Gibbs Morgan.

M. Mouton—Je m'oppose à la dispense des règles pour la troisième lecture de cet acte, et je demande quelques explications sur la nécessité qu'il y a pour l'Etat d'encourir cette dépense

M. Wickliffe—J'apprendrai à l'honorable membre qu'il n'y a pas un seul exemplaire de ces ouvrages dans la bibliothèque de l'Etat, qu'une édition revue est indispensable et que dans mon opion l'achat est absolument nécessaire.

M. Mouton retire son objection, et l'acte est adopté.

M. King demande la permission de présenter un rapport du comité des améliorations intérieures, et un acte pour construire des ouvrages à l'embouchure du Bayou Plaquemines, comme substitut à l'acte primitif.

M. Slack demande la dispense des règles pour la seconde lecture du substitut.

La dispense est accordée.

M. Slack propose d'adopter la première section.

M. Short—Quoique je ne demeure pas dans le 2nd District, je m'intéresse vivement à cette question, et je ne puis m'empêcher d'exprimer mon étonnement de voir proposer une mesure qui, d'après ma manière de voir, viole la loi, nommant des commissaires des terres marécageuses et qui viole également la loi du Congrès, qui veut que les fonds provenant de la vente des terres dont il nous a fait don, soient appliqués exclusivement à la construction de levées et au desséchement de ces terres. L'acte qui est maintenant soumis au Sénat est un acheminement vers un système de législation auquel j'espérais que nous avions renoncé. L'acte qui vient d'être adopté par les deux Chambres pour créer un conseil de commissaires des terres marécageuses, autorise le Gouverneur à en nommer un dans chacun des trois Districts qui divisent l'Etat, et ce conseil nomme pour chaque District un ingénieur chargé de faire les études nécessaires et de constater les travaux à exécuter. Ces commissaires et ces ingénieurs sont autorisés à déterminer quels ouvrages entrent dans l'acception des mots Levées et Desséchement et un fonds est mis à leur disposition pour mettre à exécution les dispositions de cet acte. Le bill qui est maintenant devant le Sénat, nuira au système général des levées qui vient d'être établi et s'opposera à la réalisation de l'objet que l'acte a en vue.

L'acte du Congrès dit que les fonds provenant de la vente des terres marécageuses et inondées seront appropriés exclusivement à la construction de levées et au desséchement; le bill qui est maintenant devant le Sénat ne pourvoit il pas à l'application de ces fonds à un objet qui n'est ni dans l'esprit ni dans la lettre du don? Je ne crois pas que la construction d'un brise-mer à l'embouchure d'un bayou, ou d'une digue pour empêcher l'entrée des bois flottants dans l'embouchure d'un bayou, ait encore été considérée comme équivalente à la construction de levées et au desséchement; et quand même il en serait ainsi, le conseil des commissaires et des ingénieurs des terres marécageuses nommés en vertu de la loi sur les levées, peut décider ces affaires et faire exécuter tous les travaux qui rentrent dans les dispositions de cet acte. J'espère donc que le Sénat ne reviendra pas à ce système de législation spéciale qui faisait des appropriations tantôt pour une localité, tantôt pour une autre, tandis que nous avons créé un conseil pour mettre à exécution un système de levées et de desséchement, et que nous avons mis à leur disposition le fonds des terres marécageuses dans ce but. Vous portez atteinte au principe de la loi du Congrès, et j'espère que le bill ne sera pas adopté.

M. Slack—Je demande la lecture du rapport du comité des améliorations intérieures qui, j'en suis persuadé, détruira plusieurs objections présentées contre ce bill. Je suis certain que si l'honorable membre de Madison et Caroll connaissait la nature du pays où l'amélioration est proposée, il retirerait son objection. Il est absolument nécessaire de construire ces ouvrages à l'embouchure de ce bayou avant de songer à aucune opération de levée ou de desséchement. J'ai vu en cet endroit une crue de deux pieds se déclarer en un seul jour et inonder un district considérable, et cette crue était produite exclusivement par l'accumulation du bois flottant à l'embouchure de ce bayou. Les eaux de ce bayou sont maintenant plus hautes de 4 pieds que celles d'aucune autre partie de l'Etat, et jusqu'à ce que cet amas de bois soit enlevé, il est inutile de songer à faire des levées. Je pense que le bill est strictement conforme au sens et à l'esprit de la loi, et que l'équité et la justice nous obligent à l'adopter.

M. Griffin—Je regarde le bill qui occupe en ce moment l'attention du Sénat, comme inconstitutionnel, et je ne le soutiendrai pas de mon vote. Si le fonds des terres marécageuses peut être appliqué à cet objet, on pourrait en disposer pour draguer et canaliser, ou pour tout autre objet étranger aux levées et au dessèchement.

M. Nicholls—Il me semble que ce bill fait un emploi convenable du fonds des terres marécageuses, et qu'il est conforme à l'objet du don du Congrès. Beaucoup de membres savent que l'embouchure de ce bayou s'est considérablement agrandie, et que le courant y porte presque tout le bois flottant qui descend le Mississippi et y forme un amas de bois qui ferme presque tous les cours d'eau qui se dirigent vers le golfe et qui obstruent la navigation. Les terres qui avoisinent ces bayous ont été couvertes de 4 pieds d'eau, et sont pour la même raison constamment exposées aux mêmes désastres. Si ce bill, qui a en vue de débarrasser l'embouchure du bayou de l'amas de bois qui est la cause reconnue de ces inondations, si ce bill, dis-je, met ces terres à sec, n'est-ce pas dessécher? N'est-il pas d'accord avec la loi si sans faire disparaître la cause des inondations, il n'y a pas de dessèchement possible? Si cela ne s'appelle pas dessécher, j'avoue que je ne comprends pas la signification de ce mot. Le seul moyen de dessèchement praticable pour venir au secours de cette section de l'Etat, est d'enlever le bois en dérive qui s'est accumulé à l'embouchure de ce bayou.

M. Short—Je ferai une observation sur le principe adopté par ce bill et dont on n'a pas encore parlé. Le conseil des commissaires des terres marécageuses est autorisé par la loi à exécuter les travaux projetés dans le bill qui occupe maintenant l'attention du Sénat. Et que voulez vous faire? Vous voulez retirer de leurs mains les travaux dont la loi leur donne la direction, et envoyer un ingenieur dans telle ou telle partie de l'Etat, en violation d'une loi faite par vous-mêmes. Permettez-moi de vous demander ce que signifie le mot dessécher; n'est-ce pas de débarrasser les terres de l'eau qui les couvre, en creusant des ca-naux pour faire écouler ces eaux vers les terres plus basses. S'il y avait moyen de faire déboucher le Mississipi ou l'Ohio de l'autre côté des montagnes Rocheuses, ce serait donc aussi dessécher d'après le système des défenseurs du bill.

Digitized by Google

M. King—Je suis en faveur du bill. Je pense que par dessèchement on entend tout ce qui empêche les terres d'être inondées et je crois que ce bill fait un usage juste et convenable du fonds des terres marécageuses.

M. Short—L'honorable membre n'a-t-il pas créé des commissaires des terres marécageuses pour aviser aux affaires de cette nature et ne veut-il pas maintenant leur enlever ces fonctions? Je ne partage pas l'opinion du sénateur de la Nouvelle Orléans, que c'est faire un emploi légitime du fonds des terres marécageuses. Je propose que l'appropriation demandée dans ce bill soit prélevée sur le fonds des améliorations intérieures, au lieu d'être tirée du fonds des terres marécageuses.

M. Todd—Je propose de déposer l'amendement sur le bureau. Je trouve qu'il est injuste d'approprier le fonds des améliorations intérieures à cette fin. Le bill a toute mon approbation et j'espère qu'il sera adopté. Le principe me paraît juste. Le fait d'enlever cet amas de bois est une opération de dessèchement et ne peut être considéré sous aucun autre point de vue.

M. Palfrey—Je ne crois pas que la législature ait renoncé à tout droit de faire des lois sur les levées et le dessèchement, lorsqu'elle a créé le conseil des commissaires des terres marécageuses. J'approuve le bill et d'après mon opinion, il est conforme aux vues de la loi. Des considérations d'utilité me feront voter en faveur du bill primitif, car je crois qu'il pourvoit au moyen le plus expéditif et le moins coûteux de dessécher ce district de l'Etat.

L'amendement de M. Short est repoussé et le bill subit sa seconde lecture.

M. Griffin demande la prise en considération d'un acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriation pour l'année finissant le 31 mars 1853.

M. Griffin fait remarquer que l'appropriation pour le département de l'ingénieur avait été omise.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe le bill est référé au comité des finances.

M. Rivers demande la dispense des règles pour la prise en considération du bill de la Banque des Citoyens. La motion est adoptée et l'appel nominal est demandé sur la passation finale de l'acte.

M. Mouton—Je prie le sénat de me dispenser de voter sur ce bill, attendu que j'ai fait un compromis avec M. Kenner qui a quitté la ville Je suis pourtant opposé au bill et je voterais dans ce sens si M. Kenner était présent.

La dispense est accordée et le bill est adopté.

M. McCay demande la dispense des règles pour la prise en considération d'un acte pour pourvoir à la place d'avocat-général et pour la régler. La motion est adoptée.

M. Todd.—Ce bill est très important. Je ne l'ai encore ni vu, ni lu, et je voudrais avoir le temps de l'examiner et d'y réfléchir avant de voter. Je demande donc qu'il soit imprimé et mis à l'ordre special du jour pour mardi prochain.

M. McCay.—Il me semble que les sénateurs ont eu amplement le temps d'examiner ce bill. L'importance de ses dispositions exige que nous nous en occupions sans délai. Le bill devrait être adopté maintenant, et j'espère que l'honorable membre retirera sa motion d'en ajourner la discussion.

M. Todd.—Je dois au contraire insister sur ma motion d'imprimer le bill et d'en remettre la discussion.

La motion est repoussée.

M. McCay propose d'adopter la 1re section du bill.

M. Mouton.—Je regrette de devoir m'opposer au bill. Les fonctions de l'avocat-général deviennent plus onéreuses du moment où il doit remplir une partie de celles qui étaient autrefois du ressort de l'avocat de district de la paroisse d'Orléans. Les appointements devraient donc être augmentés et ceux de l'avocat de district diminués en proportion des charges dont il est débarrassé.

Sur la motion d'adopter la 10me section du bill, M. Todd dit: Je propose d'effacer $3,500 et d'insérer $3,000 comme chiffre des appointements de l'avocat-général. Je crois que $2,500 serait suffisant mais je veux bien faire une concession. Bien que les devoirs qu'impose cette place soient difficiles et que le travail qu'elle exige vaille bien $3,500, je crois qu'aujourd'hui que l'Etat est presque insolvable, $3,000 doivent suffire. L'économie est un de nos devoirs et il est temps que nous fassions le premier pas dans la voie de la réforme.

M. McCay.—La somme que nous proposons de donner à ce fonctionnaire est la même qui lui fut allouée l'année passée: $3,500. Subséquemment la Législature la réduisit à $1,500 avec un fonds contingent de $500 qui fut mis à sa disposition, faisant ensemble $2,000. Je crois que $3,500 n'est qu'une rémunération équitable de ses services, puisque nous avons étendu le cercle de ses fonctions dans la paroisse d'Orléans. Je ne vois pas pourquoi l'avocat-général ne se rendrait pas dans toute partie de l'Etat où les intérêts de la Louisiane réclament sa présence; il ne plaide dans les cours fédérales que lorsqu'il s'agit d'une somme qui dépasse $2,000. Il y a en moyenne dans la paroisse d'Orléans 60 affaires criminelles par an, dans la poursuite desquelles l'avocat de district est seul, attendu que l'avocat-général ne remplit pas ces fonctions. Je le demande à tout avocat ou procureur dans cette enceinte: Voudrait-il poursuivre et plaider 60 cas criminels pour moins de $3,500, je crains que des appointements médiocres ne procurent que des hommes médiocres, et qu'un avocat ne donne pas la même attention, le même temps et le même soin à une affaire pour laquelle il est mal rétribué, qu'à une affaire pour laquelle il reçoit une compensation libérale. Je ne le ferais pas moi-même et il n'est pas dans la nature humaine de le faire. Les fonctions de l'avocat de district sont trop onéreuses et si le cercle de celles de l'avocat-général est élargi, il faut que ses appointements soient augmentés. J'espère que l'amendement réduisant les appointements ne sera pas adopté.

M. Wickliffe.—Je ne comptais d'abord pas voter pour ce bill, parce que loin d'être partisan des appointements élevés, j'en suis l'ennemi déclaré; mais je crois maintenant que le bill est juste et je voterai pour conserver les appointements à $3,500.

M. Nicholls.—Il me semble que $3,500 est bien modeste pour les appointements de l'avocat-général et je soutiendrai mon opinion de mon vote.

M. Todd demande l'appel nominal sur son amendement d'effacer $3,500 et d'y substituer $3,000.

L'amendement est rejeté par 15 voix contre 5 et le bill primitif est adopté.

Le Sénat prend en considération l'ordre du jour.

Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district judiciaire excepté. Ce bill est renvoyé par la Chambre qui n'accepte pas les amendements du Sénat.

M. Boatner propose que le Sénat revienne sur son amendement.

M. Mouton J'espère que le Sénat ne se désistera pas; la Chambre veut que les juges de la campagne reçoivent $1,000 de moins que ceux de la ville. Le même talent est requis et les mêmes devoirs leur sont imposés; je ne consentirai jamais à cette distinction injuste.

M. Wickliffe—Pourquoi insister sur ces amendements tandis que nous savons parfaitement bien qu'ils ne peuvent pas être adoptés par la Chambre.

M. Short—Je crois que le Sénat ne doit pas abandonner la position qu'il a prise, et j'espère qu'il ne le fera pas. Je ne vois pas pourquoi un juge qui demeure à la Nouvelle-Orléans, qui n'a pas de bayous à traverser, dont la cuisine de la campagne ne mine pas l'estomac, qui, en un mot, vit mieux et se fatigue moins, serait mieux rétribué qu'un autre dont les fonctions sont plus difficiles à remplir et exigent le même talent. Je ne vois pas de bonne raison pour me faire adopter une autre opinion et je me tiens à la mienne.

L'appel nominal est fait sur la motion de revenir sur les amendements du Sénat; elle est adoptée par 11 voix contre 11, le président votant dans l'affirmative.

Le Sénat est informé que la Chambre donne son concours à l'amendement à un bill intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours d'Emile La Sère, imprimeur de l'Etat.

Et qu'elle demande son concours à un amendement de la Chambre, qui change la date et porte «le pre-

Digitized by Google

dier lundi de mars)» au lieu de «le premier lundi de ce mois.»

Sur motion de M. Short, le Sénat donne son concours à l'amendement de la Chambre.

L'acte suivant est envoyé par la Chambre qui a refusé son concours aux amendements du Sénat :

Acte pour organiser les Cours de District dans la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Dans la 14me section, le Senat avait effacé les mots «excepté la première Cour de District, etc., etc..» et la Chambre y avait refusé son concours et avait rétabli ces mots.

M. McCay—Il y a deux raisons pour lesquelles le Sénat ne peut pas abandonner la position qu'il a prise sur cette question : la première est la juridiction criminelle exclusive et la seconde a trait au droit de juridiction, c'est-à-dire, qu'une poursuite ne sera pas renvoyée. Je m'y oppose parceque je crois que ce serait un grand désavantage pour les personnes qui ne résident pas à la Nouvelle-Orléans, d'y être poursuivies ; je m'y oppose parce que c'est inique.

M. Short—Je ne veux pas que des personnes qui résident dans d'autres parties de l'Etat, puissent être poursuivies à la Nouvelle-Orléans et je suis d'avis que le Sénat ne doit pas revenir sur cette partie de l'amendement.

M. McCay propose que le Sénat ne retire pas son amendement et la motion est adoptée.

Un amendement ajouté au bill, du consentement unanime de la Chambre, portant que : «Cet acte aura force de loi immédiatement après son adoption,» est adopté par le Sénat.

M. King demande qu'un comité de conférence soit nommé pour s'entendre avec la Chambre sur ce bill. La motion est adoptée.

Le président nomme Messieurs King, McCay et Short.

L'acte intitulé : Acte pour régler l'élection des avocats de district des différents districts judiciaires de l'Etat est pris en considération, après dispense des règles. Les mots «excepté le 1er district judiciaire» sont effacés ; une section additionnelle portant que l'acte aura force de loi immédiatement après son adoption est ajoutée, et ainsi amendé, l'acte est adopté.

L'acte pour venir au secours des banques foncières en liquidation, est pris en considération et subit sa première lecture.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, la dispense des règles est accordée pour la seconde lecture de l'acte accordant une compensation à Charles Fitz, régister du bureau des terres de la paroisse d'Orléans.

M. Short.—Il y a quelque temps, le comité des terres et levées rapporta un bill accordant à M. Fitz la compensation à laquelle le comité croyait qu'il avait droit. Le bill fut retiré et M. Fitz soumit sa réclamation à la Chambre des Représentants, d'où émane ce bill, qui lui accorde une somme plus forte que celle que le comité du Sénat estima lui revenir. Je demande donc que ce bill soit référé au comité des terres et levées. Référé.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, la dispense des règles est accordée pour la seconde lecture de l'acte accordant des pensions aux vétérans de 1814-et-15.

M. McCay.—L'adoption de ce bill exigera une appropriation de $40,000, et il me semble que dans les circonstances presentes, nous devrions avant de la faire, soumettre le bill à un comité compétent.

Sur motion de M. Martin, le bill est référé au comité des finances.

L'acte suivant est pris en considération, et la dispense des règles est accordée pour la seconde lecture:

Acte pour pourvoir à la nomination d'un avocat ou agent de l'Etat dans chaque paroisse.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, le bill est déposé sur le bureau par un vote unanime.

M. McCay.—Je donne avis que lundi je ferai la motion de reconsidérer le bill réglant les appointements des juges de district.

Sur motion de M. Short le bill No 394 de la Chambre, intitulé : Acte accordant une extension de temps aux colons actuels pour faire des demandes de terres et pour les payer, est pris en considération, adopté et envoyé à la Chambre.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

Acte relatif aux hypothèques et aux privilèges.

Sur motion de M. King la discussion de cet acte est différée, et il est mis à l'ordre spécial du jour pour le mardi suivant.

L'acte pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement des votans dans la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, est pris en considération.

M. King.—Comme ce bill concerne la ville de la Nlle-Orléans seule, je demande qu'il soit référé à la délégation de cette ville.

M. Nicholls.—Je suis opposé à ce que cet acte soit référé à la délégation de la Nlle-Orléans. Je crois que la campagne a autant d'intérêt que la ville à ce que le vote ait lieu de bonne foi, et qu'elle doit être également admise à la considération de cette affaire. Je demande que le bill soit référé au comité judiciaire.—Référé au comité judiciaire.

L'acte divisant l'Etat en districts congressionnels est pris en considération, et sur motion de M. Wickliffe la discussion en est remise au lundi suivant.

L'acte présenté par M. King pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement des hypothèques en faveurs des mineurs et des femmes mariées, est pris en considération et adopté avec son titre.

M. Wickliffe donne avis que lundi il fera la motion de reconsidérer le vote sur la passation finale du bill.

L'acte pour prolonger la durée de la charte de la banque des Artisans et des Marchands de la Nouvelle-Orléans est pris en considération

M. Short demande que la discussion de ce bill et le rapport du comité soient mis à l'ordre du jour pour mercredi suivant.—Adopté.

M. Short.—Je suis en mesure d'annoncer positivement au Sénat que la banque ne désire pas un plus long délai que le 1er juillet, et que les directeurs de la banque ont adopté la résolution de ne pas demander une nouvelle charte. Je donne cette explication dans le but de calmer les craintes de plusieurs de mes collègues et de les engager à voter avec moi.

Sur motion la dispense des règles est accordée pour la prise en considération du bill, mais sur motion de M. Short la reconsidération ultérieure de l'acte est remise au mercredi suivant.

Lundi, 18 avril.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de mettre à l'ordre du jour l'acte pour l'enrégistrement des votans, lequel avait été mis par erreur à l'ordre du jour pour mercredi prochain.

M. Wickliffe, suivant l'avis préalable donné par lui, fait la motion de reconsidérer le vote donné samedi passé sur un acte intitulé :

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

Sur motion, cet acte est reconsidéré, et sur motion de M. Nicholls, cet acte est référé à un comité spécial de trois, avec instructions de le rapporter mercredi prochain.

Messieurs Wickliffe, King et Kenner sont nommés de ce comité par le président.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

BILL DES BANQUES LIBRES.

Le bill suivant est pris en considération :

ACTE

Pour établir un système général de Banques dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Sect 1.—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en en assemblée générale ; Que toute personne ou association de personnes, ou corporation formée conformément aux dispositions du présent acte, pourront faire des affaires de banque dans cet Etat, et établir des bureaux d'escompte, de dépôt et de circulation dans ce but, aux termes et conditions et sous les responsabilités et les peines dont il est fait mention dans le présent acte.

Sect. 2.— Il est de plus décrété &c. ; Que les banquiers et les banques incorporées faisant des affaires de banques en vertu de cet acte, pourront escompter des billets et effets de commerce, et autres reconnaissances de dette, recevoir des dépôts, acheter et vendre des lingots d'or et d'argent, des monnaies étrangères et des lettres de change, et prêter sur garanties réelles et personnelles, et exercer tous les pouvoirs nécessaires pour faire les dites affaires de banque ; mais le montant total du fonds capital du dit banquier ou de la dite corporation ne sera pas moindre de cent mille piastres.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 3.— Il est de plus décrété &c.; Que lorsque plus de cinq individus s'associeront dans le but de tenir une banque, conformément au présent acte, ils pourront se constituer en corporation, et sont par les présentes, autorisés à se constituer en corporation avec les pouvoirs qui en dépendent, savoir:

1o. De succéder sous un nom d'incorporation qu'ils choisiront pendant un espace de temps qui sera limité dans les articles d'association, pourvu que ce temps n'excède pas vingt ans, et sous ce nom, de citer et d'être cités, plaider, comparaître, répondre, poursuivre et être poursuivis dans toutes les cours de justice et ailleurs.

2o. De posséder, recevoir, acheter et vendre, sous leur titre d'incorporation, tels biens réels et personnels qui seront nécessaires aux fins de l'association. Il est bien entendu que les biens fonds que la dite corporation pourra acheter, posséder et transférer seront: Premièrement, des biens nécessaires à la transaction de leurs affaires; Secondement, les biens qui leur auront été hypothéqués de bonne foi, en garantie des prêts faits par eux; Troisièmement, des biens à eux transférés en paiement des dettes précédemment contractées de bonne foi dans le cours de leurs affaires, et Quatrièmement, les biens qu'ils pourront acheter aux ventes faites en vertu d'hypothèques ou de jugemens à eux appartenant ou dans lesquelles ils pourront avoir un intérêt comme subrogés aux droits d'autres personnes, conformément à l'article deux mille cent cinquante sept du Code Civil. Mais ils ne pouront posséder des biens-fonds acquis d'une autre manière que de celle requise pour la transaction de leurs affaires pendant plus de cinq ans.

3o. De faire et employer un sceau d'incorporation qui sera décrit dans les articles d'association.

4o. De nommer pour l'administration des affaires de la corporation tels administrateurs et directeurs qu'ils jugeront nécessaires, et dont le nombre et le titre devront être énoncés dans les articles d'association; de fixer le salaire de tous les employés. Tous les dits administrateurs et directeurs devront être citoyens de l'Etat.

5o. D'adopter en vue d'une bonne administration des affaires de la corporation, tels statuts particuliers qu'ils jugeront nécessaires, et qui seront conformes aux dispositions de la loi, des articles d'association et du présent acte, de rappeler et amender les dits statuts à leur gré.

Sect. 4— Il est de plus décrété &c.; Que les corporations établies en vertu du présent acte seront organisées d'après des articles d'association, par écrit, rédigés en acte passé pardevant notaire et enrégistrés au bureau du conservateur des hypothèques, ou de tout autre officier exerçant les fonctions de conservateur des hypothèques dans la localité désignée dans l'acte comme étant le domicile de la corporation; une copie dûment certifiée du dit acte sera déposée dans le bureau de l'auditeur des comptes publics et sera publiée une fois par semaine, pendant quatre semaines, dans le journal officiel de l'Etat, et si le journal officiel de l'Etat ne se publiait pas à la Nouvelle-Orléans, le dit acte devra être publié pendant le même espace de temps, au moins dans un journal quotidien de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et dans un journal publié dans la localité désignée dans l'acte comme le domicile de la corporation, s'il s'en publie un dans la dite localité; dont copie dûment certifiée du dit acte sera admise en preuve pour ou contre les dites corporations.

Sect. 5.—Il est de plus décrété &c.; Que l'acte ainsi publié et enrégistré devra contenir et énoncer les signatures des souscripteurs et des associés, le nom qui distingue la dite compagnie de banque, et dont elle se servira dans ses transactions, le lieu où les affaires de la dite association doivent être conduites, en spécifiant le nom de la paroisse, ville ou village; le montant du fonds capital de la dite compagnie de banque et le nombre d'actions qui composent le dit capital; les noms et la résidence des actionnaires, le nombre d'actions appartenant à chacun d'eux, et l'époque et le mode de paiement du capital souscrit, l'époque à laquelle la dite association doit commencer, et sa durée, le nombre de ses directeurs et administrateurs, et le mode d'élection d'iceux, et la manière dont s'opèrera la liquidation à l'expiration du terme. Il pourra également pourvoir à l'augmentation du capital, du nombre des associés et à toute modification, addition ou changement à introduire dans les articles d'association. Bien entendu que la dite augmentation et toute modification, altération, addition ou changement à introduire dans les articles d'association, seront soumis à une assemblée générale des actionnaires, tenue après trente jours d'avis, et devront être approuvés par les deux tiers en valeur des actionnaires. Toute augmentation, modification, altération ou addition, sera exécutée, enrégistrée et publiée de la manière déterminée dans la présente section pour les articles originaux.

Sect. 6.— Il est de plus décrété &c.; Que toute souscription au fonds capital des compagnies de banque, conformément à cet acte, devront être payées en entier en espèces, dans un délai de douze mois après que les dites compagnies auront commencé leurs affaires.

Sect. 7. Il est de plus decrété, &c., Que lesdites compagnies de banque ne pourront faire de prêts à leurs actionnaires sous la garantie de leurs propres actions.

Sect. 8. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les actions desdites compagnies de banque seront considérées comme propriété personnelle et pourront être transférées sur leurs livres de la manière déterminée par les statuts particuliers; mais les actionnaires ne seront responsables des dettes et contrats desdites compagnies que jusqu'à concurrence du montant total de leurs actions; les banquiers non incorporés seront responsables du montant total de leurs obligations et de leurs contrats La responsabilité des actionnaires s'appliquera non-seulement aux individus portés comme tels sur les livres de la compagnie, mais aussi à tout détenteur légal d'actions inscrites sur les livres sous un autre nom, à tout individu qui aura acheté des actions ou effectué les paiements à terme, dûs sur lesdites actions, au nom d'un mineur, et pendant sa minorité, à tout tuteur ou administrateur qui aura volontairement employé des fonds à acheter des actions; les fonds d'administration ne seront pas responsables des dettes de la compagnie; mais tout tuteur ou administrateur sera personnellement responsable jusqu'à ce que la personne intéressée puisse contrôler et gérer ses intérêts, et ssixante jours après; mais lorsqu'un tuteur ou administrateur sera détenteur des dites actions par le transfert que lui en aura fait un tiers, de bonne foi ou en vertu d'ordres positifs, la personne qui aura fait ledit transfert ou donné lesdits ordres ou sa succession, dans le cas de mort, sera responsable des dettes et des engagements touchant les actions.

Sect. 9. Il est de plus décreté, &c., Que les actionnaires de toute compagnie de banque formée conformément à cet acte, seront exonérés de toute responsabilité à l'égard des actions dûment transférées sur les livres de la compagnie, de bonne foi et sans intention d'éluder ladite responsabilité avant que ladite compagnie ait failli à payer ses dettes; dans ce cas l'individu auquel le transfert aura été fait, assumera la même responsabilité que s'il avait été actionnaire au moment où la dette ou engagement dont les actionnaires sont responsables, a été contracté, la même règle relativement à la responsabilité s'appliquera à tous les transferts subséquens.

Sect. 10. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toute compagnie de banque établie en vertu de cet acte, quand il sera prouvé qu'elle est insolvable ou qu'elle ne s'est pas conformée aux dispositions du présent acte perdra ses droits d'incorporation, et il sera du devoir de la Cour de District où ladite corporation se trouve, à la demande des créanciers ou de l'auditeur des comptes puplics, et après que les faits allégués auront été prouvés à la satisfaction de la Cour, de décréter lesdits droits forfaits et de nommer des commissaires pour liquider les affaires de ladite corporation, convertir en espèces dans le plus bref délai possible, et sous la discrétion de la Cour, tout l'actif de la corporation, y compris les sommes dûes par les actionnaires sur leurs actions respectives, et de le répartir après avoir pourvu à la balance due aux détenteurs de billets, conformément à l'article cent vingt de la Constitution, de la manière déterminée par la loi pour les faillites particulières.

Sect. 11.—Il est de plus décrété, &.; Que ledit Auditeur des Comptes Publics de cet Etat est, par les présentes, autorisé et invité à faire graver et imprimer de la manière la plus propre à éviter la contrefaçon, la quantité qu'il jugera convenable de billets de circulation, en blanc, de différentes dénominations, d'au moins cinq piastres chaque, tels que les banques incorporées de l'État sont autorisées à en émettre, et ce, à fûr et à mesure qu'il le jugera nécessaire, pour donner effet aux dispositions du présent acte. Lesdits billets de circulation en blanc seront signés par ledit Auditeur, numérotés et enrégistrés dans son bureau, sous sa direction, par des employés nommés à cet effet, de sorte que les billets de chaque dénomination de billets de circulation, délivrés au même banquier ou à la même compagnie de banque soient uniformes. Tous lesdits billets de circulation de toute dénomination seront marqués d'un timbre en ces mots " Avec garantie des fonds publics." La forme et les devis desdits billets de circulation pourront être choisis par les banquiers et les compagnies de banque qui ont droit à les recevoir de l'Auditeur, conformément aux dispositions de cet acte, mais l'Auditeur devra exiger que tous les billets gravés soient uniformes quant au devis destiné à recevoir la signature de l'Auditeur, et au numéro qui doit être inscrit sur les billets par ledit Auditeur ou par ses employés.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 12.—Il est de plus décrété, &.; Que lesdites banques et compagnies de banque établies en vertu de cet acte, en déposant entre les mains dudit Auditeur des bons ou reconnaissances de dettes des Etats-Unis, des bons de l'Etat ou des bons de la dette consolidée de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans autorisés et assurés par la trente-septième section d'un acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et pourvoir à l'administration de ses affaires," approuvé le vingt-trois février mil-huit-cent-cinquante-deux, et la cinquième section d'un acte approuvé le 23 février mil-huit-cent cinquante-deux, intitulé : "Acte supplémentaire à un acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et pourvoir à l'incorporation de la ville de Lafayette avec la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans," auront droit à recevoir dudit Auditeur, un montant égal de billets de circulation en blanc des dénominations que lesdites banques préféreront, numérotés, enregistrés, contresignés et marqués d'un timbre comme il est dit ci-dessus; mais ces valeurs publiques seront toujours ou seront rendues égales aux fonds publics de l'Etat, portant au moins six pour cent d'intérêt, et ledit Auditeur ne pourra prendre lesdits bons à un taux au-dessus du pair ou de leur valeur sur le marché.

Sec. 13. Il est de plus decrete, &c; Que ledit auditeur collectera aux époques régulières, l'intérêt provenant des bons et des valeurs déposés entre ses mains comme sécurité des billets mis en circulation ou émis conformément à la section précédente, et paiera cet intérêt sur demande, aux intéressés par qui ils ont été fournis, et ce, tant que le prix desdits bons sur le marché, ne sera pas tombé au dessous du taux auquel ils ont été pris par lui. Dans le cas d'une dépréciation, ledit Auditeur est autorisé à retenir, et il est requis de retenir ledit intérêt, jusqu'à ce que lesdites sécurités aient recouvré leur valeur intégrales, telle qu'elle est établie dans le reçu donné au moment du dépôt, ou jusqu'à ce qu'il ete fait un nouveau dépôt qui remplisse le montant pour lequel les billets ont ete émis. L'Auditeur est également autorisé en cas de dépréciation des sécurites déposées, à exiger du banquier ou de la compagnie de banque un nouveau dépôt de bons pour compléter la sécurité premièrement donnée pour les billets émis, ou l'abandon de la part de ceux qui ont fait les dépôts, d'autant du montant de billets reçus de l'Auditeur, qu'il en faut pour remplir la sécurité devenue incomplète par la dépréciation sur le marché des sécurités déposées, et quand un banquier ou une maison de banque n'aura pas obtempéré à cette demande dans un délai de vingt jours après ladite demande, tous les privilèges acquis en faveur de cet acte seront forfaits, et l'Auditeur prendra immédiatement les mesures nécessaires pour la liquidation des affaires du dit banquier ou de ladite compagnie de banque, ainsi qu'il est prévu pour les cas de faillite. Bien entendu que lesdits banquiers ou compagnies de banque auront le droit d'en appeler à la décision de l'Auditeur auprès de la Cour de District du lieu où lesdits banquiers ou compagnie de banque ont leur domicile et la dite Cour est par les présentes, requise d'entendre et décider la question de préférence à toutes autres affaires, soit pendant la session soit pendant l'ajournement de la Cour. Il pourra être fait appel de la décision de ladite Cour de District à la Cour Suprême qui sera alors en session au temps qui sera fixé par la Cour de District afin que la Cour Suprême décide ladite affaire le plus promptement possible, comme l'exige l'intérêt des parties et du public. Bien entendu en outre, que pendant ledit appel, toutes les affaires desdits banquiers ou compagnie de banque seront suspendues.

Sec. 14. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Que toutes les sécurités déposées entre les mains dudit Auditeur d'après cet acte, seront gardées exclusivement pour le rachat des billets de circulation émis en échange, mais il pourra, sur la demande de ceux qui auront fait le dépôt, les échanger et les transférer de nouveau, en recevant un montant égal de sécurités recevables d'après la présente loi, ou en recevant et annulant un montant équivalant des billets pour lesquels lesdites sécurités ont été données. Il pourra également recevoir tous les billets mutilés et remettre en échange d'autres billets d'un montant correspondant; mais les billets ainsi reçus seront enregistrés et gardés comme preuve jusqu'à l'enquête annuelle des comités de la Législature.

Sec. 15. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Que toutes les fois que lesdites sécurités seront déposées entre les mains de l'Auditeur de la manière susdite, une description complète desdites securités signées de l'Auditeur, et le nom de ceux qui ont fait le dépôt seront enregistrés dans le bureau du dudit Auditeur ainsi que dans le bureau du Trésorier de l'Etat, et leur changement, transfert ou substitution seront aussi décrits et enregistrés de la même manière. Les sécurités seront confiées à la garde du Trésorier, lequel devra en donner reçu à l'Auditeur; et toutes les fois qu'elles seront remises entre les mains de l'Auditeur pour les fins du présent acte, l'Auditeur donnera par écrit un ordre spécifiant les motifs qui les font demander. Ledit ordre sera enregistré et gardé dans le bureau du Trésorier, avec les reçus qu'aura donné l'Auditeur pour les sécurités, ou toute partie d'icelles à lui délivrées. Le rapport de l'Auditeur sur toute vente et autre disposition desdites sécurités sera aussi enrégistré au bureau dudit Trésorier.

Sec. 16. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Qu'il ne sera pas permis à l'Auditeur, de contresigner des billets pour un banquier ou pour une compagnie de banque, pour un montant s'élevant au-dessus des valeurs ou des bons déposés et ce d'après leur valeur estimative faite conformément à la présente loi. Toute violation de la disposition qui précède rendra l'Auditeur passible d'une amende de cinq mille piastres et d'un emprisonnement aux travaux forcés de dix ans.

Sect. 17. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Que les plaques et les matériaux que ledit auditeur se sera procures pour faire graver et imprimer lesdits billets ainsi qu'il est prescrit par le présent acte, resteront à la garde et sous la direction du dit auditeur. Les dépenses occasionnées par l'achat des plaques et matériaux susdits par l'impression, la contre signature apposée, le numerotage et l'enregistrement des billets, seront payés respectivement par les banquiers et les compagnies de banque pour l'usage desquels ils auront été reçus, avant que les dits billets soient délivrés par l'auditeur, et ledit auditeur est de plus autorisé à demander et à recevoir de tout banquier et compagnie de banques, tant pour cent sur la somme nécessaire pour payer selon une proportion équitable, les dépenses occasionnées par l'operation du présent acte.

Sect. 18. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Que les banquiers et compagnies de banque qui auront reçu de l'auditeur les dits billets en blanc, devront les signer de manière à les rendre légalement obligatoires comme des billets à ordre, payables au porteur sur demande et sans intérêt au lieu des affaires desdits banquiers ou compagnies de banque et pas ailleurs, à moins qu'il ne soit autrement pourvu par cet acte, et pourront les mettre en circulation de même que des espèces, selon le mode ordinaire des affaires de banque ainsi qu'il est prescrit dans le présent acte et conformément aux lois et usages de l'Etat; tous lesdits billets seront signés par lesdits banquiers ou lesdites banques, par leur caissier ou par le président, et le caissier de la compagnie de banque qui émet lesdits billets et par aucune autre personne en leur nom; bien entendu qu'aucun individu, qu'aucune société ou corporation, excepté les banques actuelles ayant une charte légale, ne pourront faire et émettre en circulation d'autres billets que ceux autorisés par le présent acte, sous peine d'une amende de mille piastres, avec les frais de cour dont la moitié reviendra à l'individu qui aura intenté une action à ce sujet et obtenu un jugement définitif devant toute cour de juridiction compétente, et l'autre moitié sera versée dans le trésor de l'Etat.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 19. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Dans le cas ou le souscripteur, ou les souscripteurs de billets contresignés, numérotés, enregistrés et émis de la manière ci-dessus énoncée, négligeraient ou refuseraient aux heures habituelles des affaires et au lieu où les billets sont payables, de payer ou racheter sur demande lesdits billets en monnaie courante des Etats-Unis, le porteur du billet ou des billets présentés par lui et dont le paiement n'aura pas été effectué devra faire protester lesdits billets pour non paiement; l'auditeur en recevant et en enliassant le billet ou les billets ainsi protestés, donnera aussitôt avis aux souscripteurs desdits billets d'avoir à les payer avec les frais. Si lesdits souscripteurs négligent de faire le susdit paiement dans un délai de trois jours après le service de la notice, ledit auditeur devra sur ce, ordonner avis public dans le journal officiel de l'Etat, et dans une autre journal publié tous les jours à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et si le journal officiel ne se publie pas à la Nouvelle-Orléans, au moins dans deux des journaux publiés à la Nouvelle-Orléans, et dans le journal publié au lieu des affaires du souscripteur ou des souscripteurs desdits billets, s'il n'est pas dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans et s'il se publie un journal au dit lieu; ledit avis annonçant que tous les billets émis par le souscripteur ou souscripteurs desdits billets seront rachetés par lui au moyen des fonds déposés comme sécurité entre ses mains.

Sect. 20. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Que toutes les fois qu'une notice de protêt pour non paiement d'un billet, ainsi qu'il est dit dans la section qui précède sera mise dans ladite Cour de district accompagnée de l'affidavit du creancier, déclarant que le montant du billet n'a pas été payé, la Cour lancera aussitôt un ordre de séquestre et nommera un receveur pour prendre charge de l'actif dudit banquier ou compagnie de banque, et y apposera un sceau en attendant l'action ultérieure de la Cour, et ladite Cour lancera un ordre enjoignant audit banquier ou compagnie de banque, d'avoir dans un délai de dix jours à déduire les raisons pour lesquelles lesdits billet ou billets n'ont pas été payés sur présentation; et si à l'audition de l'affaire, ledit défendeur ne peut pas déduire ses raisons, la Cour devra rendre un jugement d'insolvabilité et pourvoir à la liquidation des affaires desdits banquiers ou compagnies de banque.

Sect. 21. Il est de plus décrété, &c; Que les banquiers ou compagnies de banque ne pourront pas, après que la notice du protêt de leurs billets aura été donnée de la manière énoncée dans la dix-neuvième section du présent acte, céder, transférer ou vendre leurs biens ou leur actif; toute cession, transfert ou vente de cette nature sera nul et de nul effet; et tout banquier, président directeur, administrateur et officier consentant à la cession, transport ou vente susdite des biens et de l'actif, sera personnellement responsable du montant total des dettes de la compagnie, sera déclaré coupable au second degré, et sera passible d'une amende et d'un emprisonnement; pourvu que le protêt des billets d'abord protestés sera regardé comme une garantie pour les créanciers de ladite banque sur toutes les valeurs de ladite banque qui ne sont pas entre les mains de l'auditeur.

Sect. 22—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que le dit auditeur, immédiatement après avoir donné avis public, ainsi qu'il est requis pas la dix-huitième section du présent acte, du non paiement des billets ou effets protestés qui auront été émis conformément au présent acte, devra, par avis, mettre en vente publique à l'encan dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, les bons ou valeurs déposés entre ses mains par le souscripteur ou les souscripteurs des dits billets protestés; et le jour de la vente, laquelle n'aura pas lieu moins de trente jours après le dit avis, et après que cet avis aura été publié au moins deux fois par semaine pendant quatre semaines dans deux des gazettes quotidiennes de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Le dit auditeur fera vendre les dites sécurités au comptant, sous sa propre surveillance et après avoir déduit les frais d'avis et de vente, il fera servir le produit de la dite vente à racheter au prorata tous les billets mis en circulation, qu'ils aient eté protestés ou non, faits et mis en circulation par le souscripteur ou souscripteurs des dits billets protestés : bien entendu qu'aucune disposition de cet acte ne sera considérée comme impliquant une garantie donnée par l'Etat pour aucun paiement qui excéderait l'emploi fidèle des sécurités déposées entre les mains de l'auditeur.

Sect. 23—Il est de plus décrété, &c, Que si le produit de la vente des dites sécurités excède le montant requis pour racheter et payer intégralement les susdits billets, l'auditeur versera cet excédant du fonds général de l'actif des dits banquiers ou compagnie de banque insolvable; mais si le produit de la dite vente est insuffisant pour payer intégralement les billets mis en circulation, et qu'il en ordonne la distribution au prorata, l'auditeur devra délivrer par écrit au commissaires des liquidateurs, un certificat spécifiant le montant ou déficit; lequel servira de notice légale, les autorisant à recevoir de toutes sommes dues aux dits insolvables qui pourront être mises entre leurs mains, un montant suffisant pour faire face au dit déficit. Il délivrera en outre au porteur du billet ou de billets à lui présentés, pour être rachetés ou en partie rachetés, un certificat du montant non payé sur les dits billets ou billets, le dit certificat donnera au porteur le droit d'être payé intégralement, du mentant y désigné, sur les fonds appartenant à la banque insolvable, si les dits fonds sont suffisans pour payer intégralement tous les dits billets, ou au prorata, s'ils n'étaient pas suffisans, et ce, de préférence à toute autre réclamation ou dettes, excepté les frais de liquidation si le produit de la vente des dites sécurités est insuffisant pour racheter tous les billets mis en circulation par une corporation quelconque, établie en vertu du présent acte, les actionnaires de la dite corporation seront responsables du montant total de tous les billets non rachetés, en proportion du nombre d'actions que chacun possède.

Sect. 24—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que le porteur de billets protestés pour non paiement, aura droit à des dommages à raison de vingt pour cent par an, au lieu d'intérêt pour le paiement final, lesquels dommages seront payés sur le fonds général de la banque insolvable.

Sect. 25—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les banquiers et les compagnies de banque, faisant des affaires en vertu du présent acte, pourront demander et recevoir un escompte dont le taux n'excédera pas le maximum accordé par la loi, ou les obligations conventionnelles, et leurs autres contrats seront réglés par les lois qui établissent l'intérêt dans les contrats passés entre les individus.

Sect. 26—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que tout banquier ou compagnie de banque, faisant des affaires en vertu du présent acte, devra, outre les sécurités qu'il ou qu'elle aura déposées entre les mains de l'auditeur, avoir à sa disposition, en tous temps, un montant égal au tiers de ses engagements à vue, et pour les autres deux tiers des dits engagements, un montant égal en espèces, en lettres de change ou en effets escomptés, payables durant un délai de quatre-vingt-dix jours et non sujets à renouvellement.

Sect. 27—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que si à un moment quelconque, les dites espèces et les effets à courte échéance, appartenant aux dits banquiers ou compagnie de banque, tombaient au-dessous de leur proportion avec les engagements à vue, telle qu'elle est décrite dans la section qui précède, et que cet état de choses continuât pendant l'espace de dix jours, les dits banquiers ou compagnie de banque, n'auront plus le droit de faire aucun prêt ni aucun escompte, jusqu'à ce que leur position soit rétablie, conformément aux termes de la dite section : Toute violation de cette disposition sera considérée comme un acte d'insolvabilité, et l'auditeur fera prendre les mesures nécessaires pour la liquidation des affaires des dits banquiers ou compagnies de banque, de même que dans les cas d'insolvabilités; et tout directeur ou administrateur d'une compagnie de banque qui aura participé ou consenti à la dite violation, deviendra personnellement responsable de toutes les dettes et obligations.

Sect. 28. Il est de plus décrété &c., Que tout banquier ou compagnie de banque établi ailleurs qu'à la Nouvelle-Orléans, faisant des affaires en vertu du présent acte, et mettant des billets en circulation, ainsi qu'ils y sont présentement autorisés, pourront tenir un bureau ou désigner le bureau d'un agent dans la dite ville, pour le rachat des dits billets. La nomination du dit officier ou agent sera faite par écrit et enregistrée dans le bureau de l'auditeur, dans celui du bureau de circulation, et dans le bureau du conservateur des hypothèques, dans lequel la charte est enrégistrée. Bien entendu que cette disposition ne pourra être interprêtée de manière à autoriser les dits banquiers ou compagnie de banque à refuser de racheter les billets au comptoir de la banque principale, ainsi que la présente loi le requiert.

Digitized by Google

Sect. 29. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que le bureau de circulation, tel qu'il est maintenant établi ou qu'il pourra être organisé par la loi dans la suite, surveillera l'exécution du présent acte, aura tous les pouvoirs et remplira tous les devoirs que lui imposent les lois relatives aux banques incorporées ou autres. Il pourra examiner l'état des affaires des banquiers et des compagnies de banque faisant des affaires en vertu du présent acte, toutes les fois qu'il jugera à propos, et exigera d'eux un rapport hebdomadaire, attesté sous serment par les dits banquiers et leurs caissiers ou par le président et le caissier de toute compagnie de banque, lequel rapport donnera sur les affaires de la banque les détails suivans. 1o Le capital payé. 2o Le montant des valeurs deposées entre les mains de l'auditeur avec une liste, et le taux auquel elles ont été reçues en échange des billets de circulation. 3o Le montant dû placé en biens-fonds. 4o Les prêts ayant plus de quatre-vingt dix jours à courir, en distinguant s'ils sont faits sur hypothèques ou autrement et les prêts sur actions, et quelles actions. 5o Les paiemens suspendus, et les effets protestés. 6o Toutes autres créances non-réalisables dans les quatre-vingt-dix jours. 7o Les prêts sur billets arrivant à échéance dans les quatre-vingt-dix jours. 8o Le change, soit du pays, soit de l'étranger. 9o Les dépôts. 10o. La circulation. 11o Tous les autres engagemens à vue, 12o Les espèces et les créances à vue, par articles séparés.

Sect. 30. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les dits rapports seront régulièrement enregistrés sur les dits livres du bureau de circulation. Les rapports, ainsi fournis le dernier samedi de chaque mois par les banquiers et les compagnies de banque faisant des affaires dans la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, seront signés par le bureau de circulation et publiés dans le journal officiel, le premier mercredi de chaque mois. Le bureau de circulation déterminera pour chaque banquier ou compagnie de banque faisant leurs affaires ailleurs qu'à la Nlle-Orléans, un espace de temps, dans lequel ils devront fournir leurs rapports hebdomadaires au dit bureau ; et le rapport mensuel, publié par le bureau de circulation, indiquera le dernier rapport hebdomadaire, reçus desdits banquiers ou compagnie de banque.

Sect. 31. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Qu'une liste des actionnaires de chaque compagnie de banque faisant des affaires en vertu du présent acte, attestée sous serment, par le président ou le caissier, sera fournie tous les mois au bureau de circulation ; mais il ne sera pas nécessaire de publier la dite liste avec leur rapport mensuel.

Sect. 32. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que la législature nommera tous les ans, un comité conjoint des deux chambres, lequel sera chargé d'examiner les sécurités déposées par les banquiers et les compagnies de banque, ainsi que les livres et papiers relatifs aux affaires de banque faites en vertu de cet acte. Le dit comité devra aussi compter tous les billets de circulation, vendus par les banquiers ou les compagnies de banque, et après les avoir confrontés avec les livres, les canceller et les détruire, en donnant à l'auditeur un certificat suffisant ; et de faire en général toutes les enquêtes qu'il jugera nécessaires pour les mettre à même de faire un rapport correct de la situation de banques mises en opération en vertu du présent acte.

Sect. 33. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que tout banquier, directeur, officier, agent ou commis d'un banquier ou d'une compagnie de banque, faisant des affaires en vertu de cet acte, qui fera de fausses entrées sur les livres des dits banquiers ou compagnies de banque, ou qui exhibera de faux papiers, ou cachera volontairement des faits qui sont à sa connaissance, dans l'intention de tromper le bureau de circulation ou toute personne légalement autorisée à faire une enquête, et pour tromper le public sur la situation des affaires de la dite compagnie, et tout individu qui, en vue de commettre une fraude au préjudice des dits banquiers ou compagnie de banque, tirera ou paiera à dessein un ou plusieurs checks, ou aidera comme accessoire, à tirer ou payer quelque check, sans que la compagnie sur laquelle le check est tiré ait les fonds pour ce, ou à la soustraction de l'argent et des créances des dites banques ou compagnie de banque par tout commis, officier ou agent, sera passible d'un emprisonnement au pénitentiaire de l'Etat, dont la durée sera d'au moins un an, et de trois ans au plus. Dans le cas ou de fausses entrées auraient été faites, l'auteur ou les auteurs des dits faux, seront considérés coupables de parjure et punis comme tels.

Sect. 34. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toutes les Banques, établies par les présentes, seront des Banques de dépôts et d'escompte aussi bien que de circulation.

Sect. 35. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les banquiers et Compagnies de Banque, faisant des affaires conformément à cet acte, seront taxés sur leur fonds capital, au même taux que le sont les autres biens personnels, conformément aux lois de l'Etat.

Sect. 36. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que toutes les fois qu'un banquier ou autre Compagnie de Banque aura racheté pour quatre-vingt peur cent de ses billets, et délivré à l'auditeur un certificat de dépôt, mis au crédit du trésorier de l'Etat, dans la Banque que l'auditeur aura choisie, jusqu'à concurrence d'un montant équivalent aux billets non rachetés, il pourra recevoir lesdits billets et restituer toutes les sécurités déposées par lesdits banquier ou Compagnie de Banque pour le rachat des billets mis en circulation.

Sect. 37. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que lesdits banquiers ou Compagnie de Banque, après avoir rempli les dispositions de la trente-sixième section de cet acte, pourront donner avis, une fois tous les quinze jours, pendant un an, dans la gazette de l'Etat, ainsi que dans une des gazettes publiées à la Nouvelle-Orléans et dans un journal publié dans la paroisse où lesdits banquiers ou Compagnie de Banque ont leur domicile, si toutefois il s'en publie une, que tous les billets mis en circulation aient à être présentés au bureau de l'auditeur dans le courant d'une année, à dater de la première publication dudit avis, et que les fonds déposés seront restitués auxdits banquiers ou Compagnie de Banque ; et après qu'il lui sera prouvé, d'une manière satisfaisante, que ledit avis a été publié pendant le susdit temps, l'auditeur restituera auxdits banquiers ou Compagnie de Banque, tous les bons mis entre ses mains pour le paiement des billets non rachetés.

Sect 38. Il est de plus décrété, &c.; Que l'auditeur de l'Etat aura le droit, avec l'approbation du Gouverneur, d'employer dans son bureau tous les commis additionnels qu'il jugera nécessaires pour remplir les devoirs à lui imposés par ledit acte, et de leur allouer le salaire qu'il jugera suffisant, lequel sera payé, d'après une proportion équitable, par les banquiers et les Compagnies de Banque pour lesquels les services desdits commis ont été rendus.

Sect. 39. Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que les salaires et les revenus casuels que la loi accorde actuellement aux membres du bureau de circulation seront entre toutes les Banques placées sous leur surveillance conformément à cet acte, et les Banques incorporées, et seront payés dans la même proportion et de la même manière.

Sect. 40. Il est de plus décrété, &c , Que si un banquier qui a fait des affaires conformément à cet acte vient à mourir, les fonds, bons, actions et garanties qu'il aura déposés entre les mains de l'auditeur, ne seront portés à l'actif de la succession qu'après que toutes les obligations contractées par ledit banquier, conformément à cet acte, auront été acquittées.

Et, si vingt jours après que l'auditeur aura donné avis au representant légal ou aux héritiers dudit défunt, toutes les obligations par lui contractées ne sont pas acquittées :

L'auditeur procédera à la vente desdites garanties, selon le mode prescrit par la section 22 de cet acte, et il appliquera les fonds provenant de ladite vente à la liquidation de toutes les obligations contractées par ledit défunt en sa qualité de banquier, il paiera tous les frais, et il paiera le surplus, s'il y en a, aux représentants légaux ou aux héritiers dudit défunt.

Digitized by Google

Le bill est lu section par section.

Les débats à demain

La huitième section étant prise en considération,

M. Kenner dit :—Je prends la parole pour demander qu'on retranche du bill les mots : « Les banquiers non incorporés seront responsables du montant total de leurs obligations et de leurs contrats. » Je ne vois pas quelle différence il y a entre un établissement de banque exploité par quatre ou cinq individus et un autre qui l'est par un seul. Tous sont responsables pour leurs actions. La section qui nous occupe en ce moment rend le particulier qui dirige à lui seul une banque responsable jusqu'à concurrence de tout ce qu'il possède. Alors, pour éviter de se conformer aux dispositions de l'acte, celui qui voudrait établir une banque au capital de $100,000 s'associera trois ou quatre prête-nom.

M. Wickliffe propose un amendement qui rend chaque actionnaire personnellement responsable.

M. Kenner.— Si je n'avais en vue que mes propres sentiments, je voterais pour l'amendement; mais, dans l'état actuel de l'opinion publique, je pense que l'amendement serait incompatible avec les vues de la communauté, et qu'il rendrait le bill sans effet.

M. King pense que le sénateur d'Ascension ne comprend pas bien le sens de la section. Elle s'applique aux personnes qui ne se conforment pas aux dispositions du bill. Par exemple M. Jacob Barker et autres de la Nlle-Orléans. Je crois pourtant qu'il serait bon de reconsidérer la 3me section parce qu'elle n'accorde le droit de former une corporation pour les opérations de banque qu'autant qu'elle sera composée de plus de cinq personnes. Je pense comme mon collègue que ce droit devrait appartenir à tout le monde. Je demande donc la reconsidération de la 3me section afin qu'elle soit amendée selon les vues de mon collègue.

M. McCay.— La 1re section dit que « toute personne ou association de personnes » pourra faire des opérations de banque dans l'Etat. Ceci admet clairement que tout particulier pourra faire ce genre d'affaires pourvu qu'il satisfasse aux exigences de la loi. Par contre, la 3me section dit que tout nombre de personnes audessus de cinq pourra s'engager dans ces opérations. Cette clause empêche-t-elle un plus petit nombre ?

M. Wickliffe.— Je demande que les actionnaires soient personnellement responsables.

M. Short.—Ceci détruirait entièrement l'efficacité du système. Il est vrai que les banques libres tendent à changer l'ancien système ; faisons-en l'essai ; mais cela devient impossible, si nous établissons pour la responsabilité des actionnaires une base différente de celle qui était adoptée sous l'ancien système.

M. Mouton.—Je suis entièrement de l'avis du sénateur d'Ouest Féliciana (M. Wickliffe.)

M. Wickliffe —J'entends dire partout que les banques libres vont faire prospérer tout le monde. Pourquoi ? J'ai entendu dire depuis mon entrée que les banques contribuent à l'aisance et au bonheur du peuple. Si ces institutions doivent accomplir tout ce qu'on promet pour elles, pourquoi ne les rendrions-nous pas responsables? Quant à moi, je ne voterai jamais pour un système qui ne rend pas les actionnaires aussi responsables que l'est un débiteur dans les transactions ordinaires. Nous allons permettre les opérations de banque sur des bons de la ville. On nous dit que ces bons ne peuvent pas diminuer de valeur et qu'il est impossible qu'on y perde. Un de mes collègues les a représentés comme une des bases les plus sûres qu'on puisse adopter. Comment les banques établies sur ce système pourront-elles manquer. Le dépôt de leur garantie est exigé par l'Etat, pourquoi hésiterions-nous à rendre responsables tous les actionnaires in solido, puisque la garantie est si satisfaisante ? Insérons cette clause dans le bill et nous aurons un bon système.

M. King.—Que je sois conséquent ou non, cela n'affecte en rien les mesures à prendre. Je ne suis pas en contradiction avec moi même. J'ai dit que, si mes collègues espéraient trouver un système qui rende toute perte impossible, c'était se donner une peine inutile. Ce système est aussi introuvable que la pierre philosophale; ce serait donc du temps perdu. J'ai dit que ce bill valait mieux que tous ceux que nous avons eus et donnerait lieu à moins de pertes; j'ai ajouté que les bons de la Nlle-Orléans représentaient une sécurité supérieure à toutes celles qu'on pourrait donner. Outre l'obligation morale qui force la ville à payer, il vous reste un recours à la Législature qui l'y oblige. Ces décisions sont sans appel pour la ville, et, conséquemment, elle ne trouve pas moyen d'éviter le paiement quand bien même elle le voudrait. Il y a donc pour la ville une obligation directe et une obligation indirecte. C'est pour cette raison que ces bons présentent une meilleure sécurité que tout autre qu'on pourrait offrir. Quant aux autres fonds publics, il n'y a qu'une obligation morale, mais aucun pouvoir ne peut en exiger le paiement. Quand le sujet fut discuté dans le Sénat, l'honorable membre l'a vigoureusement combattu; je croyais qu'il se serait contenté de se reposer sur ses lauriers. Mais je suppose qu'il agit sous l'influence du principe que, quoique ayant eu le dessous dans une première rencontre, un homme ne doit pas se tenir pour battu.

L'honorable Sénateur de Carroll (M. Short) a raison de dire qu'en surchargeant le bill on nuirait à son efficacité. Nous avons exigé des garanties plus complètes que celles qu'offre maintenant aucune Banque de cet Etat, et ces garanties sont plus complètes que celles qu'exige aucun autre système. Indépendamment des fonds déposés entre les mains de l'Auditeur des Comptes jusqu'à concurrence du montant intégral de la circulation, le bill contient encore une disposition très rigoureuse concernant le montant des espèces qui doivent être constamment tenues en caisse. Outre cette garantie amplement suffisante, l'honorable membre voudrait que tous les actionnaires fussent tenus responsables in solido. Supposons que je souscrive des actions dans une banque pour 500 ou 1000 piastres. A quelle responsabilité ne serais-je pas exposé ! Sur un chiffre d'affaires d'un million, je serais responsable pour cinq millions; mais, qui voudrait être actionnaire d'une banque avec une responsabilité pareille ? Mon collègue, j'en suis sûr, ne le voudrait pas. Si nous ne tenons pas à tourmenter inutilement le public, nous rejetterons la proposition. Je ne veux pas en faire accroire au public ; je veux lui accorder ce qu'il désire.

M. Wickliffe.—J'ai vainement taché de démêler un argument plausible dans tout ce que vient de dire l'honorable préopinant, mais tous ses arguments se réduisent à dire que l'amendement causerait la perte du bill. Je ne partage pas son opinion ; je ne vois pas comment il en serait ainsi. Si tout ce que les défenseurs des banques libres ont avancé en faveur de ce système est vrai, et si réellement ce système offre toutes les garanties qu'on lui attribue, si dans les transactions ordinaires de la vie, un homme est responsable jusqu'à concurrence de ce qu'il possède, pourquoi cesserait-il de l'être en devenant actionnaire d'une banque ? On dit que cela détruirait le système. Est-ce donc un système d'escroquerie que nous voulons établir ? Si cela n'est pas, pourquoi devons-nous craindre de rendre les actionnaires responsables ? Est-ce peut-être par ce que nous craignons les suites de la mauvaise administration de ces institutions ? Nous n'aurons un système sûr qu'en tant que les actionnaires seront responsables.

M. Short.—Un point paraît ne pas être compris suffisamment. C'est que la différence entre les deux systèmes consiste dans la garantie qu'ils offrent aux détenteurs de billets. En ce qui concerne les dépôts et l'escompte le nouveau système ne diffère pas de l'ancien, puisqu'un actionnaire n'est responsable que pour le montant de ses actions. Mais c'est à la circulation que le public est le plus intéressé ; il croit qu'elle demande de plus amples garanties et qu'un système plus sûr doit être adopté pour obvier aux inconvénients des fluctuations de la circulation, tel par exemple que celui qui est adopté dans la récente loi sur la Banque d'Angleterre, et qui sépare la circulation des dépôts et de l'escompte.

M. Mouton.—Le Sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans dit que le substitut causerait la perte du système des banques libres ; s'il en est ainsi, je n'en suis pas fâché, et je désire que le substitut soit adopté. L'honorable membre craint d'imposer une trop lourde responsabilité. Nous exigeons bien que d'amples garanties mettent les détenteurs de billets à couvert de toute perte, mais nous ne voulons pas mettre en péril les intérêts des actionnaires.

Si vous craignez que ce système ne réalise pas les espérances qu'on en a conçues, faites supporter les pertes qu'il peut occasionner à ceux qui l'ont adopté dans le but de s'enrichir. S'il doit y avoir une perte, qu'elle pèse plutôt sur les actionnaires que sur des tierces personnes de bonne foi qui ont fait un contrat avec eux. Si ce système ne présente pas de dangers, il ne peut y avoir aucune objection à l'amendement ; s'il existe un danger, il faut que les actionnaires supportent les pertes. Voilà pourquoi je voudrais les rendre responsables in solido.

Digitized by Google

M. Kenner—Je ne croyais pas que cette question donnât lieu à une si longue discussion. Je ne suis pas de ceux qui se figurent que banques libres veut dire abondance d'argent. C'est une erreur qu'il convient de dissiper au plus tôt.

Mais venons au fait. Le système qui rend tous les actionnaires d'une banque responsables in solido, est calqué sur la loi Écossaise ; mais c'est la seule garantie qu'exige cette loi. Si donc vous l'adoptez ici, rayez de ce bill toutes les autres garanties que vous y avez incorporées ; rayez l'article qui exige qu'il y ait constamment un tiers en espèces en caisse ; enfin effacez toutes les autres sécurités, toutes les autres garanties que présente le bill ; et alors, si vous le voulez, rendez les actionnaires responsables in solido. Mais si vous adoptez la loi écossaise, n'y ajoutez pas les garanties américaines. Ce serait aller un peu trop loin. Quelles sont les dettes que peut contracter une banque ? Elle peut acquérir des propriétés ; mais ce pouvoir est limité ; puis elle est redevable pour sa circulation, qui est garantie par d'amples sécurités, et enfin pour les dépôts. Voilà les trois espèces de dettes qu'une banque peut contracter. Nous avons pourvu aux dettes provenant d'achats en limitant la faculté d'acheter. Nous ne voulons pas aller plus loin. Comment avons nous pourvu aux dépôts ? En obligeant les banques à avoir constamment en caisse une somme en espèces égale à un tiers de leur circulation, et en portefeuille, un tiers en effets. A moins donc que le banquier lui-même ne soit un voleur et un escroc, il est impossible que qui que ce soit éprouve des pertes.

M. Short—Je propose que la section qui exige que tous les billets de banque soient marqués d'un timbre portant ces mots «Avec garantie des fonds publics,» soit amendée de manière à spécifier l'espèce de ce fonds. Si le détenteur du billet ne sait pas à quelle classe appartiennent les fonds qui garantissent ces billets, il aura moins de confiance et il ne peut pas être sur ses gardes si ces fonds fléchissaient à la bourse.

M. Kenner—Il est à supposer que comme trois espèces de fonds sont admises, un tiers du montant sera garanti par chaque espèce.

M. McCay—Il me semble que le bill y pourvoit. Les exposés mensuels qui doivent être publiés dans les journaux sont un exellent moyen d'informer le public à cet égard.

La 12me section est prise en considération.

M. Short—Je suis opposé à l'admission des bons de la Nouvelle Orléans dans ce bill, comme base d'opérations de banque. Je crois que la ville a émis des bons pour une valeur de neuf millions, au moins sa dette totale se monte-t-elle à près de $7,500,000. Je ne voterai jamais pour un bill qui prend des bons municipaux pour base de la circulation. Il y a une différence entre le projet du sénat et celui de la chambre. La chambre veut que les cours de justice interviennent avant que, sur refus de payer un billet, la forfaiture devienne finale. Le bill de la chambre dit que le billet doit être protesté pour non-jugement. Ce qui veut dire évidemment que la personne intéressée doit se presenter devant un notaire pour remplir les formalités. Car lorsqu'il exige un protêt sans spécifier de quelle manière il doit se faire, il est clair qu'il entend qu'il soit fait comme le protêt d'un effet de commerce. Alors six ou huit jours s'écouleront avant que l'actif de la banque devienne responsable et pendant ce temps elle peut en avoir disposé et enlever tout recours au détenteur du billet. Les honoraires du notaire s'élèvent à deux piastres, ce qui est beaucoup pour des gens pauvres. Ne vaudrait-il pas mieux que le banquier endosse son refus de payer sur le billet et que cela équivaille à un protêt ; de cette manière on pourrait se dispenser de le faire pardevant notaire.

M. King—Je préférerais que ce premier protêt fût entouré de toutes les formalités et de toute la solennité connues à la loi, dans le but d'y donner toute la publicité possible, pour éviter que les intérêts de tierces personnes ne fussent lésés. Je voudrais rendre un protêt aussi public que possible.

La 24me section est prise en considération. Le bill du sénat portait 12 pour cent et je crois que c'est assez. Car. si ce cas se présentait, la banque serait insolvable et les dommages équivaudraient à une contribution sur ceux qui ont fait des depôts. Si ces dommages devaient être prélevés sur les fonds de la banque seule, je n'aurais pas d'objections à les élever même à 50 pour cent, mais comme ils seront payés par des tierces personnes innocentes, je trouve que 20 pour cent est trop

M. Short—Je ne crois pas que nous devions nous occuper du cas de l'insolvabilité d'une banque.

La section est amendée.

La 34me section est prise en considération.

M. Kenner—Cette section a le même objet que la section 34 du bill du Sénat, mais il est moins bien exprimé.

Le système adopté dans l'Etat de New-York avait établi des banques de circulation qui n'étaient ni des banques d'escompte ni des banques de dépôt Elles tenaient leurs portes fermées et l'on ne pouvait pas faire convertir ses billets en espèces. Ce système donne naissance à une grande quantité de mauvais billets. Le dernier surintendant des banque de l'Etat de New-York appela l'attention de la Législature sur ces abus et demanda qu'on y remédiât en forçant les banques à devenir banques d'escompte et de dépôt aussi bien que de circulation.

M. Kenner propose d'effacer la 40me section.

M. McCay—Une disposition de cette espèce est nécessaire. Les fonds sont inventoriés et délivrés aux héritiers, où est la garantie des détenteurs de billets ?

M. King—Je suis opposé à la section. Il me semble que si un homme qui possède une quantité considérable de fonds meurt, la société est dissoute ipso facto.

La section est effacée.

Une question d'ordre est soulevée, à savoir si le bill a été définitivement adopté, ou s'il en est seulement à sa troisième lecture.

M. Wickliffe—Je voterai contre le bill.

M. Kenner—Nous avons adopté le bill section par section et c'est une affaire terminée en tant que nous avons donné notre concours au bill de la Chambre. Je suis désolé que l'honorable membre qui a déjà proclamé son vote onze ou douze fois, soit privé de l'occasion de le faire une treizième fois.

M. Short—Je crois que le bill en est à sa troisième lecture C'est un nouveau bill émanant de la Chambre et il n'a pas passé par les formalités requises.

M. Nicholls—Il y a les mêmes raisons ici pour lire le bill trois fois, qu'à la Chambre dont il émane ; c'est à dire de le soumettre à un examen approfondi. Pour nous, ce bill est entièrement nouveau, il doit passer par toutes les formalités, et être soumis à toutes les épreuves voulues pour un bill nouveau.

M. Rivers—La question est fort simple. La Chambre a donné son concours au bill du Sénat, au moyen d'un substitut. Ce n'est donc pas un nouveau bill ; c'est notre bill amendé, et tout ce que nous avons à faire est de donner notre concours aux amendements de la Chambre.

M. Wickliffe—Je ne vois rien qui justifie cette conclusion. Ce bill nous est envoyé comme un bill émanant de la Chambre et il faut qu'il subisse ses trois lectures.

Le bill est adopté par 14 voix contre 7.

Le titre du bill est pris en considération.

M. Nicholls propose de l'amender en substituant aux mots «banques libres» les mots «liberté de raser.»

Sur motion de M. Taylor, l'amendement est déposé sur le bureau.

ACTE POUR L'ENREGISTREMENT, ETC.

L'acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des votants dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans est pris en considération.

M. Wickliffe propose de renvoyer le bill au comité judiciaire.

M. Nicholls—Ce bill ne souffre pas de retard ; la Constitution exige que nous réglions cette question pendant la présente session Le comité judiciaire s'est déjà occupé de ce bill et il a maintenant devant lui plus d'affaires qu'il n'en peut terminer.

La motion de renvoyer le bill est adoptée et le comité est requis de présenter son rapport le mercredi suivant.

Digitized by Google

L'acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts congressionnels est pris en considération.

M. Todd—La minorité du comité a présenté un rapport sur ce bill.

M. King—Je ne voudrais pas que nous promissions de recevoir le rapport de la minorité.

M. Rivers—Si nous discutons le bill maintenant nous le faisons en l'absence du sénateur qui a le rapport de la minorité. Dans ce cas il a le droit de le faire insérer dans le procès-verbal. Je donne avis que ce rapport a été rédigé et qu'il sera présenté au Sénat.

M. Short—Quand le bill a été référé au comité, il y a été longuement discuté. La question est ou devrait être, de savoir si le Sénat adoptera le rapport de la majorité ou celui de la minorité. Mais comment peut-on comparer deux idées lorsqu'elles ne sont pas en présence et comment peut-on décider entre deux rapports quand on n'en lit qu'un seul ?

M. Todd—Lorsque le bill fut référé, le sénateur de Jefferson, [M. Burthe] et moi nous nous mîmes d'accord sur la teneur d'un rapport, je suppose qu'il l'a préparé et par égard pour lui, je voudrais que l'affaire fût remise à mercredi.

M. Nicholls — Si je ne me trompe, ce bill a été référé afin qu'il fût discuté dans le sein du comité et que l'opinion du comité ou de ses membres fût soumise au Sénat. Et que proposez-vous maintenant ? D'adopter le bill séance tenante et de donner à la minorité le droit de s'expliquer et de se justifier plus tard. Mais la minorité ne demande pas seulement à se justifier. Elle n'a rien fait qui exige une justification. Elle veut soumettre ses vues au Sénat avant qu'une décision soit prise. Si elle est remise à mercredi, la majorité n'en aura pas moins le faculté d'adopter le bill, et je suppose qu'elle le fera en dépit de tout ce que nous pourrons dire. Elle peut accorder la dispense des règles ou prendre le bill en considération le lendemain, et l'adopter en dépit de nous Tout cela est bel et bien préparé, et nous le savons. Elle peut alors l'envoyer à l'autre Chambre, où son parti à une majorité de 20 voix au moins. Qui donc peut douter que le bill n'y soit adopté ? Tout ce que nous demandons est qu'on nous entende avant de nous frapper.

M. Wickliffe.— Si les honorables membres sont si persuadés qu'ils devront en passer par là mercredi, pourquoi ne s'y résigneraient-ils pas aujourd'hui. Je suis opposé à tout délai ultérieur ; le bill a été déjà remis une fois, et cela doit suffire.

M. Todd—Comme le sénateur de Jefferson, un des membres du comité auquel le bill a été référé, est absent, j'espère qu'on sera assez juste envers lui pour ne pas l'adopter sans lui avoir donné l'occasion d'exposer ses vues au Sénat.

M. Wickliffe—L'honorable membre croit-il qu'elles changeraient le résultat ?

M. Todd—Si les arguments mis en avant dans le rapport étaient écoutés avec attention par le Sénat, ils auraient certainement une grande influence sur le résultat.

La motion d'ajourner est rejetée, et le bill est adopté.

ELECTION DES TRESORIERS DE PAROISSE.

M. Evans demande la prise en considération d'un acte pour pourvoir à l'élection des trésoriers de paroisse.

M. Wickliffe—Je ne crois pas que le peuple de la Louisiane ait jamais exprimé ou même éprouvé le désir de choisir ses trésoriers de paroisse. Cette place n'est pas assez importante pour que le peuple veuille la rendre sujette à l'exercice de son droit de suffrage. Dans quelques-unes de nos paroisses les plus riches, les honoraires de cette place ne s'élèvent qu'à $300 par an ; il est même difficile de trouver un homme compétent qui veuille l'accepter. D'ailleurs le peuple est surchargé d'élections ; ils en ont déjà bien assez pour occuper leurs loisirs. Si le bill est adopté, je demande que ma paroisse soit exceptée des dispositions de l'acte. Si nous élisions nos trésoriers de paroisse, ce serait supposer qu'on peut trouver un homme compétent pour $300 par an, tandis qu'il en faudrait au moins mille. Les jurys de police nomment maintenant les trésoriers ; ce système n'a jamais donné lieu à aucune plainte, et je ne vois pas la nécessité de le changer.

Motion est faite de remettre la discussion du bill au troisième lundi de juillet.

M. Nicholls—Si la motion ne prévaut pas, je demanderai à ce que ma paroisse soit exemptée des dispositions du bill, et certainement je crois, en le faisant, exprimer le vœu de mes commettants.

M. Short—D'après la manière de voir du sénateur d'Ouest-Féliciana, la principale objection à ce bill est, que la place de trésorier n'est pas assez respectable pour qu'un homme puisse se porter candidat.

M. Wickliffe—Ce n'est pas ce que j'ai dit. J'ai dit que les émoluments n'étaient pas suffisants pour engager un homme compétent à se porter candidat.

M. Short—Je ne partage pas l'opinion de mon collègue sur ce point. Dans ma paroisse j'ai toujours vu qu'il y avait concurrence entre des hommes compétents pour obtenir cette place, et j'avoue que cela m'a étonné. Ce bill nous assurera des trésoriers responsables, car le peuple y est intéressé. Dans mon district on se plaint beaucoup de ce que les professeurs des écoles, des personnes qui se consacrent à l'enseignement de la jeunesse, soient obligés de venir ou d'envoyer ici pour faire solder leurs comptes. Un des objets du bill est de garder les fonds des écoles dans les paroisses auxquelles ils sont destinés.

M. Short—Ce bill ne peut causer aucune difficulté. Le peuple prendra plus d'intérêt à la place, s'il nomme le fonctionnaire. Le peuple n'a-t-il pas un intérêt assez grand dans le fonds des ecoles pour vouloir qu'il soit confié à des personnes responsables. Les objections qui sont mises en avant contre ce bill pourraient s'appliquer à l'élection de tout autre fonctionnaire par le peuple. N'est-il pas capable d'élire un gouverneur, un grand juge, un juge de district. S'il en est ainsi, n'est-il pas capable d'élire aussi un trésorier ? C'est pourtant là l'objection que l'on fait valoir contre ce bill.

M Wickliffe—Je n'ai pas dit cela. J'ai dit que le peuple de la Louisiane est surchargé d'élections.

M, Short—Je suppose que le peuple de la Louisiane se trouve dans les paroisses de la Louisiane. S'il est surchargé, qu'il prenne un émétique. Mais on n'a pas répondu à l'argument que, s'il est capable d'élire un gouverneur et d'autres fonctionnaires importants, il l'est aussi de choisir un trésorier de paroisse. S'il y a quelque fondement dans l'argument que le peuple est harassé d'élections, il faut en rendre l'application générale Pourquoi ne choisirait-il pas les trésoriers de paroisse ? Il est a supposer qu'il votera pour des hommes compétents. Quel mal y a-t-il à lui en laisser le choix ?

M. Wickliffe—Je n'ai que quelques mots à dire. Je m'étonne que l'honorable préopinant s'obstine à me prêter des idées que je n'ai pas.

M. Short—Telle n'a pas été mon intention.

M. Wickliffe—L'argument que j'ai fait valoir ne peut pas etre interprété comme attaquant le droit ou la capacité du peuple, en ce qui concerne l'élection de ses fonctionnaires. Qu'ai-je dit ? Que les émoluments de cette place sont si minimes qu'il sera difficile de trouver un homme capable qui veuille se porter candidat. L'honorable membre parle des plaintes des professeurs des écoles Les écoles ont elles rien de commun avec ce bill. Se plaint-on de ce que le jury de police ne fasse pas son devoir ? Il dit que le peuple est intéressé à ce que les fonds des écoles soient entre des mains responsables. Le jury de police n'est-il pas responsable ? N'est-il pas intéressé dans cette affaire ? L'honorable membre affecte de croire que je suis l'ennemi du principe électif. Il se trompe. J'ai dit seulement qu'aucune plainte n'a été proférée contre le jury de police, et que les émoluments du trésorier de paroisse sont si minces qu'il serait difficile de trouver un homme compétent qui voulût briguer cette place. Il n'y a là rien qui puisse être travesti en opposition au principe de l'élection par le peuple.

Mon collègue dit que le peuple a été considéré capable d'élire un gouverneur, un grand-juge. Mais, ai-je jamais dit le contraire ? Je crois seulement qu'il est fatigué d'être forcé d'intervenir dans des affaires d'une si mince importance; surtout quand ils peuvent en toute sécurité remettre ce soin à d'autres. Si quelque sénateur dit que sa paroisse est mécontente du système actuel, je passe condamnation, au moins pour cette paroisse.

Digitized by Google

M. Short—Le bill émane de la Chambre où chaque paroisse est représentée, je trouve donc qu'il a droit à quelque considération.

M. Wickliffe—L'honorable membre n'a pas répondu à ma question. Y a-t-il aucun sénateur qui puisse dire que sa paroisse est fatiguée du système actuel ?

M. Evans—Mes commettants désirent un changement.

M. Todd—J'approuve le bill. Je suis surpris d'entendre des sénateurs qui sont en faveur du système électif y faire opposition dans cette circonstance parce que la place à peu d'importance.

M. Wickliffe—Je répète pour la dernière fois que mon objection est l'impossibilité de trouver des hommes compétents qui veuillent accepter la candidature

M Todd—Qu'ils se portent candidats ou non, cela ne change rien à la question. Le peuple est aussi capable de choisir de bons employés que le jury de police, quand même personne ne se présenterait pour solliciter ses suffrages. L'honorable membre dit que le système actuel ne soulève pas d'objections; je ne partage pas son opinion, et d'ailleurs le vœu général est que tous ces fonctionnaires soient élus par le peuple.

Après l'échange de quelques mots, le bill est déposé sur le bureau.

RAPPORTS DES COMITES.

M. Rivers, de la part du comité des terres et levées, présente le rapport suivant qui est lu.

A l'honorable W. W. Farmer, président du Sénat.

Le comité des terres et levées, auquel avait été référé le rapport de l'ingénieur de l'Etat sur le projet du Raccourci à Cole's Creek Point, dans la paroisse de Tensas, après avoir examiné ledit plan, rapporte :

Qu'ils croient la session maintenant trop avancée pour prendre aucune résolution définitive sur ledit rapport, mais en comparant le bénéfice partiel qui résulterait en faveur de cette partie du pays qui se trouve au-dessus du raccourci qui doit être fait, comparé à l'étendue des pertes et dommages qu'éprouveront les terres et levées qui se trouvent au-dessous et qui doivent nécessairement en résulter, considérant les nombreuses réclamations et les demandes d'indemnités qui seraient présentées à la Législature par ceux qui en seraient affectés, considérant aussi qu'il est du devoir de l'Etat, lorsqu'il le peut, d'interposer à propos et d'une manière efficace son assistance pour empêcher de semblables calamités, votre comité demande la permission de renvoyer ce rapport et d'en demander l'adoption par le Sénat, comme base de toute décision que la Législature jugera convenable de prendre à ce sujet.

Respectueusement soumis,
D. L. RIVERS,
De la part du comité des terres et levées.

M. King, du comité des améliorations intérieures, présente le rapport et l'acte suivants :

A l'Honorable W. W. Farmer,
Président du Sénat.

Le comité des améliorations intérieures auquel avait été référé le mémoire de l'hon. Samuel Ricker, président du comité nommé par le Sénat dans la session de l'année 1750, ayant par une résolution plein pouvoir d'agir et de prendre des informations pendant le recès de la Législature relativement aux lois actuelles réglant la construction et la reparation des levées, ainsi qu'au système actuel de desséchement mis en usage dans tout l'Etat et tout ce qui y a rapport, et de suggérer tels amendements qu'il jugera convenables, afin de mieux protéger contre l'inondation les dites terres d'alluvion du Mississippi et pour dessécher les dites terres, et de rapporter un acte en conséquence—demande la permission de rapporter qu'ils ont examiné ce sujet autant que le peu de renseignements qu'ils avaient, le permettait.

Le comité est d'opinion que le président du comité du Senat de 1850 a exercé un pouvoir bien douteux en faisant les fortes dépenses qui ont donné lieu aux réclamations présentées contre l'Etat.

Mais comme le comité paraît avoir agi de bonne foi, il est raisonnable que les personnes employées par le dit comité soient payées pour les services qu'elles ont rendus.

En se référant au mémorial, on verra qu'une grande partie des réclamations a été déjà renvoyée par le comité et que beaucoup d'autres ont été diminuées.

Le tableau suivant est une liste des réclamations que le comité croit devoir être payées.

Pour le paiement des dites réclamations, le comité présente l'acte suivant et en recommande la passation.

Signé : W. W. KING.
Président.

LISTE DES RECLAMATIONS.

Pour rembourser à Samuel Ricker pour dépenses payées par lui.....	$ 787 85
Aux propriétaires du bateau à vapeur «Fernan,» employé pendant sept jours	1,200 00
Aux propriétaires du bateau à vapeur «Créole,» employé pendant quatorze jours.....	1,200 00
C. S. Folshy, ingénieur civil.....	1,500 00
Hugh Grant.....	400 00
H. L. W. Wallas.....	350 00
Benj. Buisson.....	75 00
Thos. Lafarelle.....	200 00
Thos. J. Burke, pour avoir copié des documents à la bibliothèque de l'Etat..	100 00
Henry Droz pour avoir copié des documents à la bibliothèque de l'Etat....	100 00
Total.....	$ 5,912 85

Acte pour pourvoir au paiement des réclamations pour services rendus à l'Etat par des personnes employées par un comité nommé par le Sénat dans l'année 1850, et duquel comité l'hon. Samuel Ricker était président.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager du Senat demande le concours de la Chambre pour un acte intitulé :

Acte pour l'appropriation d'une somme d'argent pour la construction de travaux à l'embouchure du bayou Plaquemines.

Le messager spécial du Sénat informe la Chambre que le Senat a adhéré à l'amendement de la 14ème section que la Chambre avait refusé d'accepter, que le Sénat a donné son concours à une section additionnelle proposée par la Chambre, et que le Sénat demande la nomination d'un comité de conférences.

Que MM. King, McCay et Short ont été nommés de ce comité par le Sénat.

Il informe de plus la Chambre que le Sénat, persistait dans son amendement à un acte intitulé :

Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district excepté.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial de la Chambre demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière dont l'Etat viendra au secours des compagnies de chemin de fer et de chemins en planches.

Acte relatif aux élections des greffiers des Cours de District, la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans exceptées.

Acte relatif aux élections de Shériffs et de Coroners.

Acte pour déterminer les limites entre les paroisses d'Iberville et d'Ouest-Baton-Rouge.

Acte pour remettre à Joseph Walker une somme d'argent se trouvant dans le Trésor comme lui étant due.

Acte pour incorporer l'Institut de demoiselles de la Nlle-Orléans.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'élection des trésoriers de paroisse et pour définir leurs devoirs.

Acte pour autoriser l'auditeur à canceller les bons donnés par John T. Sterling et James A. McHatton, comme commissaires pour l'achat des esclaves et bateaux à l'usage du département des améliorations intérieures de l'Etat.

Acte relatif à la distribution des livres et statuts.

Acte relatif aux devoirs et pouvoirs des jurys de police de cet Etat et des autorités constituées des villes incorporées.

Résolution recommandant au secrétaire d'Etat de notifier les officiers délinquants chargés de faire les retours de la dernière élection et de le faire immédiatement.

Acte pour amender la 10me section d'un acte pour pourvoir à l'organisation des corporations dans cet Etat, approuvé le 16 mars 1848.

Digitized by Google

Acte pour pourvoir à la vente d'une moitié indivise d'un morceau de terre dans la paroisse de St-Landry, réclamé par l'Etat.

Acte pour amender et remettre en vigueur la 20ème section d'un acte intitulé : «Acte pour consolider la Ville de la Nlle-Orléans et pour pourvoir au gouvernement et à l'administration de ses affaires.»

Le messager spécial du Sénat demande la signature de l'orateur pour l'acte enrôlé suivant :

Acte pour expliquer un acte intitulé : «Acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriations dans les poursuites criminelles jusqu'au 31 mars 1853.»

Et rapporte comme signé par le président l'acte enrôlé suivant :

Acte pour rendre à Henri Scott, de la paroisse de Catahoula, le produit de la vente d'un esclave marron lui appartenant.

Et il demande le concours du Sénat pour l'acte suivant :

Acte pour exempter la paroisse de Catahoula de toute taxe à venir pour construire des levées dans la paroisse de Madison.

MARDI, 19 avril 1853.

M. Kittridge demande la prise en considération d'un acte pour amender un acte intitulé :

Acte relatif à l'Hôpital de Charité, approuvé le 20 mars 1850.

M. Palfrey—Si ce bill n'exige pas que toute personne âgée de plus de dix ans donne garantie et sécurité, j'avoue que je ne comprends pas la langue anglaise.

M. Short—Je propose de déposer le bill indéfiniment sur le bureau.

La motion est rejetée.

M. Derbès propose de référer le bill à un comite spécial.

M. Kittridge—Je ne vois pas la nécessité de référer le bill de nouveau. Il a déjà été référé une fois. Si les sénateurs désirent s'éclairer sur le bill, qu'ils l'examinent. Il pourvoit au seul mode possible de soutenir l'hôpital. Après avoir consulté les directeurs de cet établissement, nous en sommes venus à la conclusion qu'en imposant cette taxe additionnelle, nous pourrions soutenir l'hôpital sans demander une nouvelle allocation à l'Etat. Comme presque tous les patients sont des étrangers et que c'est principalement cette classe qui recueille le bénéfice de cette institution, il n'y a pas d'injustice à adopter ce bill.

Sur motion de M. Derbes, la discussion du bill est remise au lendemain.

M. Boatner—Un comité a été nommé au commencement de cette session pour faire la révision du digeste et pour d'autres fins. Un des membres de ce comité est absent depuis longtemps et je pense qu'un autre membre devrait être nommé à sa place.

Le président nomme M. Todd membre de ce comité.

M. Kenner, du comité de finance auquel avait été référé un acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriations pour l'année finissant le 31 mars 1853—fait un rapport favorable.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Wickliffe demande la reconsidération du vote sur le bill donnant l'élection des trésoriers de paroisse au peuple, dans le but d'y introduire un amendement accordant aux jurys de police le droit de choisir les dits trésorier comme par le présent.

La motion de reconsidérer est adoptée.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, le bill est déposé sur le bureau sujet à l'appel.

Le bill pour entourer la Maison d'Etat et les terrains qui en dépendent d'une palissade en pieux, est prise en considération.

M. Kenner—Je crois en effet qu'une palissade est indispensable pour retenir les honorables membres.

M. Boatner—Je remercie beaucoup mon collègue de sa délicate allusion. Mais je le prie de croire que lorsque je voudrai me retirer d'un lieu dont le séjour me déplaît, ce ne sera ni une palissade ni une grille de fer qui m'en empêchera.

M. Derbes—Une grille en fer coûterait au moins $40,000.

M. Kenner—J'ai fait cette proposition parceque je la croyais opportune. L'année passée le coût d'une grille en fer avait été évalué à environ $10,000. Nous avons un édifice magnifique, le dessein en est grandiose et l'architecture élégante, et cependant les terrains qui en dépendent sont entourés d'une misérable palissade en planches. Une palissade en pieux ne serait pas une amelioration : ce serait mettre la lumière sous le boisseau. Personne certainement n'aimerait à voir notre beau palais d'Etat entouré d'une méchante palissade en pieux. Je veux bien cependant qu'on limite le coût d'une grille en fer a $10,000.

M. Derbes—A la Nouvelle-Orléans un grillage en fer d'une étendue beaucoup moindre qu'il ne le faudra ici a coûté $35,000.

M. Mouton—Si nous commençons par donner $15000 quand cette somme sera dépensée, il faudra en donner 15,000 de plus

M. Boatner—D'après ce principe nous ne devrions faire aucune espèce de clôture. J'ai inséré dans le bill «clôture en pieux,» parce que je croyais qu'on pourrait faire des objections à un plan plus coûteux. Mais je crois que tout bien calculé, un grillage en fer reviendrait moins cher parce qu'il durera plus longtemps et qu'il n'aura pas besoin d'être repeint aussi souvent que s'il était en bois.

M. Kenner—Je veux prouver à nos commettants que nous ne nous refusons pas à remplacer la méchante palissade en bois qui entoure notre capitole. Les vaches et autres animaux entrent maintenant dans cet enclos et viennent y paître à leur aise. Les dames osent à peine y venir pour assister à nos séances, de peur de souiller leurs robes. Nous avons besoin d'une clôture, faisons-en donc une qui soit en rapport avec l'édifice qu'elle est destinée à protéger.

M. Mouton.—Je suis opposé à la motion, non pas parce que je n'approuve pas que l'on établisse une grille autour des terrains, mais parceque je trouve la dépense trop forte pour le moment. Je crois que le sénateur d'Ascension partagera cet avis, s'il veut bien réfléchir à l'état presque desesperé de nos finances: Quand nous serons plus riches, nous pourrons dépenser de l'argent en grilles de fer, mais pour le moment, je crois qu'une palissade en pieux suffit à empêcher les animaux d'entrer. et les sénateurs de sortir.

L'amendement pourvoyant à l'érection d'une grille en fer, pourvu que le coût ne dépasse pas $10,000,— est adopté.

M. Kenner.—Les entrepreneurs chargés de la construction du Capitole etaient messieurs Avery, Brochear et Maunsel White. Les charges les plus lourdes ont pesé sur M. Avery. et il a accompli sa tâche avec une conscience dont j'ai vu peu d'exemples. L'exactitude et le soin qu'il a mis à remplir son contrat, ont été généralement remarqués. S'il eut construit une bâtisse pour lui-même, il n'eût pas pu y mettre une plus scrupuleuse attention. Ces considerations m'encouragent à vous proposer de le nommer un des entrepreneurs pour cet ouvrage.

La motion est adoptée et le bill passe.

L'acte relatif à l'élection des greffiers des Cours de District, [la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans exceptés] — est pris en considération.

M. Mouton.—D'après cette loi, les greffiers des Cours actuellement existantes, seront continués dans leurs fonctions, jusqu'à ce que de nouveaux greffiers soient nommés. Sous le régime de l'ancienne loi, les paroisses de Lafayette, Vermillion et Calcasieu comprenaient le 15me District judiciaire de l'Etat. Lafayette au lieu d'être maintenant compris dans le 15me District judiciaire, est dans le 14me. Il me paraît que le greffier du 15me District ne peut pas remplir ses fonctions dans le 14me, parce que la Constitution dit que ces fonctionnaires seront élus, et nous n'avons pas le droit de leur faire remplir les fonctions de greffiers dans ces nouvelles Cours.

M. Short.—Les greffiers sont des fonctionnaires de paroisse et non de District. Ils sont élus par les paroisses. A mon sens, l'article 143 de la Constitution résout cette difficulté. [Il lit l'article.] L'article suivant est plus explicite encore. [Il le lit] Les greffiers élus sous la nouvelle Constitution ne seront pas choisis avant le mois de décembre, jusqu'à cette époque, l'ordre de choses actuel reste en vigueur. Par exemple le greffier de la paroisse de Carroll, est le greffier de la paroisse et non du District, et du moment où un nouveau greffier est élu, il entre en fonctions. Jusqu'à là l'ancien greffier conserve les siennes, en vertu de l'article de la Constitution que je viens de citer. Je ne

Digitized by Google

vois pas que cette question puisse donner lieu à la moindre difficulté

M. Palfrey.—L'objection du sénateur de Vermillion [M. Mouton] est très fondée. Le greffier nommé pour le 14me District ne peut pas agir pour le 15me, ce serait une absurdité. Il y aurait pourtant un moyen de régler cette difficulté, ce serait d'autoriser le juge qui sera élu à nommer son greffier jusqu'à ce qu'un autre ait été choisi.

M. Mouton.—Alors ces fonctions cessent d'exister légalement, du moment où les juges sont élus, parce que le gouvernement est réorganisé. La Constitution dit qu'elles continueront jusqu'à l'organisation du gouvernement, mais pas plus longtemps. Sous la Constitution de 1845, les greffiers étaient élus, non comme le prétend le sénateur de Carroll [M. Short], pour les paroisses, mais pour les Cours situées dans ces paroisses. Aussitôt que les nouvelles Cours seront établies, leurs fonctions expireront. La Constitution porte qu'un greffier sera élu pour chaque Cour inférieure. Le bill veut que nous donnions aux anciens greffiers, la même place dans les nouvelles Cours; c'est une violation manifeste de la Constitution qui dit que ces employés seront élus. Le greffier de mon District est nommé pour le 15me et cette Cour est abolie, elle n'existe plus. Le greffier de cette Cour peut-il exercer ces fonctions dans le 15me District? je prétends que non, attendu que la Constitution veut que ces fonctionnaires soient élus. Le sénateur de Carroll se fonde sur l'article 144 de la Constitution qui dit que les anciens officiers resteront en place jusqu'à l'organisation du gouvernement. Eh bien, le gouvernement n'est-il pas organisé. Les anciennes Cours ont cessé d'exister et la loi ne peut pas transférer les greffiers aux nouvelles Cours.

M. Short—L'honorable membre a mal compris mon interprétation de l'article en question. Nous n'avons pas créé de nouvelles Cours, elles restent ce qu'elles étaient. Nous n'avons fait que changer les numéros et les paroisses dans quelques cas, mais leur juridiction reste la même. La seule différence est que le juge est nommé d'une manière différente. Il était alors nommé par le Gouverneur avec l'avis et le consentement du Sénat; maintenant il est élu par le peuple; et le District pour lequel il est élu est déterminé par la loi. Dans quelques cas les paroisses sont les mêmes, dans d'autres elles sont différentes. Tensas, Madison et Carroll formaient le 10me District, maintenant c'est le 9me. Il n'y a de différence que dans les noms des Districts et dans le fait que les juges sont élus par le peuple. Il n'y a pas de changement quant aux greffiers. La question est de savoir jusqu'à quel point nous avons poussé l'organisation décrétée par la nouvelle Constitution. Nous avons d'abord pourvu à l'élection des juges. C'est un pas de fait. Quand nous aurons pourvu à celle des greffiers, ce sera un second pas, et jusqu'alors l'article 144 de la Constitution fait face à la difficulté. Jusqu'à ce que l'organisation soit complétée, les dispositions de l'article 144 restent en vigueur Le greffier de quelque Cour que ce soit, peu importe que ce soit de la 1re, de la seconde ou de la 3me, a le droit de rester en fonctions jusqu'à l'élection de son successeur. Cette élection a été fixée au 3me lundi de décembre. Jusqu'à cette époque, d'après l'ancienne et la nouvelle Constitution, les Cours ne sont pas complétement réorganisées. On prétend que les nouveaux juges ont le droit de nommer leurs greffiers: cette prétention est inadmissible; ils ont le droit de suppléer aux vacances, non d'en créer. Il n'y a pas de vacance avant que le nouveau greffier ne soit élu, et jusqu'alors l'ancien doit rester en fonctions.

M. McCay—Il me semble que l'art. 84 de la Constitution pourvoit à ce cas. Je propose un amendement à ce Bill, portant que les greffiers actuels conserveront leur place jusqu'à ce que leurs successeurs soient élus. S'il y a vacance, cet amendement y pourvoit; dans le cas contraire, il ne peut en résulter aucun inconvénient.

M. Mouton—Ce Bill contient certainement une inconséquence. Supposez qu'un greffier, qui autrefois appartenait au 7me District, se trouve être maintenant dans le 18me. Quel titre prendra-t-il? Sa nomination ne l'autorise pas à exercer ses fonctions dans le 18me, et il n'a pas été réélu pour ce District.

M. Short—Je ne vois pas cette inconséquence. Le numéro du District ne fait rien à la chose. Le greffier de la Cour de Caddo est greffier pour tout District qui embrassera cette paroisse, jusqu'à ce que son successeur soit élu. Il n'y a pas la moindre ambiguité.

M. Mouton—Simplifions la question. Supposons que dans la paroisse de Madison un homme soit accusé de meurtre et que le greffier signe comme greffier de la Cour, pour laquelle il a été nommé. L'avocat de l'accusé se fonderait sur cette irrégularité pour demander l'annulation de l'acte d'accusation. Il consulte la loi et y trouve que ce fonctionnaire est greffier du 14me District et non du 15me. Sa demande ne sera-t-elle pas fondée?

M. Short—Tout cela ne fait rien à la chose. Si le District d'un greffier est divisé et que sa paroisse passe du 9me au 10me District, il ne résulte pas de ce que le titre de la Cour est changé, qu'il soit déplacé, pas plus que le shérif. Pour qu'un employé soit déplacé, il faut dabord que la place elle-même et les fonctions qui en dependent soient changées. L'idée que le changement d'une ligne mathématique peut affecter les droits de ceux qui occupent une place, ne peut trouver place que dans les cerveaux qui ont rêvé que la nouvelle Constitution est une révélation d'en haut, et que non seulement elle détruit le passe, mais encore qu'elle pourvoit à tout pour l'avenir.

M. Mouton—La comparaison qui vient d'être établie entre les greffiers et les shérifs n'est pas juste. Ces derniers sont des officiers strictement paroissiaux, il n'en est pas de même des premiers.

M. Boatner—Je respecte les opinions du sénateur de Caroll, elles sont généralement fondées. Mais dans le cas qui nous occupe je ne puis m'en remettre qu'à mes propres convictions. La question me paraît fort simple. Quelle preuve un greffier a-t-il de son droit à la place qu'il occupe? C'est sa nomination comme greffier de telle ou telle Cour pour telle ou telle paroisse ou paroisses. La loi a crée de nouveaux districts, qui n'étaient pas reconnus antérieurement et dont les greffiers d'aucune paroisse n'ont connaissance. Un greffier qui a exercé ses fonctions dans le 17me District, a-t-il le droit de les remplir dans le 18me? Certainement il ne l'a pas. L'article de la Constitution qu'on a cité, ne s'applique pas à ce cas. Il a trait aux fonctionnaires dont les attributions ne sont pas changées; mais la loi a introduit un changement dans les fonctions dont il s'agit Elle établit de nouveaux Districts et de nouvelles Cours. La Législature doit pourvoir à cette difficulté. Un greffier ne peut agir qu'en vertu d'une seule nomination et elle ne l'autorise pas à exercer ses fonctions dans le 17me District quand il est nommé pour le 18me. La raison en est fort simple. Je partage l'opinion du sénateur de Vermillon, qu'il ne faut pas mettre cette précipitation inconsidérée au changement de nos institutions. Je ne pense pas qu'il faille tout démolir par la seule raison que c'est ancien. Mais il est absolument nécessaire de pourvoir à ce cas difficile. Les juges ne peuvent pas faire de nomination parce qu'il n'y a pas de vacance, et la Constitution les autorise à le faire lorsqu'une vacance a lieu.

M. Short—Je remercie mon collègue de l'honneur qu'il veut bien me faire Pour ma part je ne demande pas mieux que de me laisser éclairer, de quelque part que vienne la lumière. Mais: Humanum est errare. La difficulté soulevée par cette question semble résulter du changement introduit dans le nom et les limites de quelques Districts. Si un District est changé, toutes les poursuites intentées par la Cour qui est située dans ce District, le seront au nom de cette Cour. Le fait que le District porte un nouveau nom n'y fait rien. Un greffier, est greffier d'une Cour dans et pour un certain District. Il n'y a pas d'inconvénient à ce qu'un greffier intente une poursuite pour une Cour sous un nom, s'il a été nommé greffier d'une Cour sous un autre nom. Il n'y a de changé que le nom et c'est là la seule contradiction.

M. McCay—Et si une paroisse était divisée?

M. Short—Pourquoi supposer des cas qui ne se sont jamais présentés?

M. McCay—Ce cas s'est offert. La paroisse de Jefferson a été divisée, et une partie a été réunie à la paroisse d'Orléans.

M. Short—On pourrait aisément y pourvoir en permettant au greffier d'exercer des poursuites de la part d'une Cour sous un titre, et de la part de l'autre Cour sous un autre.

M. Mouton—Oui, quand le bill en sera à sa 3me lecture. Cette question est fort importante, et je suis persuadé qu'elle donnera naissance à une foule de contradictions et de difficultés auxquelles nous devrions tâcher d'obvier.

Digitized by Google

M. McCay—Je voterai contre ce bill à cause des objections qu'il soulève. Le sénateur de Carroll (M. Short), base son opinion sur ce que les anciennes Cours existent encore. Cette Législature a organisé de nouveaux Districts, et quand les nouvelles Cours seront organisées, les anciens greffiers devront nécessairement quitter leurs places. Elles sont vacantes maintenant ou au moins elles le seront aussitôt que les nouveaux juges seront élus.

M. Short—Les greffiers resteront en place jusqu'à ce que leurs successeurs soient élus, puisque jusqu'alors il n'y aura pas d'organisation complète. Il ne peut pas y avoir d'organisation jusqu'à cette élection, et nous ne pouvons pas désorganiser avant d'avoir organisé. Si nous n'adoptons pas ce bill nous retomberons dans l'ancien ordre des choses.

M. Mouton—Nous ne nous trouverons pas dans cette position, puisqu'alors il y aura une vacance et que les juges seront autorisés à la remplir.

M. Short—J'en doute.

L'appel nominal étant demandé, M. Mouton présente l'opinion suivante, qui est insérée dans le procès-verbal :

Mon opinion est que les places de greffiers sont vacantes par l'adoption de la Constitution et de la nouvelle division de l'Etat en nouvelles Cours de District Judiciaires; que les greffiers des Cours de la Nouvelle-Orléans doivent être élus, et que la Législature n'a pas le pouvoir de constituer les greffiers actuels, greffiers des nouvelles Cours ou des Cours dernièrement organisées.

C. H. MOUTON.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Nicholls.—Ayant voté avec la majorité, je demande la reconsideration du bill afin de permettre au sénateur de Ste-Marie de proposer un amendement.

Le bill est repris en considération.

M. Palfrey présente un amendement portant que les greffiers actuels resteront en fonctions jusqu'à ce que leurs successeurs soient élus.

L'amendement est adopté et le bill passe.

L'acte réglant les hypothèques et les privilèges, et pour empêcher la levée desdites hypothèques et desdits privilèges par les syndics executeurs, etc., est pris en consideration.

M. King.—Je suis préparé à la discussion de ce bill, mais je ne tiens pas précisément à ce qu'elle ait lieu aujourd'hui. Cependant j'en expliquerai le but en peu de mots: C'est de donner une garantie additionnelle aux personnes qui font des prêts sur hypothèque en augmentant cette garantie; de diminuer le taux de l'intérêt; de rendre l'argent plus abondant et d'élever la valeur des propriétes foncières. Voilà quels seront les effets du bill. Les inconvénients qui résultent du système actuel, se rapprochent beaucoup de ceux que présentent les hypothèques tacites et par conséquent ce bill ressemble dans ses dispositions à celui qui a été présenté sur les hppothèques tacites. Il aura les mêmes résultats, sans donner lieu aux mêmes objections. Je donnerai un exemple des abus auxquels le système actuel donne lieu. Il y a quelques années, John Jacob Astor prêta $60,000 à une personne de la Nouvelle-Orleans qui lui donna une première hypothèque sur ses propriétés, en garantie. Cette personne fit faillite. Un syndic fut nommé, qui ne péchait pas par trop d'honnêteté. Il leva l'hypothèque, empocha les fonds, et Astor perdit son argent. Il va sans dire qu'il informa tout le monde de l'insuffisance de nos lois, dans ces cas, et cette publicité eut pour résultat d'ébranler la confiance des capitalistes étrangers. Maintenant en cas de banqueroute, un syndic a le droit de lever une hypothèque et la même chose a lieu en cas de mort. Cela ne doit pas se faire. Les banques foncières de la Louisiane insèrent toujours dans leurs contrats une clause qui s'opposait à ce que les syndics ou les exécuteurs testamentaires levassent une hypothèque en cas de faillite ou de mort de la personne avec laquelle elles faisaient un contrat Ce système n'avait pas d'inconvénients. Qu'on ne se figure pas qu'en pratique, ce bill n'offrira pas les avantages qu'il présente en théorie. La Louisiane est le seul Etat où de tels pouvoirs soient donnés aux syndics. Tout le système est basé sur cette théorie fausse. Un homme qui emprunte de l'argent donne certains droits à d'autres. S'il meurt ou s'il fait faillite, les propriétés qui lui appartiennent sont portées à sa succession et deviennent responsables pour tous les frais. Je sais par expérience que dans ces cas, après que les commissions du syndic et les honoraires des avocats ont été payés, celui qui avait prêté de l'argent, le croyant garanti par hypothèque, découvre souvent que son argent a été absorbé par les frais de la banqueroute ou de la succession, tandis qu'il est le véritable propriétaire bénéficier de ces propriétés. Voilà les abus auxquels ce bill est destiné à porter remède.

Après beaucoup d'étude et de réflexion, j'ai trouvé qu'il était difficile de le rendre appliquable à tous les cas. Je l'ai enfin rédigé de manière à ce que la première hypothèque générale ne puisse être invalidée par aucune autre hypothèque générale. J'aurais préféré enlever entièrement aux syndics le pouvoir qu'ils ont maintenant, mais je n'ai pas pu reussir à rédiger le bill de manière à y comprendre certains cas où il faut que les syndics aient le pouvoir de lever certaines hypothèques pour régler une succession. J'ai donc rédigé le bill de sorte à empêcher les syndics et exécuteurs de lever une première hypothèque, Si nous adoptons le bill, nous augmentons la valeur des propriétés foncières dans 99 cas sur 100; mais la proportion ne fût-elle que de 75 sur 100; cela suffirait à recommander le bill à l'opinion favorable du Sénat.

M. Mouton.—Je voudrais savoir si le bill pourvoit à ce que dans les cas de vente de succession, l'hypothèque suive la propriété dans les mains de tierces personnes.

M. King.—Certainement, comme dans les autres Etats.

M. Short.—Le comité judiciaire a fait un rapport sur ce bill, mais quoiqu'il n'eût pas mon approbation, je n'ai pas eu le temps de faire un rapport en mon nom propre. Quand le bill sera discuté, j'exposerai mes vues sur ce sujet.

M. King.—L'honorable membre semblait d'abord favorable au principe général du bill, quoiqu'il pensât qu'il était de nature à embarrasser le réglement des successions. Mais depuis le bill a été refondu et il n'est pas le même que celui contre lequel il élevait cette objection. Si l'honorable membre veut se donner la peine d'examiner le bill, il trouvera que de grands changements y ont été introduits et qu'ils sont de nature à détruire les objections qu'il avait contre les dispositions du bill.

Sur motion, l'acte est mis à l'ordre du jour pour le jeudi suivant.

M. McCay demande la prise en considération du bill pour taxer les compagnies d'assurance de la Nouvelle-Orléans au profit du département des pompiers de cette ville.

Le bill est pris en considération et adopté.

L'acte pour régler l'indemnité des jurés pour la paroisse d'Orléans, est pris en considération.

M. Kenner propose de référer ce bill au comité judiciaire.

M. Short.—Je m'oppose à la motion. La session est déjà avancée. Le comité a eu beaucoup à faire et ne désire pas qu'on le charge encore de ce bill.

M. Mouton.— Je crois que la loi accorde actuellement $1,50 aux jurés à la Nouvelle-Orléans, mais il n'y a pas eu d'allocation pour mettre cette disposition à exécution.

M. Short.—Si l'Etat paie les jurés de la ville, il doit aussi payer ceux de la campagne.

N. King.— Je suis opposé à ce que l'Etat paie les jurés soit de la ville, soit de la campagne. Mais si vous voulez que ceux de la campagne soient payés par l'Etat, ceux de la ville doivent l'être également.

Le bill est référé au comité judiciaire.

RAPPORTS DES COMITÉS.

M. Kenner, du comité des finances, auquel avait été référé un acte pour accorder aux differents collecteurs de taxes de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, le montant de leurs commissions déduit sur les collectes des licences d'Etat pour les années 1850 et 1851.

Le rapporte défavorablement et recommande qu'il soit déposé sur le bureau.

M. Taylor, du comité des réclamations, auquel avait été référé un acte pour venir au secours des héritiers de Patrick Flinn, vétéran de 1814 et 1815, le rapporte favorablement.

Digitized by Google

Ainsi qu'un acte pour venir au secours de Henry Force, de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Sur motion, après dispense des règles, cet acte subit sa troisième lecture et passe.

M. Neal, du comité spécial, présente le rapport suivant qui est lu et adopté.

Le comité spécial auquel avait été référé l'acte intitulé « Acte pour améliorer la navigation de la rivière Sabine. Rapporte respectueusement Que le but de cet acte ne peut être rempli par une application des fonds designés dans le dit acte pour les raisons alléguées dans le rapport fait sur cet acte quand il a été référé au comité des terres et levées.

Le seul fonds qu'on pourrait employer pour remplir ce but, est celui qui appartient aux améliorations intérieures, ou du moins pourrait-il être exécuté par les ouvriers appartenant aux améliorations intérieures, et par un des bateaux qui se trouvent sous les ordres de l'ingénieur de l'Etat ; c'est pourquoi nous recommandons la passation de la résolution suivante :

Il est resolu par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en assemblée générale ; Que l'ingénieur d'Etat soit et demeure autorisé par le présent, à faire un plan de la rivière Sabine pour montrer quelles sont les travaux qui peuvent y être faits pour en améliorer la navigation.

Et si sur ce plan, il paraît matériellement praticable d'améliorer la navigation de la dite rivière, de prendre tel nombre de forces des améliorations intérieures qu'il sera necessaire pour exécuter les ouvrage exigés par cette résolution. Pourvu que ces forces des améliorations intérieures ne soient pas détachées de tout ouvrage maintenant en voie d'exécution.

Sur motion, après dispense des règles, cette résolution subit ses différentes lectures et passe.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial de la Chambre informe le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte pour venir au secours de J. Johnston, maître du bateau à vapeur Sidonia.

Acte pour émanciper Jane Mary esclave et fille de Patsey f. c. l.

Acte pour arrêter l'extension des maladies contagieuses et malignes, apportées par les navires arrivant dans la baie de l'Atchafalaya et ses tributaires.

Acte pour pourvoir au jugement des affaires quand les juges sont récusés.

Résolution conjointe relative à l'établissement d'un bureau de poste dans la paroisse de Livingston.

Acte pour venir au secours de Pierre Gellouseau ex-surintendant de la paroisse d'Iberville.

Et que la Chambre a adopté avec amendemens un acte pour transférer des fonds des écoles du troisième aux 1er et 2me districts de la paroisse Saint-Charles.

Et que l'Orateur a nommé messieurs :

Ranney, Sandidge, Day, Sterling, Pierce d'un comité de conférences relativement à un acte intitulé :

Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district judiciaire excepté.

Et MM. King de St-Landry, Wilson, Nixon, Wheat et Marks d'un comité relatif à un

Acte pour organiser les cours de districts dans et pour la paroisse et la ville de la Nlle-Orléans.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Sénat rapporte à la Chambre que les actes suivans ont été adoptés par le Sénat.

Acte pour autoriser l'auditeur à canceller les bons souscrits par J. Sterling et James A. Mc Hatton, comme commissaires pour l'achat d'esclaves et de bateaux destinés à l'usage des améliorations intérieures de l'Etat.

Acte pour changer le nom de George Ross de la paroisse de Plaquemines.

Acte pour créer un juge de paix et un constable additionnels, dans et pour la paroisse de Saint-Bernard.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour l'acte suivant émanant du Sénat.

Acte pour pourvoir à la représentation uniforme de la paroisse de St-Jacques, dans le jury de police de la dite paroisse.

Et il demande la signature de l'orateur pour l'acte enrôlé suivant :

Acte pour venir au secours d'Emile Lasère, imprimeur d'Etat.

Et il informe la Chambre que le président a signé l'acte enrôlé suivant :

Acte pour amender la 20me section d'un acte intitulé « Acte pour consolider la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et pour pourvoir au gouvernement et à l'administration de ses affaires.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre à une résolution relative à la construction d'une grille en fer autour de la Maison d'Etat, et du terrain qui l'entoure.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux amendements du Sénat à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin en planches de Grosse-Tête et de Baton-Rouge.

Le messager spécial de la Chambre demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivans :

Acte pour venir au secours de H. Labat.

Acte pour déterminer les limites de la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour améliorer le chemin de Holmesville.

Acte pour autoriser le recorder de la paroisse de Morehouse à nommer un député.

Acte autorisant W. Sherwin de la paroisse de Claiborne à nettoyer le bayou Danchitte, &c.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte intitulé " Acte pour former un district de levées composé des paroisses de Carroll, Madison et Catahoula, afin de les mieux proteger contre l'inondation, adopte le 18 mars 1852, et amendé le 25 mars 1853.

Acte pour autoriser la levée d'un plan des basfonds dans la rivière Ouachita, près de Harrisonburg.

Acte pour égalisor la représentation dans le jury de police de la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour incorporer la ville de Mont-Liban.

Acte pour taxer les compagnies d'assurance de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, au bénéfice des compagnies à feu de cette ville.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'organisation de la milice dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

---

20 avril 1853.

Le bill pour définir la limite entre les paroisses d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge et d'Iberville, est pris en considération

M. Slack—Je demande que le bill soit déposé indéfiniment sur le bureau, et je prie le Sénat de vouloir bien me prêter quelques instants d'attention, pendant que j'expliquerai les motifs qui me guident en faisant cette motion. En premier lieu, ce bill affecte directement les intérêts de mes commettants, et ma position dans cette question est d'autant plus délicate, que je représente deux paroisses dont les intérêts sont diamétralement opposés dans le bill qui nous occupe. Un coup-d'œil rétrospectif sur la législation est indispensable à l'intelligence de cette affaire.

Voici en quels termes la loi de 1826 décrit la limite entre les deux paroisses :

« Qu'à partir de l'adoption de cet acte, la limite méridionale de la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge sera, et qu'elle est par les présentes ainsi fixée, à savoir une ligne se dirigeant au sud-ouest, à partir du point de division actuel entre les paroisses d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge et d'Iberville, jusqu'à la rivière Atchafalaya.

» Sect. 2. Il est de plus décrété, &c., qu'à partir de l'adoption de cet acte, la rivière Atchafalaya et ses différents cours d'eau seront et sont par les présentes faits la limite occidentale de la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge.»

L'acte supplémentaire suivant fut adopté plus tard :

« Que l'acte intitulé acte pour déterminer les limites méridionales et occidentales de la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge, approuvé le 8 avril, ne sera pas mis en vigueur avant la fin de la session de la prochaine Législature, pourvu cependant que dans l'intérim les commissaires nommés par le susdit acte fassent ou fassent faire les travaux d'arpentage requis par ledit acte, et qu'ils en présentent un rapport à la prochaine Législature.»

Digitized by Google

C'est cet acte qui fixe les limites actuelles.

Avant d'aller plus loin, il est nécessaire de dire que l'Atchafalaya et le Mississippi suivent une direction parallèle à une distance de 30 milles l'un de l'autre. Cet espace contient deux établissements; Grosse-Tête en est un. A cette époque aucune relation n'existait entre ces points et Ouest-Bâton-Rouge, quoiqu'ils fussent plus rapprochés du centre de cette paroisse que du centre de celle d'Iberville. Les habitants de ces établissements présentèrent une pétition demandant qu'ils fussent admis dans la paroisse d'Iberville. Cette pétition fut referée à un comité spécial qui présenta le rapport suivant: (Extrait du journal de 1827.)

«Le comité auquel a été référé le bill intitulé acte pour fixer la limite entre les paroisses d'Iberville et d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge,» a l'honneur de rapporter qu'il a examiné ledit bill avec toute l'attention requise, et qu'il est d'avis que, bien que la nature semble avoir inclus le bayou Grosse-Tête dans la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge, l'impossibilité de toute communication entre l'établissement sur le bayou Grosse-Tête et la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge, le porte à recommander l'adoption du bill qui accompagne ce rapport, ce qu'il soumet respectueusement. »

Voici l'acte dont le rapport fait mention :

« Il est décrété, &c., Que Messieurs Wm Joyce, Joseph Osillion et Horsey P. Swindler sont et demeurent nommés commissaires pour examiner s'il est possible d'établir une route conduisant du bayou Grosse-Tête à la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge, à une distance de trois milles de la maison de Cour de la dite paroisse.

» Sect. 2. Il est décrété, &c., Que les susdits commissaires seront tenus de présenter un rapport sur ce sujet à la Législature pendant sa prochaine session, et que dans ce rapport ils présenteront un devis estimatif du coût de la dite route.

» Sect. 3. Que jusqu'à l'adoption du rapport requis par cet acte, l'établissement sur le bayou Grosse-Tête sera compris dans la paroisse d'Iberville.

» Sect. 4. Que l'acte intitulé : « Acte pour déterminer les limites méridionales et occidentales de la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge est et demeure rappelé. »

Le rapport du comité fut adopté, et l'acte qui l'accompagnait fut passé par la Législature.

Je trouve dans le journal de 1828, que le comité nommé par cet acte présenta une pétition qui fut référée à un comité qui rapporta l'acte suivant :

«Que tout le territoire situé entre le bayou Goorse-Tête et le bayou Maringoin, est et demeure compris dans la paroisse d'Iberville, et que tous les propriétaires dont les terres sont sises dans ledit territoire, seront soumis aux mêmes règlements publics pour les routes et les levées, et aux mêmes charges que s'ils eussent été compris dans les dispositions de l'acte auquel le présent est un supplément;—Pourvu qu'aucune portion de la paroisse de la Pointe-Coupee ne soit comprise dans les dispositions de cet acte.

Sect. 2—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que jusqu'à ce qu'une route bonne et praticable soit construite entre les établissements sur le Bayou Grosse Tête et un point de la paroisse d'Ouest-Bâton Rouge, qui ne soit pas à plus de trois mille à la droite ou a la gauche de la Maison de Cour de cette dernière paroisse, toute personne qui est maintenant établie ou qui pourrait plus tard s'établir sur le Bayou Grosse-Tête comme ci-dessus mentionné, continuera à être comprise dans les limites et la juridiction de la paroisse d'Iberville.

Sect 3. Que tout acte ou partie d'acte contraire aux dispositions du présent acte, est et demeure rappelé.

Cet acte fut adopté en 1828 ; il était basé sur le rapport des commissaires et c'était un contrat entre la Législature et les parties intéressées. La paroisse d'Ouest Bâton Rouge n'a rien épargné pour remplir les conditions du contrat. Le jury de police fit une allocation de $1,500 qui, réunie à différentes allocations subséquentes et aux souscriptions individuelles, se monta à $20,000. Ouest Bâton Rouge s'imposait ces sacrifices dans le but d'alléger ses taxes en étendant son territoire. Intervenir maintenant serait violer directement l'article 105 de la Constitution qui dit qu'aucune loi ex post facto ne sera adoptée. Il me semble qu'il n'y a jamais eu aucun conflit réel de juridiction entre les deux paroisses et que cette question n'a jamais soulevé de difficulte, bien que le bill fasse présumer que la loi de 1828 peut y donner lieu. Quoique disposé à faire tout ce que je pourrai raisonnablement faire pour la paroisse d'Iberville, je ne puis cependant pas consentir à sacrifier les droits et les intérêts d'Ouest Bâton Rouge. Je demande donc que le bill soit déposé sur le bureau afin de permettre à Ouest Bâton Rouge de les sauvegarder. Il n'en peut résulter un détriment pour aucune des deux paroisses Iberville possède ce territoire maintenant. C'est les neuf dixièmes du point en litige. Laissons les tribunaux décider à laquelle des deux paroisses, il doit appartenir d'après les dispositions de la loi de 1828.

M. Short—C'est une question qu'il n'est pas sisé aux tribunaux de décider. Si je comprends bien l'acte, le territoire en question appartenait autrefois à Ouest Bâton Rouge. Cependant comme par suite de sa position topographique, ce district ne pouvait avoir de communication avec Ouest Bâton Rouge, ses habitans demandèrent à être réunis à Iberville, ce que la Législature leur accorda. Plus tard, d'après les dispositions de cet acte, des commissaires furent nommés pour tracer une route du Mississipi au Bayou Grosse Tête. Ouest Bâton Rouge a-t-elle ou n'a-t-elle pas rempli les conditions imposées par cet acte ? C'est la réponse à cette question qui déterminera mon vote. On ne prétend pas, je crois, qu'Ouest Bâton Rouge ait rempli ces conditions. La route a-t-elle été construite ? Le peuple ne veut pas que cette question reste éternellement en suspens. La loi dit que jusqu'à ce que cette route soit achevée, le district en litige continuera à faire partie d'Iberville. Mais quand cette question sera-t-elle résolue. Le peuple n'aime pas à être tenu dans l'incertitude. On dit que des souscriptions ont été ouvertes et que de l'argent a été collecté pour la construction de cette route ; mais cela ne fait pas partie du contrat. Il exige une route qu'on puisse en tout temps parcourir sans frais ; non pas un chemin planchéié ou un chemin du fer, mais une route d'après l'ancien système, une route qui conduise au Mississipi, sans soumettre ceux qui la parcourent à aucune dépense. Ouest Bâton Rouge n'a pas le droit de priver Iberville de l'avantage qui résultera pour cette paroisse de la fixation de ses limites et de la tenir en suspens. Le peuple veut savoir à quoi s'en tenir, il veut savoir quelles seront les limites de la paroisse et quelle en sera l'étendue.

M. Slack.— L'acte ne spécifie pas l'époque à laquelle la route devra être achevée et ses dispositions ne contiennent aucune limitation de temps. Je représente également les deux paroisses et je n'ai aucune partialite en faveur d'une d'elles en particulier. Ce que je désire, c'est que si Ouest-Bâton-Rouge a des prétentions, et je crois qu'il en a, il soit mis à même de les établir. Nous sommes ici pour faire des lois et non pour décider entre des prétentions rivales. Donnez à Ouest-Bâton-Rouge le droit et le privilège de remplir son contrat. Peut-être ne pourra-t-il pas le faire d'ici à quelques années, mais il se peut qu'il le fasse dans soixante ans. Ne lui otez pas tout moyen de defendre ses droits. En 1844, le territoire en litige et qui, bien entendu, n'est en litige que dans cette enceinte, contenait des propriétés imposables pour une valeur de $400,000, et ce chiffre s'élève aujourd'hui à un million et demi. La question en litige n'offre donc pas une mince importance.

Le bill est déposé indéfiniment sur le bureau.

M. Kenner, sans en avoir donné avis préalable, demande et obtient la permission de présenter un

Acte pour fixer la compensation à donner à l'auditeur des comptes pour les charges que lui impose la loi des banques libres de cet Etat.

M. Kenner.— Un mot suffira pour expliquer l'objet de ce bill. Le bill des banques libres impose à l'auditeur de nouvelles charges et il n'est que juste que ses appointements soient augmentés en raison du surcroît de travail que nous exigeons de lui. Je ne propose pas cependant que cette augmentation soit payée par le peuple, je demande qu'il le soit par les banques.

Le bill est adopté.

RAPPORTS DES COMITÉS.

M. Derbès, du comité des réclamations, présente le rapport suivant:

A l'Hon. W. W. Farmer,

Lieut.-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Le comité des réclamations demande la permission de rapporter que B. C. Winfer, ex-shérif et collecteur de taxes pour la paroisse Morehouse, s'étant échappé de l'Etat devant au trésor une balance de $1873 37/00,

Digitized by Google

Ses cautions, au nombre de dix-huit, demandent maintenant à être déchargées du paiement de la dite somme; ils avancent aussi que le dit Winfer n'a jamais reçu le montant réclamé contre lui dans les livres de l'auditeur des comptes publics, que ce déficit est occasionné par des montants chargés sur les tableaux de taxes à des personnes qui sont reconnues insolvables et desquelles il est impossible de rien collecter de quelque manière que ce soit, et de montants imposés sur des propriétés réclamées par des absents, les dites dernières propriétés n'étant pas en réalité sujettes à la taxe, comme faisant partie de la donation Bastrop, dans les limites de laquelle la presque totalité de la paroisse de Morehouse est située

Le soussigné pense que c'est un sujet qu'il faut laisser à la décision des cours de justice de cet Etat, en tant que cela touche à une question de faits et vu que le comité n'a pas eu devant lui d'autres preuves que celles avancées par les parties intéressées; le dit comité rapporte contre la dite réclamation et demande à être déchargé de toute responsabilité à cet égard.

A. DERBES,
Président

M. Boatner, du comité conjoint, présente le rapport suivant:

A l'Hon. W. W. Farmer,
Lieut.-Gouverneur et Président du Sénat.

Le comité conjoint des deux chambres qui était chargé d'examiner la consolidation et la révision des statuts de l'Etat par Levi Pierce, Miles Taylor et Wm W. King, nommés à cet effet en vertu de l'acte du 20 décembre 1845 et du 21 mars 1850, demande la permission de rapporter que l'immense importance de l'ouvrage qui se trouve devant eux, a mis dans l'impossibilité de faire un examen approfondi et exact du sujet.

Nous trouvons cependant que ce travail a déjà été mis devant un comité nommé par une Législature précédente, et que ce comité recommande une appropriation de cinq mille deux cent cinquante piastres; le comité recommande l'adoption d'un acte qui est ci-inclu, appropriant la dite somme d'argent, comme une compensation entière et complète aux dits commissaires.

M BOATNER,
Président du comité du Senat.

M. Kittridge, du comité des institutions charitables, auquel avait été référée la pétition de l'Asile des Orphelines de Bâton-Rouge, présente le rapport suivant:

Le comité rapporte respectueusement qu'ils ont dûment examiné la dite pétition, et recommandent unanimement la même appropriation qui a été donnée par la dernière Législature pour aider cette institution.

Signé: E. E. KITTRIDGE,
Président.

Sur motion de prendre en considération un acte intitulé:

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

M King demande l'appel nominal.

Messieurs Boatner, Burthe, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Kemp, Kenner, Lacoste, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Taylor, Kittridge, Palfrey King et Todd, votent pour—20 voix.

Messieurs Dupré, Griffin, Mouton, Neal et Nicholls, votent contre—5 voix.

Conséquemment, l'acte est repris en considération

M. King, du comité spécial, présente le rapport suivant qui est lu:

A l'Hon. W. W Farmer,
Président du Sénat.

Le comité spécial auquel avait été référé l'acte intitulé « Acte pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement de la preuve des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées, » demande la permission de rapporter qu'un des membres du comité, M. Kenner, a suggéré un amendement, qui aurait pour effet de retirer la peine de nullité de l'hypothèque si elle n'était pas enrégistrée.

Le président est opposé à cet amendement.

M. Smith est opposé à l'acte et à l'amendement.

Le comité n'étant d'accord sur aucun amendement, rapporte l'acte au Sénat sans aucun changement.

Signé: WM. KING,
President.

M. Kenner.—Je ne prétends pas que ce rapport n'exprime pas l'opinion de l'honorable membre de la Nlle-Orléans, mais je soutiens qu'il ne presente pas correctement les vues des autres membres Il y a eu dans le sein du comité une espèce de duel triangulaire. L'honorable membre de Natchitoches tirait sur moi, je tirais sur lui et le sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans faisait feu sur nous deux. Il me semble donc singulier que mon collègue rapporte ce bill sans amendements. S'il persiste à le faire je présenterai un rapport de minorité dans le but de soumettre au Sénat l'amendement que j'ai proposé dans le sein du comité.

M. Lewis présente un bill autorisant les propriétaires riverains dans les villes à reclamer les accroissements qui se font à leurs terrains.

M. Derbes propose de référer le bill au comité judiciaire.

M. Short.—Il n'est pas nécessaire de référer ce bill au comite judiciaire. La session est déjà avancée et le comité n'a pas le temps d'examiner cette question.

M. King.—Il est vrai que ce bill est très important, mais le principe en est fort simple. Il ne fait que déclarer les droits des propriétaires riverains dans les villes. Dans les districts ruraux ces droits sont définis et connus; dans la ville au contraire ils sont douteux.

Les villes ont besoin d'un réglement de cette espèce et elles y ont autant de droit que les districts ruraux. On a vu des cas où des propriétaires ont été forcés par les corporations des villes à renoncer à une partie de leur propriété afin de conserver le reste. Le bill a entre autres choses pour objet de remédier à cet état de choses.

Après quelques remarques de l'honorable membre, le bill est référé.

Le bill pour pourvoir à l'enrégistrement des hypothèques &c., est pris en considération.

Le président fait remarquer que chaque membre du comite a presenté un rapport. L'un d'eux a offert un amendement au bill.

M. King.—Je crois qu'un membre d'un comité n'a pas le droit d'offrir un amendement à un bill; il faut pour cela qu'il y ait une majorité. Je ne veux pas que le bill soit remis à sa seconde lecture. Cela en causerait la perte. Ceux qui sont en faveur de l'amendement combattraient le bill en tout cas, et ceux qui sont opposés à l'amendement defendraient le bill. Je ne vois donc pas quel bien peut résulter du renvoi du bill à sa seconde lecture.

Le secretaire lit le rapport.

M. Short.— Je comprends maintenant l'état de la question. Le bill nous revient tel qu'il a été envoyé au comité. Un membre propose une chose, un autre, une autre chose et le troisième veut faire adopter une troisième mesure opposée aux deux premières. Le bill n'a donc pas subi le moindre changement; le comité n'y a introduit aucun amendement. Le rapport de la majorité est celui du comité. Si elle ne recommande aucun changement, le bill nous revient sous la même forme qu'auparavant. Le comité, ou au moins la majorité du comité, n'a recommandé aucun changement et c'est là ce qui détermine la forme sous laquelle le bill nous est renvoye, mais il va sans dire que la minorite a le droit de présenter son rapport.

M. Mouton.—Je désire que le bill soit mis à sa seconde lecture, afin que nous puissions présenter des amendements, quand même celui que propose un membre du comite ne serait pas adopté Les sénateurs du parti opposé peuvent croire que ce bill est tellement parfait, que tout amendement devient superflu; mais d'autres ont le droit de ne pas partager leur opinion sur ce sujet. J'espère qu'on nous fournira l'occasion de présenter un amendement: je ne vois pas quel mal peut en résulter. Je crois qu'on devrait au moins nous accorder ce mince privilège.

Un des membres rapporte un bill, le second rapporte le bill avec un amendement et le troisième se déclare opposé aux vues de ses deux collègues. Il n'est donc pas exact de dire que le bill a été rapporté sans amendements, puisque la majorité du comité n'est pas en faveur du bill tel qu'il lui a été envoyé. Le président n'a pas plus de droit qu'un autre membre de rapporter son opinion comme étant celle du comité. J'espère que le Sénat ne considérera pas le bill si pa fait, qu'aucun amendement ne puisse le rendre meilleur, et j'aime à croire qu'il nous permettra de presenter nos vues.

Digitized by Google

M. Kenner.—L'honorable membre de Carroll qui aime à plaisanter....

M. Short.—Je ne veux pas m'égayer aux dépens du comité ; mais quand on admet qu'on s'est livré à un duel triangulaire, il faut admettre qu'on se met dans une position assez comique.

M. Kenner.—Je disais donc que l'honorable membre, en voulant jeter du ridicule sur le comité, n'a réussi qu'à le faire rejaillir sur le président et son rapport. En effet, que dit-il? Il prétend que parceque le Sénateur de Natchitoches (M. Smith) a voté avec le président contre l'amendement, l'amendement tombe. Mais il a également voté avec moi contre le bill. Cette règle s'applique à un cas aussi bien qu'à l'autre, et d'après son argument il n'y a pas de rapport du tout. Le Sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans n'a pas le droit de rapporter le bill sans amendement. Je croyais qu'il aurait rapporté le bill avec mon amendement et qu'il aurait en même temps annoncé son opposition à cet amendement. Je prétends que mon rapport de minorité est soumis au Sénat.

M. Short—L'honorable membre n'a pas touché la question de savoir si le bill en est à sa seconde lecture Je soutiens qu'il nous revient du comité tel qu'il lui a été soumis. Quant à la question de ridicule j'en fais juges mes honorables collègues.

M. King—Voici comment j'entends la question ; j'avais compris que l'honorable membre voulait rapporter le bill. En rédigeant le rapport je ne savais trop que dire ; mais je ne vois pas ce que j'aurais pu dire de plus que je n'ai dit. Le bill nous revient certainement sans amendements. La minorité n'a pas le droit d'en rapporter un. Il y a si longtemps que nous nous occupons de ce bill, que je considère toute discussion ultérieure comme inutile. Hier quand le Sénat était au complet, j'ai déclaré que j'étais preparé à la discussion de tout amendement qu'on voudrait présenter. Personne n'en a offert un, excepté celui de l'honorable membre d'Ascension qui fut proposé dans le sein du comité et qui est de nature à perdre le bill. Le bill a subi sa seconde et sa troisième lecture. Deux fois nos adversaires ont eu l'occasion d'y introduire des amendements. L'ont-ils fait ? Se sont-ils montrés disposés à le perfectionner et à le soutenir sous une forme quelconque ?

Si le bill doit être rejeté que la responsabilité pèse sur ceux qui en sont la cause. La question est des plus simples : Le bill sera-t-il adopté maintenant, ou doit-il passer par l'épreuve d'amendements qui, s'ils sont adoptés, se détruiront, et qui, s'ils ne le sont pas, causeront un délai inutile? La session touche à sa fin et nous avons fort peu de temps par devers nous. Ajourner le bill c'est en vouloir le rejet. J'espère que le Sénat soutiendra l'opinion, qui, je le crois, est celle du président, à savoir que : le bill nous est renvoyé sans amendements et n'est pas remis à sa seconde lecture.

MORT DU VICE-PRESIDENT.

M. Kenner—Monsieur le Président, je prends la parole pour accomplir un pénible devoir, pour annoncer au Sénat la mort d'un de nos concitoyens les plus distingués. Après de longues souffrances, son âme vient de quitter sa dépouille mortelle, et il est entré au champ du repos où finit notre pénible pélérinage sur cette terre. Il n'était pas, il est vrai, un de ces génies aux conceptions gigantesques, un de ces orateurs dont l'éloquence sublime a entouré le nom américain d'une auréole impérissable ; mais il avait des titres plus sacrés encore à notre estime ; ceux d'un homme juste, d'un bon citoyen, d'un representant fidèle. Depuis longtemps le peuple n'avait pas eu à déplorer la perte d'un homme qui réunit au même degré toutes les qualités qui font l'ornement de l'humanité et qui eussent su se conquérir dans leur amour et leur estime la place qu'y occupait William R. King. Passez en revue les actions de sa vie; considérez-le comme membre du Congrès pour la Caroline du Nord, son Etat natal, comme représentant son pays à la cour du czar et comme sénateur pour l'Etat de l'Alabama, et vous n'y trouverez pas un acte qu'un patriote voudrait voir effacer de son histoire. Ce n'est pas un éloge ordinaire, mais c'est un tribut que nous ne pouvons refuser à notre ex vice-président Je n'ai pas la prétention de prononcer le panégyrique de ses vertus. Cette tâche est au dessus de mes forces et elle est inutile. Je me contenterai donc de presenter une résolution, qui n'est pas une simple formalité, mais qui est l'expression des sentiments du Sénat dans cette triste circonstance.

Les résolutions suivantes sont adoptées à l'unanimité :

Résolution du Sénat de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Résolu, Que le Senat a appris avec le plus profond regret la mort de l'Hon. Wm. R. King, vice-President des Etats-Unis ; Resolu, Que par la mort de cet homme d'Etat distingué, la république a perdu un [illegible] fils les plus capables et les plus chéris. Conseiller experimenté et fidèle, depuis de longues années au service du pays, citoyen d'un patriotisme dévoué, homme de rares vertus et d'une pureté sans tâche dans sa vie privee, voilà ce qui lui a valu l'estime et la confiance du pays.

Résolu, Qu'en témoignage de respect pour sa haute position officielle, et d'orgueil et d'affection pour la bonté de son caractère personnel, les deux Chambres s'ajournent.

Résolu, Que comme une autre marque de respect, les membres de ce corps porteront au bras le signe usuel de deuil pendant trente jours.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours aux actes suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de l'Hôpital de Charité.

Acte pour amender l'article 1264 du Code Civil.

Acte pour amender un acte pour l'expropriation des terres pour les chemins de fer et autres corporations.

Acte pour pourvoir au transfert de toutes les affaires maintenant pendantes devant la Cour Suprême de l'Etat, établie d'après la Constitution de 1845 à la Cour Suprême, établie en vertu de la nouvelle Constitution.

Acte pour autoriser les avocats de districts à se récuser dans certains cas.

Acte pour autoriser les poursuites "in rem" pour recouvrer les pertes et dommages occasionnés par tout manque de soin ou d'adresse, par négligence dans la direction ou la conduite de tous bateaux à vapeur, barges, chalands, navires ou radeaux.

Et demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivants :

Acte relatif aux chemins publics.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts judiciaires, — approuvé le 12 avril 1853.

Acte pour amender l'acte No 120 intitulé : "Acte pour incorporer la ville de Clinton."—Approuvé le 9 mars 1852.

Acte pour autoriser l'émancipation de certains esclaves.

Acte pour diviser la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée en nouveaux districts, et pour limiter le nombre et les pouvoirs des membres de son jury de police.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Sénat informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte pour taxer les compagnies d'assurance de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans au bénéfice des compagnies à feu de cette ville.

Acte pour pourvoir au déficit des appropriations pour l'annee finissant le 31 mars 1853.

Acte pour incorporer l'Institut des demoiselles de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Acte relatif à l'élection des Shérifs et des Coroners.

Acte pour renouveler la charte de la Chambre de Commerce de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Acte pour rappeler un acte intitulé « Acte pour nommer des commissaires chargés de tracer un chemin de Trinité au ferry de Whatley, sur le lac Catahoula. »

Acte pour changer le nom de Léonard M. Bradford en celui de Harrison Bradford.

Acte pour venir au secours de Henry Forno de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Acte relatif aux élections de greffiers des Cours de districts, la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans exceptées.

Digitized by Google

Acte ayant rapport à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours à une résolution recommandant au Secretaire d'Etat de notifier les officiers delinquants chargés de faire les retours des élections des juges, d'avoir à faire lesdits retours.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre à une résolution pour correspondre avec le rapporteur de la dernière Convention pour faire une nouvelle Constitution et pour d'autres objets.

JEUDI, 21 avril 1853.

Le bill suivant est pris en considération :

Acte relatif aux avis judiciaires.

Sect. 1re.—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Representans de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en Assemblée générale, Que toutes les fois qu'il sera nécessaire de publier des avis relativement aux procédures judiciaires, ou de ventes de propriétés en vertu d'un jugement judiciaire, lesdits avis seront publiés dans une gazette imprimée dans la paroisse dans laquelle lesdites procedures judiciaires seront faites ou dans laquelle ladite vente doit avoir lieu; s'il n'y a pas de gazette dans ladite paroisse, lesdits avis seront publiés en les affichant sur la porte de la maison de cour et en deux autres différents endroits publics. Pourvu qu'il soit du devoir du sherif ou de tout autre officier publiant lesdits avis, de les publier en anglais seulement, excepté quand le défendeur du procès judiciaire ou la personne dirigeant la vente demandera que lesdits avis soient aussi publiés en français.

Sect. 2me.—Il est de plus décreté, &c.—Que lorsqu'il y aura deux ou plus de deux gazettes publiées dans la paroisse, dans laquelle lesdites procédures ont lieu ou que ladite vente sera faite, la personne dirigeant la vente ou le defendeur du procès judiciaire aura le droit de choisir la gazette dans laquelle ledit avis sera mis, pourvu que ledit choix soit fait dans un intervalle de trois jours après l'avis desdites procedures ou de la saisie faite en vertu dudit jugement.

Sect. 3me.—Il est de plus decrete, &c.—Que le prix de l'avis publié requis par la loi, comme il est pourvu par le présent, n'excedera pas le taux de une piastre pour chaque cent mots pour la première publication, et au taux de cinquante cents pour chaque avis subsequent, pourvu qu'en cas que lesdits avis ne puissent pas être publiés au prix ci-dessus fixé, ils seront publiés en les affichant à la porte de la maison de cour et en deux autres endroits différents dans la paroisse dans laquelle ladite publication doit être faite.

Sect. 4me.—Il est de plus décrété, &c.—Que la 3me section de cet acte ne s'appliquera pas à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et toutes les lois contraires sont rappelées par le présent.

M. Mouton.—Je propose d'effacer le proviso qui permet de publier les avis en français ou en anglais au choix des parties intéressées. Il y a des paroisses où les habitants parlent presque exclusivement le français, tandis qu'il y en a d'autres où l'anglais seul est parlé et où les avis devraient être publiés en cette langue seulement. Il y a enfin des paroisses où le caractère de la population exige qu'ils soient publiés dans les deux langues. Un avertissement a pour but d'informer le public, autant que d'être utile aux parties intéressées.

M. Palfrey.—Le rejet du proviso équivaut au rejet du bill.

M. Todd.—Je propose de déposer la motion sur le bureau. Le bill ne s'oppose pas à la publication des avis en français, on peut les publier dans l'une ou l'autre langue. Il vaut mieux adopter le bill sans amendement

M Mouton.—Comme je viens de le dire, le but des avertissements est de donner avis au public. Dans quelques paroisses, on ne parle presque que le français Mais cela n'eût-il lieu que dans une seule paroisse, nous devons en respecter les droits. Nous savons fort bien qu'il y a des personnes qui ne désirent pas que le jour et l'heure d'une vente soient connus, parce qu'elles veulent racheter les propriétés elles-mêmes. Il n'est que juste que toutes les classes de notre population aient l'avantage de comprendre les avis. C'est tout ce que je demande et j'espère que le Sénat ne le refusera pas.

M. Nicholls.—Le comité a rapporté ce bill parce qu'il désirait présenter une loi générale. Je propose un amendement qui excepte certaines paroisses.

Sur motion de M. Nicholls de mettre à la fin de la 1re section le proviso suivant :

M. Mouton demande l'appel nominal.

Et pourvu aussi que ce proviso ne s'appliquera pas aux paroisses de St-Landry, Calcasieu, Lafayette, Vermilion, St-Martin et Ste Marie.

Messieurs Clifton, Dupre, Griffin, Kemp, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack et Taylor votent pour—17 voix.

Et Messieurs Boatner, Evans, Kittridge, Patterson, Rivers et Todd votent contre—6 voix.

Conséquemment le proviso est adopté.

La première section est alors adoptée telle qu'amendée.

Sur motion de M. McCay, les mots «et si le défendeur néglige de choisir, alors le plaintif aura le droit de le faire,» sont insérés à la fin de la 2me section et les mots «la personne dirigeant la vente de» sont effacés de la 2me section.

L'acte est alors adopté tel qu'amendé.

MESSAGE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Sénat informe la Chambre, que le président a signé les actes enrôlés suivans :

Acte pour pourvoir à et pour régler la place d'avocat-général.

Acte pour venir au secours de Henry Parish et John Moore Norman, de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Acte pour donner certains pouvoirs au maire de la ville de Port-Hudson.

Et il demande la signature de l'orateur pour les actes enrôlés suivans émanant du Sénat :

Acte pour venir au secours de J. Johnson, maître du bateau à vapeur Sydonia

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a substitué l'acte intitulé suivant comme copie, l'acte original ayant été égaré dans la Chambre des Representans.

Acte pour amender la 2me section d'un acte intitulé "Acte pour pourvoir à la souscription par les paroisses et corporations municipales de cet Etat au capital des corporations entreprenant des travaux d'améliorations interieures et pour le paiement et la disposition du capital ainsi souscrit.

Acte pour émanciper Jane Mary, esclave et fille de Patsey, f. c. l.

Et que le Président a signé les actes enrôlés suivans émanant de la Chambre.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

Acte pour autoriser l'achat d'une nouvelle édition des Code Civil et de Procédure, ainsi qu'une nouvelle édition des rapports de la Louisiane.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière dont l'Etat viendra au secours des compagnies de chemin de fer.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a adopté le rapport du comité de conférence sur l'acte intitulé : « Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat », le premier district judiciaire excepte.

Acte pour venir au secours d'Ambroise Lacour, de la paroisse de Vermillion.

Acte pour pourvoir au paiement des personnes nommées en vertu de l'acte du 20 decembre 1848 et du 21 mars 1850 pour consolider et réviser les statuts.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre à l'acte suivant :

Acte pour pouvoir à l'enregistrement des hypothèques en faveur des mineurs et des femmes mariées.

Et que le Senat a donné son concours aux amendemens de la Chambre à un « Acte pour autoriser la compagnie du chemin de fer de Pontchartrain à construire un chemin de fer à Mobile.

M. Derbès ayant rapporté les actes suivans comme correctement enrôlés, le messager du Sénat les rapporte à la Chambre et demande pour eux la signature de l'orateur.

Acte pour venir au secours de l'Hôpital de Charité.

Acte pour amender l'article 1954 du code civil.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre à une résolution pour améliorer la navigation de la rivière Sabine.

Digitized by Google

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivants :

Acte accordant une compensation à Charles Fitz, de la Nlle-Orléans.

Acte pour diviser la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée en de nouveaux districts et pour diminuer le nombre et restreindre le pouvoir des membres de son juri de police.

Et le substitut à l'acte No 288 pour incorporer les actionnaires de la compagnie du chemin de fer de Bâton-Rouge et de la Nlle-Orléans.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivans :

Acte supplémentaire à un acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour diviser l'Etat de la Louisiane en districts congressionnels

M. Todd demande la prise en considération des bills pour l'amélioration du bayou Bartholomé et du bayou Bœuf.

M. Todd.—J'expliquerai en peu de mots l'objet de ces bills. Plusieurs bills ont été adoptés pour l'amélioration de ces bayous, mais les ingénieurs s'y sont toujours trouvés dans une saison où leurs efforts causèrent plus de mal que de bien. Ils s'y sont généralement rendus à l'époque des hautes eaux quand il leur était impossible d'enlever les chicots. Ils ne pouvaient que couper des arbres, mais en laissant debout les troncons, ce qui était plus nuisible qu'utile à la navigation de ces rivières.

Le bill est adopté.

RAPPORTS DES COMITES.

BE BILL JUDICIAIRE.

Le rapport du comité de conférence sur le bill relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat est pris en considération.

M. Short.—Pour ma part, je voudrais que le Sénat maintint son amendement. Je suis certainement en faveur de l'économie et des réformes, mais je ne conçois pas qu'on veuille les introduire dans une action et pas dans une autre. D'un autre côté, je crois que $3000 par an est loin d'être trop pour rétribuer le talent et l'instruction que nous exigeons pour ces fonctions. Nous voyons dans d'autres Etats que les places dont ils disposent ont si peu de valeur, qu'on n'y recherche plus que les places qui dépendent du gouvernement fédéral, ce qui est tout-à-fait incompatible avec les idées que nous professons sur les droits des Etats.

M. Boatner.—Comme membre du comité, j'ai voté avec la majorité et je crois que j'ai bien fait. J'admire cependant la conduite conséquente de mon collègue. On se fonde sur la différence qui existe entre les juges de la ville et ceux de la campagne. L'occasion s'offrait à l'honorable membre de reduire les appointements des juges de la ville, et j'en fis moi-même la proposition. Il a dit que les juges de la campagne gagnent trois fois autant qu'eux. Il n'en est pas ainsi. Quand l'ordre judiciaire fut la première fois réorganisé sous la Constitution de 1845, les cours étaient obligées de tenir quatre termes par an. On n'avait pas de peine alors à trouver des juges compétents pour $2500 par an. Deux termes furent plus tard abolis à la requête des avocats, et l'expérience prouva en effet qu'ils n'étaient pas nécessaires, parceque le nombre des affaires n'était pas assez considérable. Un Sénateur qui prétend que dans son district il y a plus d'affaires que dans aucun autre, nous assure qu'on pourrait au besoin en expédier le double. Cependant, il y a des membres qui demandent une augmentation d'appointements, tandis que dans le district où il y a le plus d'affaires, on pourrait aisément en expédier le double. On nous dit que dans la ville les juges gagnent bien leurs appointements et qu'ils sont de service pendant neuf mois de l'année. Nous avons adopté une loi réduisant le temps nécessaire pour rendre les jugements définitifs, pour la seule raison qu'on nous disait que les cours n'auraient pas assez d'occupation pour les tenir employées.

Le sénat renonce à son amendement.

Le rapport suivant du comité de conférence est lu et adopté :

Le comité de conférence auquel avait été référé le désaccord entre les deux chambres sur la 14me section d'un acte intitulé « Acte pour organiser les cours de districts dans et pour la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, recommande que le sénat retire ses amendements de manière à ne garder, que les mots de la 14me section jusqu'au mot «affaires» au commencement de la 12me ligne, effaçant le reste de la section et rapporte que la Chambre consent à l'amendement fait à cette section de manière que la section soit conçue comme suit :

Sect 14me—Il est de plus décrété, &c, Que toutes lesdites Cours de district, organisées en vertu de cet acte, auront et exerceront une juridiction concurrente sur toutes les affaires civiles, lesquelles ne sont pas spécialement référées à la jurisdiction particulière d'une Cour spéciale, excepté la première Cour de district qui aura jurisdiction exclusive sur les affaires criminelles.

Comité du senat. { H. SHORT. TOM. McCAY.

Comité de la Chambre. { JOHN E KING. J. W. NIXON. C. R. WHEAT. S T. MARKS,

M. King soumet le rapport suivant lequel est lu :

A l'hon W. W. Farmer,
Président du sénat.

Le soussigné nommé membre du comité de conférence sur le désaccord entre les deux chambres pour un acte organisant les cours de district dans la ville de la Nlle Orléans, demande la permission de présenter le rapport de la minorité.

Le désaccord entre les deux chambres était, touchant ce qui concernait la jurisdiction de la première Cour de district.

La chambre des représentants était en faveur de faire une Cour criminelle seulement, — le sénat avait passé l'acte dans lequel les affaires criminelles auraient préférence, mais la Cour aurait une jurisdiction concurrente sur toutes autres affaires civiles.

Une majorité du comité de conférence était en faveur de retirer de l'amendement du sénat le droit de concurrence avec les autres Cours.

Le soussigné est opposé à cela principalement sur le terrain que par la loi en force maintenant, le salaire du greffier de cour, c'est-à-dire quinze cents piastres par an, est entièrement insuffisant.

Que le greffier de cour était principalement payé par les affaires civiles. Si toutes les affaires civiles sont retirées de cette cour, une appropriation doit être faite pour pourvoir au salaire de ce greffier Qu'un greffier est indispensable pour l'organisation de la cour—sans un greffier aucune affaire ne peut être faite dans cette cour—D'après l'évidence, il faut trois personnes pour remplir les devoirs imposés au greffier de cette cour- Une personne doit être employée comme greffier au journal.

Une personne pour lancer les citations et ordres d'arrêt des témoins, et une autre pour faire les documents ayant rapport aux appels. Que le salaire alloué présentement par la loi est insuffisant pour obtenir les services de personnes compétentes pour remplir les devoirs. Sans une disposition pourvoyant à cela, le soussigné est d'opinion que le sénat ne devrait pas revenir de ses amendements à l'acte de la chambre, à moins qu'un salaire convenable ne soit donné audit greffier.

L'idée de donner à la Cour juridiction seulement pour les affaires criminelles, est peu appropriée, spécialement en ce que le juge de cette Cour a avance qu'il avait le temps nécessaire pour juger beaucoup de causes civiles en outre des affaires criminelles.

Il est sans doute peu convenable d'organiser la Cour sans accorder une compensation nécessaire au greffier, qui est indispensable à la Cour.

S'il n'est pas accordé de compensation suffisante au greffier, la Cour ne peut procéder à ses affaires.

C'est pourquoi toutes les affaires criminelles de la ville dépendront de l'éventualité de la compensation qui sera allouée par la Législature au greffier de cette Cour.

Le soussigné est d'avis que sans une compensation suffisante au greffier, la Cour ne peut proceder aux affaires importantes qui lui sont assignées par la loi.

D'après cela l'organisation de la Cour est incomplète et imparfaite. Il a été suggéré que le salaire du greffier pouvait être reglé par un acte séparé, lequel peut ne pas passer, ou que le salaire sera si bas qu'aucune personne compétente ne voudra remplir la place.

Digitized by Google

Dans ce cas, l'organisation de la Cour serait incomplète et les affaires criminelles de la ville seraient négligées.

Le soussigné est d'opinion que la compensation allouée au greffier, lequel est indispensable à l'organisation de la Cour ne doit pas dépendre de l'éventualité de la passation d'un acte séparé fixant le montant de son salaire.

Le comité conjoint comme condition de son accord aurait dû rapporter un acte pourvoyant à une compensation suffisante pour les services d'un greffier de Cour. Signé: W. W. KING.

M. Mouton soumet le rapport suivant de la minorité:

Le soussigné, du comité choisi nommé pour examiner le livre intitulé «Consolidation et revision des statuts de l'Etat» par messieurs Levi Pierce, Miles Taylor et Wm W. King, demande la permission de présenter ce qui suit comme le rapport de la minorité.

Par un acte de la Législature, approuvé le 20 décembre 1848, le gouverneur a été requis de nommer trois commissaires pour réviser les Codes et pour consolider et réviser les statuts de l'Etat de la Louisiane et de compiler les statuts d'un caractère local.

La somme de douze mille piastres a été appropriée pour le paiement de ces commissaires, mais l'acte dit que le dernier paiement ne peut être fait sans un certificat de l'Orateur de la Chambre des Représentants et du Président du Sénat, montrant que l'ouvrage a été approuvé par la Législature.

La confusion dans laquelle nos lois se trouvent, rendent cet ouvrage très utile; comment ce but très désirable a été atteint par l'ouvrage publié par les dits commissaires,—le soussigné n'entreprend pas de le décider. Sans prétendre être capable de juger les mérites de cet ouvrage, le soussigné fera observer que le peu de temps qu'il a eu pour examiner ces livres ne lui permet pas d'exprimer une opinion favorable et de recommander à la Législature de les approuver. Mais il croit de son devoir de soumettre au Sénat les faits suivants qui pourront le guider dans la décision qu'il prendra dans cette question.

L'acte du 20 decembre 1848, avait en vue la révision de nos codes, avec les amendements insérés immédiatement après le texte original, ainsi que la consolidation de nos statuts.

Il paraît que les commissaires avaient préparé une révision des codes et l'avaient présentée à l'Assemblée générale de 1850, mais le soussigné n'a pas vu cet ouvrage, la publication n'en a pas eu lieu à la demande des commissaires. Voyez le rapport des dits commissaires à la Législature de 1850 et le rapport de l'honorable W. B. Philippe, président du comité choisi de la Chambre, auquel ce sujet avait été référé, (Journal de la Chambre de 1850 p. 115)

Sur une enquête faite au bureau du Trésorier, le soussigné a trouvé que la somme de huit mille deux cent cinquante piastres avait été payée aux dits commissaires laissant une balance de $3,750 de l'appropriation première de $12,000.

Le soussigné est d'opinion qu'en vertu de l'acte de 1848, cette balance de $12,000 ne peut être payée avant que l'Assemblée generale n'approuve l'ouvrage publié par les dits commissaires et ne peut recommander la passation d'une loi les autorisant à recevoir la balance, avant que cet ouvrage soit approuvé par la Législature.

Le tout vous est respectueusement soumis.

Signé: C. H. MOUTON.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Kennedy, secrétaire de la Chambre, demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivans:

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orleans, de Jackson et du Nord en souscrivant au capital de la dite compagnie

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de Vicksburg, Shreveport et du Texas, par une souscription au capital de ladite compagnie.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest, en souscrivant au capital de la dite compagnie.

M. Eastin demande le concours du Sénat pour l'action de la Chambre sur les amendements du Sénat à l'acte intitulé:

Acte pour établir un système de banques générales dans l'Etat de la Louisiane.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

Ce jour étant celui fixé pour la prise en considération de l'acte suivant:

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte relatif à l'Hôpital de Charité »—approuvé le 21 mars 1852, le dit bill est pris à son tour.

Sect. 1re—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentans de l'Etat de la Louisiane réunis en Assemblée générale;

Que les sections 2 et 3me d'un acte intitulé « Acte relatif à l'Hôpital de Charité »—approuvé le 21 mars 1859, soient et demeurent amendées et remises en vigueur de manière à être conçues comme suit:

Sect. 2me—Toute personne, non citoyen des Etats-Unis et au-dessus de dix ans, arrivant et débarquant à tout endroit situé dans les limites de l'Etat de la Louisiane, devra se rapporter à tout commissaire de l'Hôpital résidant dans l'endroit et de souscrire un bon de la somme de $1000 piastres, avec une ou plusieurs cautions solvables, résidant dans la paroisse où la dite personne aura débarqué sous condition que le principal du dit bon, ne devra pas, durant l'espace de cinq ans, à partir de la date du dit bon, être ou devenir par quelque raison que ce soit, à charge de quelque manière que ce soit à l'Etat, à ses citoyens ou à toute institution charitable située dans ses limites; à moins que la dite institution ne soit entretenue par des étrangers ou des citoyens nés à l'étranger; et toute personne qui refusera ou qui négligera volontairement de faire le rapport et de donner le cautionnement exigé dans cette section, pendant les 24 heures qui suivront son arrivée et débarquement, sera passible d'une amende de $30; pourvu que les personnes qui arriveront dans les paroisses de Plaquemines, St-Bernard, Orléans et Jefferson, feront le dit rapport à la Nouvelle-Orléans et fourniront le dit cautionnement avec des garants qui résideront dans la dite ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Sec. 3.—Il sera permis à toute personne mentionnée dans la section précédente, qui ne voudra ou ne pourra pas fournir le cautionnement ci-dessus requis, de le remplacer par le payement de la somme de deux piastres cinquante sous, durant les 24 heures qui suivront son arrivée.

M. Palfrey.—Je croyais que lorsque ce bill serait pris en considération, il serait débarrassé des clauses qui avaient soulevé tant d'objections la première fois qu'il fut soumis au sénat. Il exige que même des enfants en bas âge donnent un cautionnement. Nous savons tous que d'après les lois qui nous régissent ces personnes sont incapables de faire un contrat, la loi suppose qu'ils ne sont pas encore en état de discerner le bien et le mal, et cependant vous voulez les obliger à fournir caution et garantie.

M. Kittridge. Malgré tout ce qu'on peut dire contre ce bill, la sagesse de plusieurs autres états à sanctionné des mesures analogues. Lorsque le comité a examiné l'hôpital, il a trouvé que la loi actuelle était satisfaisante. On n'exige jamais de garantie des mineurs dont parle l'honorable membre. La taxe est payée de bon gre comme cela doit être, et elle est provient de la classe qui retire les plus grands avantages de cette institution. En effet, les 17|18 des personnes admises dans cet hôpital sont des émigrants. Le bill actuel introduit deux changements dans la loi existante.

D'abord toute personne âgée de 10 ans est soumise à l'action de la loi, tandis qu'auparavant, l'âge requis était 14 ans; et en second lieu, la taxe est augmentée de 50 cents. En rédigeant ce bill, nous avons consulté notre propre expérience et l'exemple d'autres états. Dans l'état de New-York, on a essayé une fois d'arriver au même résultat en taxant les armateurs et les consignataires des navires et les passagers. Mais l'exécution de ce projet a été trouvée impossible. Cette contribution s'élève maintenant à $60,000; pouvons nous maintenant la remplacer par une allocation prise sur les fonds généraux? Dans ce cas, il vaudrait mieux abolir la loi toute entière. Ce bill ne diffère pas en principe de la loi qui est maintenant en vigueur, le degré seul est changé. Si nous ne sommes pas disposés à faire une allocation de $60,000 ou $70,000, il faut que nous votions ce bill. Si nous l'adoptons, ce sera une économie de $14,000 ou $15,000, non seulement pour cette année ci, mais encore pour l'avenir. Nous ne nous trouverons plus dans la nécessité de voter chaque année une allocation, qui ne pèse que trop lourdement sur notre trésor déjà épuisé.

Digitized by Google

M. Mouton.—Je ne sanctionnerai jamais de mon vote, une loi qui est de nature à entraver l'émigration dans notre état. L'intérêt de l'état exige que nous favorisions l'émigration plutôt que d'y mettre des entraves. Quel est en effet le but de la loi ? D'imposer une taxe indirecte sur les étrangers qui arrivent dans notre etat. Je n'approuve pas qu'on fasse indirectement ce que la loi ne permet pas de faire directement. Si je ne me trompe, il n'y a pas longtemps qu'une resolution fut passée, requérant nos senateurs et nos représentants d'adopter une loi permettant l'imposition de certaines taxes pour le même objet. Quand nous demandons la raison de cette manière d'agir, on nous répond que la Constitution ne nous permet pas d'imposer des contributions directes sans le consentement du Congrès. La loi qui nous est soumise propose de frapper les étrangers d'une taxe de $2,50. Nous ne pouvons pas le faire directement, il faut donc que nous tâchions de le faire indirectement, en demandant un cautionnement. Généralement ces émigrants sont pauvres et n'ont dans ce pays ni amis ni connaissances. L'Etat dit à ces étrangers : « Il faut que vous donniez un cautionnement de $1,00C, mais nous vous en dispenserons moyennant deux piastres et demie. » C'est faire indirectement ce qu'on ne peut pas faire directement, il vaut mieux ne pas le faire du tout ; d'ailleurs comme je l'ai déja dit, je ne voterai jamais pour une loi qui met des entraves à l'émigration.

M. Short.—Je ne désire pas que la loi soit changée. S'il est vrai que dans la pratique, elle produit d'aussi bons résultats qu'on le dit, je n'y vois aucune necessité. Je ne suis pas d'opinion d'étendre les effets d'un bill que je trouve absurde. La loi exerce un effet très rigoureux pour les pauvres gens qui viennent de pays étrangers a la Nouvelle Orléans ; l'Etat leur fournit des moyens de soulagement en cas de maladie et de dénuement, dans une mesure plus grande qu'aucune ville ne l'a fait ; Londres même ne saurait rivaliser avec la Nouvelle-Orléans, sous ce rapport. L'honorable sénateur dit que la loi actuelle produit $6,000, eh bien, laissez la subsistuer, ne forcez pas les enfants à fournir un cautionnement qu'ils ne sauraient se procurer, ou à payer une somme qu'ils peuvent ne pas avoir.

M. Kittridge.—J'admets que l'institution a reçu $60,000, c'est-à-dire, $18,000 par an, mais ce n'est pas assez, il faut une somme plus forte ; il est nécessaire de construire des nouvelles bâtisses. Si nous n'adoptons pas ce bill, il nous faut allouer une somme suffisante qui devra être tirée du trésor général. Le Sénat est-il disposé à adopter une pareille mesure, quand il sent que le trésor est épuisé ? C'est une mauvaise plaisanterie que de parler de cautionnement. Je doute que jamais un étranger ait été forcé d'en fournir.

M. McCay fait la motion que le bill soit deposé sur le bureau.

La motion est perdue.

M. McCay fait la motion de référer le bill au Comité Judiciaire.

M. Nicholls.—Je suis opposé au renvoi. La session est très avancée, le renvoi équivaudrait à la mort complète du bill. Il est de toute nécessité que nous maintenions cette institution, et le moyen proposé est le seul praticable.

M. McCay.—Je pense aussi qu'il est nécessaire de soutenir l'institution, mais pour atteindre ce but, tout désirable qu'il peut être, il n'est pas nécessaire de passer une loi inconstitutionnelle. Nous avons un comité auquel nous sommes dans l'habitude de renvoyer de pareilles questions. S'il n'est pas convenable de référer ce bill, pourquoi l'honorable sénateur a-t-il fait la motion de référer le bill relatif aux hypothèques tacites ? Ce bill devrait être référé, ne serait-ce que pour qu'il pût recevoir les amendements qui sont nécessaires. Il a été admis que le bill avait pris un biais pour tourner une difficulté constitutionnelle. Je ne consentirai jamais à de pareils subterfuges.

M. Palfrey—On s'est mépris sur ma position vis-à-vis du bill. Je suis opposé à la section qui exige un cautionnement des enfants au-dessous de l'âge de dix ans.

M. Kittridge—Si cette clause était retranchée, tout le bill tomberait. En vain tenterait-on de collecter cette taxe, si d'abord nous n'exigeons pas un cautionnement. Il est aussi hors de propos de parler d'objections constitutionnelles ; c'est une question qui peut être réglée par les Cours. Nous devons soutenir cette institution. Il faut ou passer le bill ou faire une forte allocation.

M. Short—La question n'est pas de savoir combien d'argent nous serons forcés de donner, mais si nous devons faire une chose ridicule.

M. Mouton—Je désirerais présenter encore quelques observations sur cette question. Il sied mal à la Louisiane d'imposer une taxe sur les étrangers, quand nous avons lieu de croire que la taxe est inconstitutionnelle. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, il n'y a que quelques jours que nous avons adopté une résolution par laquelle nous requerons le Congrès de passer une loi qui nous autorise à taxer les étrangers. S'il n'y a rien d'inconstitutionnel dans ce bill, le Sénat s'est placé dans une positisn ridicule ; parceque nous faisons indirectement ce que nous admettons ne pouvoir faire directement sous l'empire de la Constitution et des lois des Etats-Unis. Nous demandons à un pauvre malheureux qui vient, étranger sur notre sol, chercher un asile contre l'oppression qui l'exile de sa patrie, nous lui demandons de fournir un cautionnement de mille piastres, ou a défaut de cautionnement de payer $2 50 a l'Hopital de Charite. Si nous ne pouvons maintenir cette institution par nous-mêmes, abandonnons-là, mais n'ayons pas recours à des subterfuges tels que celui-ci. Je pense que le Sénat ne devrait pas passer le bill. Je pense que nous devrions rappeler la loi de 1852, qui a fait descendre l'Etat déjà bien bas. C'est une mauvaise politique d'adopter aucune mesure qui doit arrêter l'immigration, et ma position de représentant du peuple m'empêche de donner ma sanction à une pareille loi

M. Short—L'étranger doit payer $2 50 ou forfaire à son bon. Je n'ai pas examiné attentivement la loi mais je pense qu'en consultant les rapports de Howard on se convaincra qu'il a été décidé dans la Caroline du Sud qu'un Etat ne peut exercer un pareil pouvoir.

M. McCay.—Comme un senateur a dit que les dix-sept dix huitièmes des admissions à l'hôpital de Charité se composaient d'étrangers; je me suis procuré des renseignements sur la question. Je les communiquerai au Sénat.

Le nombre des admissions à l'hôpital a été comme suit :

Personnes venant d'autres Etats,	7,559
Personnes venant de pays étrangers,	73,156
Personnes venant la Louisiane,	1,011
Inconnus,	704
	89,430

Après quelques observations présentées par d'autres sénateurs, le bill est adopté avec un amendement.

Le bill à l'effet d'accorder une certaine somme au collége médical est pris en considération.

Un amendement avait été introduit dans ce bill par la Chambre, lequel avait pour effet de mettre le mot indigent à la place du mot méritoire.

M. Mouton.—Je m'oppose à l'amendement. Dans beaucoup de paroisses, il y a des jeunes gens qui ne sont pas, à strictement parler indigents et qui ne consentiraient pas à implorer l'assistance de l'Etat. Ils sont cependant dignes à tous égards de recevoir cette assistance. Les juris de police auxquels est devolu le devoir de recommander les élèves, n'en recommanderaient aucun qui, d'après eux, seraient capables de payer pension. Ils sont les meilleurs juges comme ils ont un pouvoir discrétionnaire dans tous les cas. En même temps, nous ne pouvons esperer que ces jeunes gens ou leurs parents viendraient demander l'aumône. Un sentiment de fierté honorable et naturel les empêcheraient de le faire.

M. Rivers.—Je pense que l'amendement répond précisément à l'objection soulevée par le senateur.

M. Short.—Quand un jeune homme désirera aller au collége, la question qui sera posée sera : Est-il digne ? Et : Est-il riche ? Mais il peut se trouver des gens honorables parfaitement capables de payer pension mais qui soient cependant trop peu fiers de profiter des avantages que présente cette loi. Alors un pauvre jeune homme qui à la fois est digne et en même temps indigent, pourrait n'être pas admis parce qu'un jeune homme riche aura déjà été reçu seulement à cause de sa conduite honorable.

Digitized by Google

M. Mouton.—Je désire faire tout ce qui est en mon pouvoir pour assister les jeunes gens indigens; mais je suis convaincu que le juri de police donnera toujours la préférence au pauvre sur le riche.

M. Todd.—Je ne vois pas pourquoi l'on montrerait tant de délicatesse dans les termes. Appelons les choses par leur nom.

Le Sénat donne son concours à l'amendement.

M. Boatner demande la considération d'un acte à l'effet d'exempter la paroisse de Catahoula de toute taxe additionnelle pour l'érection des levées dans la paroisse de Madison.

M. Short propose un proviso.

M. Short.—Je puis expliquer toute la question en quelques mots. Par la loi de 1852 les paroisses de Madison, Catahoula et Carroll sont constituées en un district de levee. Trois commissaires furent nommés dans chaque paroisse. Beaucoup de personnes ont payé la taxe, mais d'autres ont arrêté par la voie d'injonction, la collection de la taxe en se fondant sur un motif d'inconstitutionnalité. On a, je crois, déjà fait justice de cette objection dans le rapport présenté au Sénat. Un système général a été adopté. Je ne pense pas que cette paroisse soute encore le besoin d'une taxe. Le seul motif de ceux qui s'opposent au bill c'est qu'il pourrait mettre à même les personnes qui ont pris une injonction de la faire maintenir. Je n'ai objection contre la section qui exempte Catahoula de toute taxe ultérieure. Je suis disposé à exempter Catahoula. Mais en tant que le bill donne un prétexte à ceux qui ont pris une injunction, je ne puis le soutenir. Tous les contrats passés sous l'empire de ce bill peuvent être payés par des taxes déjà collectées, pourvu que ces injonctions soient mises de côté et que les parties soient forcées de payer une dette qu'ils doivent depuis longtemps. Quelques personnes ont payé à l'avance, et elles ne devraient pas être les seules victimes.

M. Boatner—J'ai beaucoup de respect pour les opinions légales du Sénateur qui vient de parler. Mais ses craintes sont imaginaires. Il a peur que quelques uns de ses commettants ne soient soutenus dans de certains procès actuellement pendants. La question est déjà exposée, les parties n'attendent que le jour de l'audition de la cause, et le jugement de la cour ne peut être effectué par ce bill. La question n'offre aucune difficulté. Le Sénateur dit qu'il est disposé à exempter Catahoula de toute taxe ultérieure. Lorsqu'il lira le bill, il verra que c'est là tout ce que nous demandons. Si la question était laissée aux citoyens de Catahoula, qui certainement sont les meilleurs juges de leurs propres intérêts, il n'y aurait pas cinq votes pour conserver la loi que le Sénateur défend. Je vais lire une lettre écrite par l'un des plus riches habitans sur la rivière Tensas, qui retirerait de cette loi un avantage, si quelqu'un pouvait en retirer aucun. (Le Sénateur lit la lettre). Quant au bayou « Roundaway » qui est le seul qui présente quelqu'interet pour Catahoula, je dirai qu'il n'est pas fermé pour la simple raison qu'il a son embouchure dans la paroisse Madison, pour laquelle il n'est d'aucune importance. Catahoula est forcé par une majorité des voix de trois paroisses de payer pour l'érection de levées qui ne lui sont d'aucune utilité. Tel est le véritable état de la question. L'équité exige l'adoption de ce bill. Sans doute le Sénat eut avec cette habileté qui le caractérise pourrait rédiger un meilleur bill, mais celui-ci convient aux habitants de Catahoula.

M Short.—J'espère que le sénateur ne se méprendra pas sur ma position. Au commencement de la session, les représentants de Catahoula étaient désireux d'obtenir le rappel de la loi qui constitue les trois paroisses en un district de levée, les représentants de Carroll et de Madison s'y opposèrent, ils demandaient qu'auparavant une loi générale fut passée, disant que si Catahoula était mis en dehors du district, Madison et Carroll, pour les mêmes raisons, demanderaient la même chose, mais les habitants de ces paroisses sont disposés à payer leur part de la taxe aussi longtemps qu'il sera nécessaire, pour qu'ils se protégent eux-mêmes. Mais ils n'étaient pas disposés à voir Catahoula mis en dehors du district avant cette dite époque, attendu que toute inondation qui leur cause des dommages, lui en cause pareillement.

M. Boatner.—Je suis opposé au PROVISO présenté par le sénateur, parce que tout ce qu'il se propose est compris dans le bill qui ne se rapporte pas aux contribuables de Madison et de Carroll, mais seulement à ceux de Catahoula.

Le proviso est rejeté et le bill adopté.

Le bill à l'effet d'autoriser les femmes mariées à disposer de leurs biens dotaux et paraphernaux, etc., est pris en considération.

M. Todd—Il n'y a pas de question si embrouillée que celle qui se rapporte aux obligations des femmes mariées. Il y a des décisions en sens contraire sur ce sujet qui tendent à rendre la matière encore plus confuse. Dans quelques cas, des individus ont contracté avec des femmes mariées et les cours ont décidé qu'elles n'étaient pas obligées, de sorte que les créanciers ont été frustés. Auprès des hommes sensés, cet état de chose a fait considérablement tomber le crédit des femmes mariées. Il est nécessaire d'y apporter un remède.

M. Lacey—Le bill est bon. Il ne change aucun principe de notre jurisprudence. J'ai eu moi-même une affaire qui montre les dangers dont on se plaint. Une femme fit un emprunt et donna une hypothèque spéciale comme garantie. Je ne pus prouver que l'argent avait tourné à son avantage, et quoiqu'il lui eût été prêté, je ne pus obtenir jugement. Je ne veux changer aucun principe. Je ne veux pas que les femmes deviennent obligées pour les dettes de leurs maris, mais pour leurs propres dettes. Ce sera un avantage pour les femmes mariées. Que cette incertitude qui existe aujourd'hui quant à leurs obligations disparaisse, leur crédit s'en relèvera. Ce bill ne porte atteinte à aucun droit, il ne propose qu'une chose juste et convenable.

Vendredi, 22 avril 1853.

La Chambre prend en considération le bill à l'effet de régulariser les hypothèques, privilèges &c, lequel se trouve à l'ordre du jour.

M. King — Je crois que le Sénat comprend ce bill. Je n'ai pas besoin de dire que ce bill est d'une grande importance, et devra, s'il est adopté, avoir pour effet de rendre l'argent plus abondant.

M. Burthe.—Le sénateur nous a dit précédemment que le bill empêcherait les syndics &c. de lever les hypothèques. Il me semble que la seconde section est susceptible d'une différente interprétation.

M. King.—J'aurais voulu pouvoir empêcher les syndics de lever les hypothèques dans cette occasion; mais par suite des particularités que présentent les lois de la Louisiane nous avons vu qu'il était impossible de le faire. Cependant, tel qu'il est, le bill présentera de grands avantages. C'est à peine si dans un cas sur dix on rencontre une hypothèque générale. La première hypothèque spéciale ne peut être levée, et le créancier qui a avancé de l'argent sur une première hypothèque est sûr de ne pas perdre ses droits. Nous aurions aimé à étendre cet avantage à toutes les classes d'hypothèques; mais si nous l'avions fait il eut été impossible de régler les successions et les faillites. Dès l'origine la loi de la Louisiane a été ainsi; si, par exemple, un individu a une réclamation de $5,000 et que la propriété sur laquelle elle repose soit vendue pour une réclamation subséquente, la vente est nulle à moins que la propriété ne rapporte plus de $5000. Si par exemple, elle rapporte $7000, l'acheteur paie $5000 au shérif et prend la propriété grévée de la première hypothèque de $5000. Il est étrange que cette disposition ayant toujours eu un excellent effet, la loi eut donné aux syndics le droit de lever les hypothèques. La meilleure garantie devient incertaine quand un syndic peut aller au bureau des hypothèques et par une seule ligne lever toutes les hypothèques. La Louisiane est le seul Etat où les biens d'un failli peuvent être vendus sans égard aux hypothèques dont ils sont grevés. Tout homme d'affaire sait combien il est dur de voir changer une garantie certaine en une autre qui ne l'est pas. Tandis qu'en Angleterre et à New-York la propriété est une garantie pour sa valeur au comptant presque tout entière, à la Louisiane ce n'est pour ainsi dire pas une garantie. J'irai jusqu'à dire que le plus riche habitant de l'Etat, possédant une propriété libre de toute hypothèque, pourrait à peine obtenir 8 pour cent sur la valeur de cette propriété. Pourquoi cela? C'est à cause du système d'hypothèque tacite, et du peu de certitude qui résulte des causes dont j'ai parlé. Ce bill aura pour effet de rendre l'argent plus abondant, et augmentera la valeur des propriétés foncières. Je ne vois pas le mal qui peut en résulter, tandis que je vois en résulter des avantages inappréciables. Examinez le bill avec attention. Ne le lisez pas comme vous feriez d'un journal ou d'un roman, mais étudiez-le avec soin, et je suis sûr que vous le trouverez digne de votre faveur.

Digitized by Google

M. Nicholls.— Le sénateur n'a-t-il pas dit qu'à peine si dans un cas sur dix l'on rencontrait une hypothèque générale.

M. King.—Oui.

M. Nicholls —J'ai compris que le grand argument contre les hypothèques tacites étaient qu'elles couvraient une grande partie des propriétés de l'Etat.

M. Short—Ce bill a pour effet de changer la manière de regler les successions et les faillites. Quand un individu meurt, tous les créanciers sont placés sur un tableau des biens de la succession ou de la faillite sont divisés entre eux et ils sont payés selon le rang qu'ils occupent. Le règlement est très simple en cas de mort ou de faillite L'idée qui préside à ce bill n'est pas une nouveauté pour moi. J'en ai vu faire l'essai dans un Etat voisin et je ne désire pas le voir adopter en Louisiane.

M. Lacey—Je crois qu'il est de mon devoir de présenter quelques observations sur ce sujet. J'ai le regret de voir chez plusieurs personnes une disposition à repousser certaines mesures pour la simple raison qu'elles opèrent un changement. Pour ma part je ne me sens pas inféodé à une loi ancienne, parce qu'elle est ancienne. Si je trouve qu'elle encombre la route, je la repousse. Peu m'importe la date de sa naissance. Lorsque le bill relatif aux hypothèques tacites était devant le sénat, le sénateur de Lafayette et d'autres l'ont combattu seulement parce qu'il changerait le système établi. Je ne suis pas surpris qu'aujourd'hui on fasse usage du même argument. Si le bill est de nature à produire un grand bien, s'il doit augmenter nos ressources et notre prospérité, nous devons l'adopter sans égard à l'antiquité de la loi qu'il est destiné à remplacer.

M. Mouton—Le sénateur se trompe lorsqu'il dit que je me suis opposé au bill relatif aux hypothèques tacites simplement parce qu'il opérait un changement. Je m'y suis opposé parceque je croyais le changement dangereux, parceque le bill ne donnait pas une protection suffisante aux mineurs J'ai toujours été en faveur de l'inscription des hypothèques, et je voterais pour un bill qui abolirait les hypothèques tacites en faveur des femmes mariées.

M. Lacey—Pourquoi alors le sénateur n'a-t-il pas voté pour le bill. Il dit qu'il voulait faire porter la pénalité de la loi non sur le mineur mais sur la personne qui le représenterait. Mais une pareille disposition serait de nulle valeur. Le sénateur dit qu'il est d'avis d'abolir les hypothèques tacites, mais qu'il ne veut pas toucher celles qui existent aujourd'hui. Mais le senateur pourrait parcourir une longue et utile existence et mourir chargé de tous les honneurs que l'Etat peut conférer, avant qu'un pareil bill eut pu produire aucun bien appréciable. Je desire favoriser l'expansion du commerce et briser les entraves qui aujourd'hui l'arrêtent. Un sénateur a tracé un tableau desolant où il montre l'Etat écrasé sous le talon de fer du commerce, il a attribue tous nos maux au commerce, et cela simplement parcequ'un changement nécessaire et avantageux était proposé.

M. Nicholls—Si le sénateur veut parler de moi, je puis lui dire que j'étais opposé à un changement dans le système auquel le peuple était habitué jusqu'à ce qu'une loi meilleure et plus sage aurait été proposée. C'est là le changement auquel je me suis oppose.

M. Lacey—Il doit y avoir alors quelque méprise. J'ai cru que l'un des arguments par lesquels on a combattu le bill était que c'était un changement. Le système des hypothèques tacites qui permet qu'une hypothèque subsiste sans aucun indice de son existence, attaque les forces vives de l'Etat, diminue la valeur des propriété, détruit la confiance et éloigne les capitaux étrangers. N'est-ce pas là l'effet du système actuel? Qui peut le nier? Il fait que les propriétes hypothéquées ne se vendent qu'avec des frais énormes, et quand le créancier hypothécaire se croit bien garanti, la mort du débiteur anéantit ses droits. Tel est le système que la Législature, je l'espère, fera disparaître du recueil de nos statuts. Que propose ce bill? Lorsque nou l'etudions, nous y trouvons à chaque ligne le langage et les principes de l'equité et de la justice. Nous voulons protéger le creancier hypothecaire de telle manière que la mort même ne puisse avoir effet sur ses droits? Y a-t-il à cela de l'injustice? Y a-t-il du danger? Cette disposition existait pour les banques hypothécaires et personne ne s'en est plaint. N'est-il pas juste que quand une hypothèque existe, elle ne puisse être levée qu'autant que la dette a été remboursée?

M. Short—Ce principe a été adopté en ce qui regarde les banques hypothécaires dans l'intérêt de l'Etat et non des individus.

M. Lacey—Très bien. Il n'en est résulté aucun inconvénient. L'imagination ne peut susciter aucune objection valide. Voici donc deux principes hostiles; l'un pesant d'un poids énorme sur nos propriétés, et l'autre de nature, s'il est adopté, à être d'un grand avantage à l'Etat et aux individus par l'effet qu'il aura d'amener ici le capital et d'augmenter la valeur des propriétés foncières. Aujourd'hui, à peine a-t-on inscrit son hypothèque et quitté le bureau que la mort ou la faillite peuvent vous enlever vos droits et votre garantie. J'espère que le système sera changé. J'espère que le bill qui est devant le Sénat sera adopté; il produira un bien immense et ne peut faire aucun mal.

M. Short.—Un mot d'explication. Je ne désire pas que l'on mêle ensemble la position que j'ai prise à l'égard de ce bill, et celle que j'ai occupée à l'égard du bill relatif aux hypothèques tacites. Je ne puis laisser confondre ensemble les deux positions, à moins qu'on ne démontre une assimilation parfaite entre elles. Mais je dirai au sénateur que pour moi, de ce qu'une chose a longtemps existé, il ne s'ensuit pas nécessairement qu'elle doive être continuée, quoique cette considération doive être de quelque poids. Il est raisonnable de supposer qu'un système ne subsisterait pas aussi longtemps, si dans ce système il n'y avait pas du bon. Quant à la position que j'ai tenue à l'égard du bill des hypothèques tacites, je dirai que j'étais en faveur du bil parceque je pensais qu'il ferait sortir l'ordre du chaos; mais ce bill agit d'une manière contraire, il introduit la confusion là ou régnaient auparavant l'ordre et la simplicité. La même raison qui m'a fait voter pour le premier bill, me détermine à combattre le second. Le principal objet que se propose le bill, est de détruire ou de changer le mode actuel si simple de liquider les successions et les faillites. Aujourd'hui, il y a un système positif et certain qui ne laisse pas de place aux méprises. Sous l'empire de ce bill il en serait tout différemment. Deux estimateurs seraient appelés qui déclareraient qu'elle est la part qui reste aux créanciers, après que ces hypothèques ont été satisfaits; puis, si le montant de la vente n'excède pas le montant de l'hypothèque antérieure, la vente est nulle. Vous parlez du danger de voir les propriétés éloignées du marché; mais n'est-ce pas là l'effet du bill? Il fournirait l'occasion de présenter toutes sortes de réclamations fictives et frauduleuses, et d'empêcher les créanciers ordinaires, de recouvrer leurs droits Je tombe d'accord avec ces messieurs, quant à quelques imperfections que présente le système actuel, mais je ne crois pas que ce bill puisse les corriger. Je présenterai donc un substitut, tendant à ce que la propriété au lieu d'être vendue par le syndic, le soit par le shérif sur un ordre de Cour.

M. King. —Je suis heureux de voir que les vues des sénateurs qui ont parlé, se rapprochent autant des miennes.

Je ne suis pas étonné qu'un bill aussi long que celui qui nous occupe ne soit pas parfaitement compris. Tout ce qui est contenu dans le substitut se trouve déjà dans le bill. Le seul changement qu'il introduit consiste en ce que la vente doit être faite par le shérif au lieu de l'être par le syndic ou l'exécuteur Aux termes du bill, c'est le syndic qui vend, mais de la même manière que le shérif. Le but que le Sénateur se propose est dès lors atteint. Qu'il me permette de porter son attention sur une difficulté qui se présenterait si le substitut était adopté. Supposes que la première hypothèque soit une hypothèque générale, le substitut ne pourvoit pas à ce cas. Je ne crois pas que la modification proposée soit judicieuse. Je rappellerai au Sénat l'affaire d'Astor à laquelle j'ai précédemment fait allusion. Il avait prêté à un homme d'ici une somme de $60000 qui a été empochée par un syndic qui devint lui-même insolvable, et Astor perdit ton argent. De pareils faits détruisent la confiance des capitalistes. Ils n'enverront pas ici leurs capitaux pour qu'ils soient engagés sur des garanties hypothécaires. C'est ainsi que les propriétés foncières sont à peine considérées comme offrant une garantie quelconque, tandis qu'elles devraient être la meilleure garantie et devraient mettre le propriétaire à portée de se procurer de l'argent au taux le moins élevé. Chacun connait les frais d'une faillite, chacun sait qu'ils sont en proportion de la valeur nominale de la propriété. Bien que le bilan ne laisse pas un sou vaillant aux créanciers, il faut encore que les frais soient payés par les propriétés hypothécaires. Dans ma clientèle particulière, j'ai vu un créancier hypothécaire perdre tous ses droits par suite des frais exorbitants de la faillite. Je ne puis voir l'objection que l'on peut soulever contre ce bill. Je ne puis comprendre comment le réglement des successions en deviendra plus difficile. Je ne puis voir comment les ventes de syndics peuvent être plus embarrassées lorsqu'elles sont faites de la même manière que les ventes de shérif. Le Sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge a fait allusion aux banques hypothécaires. Je n'ai jamais su que la disposition qui leur était particulière ait jamais causé aucun embarras ; et si cette disposition était générale, elle produirait certainement d'excellents effets.

Digitized by Google

M. Nicholls.—Je suis opposé au bill, non parcequ'il produit un changement, mais parce que ce changement n'est pas une amélioration et parce qu'il entravera la liquidation des successions.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, de suspendre les règles afin de prendre en considération les actes sur les chemins de fer,

M. Clifton demande l'appel nominal.

MM. Dupré, Evans, Kemp, King, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack et Todd votent pour—18 voix.

MM. Barthe, Derbès et Clifton, votent contre—3 voix.

Conséquemment, les réglements sont suspendus et les actes sur les chemins de fer sont pris en considération et passent.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin, messager spécial, demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivans :

Acte pour émanciper Robert Scott Pyburn de la paroisse d'Est Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin en planches de Grosse-Tête et de Bâton-Rouge,

Et il informe le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours en l'amendant à un acte intitulé :

Acte pour venir au secours de Purvis et Dugué.

MESSAGE ENVOYE A LA CHAMBRE

Le messager spécial du Sénat demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivans :

Acte pour permettre aux femmes mariées de contracter des dettes et d'hypothequer leurs propriétés.

Acte autorisant F. Bennett et sa femme à adopter Georgiana C. Kimball.

Acte pour l'amélioration de la navigation du bayou Bœuf.

Acte pour l'amélioration de la navigation du bayou Barthelémy.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte pour permettre à Baptiste Dupeyre où à ses representans legaux d'émanciper l'esclave Zoé, et pour lui permettre de demeurer dans cet Etat.

Acte aux avis judiciaires.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'accomplissement des devoirs des recorders de paroisses en cas de vacances.

Acte pour exempter la paroisse de Catahoula de la taxe, pour faire construire des levées dans les paroisses de Madison et de Carroll.

Acte pour faire une appropriation tirée des fonds des terres marécageuses, à l'effet de completer la grande levée dans la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée.

Acte autorisant Minor W. Sherwin, de la paroisse de Claiborne, à retirer du bayou Danchitte, certaines obstructions qui en gênaient la navigation.

Acte autorisant l'amélioration de certains cours d'eau dans la paroisse Bossier.

Acte pour venir au secours de H. Labat.

Acte pour autoriser le recorder de la paroisse de Rapides à nommer un député.

Acte pour amender l'acte No 120 intitulé « acte pour incorporer la ville de Clinton, approuvé le 9 mars 1852. »

Acte supplémentaire à un acte intitulé « Acte pour former un district de levées, composé des paroisses de Carrol, Madison, et Catahoula, afin de les mieux protéger contre l'inondation, » passé le 18 mars 1852 et ameudé le 25 mars 1853.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a adopté le rapport du comité de conférence, auquel avait été référé le désaccord entre les deux Chambres, sur un acte intitulé « Acte pour organiser les cours de districts dans et pour la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Et que le Sénat a adopté le rapport du comité de conférence sur un acte intitulé « Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district judiciaire excepte.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours aux amendements à un acte intitulé :

Acte relatif aux avis judiciaires.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivans :

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la Compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans et de Bâton-Rouge, en souscrivant au capital de la dite compagnie.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer Pontchartrain

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la Compagnie du chemin de fer de Vicksburg, Shreveport et du Texas.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la Compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la Compagnie du chemin en planches de Grosse-Tête et de Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour émanciper Robert S. Pyburn de la paroisse d'Est Baton-Rouge.

LUNDI, 25 avril 1853.

M. McCay, présente un bill pour venir au secours de William K, Stiles.

M. Mc Cay. J'expliquerai aussi brièvement que possible l'objet de ce bill. Dans l'année 1848 trois personnes se portèrent cautions pour William K. Stiles, collecteur de taxes pour la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans. Subséquemment Stiles devint concussionnaire. Les cautions avaient à plusieurs reprises averti l'auditeur qu'il devait agir judiciairement contre le principal, attendu qu'elles pensaient qu'il y avait quelque chose de suspect. Aux termes de la loi l'auditeur est autorisé, en cas de concession, à poursuivre immédiatement le principal et les cautions. C'est ce que fit l'auditeur. Les cautions prirent une injonction qui fut soutenue par la Cour. L'auditeur fit appel. La décision se fit attendre, quand tout-à-coup sans qu'aucune raison fût donnée, sans qu'aucun avocat fût présent pour représenter les cautions, la décision de la cour inférieure fut renversée et l'injonction mise à néant. L'objet de ce bill est seulement de faire mettre de côté l'exécution et de donner aux cautions la chance de faire valoir leurs moyens de défense.

M. Hodge—L'objet du bill est-il d'anéantir le jugement ?

M. McKay—Non. Seulement de mettre de côté l'exécution.

M. Hodge—Je ne vois pas comment les parties retireront aucun profit du bill, à moins qu'il n'affecte le jugement.

M. McKay—En mettant à néant l'exécution, portons nous atteinte aux droits de l'Etat ? Nullement. Le jugement a été enregistré à l'époque, et une hypothèque pèse sur les propriétés des cautions.

M. Hodge—Il me semble que le bill équivaut à l'anéantissement du jugement, attendu qu'il en suspend au moins l'exécution pendant un temps. Il me semblerait mieux de soumettre la question à fond à la législature, et de la laisser décider si les parties méritent une faveur exceptionnelle de la part de l'Etat. Il est évidemment injuste qu'elles cherchent à échap-per aux dispositions de la loi de 1847 et à se prévaloir de la loi de 1850. Si par suite d'une erreur, leur conseil a été absent quand l'affaire a été plaidée, ç'a été leur faute. Je ne suis pas disposé à anéantir le jugement à moins qu'il ne soit erroné. Car c'est ce que signifie cette mise à néant de l'exécution.

Digitized by Google

M. Derbès—Comme je comprends cette affaire, les parties ont signé une obligation en faveur de M. Stiles. Il devint concessionnaire. Une instance judiciaire fut formée contre les parties, une injonction fut accordée, puis rendue absolue. L'auditeur fit appel et l'injonction fut mise de côté. Qu'adviendrait-il si nous adoptions ce bill ? L'affaire serait remise précisément dans le même état où elle se trouvait avant que la Cour Suprême rendît sa décision.

La seule chose que demandent les parties est le droit de se présenter devant la Cour et de plaider contre l'exécution lancée par l'auditeur. Le bill ne peut avoir pour effet de détruire l'hypothèque qui pèse sur les biens des cautions.

Naturellement cette hypothèque subsiste. La seule chose qu'elles demandent c'est de pouvoir présenter leur défense devant une cour.

M. Mc Cay—J'avais songé au plan proposé par le sénateur de Caddo, mais, après réflexion, j'ai pensé qu'il vaudrait mieux renvoyer l'affaire devant une Cour. Le bill porte que les parties auront le droit de se présenter devant une cour de justice et de faire valoir leurs moyens de défense.

M. Mouton—Je ne suis pas disposé à profiter d'un accident pour oppresser ces messieurs, mais la somme au paiement de laquelle on cherche à se soustraire est très-considérable. Je suis de l'opinion du sénateur de Caddo. Je crains que le bill porte atteinte aux droits qu'a l'Etat contre les garanties. Il paraît que l'affaire a été plaidée devant la cour inférieure. Elle fut portée devant la cour d'appel et par suite d'une négligence de la part du conseil des cautions, le jugement fut renversé.

Je ne doute pas que les faits ne soient cités correctement, mais il est étrange qu'on ait négligé une affaire aussi importante, une affaire dans laquelle il s'agissait de $28,000. Les cautions ont un recours contre les avocats s'ils ont été lésés par suite de leur négence. Je ne suis pas préparé en ce moment à voter pour ce bill, quoique, comme je l'ai dit, je ne désire pas profiter d'un accident.

M. Burthe—Je ne suis pas préparé à voter sur cette question. Tous les faits ne nous sont arrivés que par oui-dire. J'ai demandé le dossier et je n'ai pu le voir.

M. Lacoste—Quel mal peut-il y avoir à accorder aux cautions une nouvelle audition de la cause ? Si le jugement est correct, le résultat sera le même, si non, elles seront à même d'obtenir justice.

M. Hodge—Tout cela est très-vrai, mais on semble oublier un point très-important, c'est que l'acte de 1850 diffère de l'acte de 1847 sous l'empire duquel les poursuites ont eu lieu. Je ne pense pas que les cautions puissent avec aucune raison demander à être soustraites à l'effet de l'acte de 1847, sous l'empire duquel la caution fut fournie. Je suis disposé à faire tout ce qui est juste. Je désire que justice soit rendue à toutes les parties ; mais je ne suis pas disposé à aller aussi loin qu'on le propose. Je sens qu'il est de mon devoir de voter contre le bill.

M. Mc Cay—Je ne pensais pas que le bill pût être l'objet d'aucune opposition. L'Etat ne perdra aucun de ses droits. Il a une hypothèque judiciaire sur tous les biens des cautions, et cela en vertu de la loi sous l'empire de laquelle le cautionnement fut fourni. Le bill ne fera que donner aux cautions la chance de presenter leurs moyens de défense, que je crois puissants. Ils ont à plusieurs reprises averti l'auditeur que le principal dépensait l'argent de l'Etat et lui ont demandé d'exiger ses comptes, ce qu'il a négligé de faire.

Le bill est adopté.

Le bill régularisant les hypothèques et les privilèges est pris en considération et adopté.

M. Hodge.—Je demande une reconsidération du vote qui vient d'être donné. Je trouve que le bill opère un changement trop soudain dans l'économie de notre jurisprudence et qu'il produira plus de mal que de bien. Comme le Sénateur qui a présenté le bill doit le savoir, c'est une question d'une grande importance. Ce bill affecte les lois et le système politique établi dans la Louisiane. D'après un examen rapide du bill, je suis porté à croire que quoique le bill puisse faire quelque bien, il fera certainement beaucoup de mal. J'avoue qu'il amènera dans l'Etat de forts capitaux, qu'il donnera de la confiance aux capitalistes, mais cependant, je ne suis pas préparé à dire que la Louisiane en retirera un grand avantage. Si je suis disposé à attirer ici les capitaux, je ne suis pas disposé à sacrifier les intérêts de la Louisiane pour protéger les capitalistes étrangers. Je crois que le Sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans a cité le cas de M. Astor qui prêta une forte somme d'argent. L'individu devenant insolvable, et Astor ayant été obligé de se contenter de la garantie personnelle du syndic, il perdit son argent. Si d'un autre côté, je pense que ça été une affaire malheureuse, d'un autre, je ne vois pas que pour cette raison nous devions changer notre système de jurisprudence, et placer nos propriétés hypothéquées entièrement sous le contrôle des capitalistes. Si je comprends l'objet du bill, il a pour objet de mettre les personnes qui ont prêté sur des propriétés foncières à même de retenir ces propriétés jusqu'à ce que le prêt soit remboursé. Quel serait l'effet de ce changement? Il enchaînerait toutes les propriétés de l'Etat jusqu'à ce que les capitalistes étrangers soient payés. C'est un principe reconnu que les biens du débiteur sont le gage commun de tous ses créanciers, et que, lorsqu'il devient insolvable, ses biens doivent être divisés également. Quand il meurt, il en est de même, et l'on ne retient pas la propriété un temps indéfini afin que les capitalistes étrangers puissent jouir de l'intérêt. Supposez un homme riche de $300,000. Il va dans Wall Street et emprunte $100,000 à 8 pour cent. Il devient insolvable et a des créanciers qui ont autant de droits à être payés que les créanciers de Wall street. Vous ne pourriez trouver personne qui voulût acheter la propriété et se faire substituer au débiteur hypothécaire ; que deviendrait alors la propriété ? Etes-vous disposés à maintenir nos lois sur les faillites ? Vous ne pouvez le faire et passer une loi pareille, parce que, jusqu'à ce que le créancier hypothécaire ou renonce à ses droits ou se détermine à exercer ses droits hypothécaires, la propriété est enchaînée. Tel serait l'effet du bill.

Tandis que je suis disposé à faire tout ce qui est raisonnable pour soutenir le principe mis en avant par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, je ne désire pas que tous les intérêts de l'Etat plient devant ceux du commerce. Je ne suis pas disposé à sanctionner par mon vote une loi qui est faite tout simplement dans l'intérêt des capitalistes étrangers. J'ai parlé de même à une personne qui me pressait vivement à ce sujet. Réfléchissez à l'économie des lois de la Louisiane.

Lorsque j'ai pris mon siége, j'ai vu une différence d'opinion radicale sur ce sujet. Par mon vote nous allons décider si nous adhérons à un système ancien et depuis longtemps établi ou en adopter un nouveau. Quand une personne meurt, un principe d'humanité implanté dans les lois de la Louisiane, protége ces êtres que la mort a privés de leur protecteur naturel et qui sont incapables de se protéger eux-mêmes. Je ne désire pas appuyer sur ce point, il a déjà produit d'assez longs débats. Cependant la propriété doit être estimée et elle ne peut être vendue pour un prix au-dessous de l'évaluation.

Est-ce là un principe adopté arbitrairement ? Non ! au contraire. Le but qu'on se proposait était de protéger ces personnes qui sont incapables de veiller à leurs propres intérêts. Tant que je vis, il est à supposer que je puis payer, si je contracte une dette ; mais si je meurs, la loi dispose, et cela avec beaucoup d'humanité, que ma propriété ne sera pas vendue pour un prix moindre que la valeur estimative. C'est là une loi sage et humaine. J'espère qu'elle ne sera pas rappelée. Si vous hypothéquez votre propriété et que vous mouriez, un curateur est nommé. Il ne prend aucun intérêt à la succession. Un créancier hypothécaire se présente et demande à être payé. Le curateur n'emprunte pas de l'argent pour le payer, et de cette manière la propriété serait sacrifiée. Je rougis de dire que le curateur s'entend souvent avec les créanciers pour retirer de la succession des avantages personnels. J'espère que le Sénat réfléchira. Je pense que le sénateur de la Nlle-Orleans lui-même pensera comme moi lorsqu'il considérera la question attentivement. Telles sont mes opinions relativement au bill qui est devant le Sénat. Il se peut qu'elles n'aient pas beaucoup de poids, mais telles qu'elles sont, je me crois tenu de les exprimer.

Digitized by Google

M. King.— Cette question a été l'objet d'une discussion approfondie. On avait épuisé les arguments avant que le sénateur qui vient de parler fut descendu dans l'arène. Le sénateur parle de mûre délibération. S'il avait étudié la question avec autant de soin que je l'ai fait moi-même, ses propres réflexions auraient été plus approfondies. Il pense que le bill s'éloigne trop des formes existantes. Il verra que les ventes seront faites de la même manière que précédemment. La politique générale du bill est de nature à produire les effets les plus heureux. Il fera disparaître un obstacle qui s'oppose à notre prospérité. Il augmentera la valeur de nos propriétés foncières, et accelerera l'arrivée de capitaux dont le sénateur lui-même reconnaît le besoin. Enfin, les heureux effets en sont si évidents qu'ils ont à peine besoin d'être énumérés, et comme ils ont déjà été suffisamment décrits, je ne perdrai pas le temps du Sénat en revenant sur le même point.

La motion de reconsidération est perdue.

M. Lewis présente un bill relatif à l'émancipation de certains esclaves et à l'effet de leur permettre de rester dans l'Etat.

M. Martin.—Je ne voterai pas pour le bill.

M. Lewis.—Ces esclaves sont bien connus à la Nlle-Orléans. Ils appartenaient à un homme âgé qu'ils ont servi fidèlement. Quand il mourut il leur a légué la liberté et quelques moyens, et il a demandé par testament que l'on obtînt pour eux la permission de rester dans l'Etat. Nous avons adopté d'autres bills de la même nature, et je ne vois pas pourquoi nous n'adopterions pas celui-ci.

M. Martin.— Je suis opposé à ce bill, à moins que les dispositions de la loi de 1852 ne soient observées, loi aux termes de laquelle les esclaves seraient envoyés à Liberia.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Lacey présente un bill de la même nature.

M. Hodge.—Plusieurs bills de ce genre ont déjà été adoptés. Je les ai laissé passer sans opposition, mais celui-ci est une si palpable infraction que je ne puis le laisser passer. Nous n'avons que trop d'esclaves libres dans l'Etat. Dans les Etats où il y en a un trop grand nombre, ils deviennent intolérables. Cette considération devrait nous prémunir contre ces émancipations en masse. Je préférerais l'adoption d'une loi générale; je sais que nous en avons une aujourd'hui, mais elle est si rigoureuse que virtuellement elle est inapplicable. C'est la raison qui fait que nous avons tant de demandes de ce genre.

M. Lacey.— J'espère que le sénateur ne s'opposera pas à ce bill. La dame qui demande cette faveur est une personne d'une réputation sans tâche et qui ne la demandrait pas si elle portait atteinte à la justice. Je suis sûr que l'Etat n'aura jamais à souffrir de l'émancipation de ces nègres et qu'il n'y a aucun danger à redouter de leur affranchissement.

M. Hodge.—Je retire mon opposition.

M. Martin présente un amendement à l'effet d'exiger un cautionnement de $1000.

M. Lacey.—Je n'aurais aucune objection à l'amendement, si la session n'était pas tellement avancée que le bill, au cas où il serait amendé, ne pourrait pas arriver à l'ordre.

M. Martin.—C'est la loi générale de l'Etat. Je n'ai jamais entendu parler d'esclaves émancipés sans qu'un cautionnement fut exigé.

M. Derbès.— Le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge est, sans aucun doute, fondé dans son objection. Nous avons tout lieu de croire que si le bill était amendé au Sénat il ne pourrait pas arriver à l'ordre dans la Chambre et qu'il serait par conséquent perdu. Nous ne devons pas mettre le bill en péril, en insistant sur l'amendement.

M. Martin—Les observations du sénateur sont basées sur cette idée que tous les nègres d'une bonne conduite devraient être émancipés. Rien ne prouve que ces esclaves aient rendu à leur maîtresse aucun service extraordinaire. Sur dix esclaves dans cet état il y en a neuf qui jouissent d'une aussi bonne réputation.

L'amendement est repoussé.

M. Barthe fait la motion d'amender en exigeant un cautionnement de $150.

M. Lacey—La même objection se présente encore pour cet amendement. Si ce bill est le sujet d'un amendement quelconque, il se peut qu'il ne puisse jamais reparaître devant la chambre.

M. Barthe—Je dirai au sénateur qu'un bill qui a été adopté par le sénat vendredi dernier a passé à la chambre ce matin.

M. Hodge—Le bill ne devrait pas passer sous sa forme actuelle, à moins d'urgence absolue. Le sénateur de Jefferson nous a dit qu'un bill qui a été adopté ici vendredi dernier a passé à la chambre aujourd'hui même. Aucun autre bill de ce genre n'a passé sous cette forme. Que le bill soit amendé, essayons-nous la chance de le voir succomber; autrement nous créerons un mauvais précédent.

M. Lacey—Je n'en suis pas certain, mais je pense qu'aucun bill de ce genre n'a passé au Sénat avec une clause exigeant un cautionnement.

M. Martin—Je demande que le bill soit référé au comité judiciaire, afin de donner au savant président de ce comité le temps de connaître la loi applicable au sujet.

M. Lacey—Ce n'est certainement pas à la paroisse d'Assomption que nous irons pour obtenir des lumières.

Le bill est adopté.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Le bill à l'effet d'amender la loi relative à l'Hôpital de Charité, est pris en considération.

M. Hodge—Je désire voter contre ce bill. Je suis opposé à une taxe additionnelle imposée aux étrangers.

M. Millard—On a présenté des objections contre bill en s'appuyant sur des motifs d'inconstitutionnalité. J'ai entendu dire que la Cour Suprême avait rendu des décisions en faveur de la loi. M. Molse qui, je crois, est l'auteur de la loi actuelle, m'a dit qu'elle était parfaitement inconstitutionnelle.

Le bill est adopté.

Le bill à l'effet d'organiser un bureau des travaux publics est pris en considération.

M. Hodge—Je voudrais que le bill fut référé au comité. Les districts peuvent être mieux formés dans un comité qu'en plein sénat. La constitution exige que les districts soient formés selon la population. Cela ne peut être effectué qu'en renvoyant la question au comité. Par exemple, le quatrième district est trop étendu. Il court du golfe à la ligne de l'Arkansas. Cela n'est pas juste et je désire voir l'égalité rétablie.

M. Mitchell—La seule raison qui me fasse m'opposer au bill est que je suis fermement convaincu que la législature a l'intention de s'ajourner sans agir sur le bill d'enregistrement, ni sur ce bill, deux choses qu'exige la constitution. Il y aura de l'opposition dans la chambre, et si le bill y retourne, il succombera. Je crois qu'il doit succomber de toute manière, mais je veux que les sénateurs se montrent à visage découvert. Voici la dernière semaine de la session, et, si nous voulons agir sur ce bill, il faut le faire immédiatement. Je voudrais moi-même voir une modification apportée au bill. Mon district contient une grande quantité de terres inondées. Cela demande une attention immédiate. Ce district devrait être réuni au district de Bâton-Rouge, où si l'on voulait être juste, au district des Attakapas. Je crois que la division faite par la constitution est de beaucoup préférable, et plus juste. Je ne crois pas que le bill soit équitable, mais je ne suis pas disposé à m'en faire un moyen politique.

Je voudrais que les divisions fussent faites selon le travail qu'il y a à faire. Il me semble que la clause qui prend pour base la population est injuste. Suivant cette division la Nouvelle-Orléans formerait à elle seule un district. Mais comme nous devons faire les divisions de cette manière, nous devons aussi avoir égard au travail. Je désire que justice soit rendue à toutes les parties de l'Etat, mais comme la session est si avancée, prenant en considération la manifeste opposition que l'on fait à l'organisation de ce bureau, je suis convaincu que, si ce bill est renvoyé, même pour un jour, la Législature s'ajournera sans avoir statué sur la question.

M. Hodge—Je désire montrer au Sénateur l'injustice énorme commise à l'égard de mon district, en faisant par ce bill les districts correspondre avec les districts congressionnels qui ont été formés il y a nombre d'années. Je ne veux cependant pas faire une opposition violente, je me soumettrai de bonne grâce. Je suppose que l'objet que se propose la majorité démocratique est de former les districts de manière à assurer l'élection de leurs hommes. Aux vainqueurs les dépouilles. Mais nous leur donnerons une leçon semblable à celle que nous leur avons donnée l'année dernière dans mon district, lorsque le peuple choisit un homme qui représentait leurs sentiments et leurs vœux, et cela en dépit de toutes les cabales.

Digitized by Google

M. King—Ce bill forme les districts d'après le même plan qui avait été adopté par les whigs il y a nombre d'années. L'année dernière ils entreprirent de recommencer ce travail, et manièrent et remanièrent l'Etat admirablement. Maintenant ils veulent que nous adoptions leur remaniement.

Après quelques débats le bill est adopté.

MESSAGE ENVOYE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Sénat demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de Hugh Y. Waddill de la paroisse des Natchitoches.

Acte pour pourvoir au transfert de certains documents publics du 4me district de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans à la paroisse de Jefferson.

Acte pour émanciper Marie Mélanie, esclave de Moïse Hébert, de la paroisse de St-Landry.

Acte pour régler les sessions des cours de district.

Acte pour empêcher d'obstruer les rivières navigables, les baies et lacs de cet Etat.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans:

Acte pour émanciper George Millette.

Acte pour régler et définir les devoirs des trésoriers de paroisses.

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie à feu des Opelousas.

Acte relatif à l'élection des greffiers de cour, pour la paroisse et la ville de Jefferson.

Acte pour émanciper Wm. Desdemona et Elisabeth Robertson, enfans de George Robertson h. c. l. de la paroisse d'Est Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour amender un acte pour pourvoir à la perte des documens publics et autres papiers, consumés par l'incendie de la maison de cour de la paroisse de Claiborne, le 6 novembre 1849

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre aux actes suivans:

Acte pour régler le temps des sessions de cours de districts.

Acte pour émanciper les esclaves appartenant à la succession de feu J. B. Cajus, de la paroisse d'Orléans.

MESSAGE ENVOYE PAR LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial de la Chambre demande le concours du Sénat pour les actes suivans:

Acte pour amender et remettre en vigueur l'article 270 du code civil.

Acte pour venir au secours de Wm Long.

Acte pour régler le salaire et les dépenses contingentes de l'ingénieur de l'Etat.

Acte pour autoriser la construction de bateaux pour le département des améliorations intérieures de l'Etat.

Acte pour venir au secours de B. L. Hodge, de la paroisse de Caddo.

Résolution concernant un plan du bayou Plaquemines.

Et il informe le Sénat que la chambre a donné son concours aux actes suivants :

Acte pour pourvoir au paiement des personnes, en vertu de l'acte du 20 décembre 1848, du 21 mars 1850, pour consolider et reviser les statuts &c.

Et que la Chambre rejette le premier amendement du Sénat et donne son concours au 2me amendement du Sénat à un acte intitulé - « Acte pour régler le temps des sessions des cours de districts, la paroisse d'Orléans exceptée. »

Et que la Chambre a donné son concours pour un substitut à un « Acte amendant un acte relatif aux pouvoirs des greffiers des cours de districts, les paroisses d'Orléans et de Jefferson exceptées.

Et que la Chambre a donné son concours avec amendements du Sénat à un acte intitulé : « Acte relatif aux avis judiciaires. »

Ainsi qu'aux actes intitulés : « Acte pour l'amélioration de la navigation du bayou Bœuf. »

Résolution pour améliorer la navigation de la rivière Sabine.

Acte pour l'amélioration de la navigation du bayou Barthélemy.

Et il informe de plus le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours à l'amendement du Sénat changeant le temps des services de la cour dans la paroisse de Calcasieu.

Et que la Chambre a resusé de donner son concours à l'amendement changeant le temps des sessions du 12me district, composé des paroisses de Ouachita, Union, Morcheuse et Jackson.

Mardi, 26 avril 1853.

M. Lacey présente un bill pour indemniser certaines personnes qui avaient acheté des terres et dont les ventes n'étaient pas régulières.

M. Lacey.— La Législature a déjà passé un bill à cet effet, mais il paraît que la somme allouée était insuffisante Ce bill a pour but d'accorder le surplus. Je demande une suspension des réglements afin de l'introduire.

M. Rivers.—On supposait que la somme déjà allouée était suffisante. Je ne suis pas prêt à voter en ce moment pour le bill.

M. Lacey.— J'ai appris que la somme n'était pas suffisante.

M. Martin.— Je fais la motion de référer le bill au comité des terres.

M. Lacey.— Cette mesure aurait pour effet de tuer le bill et j'espère qu'elle ne sera pas adoptée. Nous avons déjà reconnu la justice de ces réclamations, et je ne vois pas pourquoi nous ferions de semblables distinctions.

M. Martin.—Le sénateur n'est pas meilleur juge du montant nécessaire que ne l'était le comité. Nous avons encore du temps devant nous, et renvoyer le bill n'est pas le tuer.

M. Lacey.— Je ne pense pas que nous aurions le temps de statuer sur cette question. J'espère que le Sénat soutiendra son propre bill. Ces parties ne peuvent pas obtenir justice par une autre voie, car la Cour Suprême a décidé qu'elles doivent s'adresser à la Législature.

M. Martin.— Je désire savoir si ces parties ont présenté leurs réclamations au Register et s'il a fait un rapport. Il était autorisé par un acte de la dernière Législature à faire des publications à l'effet d'inviter toutes les personnes ayant des réclamations de ce genre à se présenter et à les faire connaître.

M. Rivers.— Ce que je désire savoir c'est si ces réclamations sont comprises dans le rapport du Register. Il a rapporté à peu près un millier d'acres

Mr Slack—J'espère que le bill sera renvoyé. J'étais moi-même du comité. Le président a examiné le sujet attentivement et a dit que le montant rapporté serait suffisant pour toutes les réclamations fondées. Je ne prétends pas dire que l'allocation couvrait toutes les réclamations fondées, mais que les réclamations qui restent découvertes soient examinées comme les autres.

M. Martin—Le sénateur d'Est Bâton Rouge n'a pas répondu à ma question. Je lui ai demandé si ces réclamations étaient comprises dans le rapport du Register. Il a dit que la somme de $3000 serait suffisante.

M. Lacey—Je ne connais rien de relatif au Register.

M. Martin—Eh bien je n'hésite pas à dire que ces réclamations me sont suspectes.

[Ici la discussion prend un caractère tout à fait personnel entre MM. Martin et Lacey.]

Finalement le bill est référé.

M. Hodge demande la prise en considération d'un bill ayant pour effet de relever une personne du nom de William Shaw des effets de la loi relative aux héritiers forcés.

M. Hodge—Il est vrai que le bill relève une personne des effets d'une loi générale de l'Etat ; mais quand je ferai connaître les circonstances de l'affaire, je suis sûr que le Sénat ne repoussera pas le bill. Le père est un homme âgé. Les héritiers forcés sont tous des hommes faits. Quelques-uns sont morts, laissant des enfants. Quand les mineurs arriveront à leur majorité, ils auront une propriété considérable. Il y en a quatre.

Digitized by Google

Le désir de ce vieillard est que la Législature fasse une exemption à la loi générale des heritiers forcés, afin que ses petits enfants puissent être tous mis sur un pied d'égalité.

M. King—Bien que je ne pourrais jamais arriver à appuyer ce bill ; cependant, si le bill devait passer, j'insisterai pour que ce vieillard laissât son héritage à ses petits enfants en faveur desquels il sollicite cette exception. Car rien ne prouvsque, lorsque la loi aura été adoptée, il n'épousera pas une jeunne femme à laquelle il laissera toute sa fortune Individuellement, je suis opposé à ce genre de législation spéciale et personnelle. Je suis opposé à porter atteinte à ce que la loi considère comme des droits acquis. Je ne désire pas faire ces distinctions. Je ne désire pas mettre certains individus en dehors de l'application d'une loi générale. La loi de ce pays diffère de celle des autres Etats. On peut discuter sur la supériorité de l'une ou de l'autre, mais j'avoue ma préférence pour notre loi. Mais quelleque soit notre opinion nous devons nous en tenir à la loi que nous avons. Nul doute qu'il n'y ait à la Louisiane des milliers de personnes qui aimeraient à faire de ces préférences entre leurs enfants. Si nous adoptons cette loi, nous aurons une foule de demandes à la prochaine Législature, et nous ne saurions où nous arrêter.

M. Lacey—En ma qualité de président du comité judiciaire, je puis dire que, d'après l'exposé des faits présentes par le sénateur de Caddo, j'étais disposé à envisager ce bill d'après ses mérites, et à voter en sa faveur. Je suis encore disposé à lui donner mon vote.

M. Mouton—Je regrette de ne pas pouvoir donner mon appui au bill. Je ne suis pas disposé à commettre une infraction à la jurisprudence bien établie de l'Etat. Je suis forcé de voter contre le bill, bien qu'il soit d'un caractère local.

Le bill est adopté.

Le bill à l'effet de transporter l'asyle des sourds-muets aux Opelousas est pris en considération.

M. Mouton—Ce bill a été rapporté comme substitut par un comité dont je faisais partie. Dans l'année 1831 la Législature fit une allocation et une institution fut établie sous le nom de Franklin Collége. Les bâtisses sont vastes, commodes et bien adaptées à l'objet que l'on a en vue. Des raisons d'économie devraient nous persuader d'en faire usage. L'emplacement est bon, l'endroit est sain. L'établissement est placé sur la ligne du chemin de fer des Opelousas.

M. Lacey—Je ne crois pas qu'il serait sage de déplacer cet asyle. Ainsi s'est exprimé en me parlant, le surintendant de cette institution. Nous ne savons pas si l'Etat a un bon titre pour les bâtisses des Opelousas. Dans tous les cas j'ai appris qu'il faudrait faire des dépenses considérables pour les approprier au but que l'on se propose, J'ai appris du surintendant qu'il est venu ici de l'Indiana sous la promesse formelle que l'asyle serait placé au siége du gouvernement. Serait-il juste de demander à M. Brown, le surintendant qui s'est rendu ici de l'Indiana sous cette convention expresse, de briser ses relations et d'abandonner un établissement florissant ? serait-il juste de lui demander aujourd'hui de se transporter aux Opelousas ? Cela ne serait pas juste. Et êtes vous disposé à faire une chose qui est contraire à tous les usages reçus ? Allez-vous faire de la législation expérimentale ? J'espère que non. J'espère que la petite allocation nécessaire sera votée, et l'institution demeurera au siége du gouvernement.

M Millard.—Le titre sur lequel le sénateur a tant appuyé est aussi bon que n'importe quel autre titre de propriété. Toute la question se réduit à une question d'argent. Les bâtisses déjà élevées aux Opelousas sont vastes et salubres. Cet emplacement a l'avantage de se trouver sur la ligne du chemin de fer et est recommandable sous une infinité d'autres rapports.

M. Mouton.—En réponse à ce qu'a dit le membre d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, je ferai remarquer que le but que l'on se propose n'est pas de défaire ce qu'a fait la dernière législature, mais au contraire de remplir ses intentions. On veut empêcher une dépense additionnelle de $25,000 pour des bâtisses quand nous les avons déjà prêtes. Elles sont déjà assez vastes pour contenir 200 pensionnaires.

La question n'est pas de savoir si nous accommoderons le surintendant; c'est, comme l'a dit le sénateur, une question d'argent. La question est de savoir si nous dépenserons $25,000 de plus ou si nous transférerons l'asile aux Opelousas. Le bureau peut rester tel qu'il est aujourd'hui si les membres le désirent, sinon le Gouverneur peut en nommer un autre. Le but que l'on se propose est simplement de remplir les vœux de la dernière législature

M. Millard.—Les bâtisses sont neuves, mais n'ayant pas servi pendant deux ou trois ans, elles peuvent avoir besoin de quelques réparations, mais les dépenses ne seront rien.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Hodge demande la prise en considération de l'acte relatif aux devoirs et pouvoirs des jurys de police de l'Etat et des autorités constituées des villes incorporées.

M. Hodge.—J'ai à faire quelques remarques qui n'occuperont le sénat que peu d'instants Le bill est si juste dans son principe que j'espère qu'il ne rencontrera pas d'opposition. Il ne fait qu'incorporer dans notre système de paroisse le principe énoncé dans le 118me article de la Constitution. Si la Constitution exige que l'Etat pourvoie aux moyens de faire face à ses obligations au fur et à mesure qu'il les contracte, le même principe est applicable aux jurys de police et aux villes. Le bill a une première fois succombé dans la Chambre, mais la discussion ayant recommencée il n'a rencontré aucune opposition, bien que le comité ait fait un rapport défavorable au bill. Cependant après que le rapport fut fait, M. McCay, l'un des membres du comité, me dit qu'il était en faveur du bill. De même M. Rivers, après que je le lui eusse expliqué, me dit qu'il ne ferait pas d'opposition au bill. Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans a été jusqu'à me dire qu'il l'appuierait.

M. Patterson.—Je ne ferai pas d'opposition au bill pourvu qu'Est-Félicïana soit exceptée.

M. Hodge.—Si le sénateur l'exige, j'y consentirai, bien que je préférasse que la loi fût générale Je crois qu'amender le bill, c'est le mettre en peril. Mais si je ne puis rien obtenir de plus, je désirerais que le bill s'appliquât à ma paroisse. Dans le premier bill, la Nouvelle-Orléans était exemptee, mais, à la demande de ses représentants, la Nlle Orléans subsequemment fut incluse. Passez le bill et à l'avenir les corporations seront plus circonspectes à contracter des dettes.

Si elles sont forcées de pourvoir aux moyens de faire face à leurs obligations, elles réfléchiront avant de s'endetter. Le principe de ce bill est le même que celui qui est contenu dans la loi qui consolide la ville de la Nlle-Orléans et dans le 118me article de la Constitution. Il aura pour effet de donner plus de valeur aux bons de nos paroisses et de nos villes et d'augmenter leur crédit. Le créancier aura une garantie d'être payé.

MESSAGE ENVOYÉ A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Sénat demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivans :

Acte pour organiser un bureau des travaux publics.

Acte pour émanciper l'esclave Eulalie, appartenant à Amédée Landry, de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte supplémentaire à un acte intitulé « Acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts judiciaires »—approuvé le 12 avril 1858.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte pour augmenter le nombre des jurys dans les paroisses de St-Bernard et Plaquemines de quarante huit à soixante-dix »—approuvé le 11 mars 1852.

Acte pour pourvoir à la vente d'une moitié indivise d'une portion de terre dans la paroisse de de St-Landry, réclamée par l'Etat.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours à l'acte suivant, en l'amendant :

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte relatif à l'Hôpital de Charité » —approuvé le 21 mars 1850.

MESSAGE ENVOYÉ PAR LA CHAMBRE.

M. Eastin informe le Sénat que l'orateur de la Chambre a signé les actes enrôlés suivans :

Acte pour permettre aux actionnaires de la société de l'Ecole des demoiselles d'Iberville de faire et d'effectuer une liquidation.

Digitized by Google

Acte pour rappeler un acte intitulé « Acte pour exempter de la saisie et vente le domicile d'un propriétaire, et aussi pour exempter de la saisie et saisie-arrêt pour loyer, certaines propriétés personnelles et certains effets ainsi que les salaires du travail et les compensations pour services rendus dans une profession ou autrement.

Acte pour autoriser la Banque des Citoyens à convertir en actions au comptant les actions assurées par hypothèques.

Acte pour incorporer le président et les membres du Collége de la Louisiane.

Acte pour autoriser les avocats de district à se récuser dans certains cas.

Acte autorisant les procédures « in rem » pour recouvrer les pertes et les dommages occasionnés par négligence, manque de soins, ou d'adresse dans la conduite, ou la direction des bateaux à vapeur, barges, chalands, navires ou radeaux.

Acte pour autoriser la compagnie du chemin de fer Pontchartrain à construire un chemin de fer jusqu'à la Mobile.

Acte pour mettre en force d'une manière plus efficace les dispositions d'un acte intitulé « Acte pour le progrès de l'Education médicale en Louisiane », approuvé le 21 mars 1856.

Et il demande la signature du président pour les actes enrôlés suivans :

Acte supplémentaire à un « Acte accordant une extension de temps aux colons actuels, pour faire l'application, la preuve et le paiement des terres marécageuses et inondées données à l'Etat de la Louisiane par les actes du Congrès », approuvés le 2 mars 1849, le 23 septembre 1850 et le 16 mars 1853.

Acte pour autoriser le recorder de la paroisse de Morehouse à nommer un député.

Acte accordant le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de Jackson et du Nord, en souscrivant à son capital.

Acte relatif au judiciaire de l'Etat, le premier district judiciaire excepté.

Acte pour dispenser du réenregistrement des hypothèques en faveur des commissaires de la donation Poydras dans les paroisses d'Ouest-Bâton-Rouge et de la Pointe-Coupée.

Acte pour diviser en de nouveaux districts la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée, et pour diminuer le nombre et restreindre les pouvoirs du juri de police.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte intitulé « Acte pour former un district de levées, composé des paroisses de Carroll, Madison et Catahoula, afin de les mieux protéger contre l'inondation », passé le — mars 1852 et amendé le 25 mars 1853.

Acte pour améliorer le Big Creek.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de Vicksburg, Shreveport et du Texas, en souscrivant à son capital.

Acte pour exempter la paroisse de Catahoula de toute taxe à venir pour construire des levées dans les paroisses de Madison et de Carroll.

Acte pour permettre a Baptiste Dupeyre ou à ses représentans légaux d'émanciper l'esclave Zoé, sans qu'elle quitte cet Etat.

Acte pour organiser les Cours de District dans et pour la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Acte pour accorder le secours de l'Etat à la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nlle-Orléans, des Opelousas et de l'Ouest, en souscrivant à son capital.

Acte pour pourvoir à la manière de canceller les bons et hypothèques donnés par les collecteurs de taxes des paroisses.

Acte pour incorporer les actionnaires de la compagnie du chemin de fer de la Nouvelle-Orléans et de Bâton-Rouge.

Acte autorisant Minor W. Sherwin, de la paroisse de Claiborne, à retirer certaines obstructions qui gênent la navigation du bayou Danchitte, &c.

Acte pour amender la première section d'un acte intitulé : « Acte relatif à la corporation, à la police et au gouvernement de la ville de Shreveport, »—approuvé le 18 mars 1850.

Acte pour venir au secours de H. Labat.

Résolution requérant l'ingénieur d'Etat de faire un examen exact du lit de la Vieille Rivière, entre l'embouchure de la rivière Rouge et le Mississipi, et celui de la Grande Pointe, sur la rivière Rouge.

Il informe le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours aux actes suivans :

Acte pour autoriser les marguilliers de l'église St-Louis, de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, à disposer de certaine propriété.

Acte pour émanciper John J. Croft.

Acte pour régler les termes de session des Cours de districts.

Acte pour amender les actes intitulés : Actes pour incorporer la ville de Jefferson, approuvés le 9 mars 1850.

MERCREDI, 27 avril 1858.

M. Kenner demande la suspension du réglement afin d'introduire un bill ayant pour objet de régulariser la manière de compter les votes dans les élections de juges.

M. Kenner—Dans deux ou trois jours cette session sera terminée. Il est impossible de dire quels seront les élus pour la Cour Suprême. Je présente ce bill afin d'établir la manière de compter les votes dans les élections. Si, comme un membre l'a dit, un bill a déjà été proposé pour cet objet, pourquoi ne demande-t-il pas qu'il soit pris en considération.

M. King—L'on m'a dit qu'un bill à cet effet avait été adopté par la Chambre.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

Ce jour est celui fixé pour la prise en considération de l'acte suivant :

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des votants de la Nouvelle-Orléans, conformément à l'article 11 de la Constitution.

Sect. 1—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentants de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en assemblée générale, Que le Conseil des Aldermen de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans devra, le premier lundi de décembre de chaque année, nommer trois personnes convenables et prudentes, pour chacun des districts de la Nolle-Orléans, lesquelles devront résider dans le district pour lequel elle sont nommées et seront connues sous le nom de « bureau pour l'examen des droits des votants.

Sect. 2—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Que le dit bureau des différents districts de la ville, devra immédiatement après sa nomination donner avis dans le journal de l'Etat, et dans d'autres journaux principaux publies dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, qu'ils s'assembleront dans leur district respectif dans la dite ville, le second lundi de janvier après leur nomination, à l'effet d'examiner et de décider des applications des personnes résidant dans la dite ville pour l'enregistrement de leur noms comme votants qualifiés de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans ; et dans le dit avis le dit bureau désignera l'endroit de leurs réunions respectives.

Sect. 3—Les différents membres du bureau nommés conformément à la première section de cet acte, devront avant d'entrer dans l'exécution des devoirs de leur place, excepté celui de l'avis ci-dessus prescrit, prêter le serment exigé par l'article 90 de la Constitution ; lequel serment pourra être administré par tout juge ou juge de paix de la dite ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans ; et ayant été signé par les membres du dit bureau et signé par le juge pardevant lequel ce serment a été pris, le dit serment devra être envoyé par le dit bureau d'examen au Conseil des Aldermen de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, avec la liste des votants comme il est dit ci-dessus.

Sect. 4—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Qu'il sera du devoir des différents bureaux d'examen des qualifications des votants de se réunir le jour et à leur endroit respectif comme les avis publiés par eux le diront ; et ainsi en assemblée, les dits bureaux resteront en session pour cet objet et pour les objets ci-après prescrits, de 10 h. A. M. jusqu'à 6 h. P. M. du même jour, s'il est nécessaire, et ils pourront ajourner de jour en jour, (les dimanches non compris) jusqu'à ce que le but de l'assemblée soit rempli.

Sect. 5—Il est de plus décrété, &c., Qu'en cas qu'une personne résidant dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans se déclare être un votant légal et demande que son nom soit enregistré sur la liste des votants, et que la dite personne ne soit pas connue par le bureau avant sa comparution, comme un votant légal ou si son droit d'être reconnu comme un votant légal est con-testé par toute personne, il sera du devoir du dit bureau pour l'examen des qualifications des votants, de faire prêter et signer par l'un d'eux à la personnne ainsi inconnue au dit bureau comme votant légal ou dont le droit est contesté comme dessus, le serment suivant qui sera préparé pour cela et lequel sera envoyé avec la liste des votants, comme il est ci-après exigé, à la Première Cour de District de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans pour être soigneusement conservé.

Digitized by Google

Je, [A B] jure ou affirme que je suis citoyen naturalisé, il devra dans son serment spécifier l'endroit où il a été naturalisé, que j'ai atteint l'âge de 21 ans ; que j'ai résidé dans cet Etat douze mois précédant l'élection, et les six derniers mois dans la paroisse, et demeure maintenant dans la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, et de plus je jure ou affirme solennellement que depuis l'adoption de la présente constitution, étant citoyen de cet Etat, je ne me suis pas battu en duel, avec des armes qui peuvent donner la mort, avec un citoyen de cet Etat, ni que je n'ai pas agi comme second en portant un cartel, ou donné avis ou assisté qui que ce soit—que Dieu me soit en aide.

Sect. 6.—Il est de plus décrété etc.,—Que toute personne non naturalisée au temps de l'enregistrement comme votant, et si son droit de naturalisé arrive, et s'il espère être dûment naturalisé dans l'interval d'une année à partir du jour que le bureau aura ses séances, ou si toute personne applicant alors n'a pas atteint l'âge de 21 ans, ou a acquis les six et douze mois de résidence prescrits par la constitution, ou s'il a atteint l'âge de majorité, ou le temps nécessaire pour lui donner la résidence légale, expire dans une année à partir du temps qu'il aura fait l'application au bureau commençant ses séances, alors et dans ce cas, le serment prescrit dans la section précédente, sera changé suivant le fait ; le dit serment quand il sera pris, sera envoyé dans la manière et la forme prescrites par le serment exigé dans la précédente section ; pourvu cependant, que dans tous les cas, quand la partie fera affidavit, comme l'exige cette section, il sera du devoir des commissaires d'élections quand la personne demandera à voter, d'exiger de lui, le serment prescrit par la loi pour être administré aux votants dont les votes seront contestés.

Sec. 7.—Il est de plus décrété etc —Que chacun des dits bureaux quand il se réunira pour examiner et décider des qualifications des votants, ou pour entendre et juger des contestations, comme il est ci-dessus prescrit, devra non seulement entendre l'applicant dans la manière et dans la forme prescrites, et dans les cas prévus par les sections 5me et 6me de cet acte, mais ils peuvent faire examiner par un des membres les témoins sous serment et l'applicant ainsi assermenté, ou les témoins ainsi examinés, qui seront coupables de mauvais desseins ou de faux serment seront passibles des peines imposées aux parjures.

Sec. 8.—Il est de plus décrété, etc.—Qu'il sera de plus du devoir de la dite ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, au temps de ces séances et avant leur fin, de garder une liste complète et juste des noms des personnes qui demeurent dans la dite ville et qui auront été reconnues comme votants qualifiés par les différents bureaux pour donner droit de vote dans la dite ville de la Nouvelle Orléans, ainsi que la résidence des dites personnes, de mettre aussi sur la dite liste tous ceux qui désirent devenir votants, suivant les dispositions de la section 6me de cet acte, avec leur résidence et sur quoi se base leur droit de citoyen, de désigner ceux dont le droit de vote aura été contesté, ce qui aura donné lieu à cette contestation et la décision du bureau ; et tous les tableaux des faits qui pourront permettre un autre examen conformément à la section suivante, et il sera de plus du devoir du dit bureau, de faire deux copies des dites listes, dûment signées et certifiées par les membres du dit bureau, l'une sera envoyée par les dits bureaux respectifs au greffier de la cour de district de la Nouvelle Orléans et l'autre au Conseil des Aldermen de la dite ville pour être placées dans les bureaux des dits greffiers et secrétaires du dit conseil, pour être soigneusement gardées et préservées.

Sect. 9.—Il est de plus décrété &c.; Que si une personne inconnue à chacun des dits bureaux, est reconnue comme votant, ou si les qualifications d'une personne réclamant d'être reconnue comme votant légal, sont contestées, le nom de la personne sera placé sur la liste des votants; ou si le nom d'une personne quelconque est rejeté de la liste, toute personne ou personnes désirant prendre des informations, aura le droit, avant que le bureau qui aura rendu la décision soit dissout, de faire référer la dite affaire pardevant toute cour de juridiction compétente, laquelle cour devra aussitôt que possible, examiner de préférence la décision du bureau dans cette affaire, et devra donner son opinion et sa décision le plus promptement possible, en tout ce qui concerne la question soumise, et le jugement de la cour ainsi rendu, sujet au droit d'appel, comme la loi le prescrit, et par lequel les commissaires seront gouvernés sur ce sujet ; et les listes seront renvoyées aux commissaires et considérées comme amendées en ce qui regarde cette affaire.

Sect. 10.—Il est de plus décrété &c.; Que le conseil des aldermen de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, devra—— jours après que les listes des votants auront été envoyées à ce dit corps, faire une liste alphabétique des votants, envoyée par les dits bureaux pour l'examen des qualifications des votants au dit conseil des aldermen, avec les notes et remarques des dits bureaux, accompagnant les dites listes ; et laquelle liste alphabétique sera gardée et préservée par le dit conseil des aldermen et il sera aussi du devoir du dit conseil des aldermen, de fournir aux commissaires des élections, pour chaque arrondissement, à chaque élection, et à l'ouverture des polls, une copie certifiée des listes alphabétiques ci-dessus exigées ; de plus, de déposer une copie certifiée de la dite liste alphabétique dans le bureau du greffier auquel le dit bureau d'examen des qualifications des votants, aura envoyé ses listes, conformément à la 8me section de cet acte ; et lorsque le conseil des aldermen de la ville de la Nlle-Orléans, aura ainsi déposé dans le bureau du dit greffier la dite liste alphabétique, le nom d'aucune personne ne sera ajouté ou retranché à moins d'un ordre de la cour, comme il est ci-dessus prescrit, et aucune personne, pendant une année à partir du commencement des séances des différents bureaux d'examen des qualifications des votants, ne pourra voter à quelque élection que ce soit, à moins que les commissaires d'élection ne soient satisfaits de l'identité de la personne demandant à voter et trouvent son nom inscrit sur la dite liste alphabétique.

Sect. 11.—Il est de plus décrété ; Que si un membre du conseil des aldermen de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, ou si une des personnes mentionnées dans cet acte, et à qui certains devoirs sont imposés par cet acte, néglige avec intention ou refuse de remplir un des devoirs qui lui sont ci-dessus imposés, ou autorisera ou permettra qu'il soit fait aucune chose contraire à la véritable disposition de cet acte, les dits membres du conseil et toute autre personne que ce soit seront passibles d'une amende qui ne sera pas moindre de —— piastres et n'excédera pas cinq cents piastres, une moitié au bénéfice de l'Etat, l'autre au bénéfice du dénonciateur et de plus seront condamné à payer les frais de cour, et à un emprisonnement dans la prison de paroisse pour un terme n'excédant pas et pas moindre de trente jours.

Sect. 12.—Il est de plus décrété &c. Que les différents membres du bureau d'examen recevront en considération des services exigés par cet acte la compensation suivante, payable des fonds du trésor de la dite ville de la Nlle-Orléans

M. Palfrey.— Je fais la motion d'effacer de la première section du bill les mots : 2me lundi de décembre et d'insérer le premier lundi de juin. Le but que je me propose en présentant cet amendement est de donner aux bureaux le temps de préparer leurs listes pour l'élection qui devra avoir lieu au mois de novembre suivant.

L'amendement est adopté.

M. Palfrey propose un amendement à la section 2 par lequel le bureau devra s'assembler le second lundi d'octobre au lieu du second landi de janvier.

Adopté.

Le bill passe à la seconde lecture.

M. Hedge—Je demande une dispensation des règles et que le bill reçoive une troisième lecture.

La motion est adoptée.

M. Derbès—Je suis forcé de voter pour le bill parce que la Constitution déclare que nous devons passer une loi de cette nature. Non que j'approuve ce bill. Je suis persuadé qu'il privera du droit de suffrage un grand nombre de votants de la Nlle-Orléans.

M. Lacey—Je ne puis voter pour le bill tel qu'il est.

Digitized by Google

Je crois que l'article de la Constitution avait pour but de prévenir les fraudes qui pourraient être commises entre l'époque de l'enregistrement et celle des élections. Le bill, tel qu'il est amendé, ne peut atteindre ce but. Le délai est trop court. Il faudrait huit ou neuf mois.

M. Palfrey— Le sénateur aurait dû faire connaître ses objections quand les amendements étaient devant le Sénat. Il aurait pu ainsi déterminer l'auteur de ces amendements à les retirer.

M Mouton— Je n'approuve pas toutes les dispositions de ce bill, mais comme un article de la Constitution nous fait un devoir de passer quelque loi à ce sujet, et comme aucun substitut n'est présenté, je me vois obligé de voter pour le bill.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Todd appelle la discussion sur le bill relatif aux améliorations de la Rivière-Rouge.

M. King— Les barres sont les seules choses qui retiennent les eaux dans la rivière. Tous les bateaux à draguer du monde ne pourraient atteindre ce but.

M. Hodge— Le sénateur est un si grand admirateur de la science, qu'il devrait quitter le Sénat et s'y dévouer entièrement. Il peut montrer beaucoup de dédain pour le bill, mais je puis lui dire qu'il a été préparé par l'un des hommes les plus savants de l'Etat. J'ai remarqué fréquemment une disposition dans le Sénat à traiter avec dédain la partie septentrionale de la Louisiane, chaque fois que l'on propose quelque chose dans l'intérêt de cette section. Nous demandons peu. Nous pensons que ce bill nous sera utile et nous sommes disposés à en courir les risques.

M. King— Le sénateur a adopté un genre d'argument tout-à-fait particulier. Il confond les personnalités avec la raison. J'admire la science, et bien que je ne prétende pas la connaître à fond, je crois pouvoir comprendre quelques uns de ses principes. Et si aucun sentiment de misérable jalousie sectionnelle, comme a voulu le faire entendre le sénateur, a jamais surgi dans mon âme, je le déclare, c'est à mon insu. Je désire que bonne et égale justice soit rendue à toutes les sections de l'Etat. J'ai à cœur les intérêts de l'Etat tout entier. Relativement à ce bill, je dirai que, dans mon opinion, il serait nuisible de faire disparaître toutes les barres de sable qui se trouvent dans la Rivière Rouge et dans le Ouachita. Dans les eaux hautes, ces barres ne sont pas utiles, parcequ'alors il n'y a pas assez d'eau. Dans les eaux basses elles retiennent les eaux dans le fleuve. La Virginie a fait l'essai de ce moyen pour le Kenawha, mais sans succès. Elle a dépensé un million de piastres pour cette entreprise, mais elle n'a obtenu aucun bon résultat. L'expérience devrait nous profiter. Je répète que tous les bateaux à draguer du monde ne pourraient pas remplir l'objet que l'on se propose. Je ne prétends pas être un flambeau de science, mais je crois que la science démontrera la vérité de ce que j'avance.

M. Todd— Je ne puis être de l'opinion du sénateur. C'est la première fois que j'entends dire qu'en faisant disparaître des barres on crée des obstacles à la navigation. Dans le Ouachita il n'y a qu'un très petit nombre de barres qui forment obstacles; et, si celles-là disparaissaient, la rivière deviendrait navigable d'un bout à l'autre. Dans tous les cas nous désirons en faire l'essai.

M. Hodge—J'ai quelques mots encore à dire Les hommes de science souvent diffèrent à un tel point sur ces questions qu'ils laissent le monde dans l'obscurité. M. de Russy m'a parlé de ce bill et il l'a approuvé C'est un homme de science. Je crois que le bill a reçu aussi l'approbation de l'Ingénieur de l'Etat. Ce doit être une bonne autorité attendu qu'il a reçu les compliments du Sénateur.

Le colonel de Russy a déclaré, j'en suis sûr, qu'il approuve le bill, et le Sénateur ne peut prétendre qu'il ne soit un homme de science et de talent. Je crois que l'Ingénieur de l'Etat a dit que le plan était praticable, et que le major Ranney a exprimé la même opinion. Ce plan ne présente pas les inconvénients signalés par le Sénateur. Et qu'il me soit permis de dire au Sénateur que, si j'ai parlé avec vivacité, c'est que je n'ai pu me retenir. Je ne désire pas attaquer sa réputation de science acquise, par la manière dont il a traité les questions de ce genre pendant cette session. Mais, pour revenir à ce bill je doute que le Sénateur puisse dire ce qui produit les barres dans la rivière Rouge et dans le Ouachita. Elles sont produites par la chute d'arbres qui détournent le cours des eaux. Depuis Shreveport à Alexandrie c'est-à-dire sur un trajet de 200 milles, il y a un grand nombre d'obstacles de ce genre.

J'ai entendu dire à certaines personnes que si l'on faisait disparaître les chutes à Alexandrie, les eaux pourraient s'écouler, comme si de pareils travaux pouvaient modifier la rivière à sa source. Cependant le Sénateur paraît être de cette opinion. J'ai assez de bon sens pour savoir qu'un pareil effet ne peut être obtenu. Si le lit de la Rivière était sur un plan incliné, de manière que le courant pût avoir une grande vitesse cette opinion serait correcte. Mais tel n'est pas le cas. La partie septentrionale de la Louisiane a surgi comme par magie. Là où était un désert s'étend aujourd'hui un jardin fleuri.

Le Sénteur n'a pas connu les difficultés et les périls qui entourent l'homme qui marche à tatons à la lumière douteuse de l'aurore de la civilisation, autrement il serait plus disposé à appuyer ce bill. Je répète que la partie septentrionale de la Louisiane est un nouveau pays. Elle est entreprenante et prospère; mais, pendant les eaux basses, elle est privée de toute communication avec le reste du monde. La conséquence est que, dans cette saison, les prix deviennent exorbitants. La farine, par exemple se vend $15 le baril, tandis qu'à la ville on peut l'avoir pour $5. Les habitants demandent que cet état de choses cesse. Ils demandent que ces barres qui obstruent la navigation disparaissent. Ce bill a pour effet d'établir des facilités de communication pour la navigation. J'espère que le Sénat l'appuiera.

M. Kenner—Je ne désire pas prendre part à une discussion scientifique, attendu que l'on sait que je ne suis pas un homme de science. Je demanderai au sénateur ce que c'est que la science ? Il ne répond pas Je me vois alors forcé de tirer une conclusion défavorable, et de présumer qu'il ne sait pas ce que science veut dire. Il est très-facile de jouer la dignité lorsqu'on ne peut pas répondre. Le sénateur aurait répondu s'il l'avait pu. Quel est l'objet de ce bill ? De donner l'usage d'un de nos bateaux pour un certain objet qui ne coûtera pas un sou au trésor. Le bateau est destiné simplement à remuer le sable de manière à ce qu'il puisse être emporté par le courant. Par ce moyen le chenal serait ouvert et la navigation deviendrait possible. Si nos bateaux n'étaient pas employés à ce travail sur la Rivière Rouge, ils le seraient sur un autre point. Si ce travail ne peut pas être achevé en une année, commençons-le et faisons tout ce que nous pourrons. Les barres de la Rivière Rouge deviennent chaque jour plus considérables. Il faut qu'elles disparaissent. Les hommes les mieux renseignés, bien qu'ils n'aient peut-être pas autant de science que le sénateur, disent que le moyen de rendre la rivière navigable est de faire disparaître ces obstacles, de remuer le sable et de le faire emporter par le courant. Le bateau peut être occupé à ce travail pendant quelque temps, probablement pendant toute la durée des eaux basses; mais à quoi tout cela aboutit-il ? Comme ce que l'on demande est si peu de chose; puisqu'on ne demande aucune dépense additionnelle, je pense que nous devrions adopter le bill.

M. King—Ce n'est pas à cause de la dépense que je combats le bill, je ne désire pas que nos ressources soient employées à une entreprise impraticable, faite sans relevé préalable, sans avoir obtenu l'opinion de personnes compétentes.

Maintenant quand au malheureux usage que l'on a fait du mot «Science,» ce n'est pas moi qui l'ai employé, le Sénateur est le premier qui l'ait mis en avant. Je ne prétends pas être un homme de science, mais je prétends être un admirateur de la science. Je n'essaie pas de courtiser des préjugés vulgaires en ridiculisant la science ou les hommes de science. Je ne descendrai jamais aussi bas que cela. Je ne serais pas surpris de voir un membre présenter un bill faisant un crime du fait d'employer le mot science dans cette enceinte.

M. Boatner—Les objections du Sénateur sont fondées sur une erreur, quand à la nature de ces cours d'eau. La science est une excellente chose, mais elle est quelquefois en désaccord avec les connaissances pratiques. L'une alors doit céder, l'autre l'emporter. Je connais bien la rivière Ouachita. J'ai voyagé sur cette rivière en esquifs et en bateaux à vapeurs. Il n'y a que trois barres jusqu'à Monroe, et si elles disparaissaient l'effet que redoute le Sénateur n'aurait pas lieu.

Digitized by Google

J'espère que le bill sera adopté. Le Sénateur de Caddo a fait un tableau fidèle des maux auxquels nous sommes soumis pendant la saison des eaux basses; il a représenté avec raison les prix énormes que nous avons à payer pour les objets de première nécessité. Je le répète, j'espère que le Sénateur retirera ses objections et ne combattra plus le bill.

Le bill est adopté.

JEUDI, 28 avril 1853.

Le bill du revenu est pris en considération.

M. Nicholls demande l'appel nominal sur l'adoption définitive du bill. Il déclare qu'il votera contre.

Le bill relatif aux cautions de William R. Stiles est de nouveau pris en considération.

M. Nichols.—Je suis opposé en principe au bill. Ces messieurs ont fourni un cautionnement; ils doivent être liés par leur contrat. Il serait inutile d'exiger des cautionnements, si à chaque session de la législature, nous délions les cautions de leurs engagements. Aussi bien serait-ce de rappeler toutes les lois relatives au cautionnement,

M. McCay.—Comme je l'ai déjà dit, le bill n'a pas pour objet de détruire le cautionnement. Le cautionnement conservera son plein effet, mais les circonstances de l'affaire semblent reclamer l'intervention favorable de la legislature. Ces messieurs se sont engagés pour la somme de $28,000 sur le bon fourni par le collecteur de taxes. Aux termes de la loi de 1848, l'auditeur était autorisé à lancer immédiatement une exécution contre les cautions sans leur donner les moyens de se défendre. La loi exigeait que le collecteur de taxes fît un rapport dans les cinq premiers jours de chaque mois, à défaut de quoi l'exécution était lancée. Les cautions prirent une injonction s'appuyant sur ce que la loi était inconstitutionnelle. Elles avaient au préalable donné avis à l'auditeur de forcer Stiles à se conformer aux dispositions de la loi.

La Cour de District décida en leur faveur et rendit l'injonction absolue. L'Etat fit appel. L'avocat-général déclara à plusieurs reprises qu'il n'avait pas l'espoir d'obtenir un jugement. Néanmoins, pendant l'été, au mois de juin, l'affaire fut appelée et décidée contre les cautions. Eh bien, quel est l'objet du bill? C'est de mettre de côté l'exécution lancée par l'auditeur et de laisser l'affaire être plaidée de manière que les cautions puissent faire valoir leurs moyens de défense. L'Etat n'y peut rien perdre, parceque l'hypothèque résultant du cautionnement subsiste toujours. Nous ne voulons que donner aux cautions une chance de présenter leurs moyens de défense. Cette affaire présente encore une autre particularité. Il est en preuve par le dossier, que la Cour Suprême ordonna que la Cour de District examinerait l'affaire quand à la question de faits. La question semblait rouler sur le droit qu'avait l'auditeur de lancer une exécution. Les faits prouvent que l'auditeur fut notifié par écrit d'exiger le rapport requis par la loi dans les cinq premiers jours de chaque mois. Si cela avait été fait, le montant soustrait eût été fort petit. Si le chiffre réclamé des cautions s'est augmenté par suite de la négligence de l'auditeur. Les cautions doivent avoir la chance de faire valoir leur défense, même en supposant qu'elles ne soient pas entièrement déliées. Je ne puis croire que le Sénat prendra avantage d'un moyen technique pour lier les parties. Une caution peut tirer avantage d'un pareil moyen, mais à coup sûr, un Etat souverain ne peut s'abaisser à de pareils moyens. Des individus peuvent plaider la prescription, l'Etat ne le peut pas. Prenez le cas d'un nègre qui avait été emprisonné, il y a vingt ans; malgré ce long laps de temps, nous avons accordé une indemnité. Je vous demande de ne pas prendre avantage de cette fiction de la loi. Son absence est la faute des cautions, mais en fait, l'avocat seul est à blâmer. Par la loi stricte, j'admets que l'Etat a un jugement, mais la question est si nous devons nous en tenir à ce jugement seulement parce que nous l'avons obtenu.

M. Hodge—Comme j'étais membre du comité spécial auquel avait été référé ce bill et que j'ai différé d'opinion avec la majorité, je pense qu'il est de mon devoir de donner les motifs de mon opinion. J'espérais être à même de produire le jugement de la Cour Suprême, mais comme je n'ai pu le faire, je me contenterai d'en présenter les motifs brièvement. J'ai là la décision de la Cour Suprême afin de la prendre pour guide dans l'examen de cette affaire. Il paraît qu'en 1847 cet individu W. K. Stiles fut nommé collecteur de taxes et fournit caution.

Aux termes de la loi de 1847, l'Auditeur avait le droit, dès qu'il connaissait qu'un officier était concussionnaire de lancer une exécution contre l'officier et ses caution. Il paraît que Stiles était en retard pour le rapport qu'il devait faire. L'auditeur lança son exécution.

Le rapport fait sur cette exécution fut qu'on ne lui connaissait aucune propriété. Exécution fut alors lancée contre les cautions. Elles prirent une injonction. Autant que je peux m'en souvenir, aucune opposition ne fut faite à l'injonction dans le moment, parce que l'injonction n'avait pas été lancée en temps convenable.

Le juge de district décida en faveur des cautions, sur le motif que l'exécution aurait dû être lancée contre elles et le collecteur en même temps. Le Sénateur aurait pu se dispenser de parler autant de moyens techniques, puisque les cautions elles-mêmes n'échappent que par un moyen technique. Le juge de district parla du pouvoir extraordinaire et terrible donné par la loi à l'Auditeur et exprima quelque doute sur la constitutionnalité de ce pouvoir. Mais néanmoins il ne décida l'affaire que sur un point technique. Après la lecture de la décision de la Cour Suprême, je n'ai plus douté que justice n'aie été rendue. La décision est très-longue, mais il me semble qu'en fait il est suffisant de prouver au Sénat que, s'il y avait eu aucun fondement dans les réclamations des cautions, la Cour aurait décidé en leur faveur. La décision fut rendue par le juge Preston, dont la bonté est proverbiale. Il passa en revue les arguments du juge de district et les réfuta complètement.

M. Mc Cay—Le Sénateur verra qu'aucun défendeur ne parut pour les cautions.

M. Hodge—L'opinion n'établit pas que l'affaire fut plaidée en Cour, et, comme le Sénateur le dit, je ne doute pas qu'elle ne l'a pas été. Mais il me semble qu'elle l'a été sur mémoire. Je me croirais tenu de voter contre le bill, même si les avocats n'avaient pas dit un mot.

Ce n'est pas l'affaire de l'Etat de fournir des avocats aux parties qu'elles poursuivent. Je suis fâché pour les cautions; mais je connais la loi, et je sais que l'Auditeur avait le droit d'agir comme il l'a fait. Maintenant on demande de soustraire les cautions aux effets de la loi de 1847.

Que cette somme fut exorbitante c'est ce que je nierai pas. Le collecteur était concussionnaire. La seule défense qu'opposèrent les cautions furent que l'Auditeur ne lança pas l'exécution en temps opportun! La Cour Suprême répond qu'il n'était pas tenu de la lancer en même temps qu'il la lançait contre le collecteur. C'est précisément la question qui fut décidée à la Cour Suprême.

M. King—En supposant que tout ce qui avait été dit touchant les obligations des cautions fût prouvé, devons nous, comme Shylock, nous en tenir rigoureusement à notre "Bound". Même si la loi est telle qu'on l'a représentée, (bien que les parties prétendent que leurs droits n'ont pas été défendus devant la Cour Suprême), devons-nous opter pour Shylock et demander jusqu'à la dernière goutte de sang. La somme est très-forte. Elle est de $34,000, somme dont la perte peut porter la désolation dans beaucoup de familles. S'il y avait le moindre soupçon que les cautions eussent agi de connivence avec le concussionnaire et tiré projet de ses actes, alors je repousserais leur demande.

Mais leur haute réputation de probité, le fait qu'en bons citoyens, ils prévinrent l'auditeur du danger, lorsque ce fonctionnaire s'endormait à son poste, ces faits ne permettent peu un pareil soupçon. Cette considération doit avoir un grand poids. Admettons les objections qui ont été mises en avant, cependant lorsque les cautions se présentent et demandent non par une décharge, mais par la permission de se faire entendre devant une cour de justice, comment pouvons nous avec équité repousser leur demande? Ce qu'il s'agit d'accorder n'est pas sans précédent. Nous avons, en maintes occasions, déchargé les cautions de personnes accusées de crimes très graves. Il est à ma connaissance personnelle que Styles a subi un long emprisonnement. Allons nous poursuivre des parties innocentes qui n'ont eu rien à faire avec le crime. Je me rappelle une affaire semblable. Lorsque Morgan était collecteur du port de la Nouvelle Orléans, il devint concessionnaire pou la somme de $100,000. Le gouvernement se convainquit qu'il n'y avait rien à reprocher aux cautions et les decharg.a. C'est là un bon précédent. Il est vrai que la somme dans cette affaire est considérable mais ce n'est là qu'une raison de plus pour nous encourager à l'indulgence.

Digitized by Google

Le bill restreignant la juridiction de la Cour Suprême dans les affaires civiles aux questions de fait est prix en consideration.

M. Hodge—Ce bill a cté référé au comité judiciaire et a été l'objet d'un examen approfondi. Il a été rédigé d'après les avis d'un avocat distingué qui vient d'être récemment élu à la Cour Suprême. Je puis dire avec assurance que les neuf dixième du barreau de la Louisiane sont en faveur de cette disposition. Le principe sur lequel repose le bill a été discuté dans la convention et n'a été exclu de la Constitution que par une faible majorité. L'on pensa qu'il valait mieux laisser la décision à la Législature. Une objection que fait naître le systeme actuel est qu'il est difficile pour les juges de connaître les faits de manière à les décider avec certitude. L'opinion de tous les jurisconsltes de l'Etat est que la juridiction de la Cour Suprême devrait être restreinte aux questions de droit et les writs devrait être laissés aux jurys. Leur jugement sur la question de fait devrait être final ; tandis que, dans les affaires civiles, la Cour Suprême est investie du pouvoir oxtraordinaire de renverser le verdict des jurys, et ce pouvoir lui est refusé dans les affaires criminelles. S'il est mieux de donner à la Cour Suprême le droit de réexaminer la question de fait, et, s'il est vrai que les jurys ne sont pas dignes de confiance dans les affaires civiles, pourquoi le seraient-ils dans les affaires criminelles ?

Personne ne doute que les juris ne soient plus compétents à décider les questions de fait. Ils voient les témoins, observent leur contenance, et leurs observations ainsi faites sont des sources de lumière. Un témoignage mis par écrit est tout-à-fait incolore. Si nous donnons aux juges de la Cour Suprême le droit de juger les questions de droit nous abolissons virtuellement le jugement par jury, parce que le témoignage par écrit ne peut presenter cette certitude qu'offre l'examen oral. De plus le système actuel crée une forte dépense, une grande perte de temps, puisqu'il est nécessaire de prendre tous les témoignages par écrit. Ce seul fait rend les sessions des Cours neuf fois plus longues qu'elles ne le seraient autrement. Si le bill est reconnu défectueux dans la pratique, il sera facile de le rappeler. J'espère que le Sénat l'adoptera. C'est faire injure aux jures que de dire qu'ils ne sont pas capables de decider une question de fait.

M. Kittridge—J'espère que le bill ne passera pas. Ce bill rendrait impossible aucun jugement final dans la partie que j'habite. L'affaire serait plaidée cinquante fois, et les parties auraient à subir de plus fortes dépenses par ces allées et venues de la meme affaire qu'elles n'en ont dans le système actuel.

M. Short— Je pense avec le sénateur de Caddo qu'il est absolument nécessaire de modifier la loi de la Louisiane à ce sujet. J'ai été moi-même témoin des inconvénients qui resultent de la mise à néant des verdicts de juris sur les questions de fait. Si la Cour Suprême avait les mêmes moyens d'arriver à la vérité que les juris, la difference ne serait pas grande. Les juges ont sans doute des idées du droit plus justes et par conséquent et sont plus aptes à juger une affaire. Mais la valeur d'un témoignage dépend fréquemment de la manière dont le témoin la donne. S'il était permis de donner dägwerréotypement à la Cour Suprême le témoignage et toute les circonstances qui l'entourent, il n'y aurait alors aucune difficulté, mais il n'en est pas ainsi. Dans l'état actuel des choses la déposition d'un témoin de mauvaise foi peut avoir autant de poids que celle du témoin le plus honnête. Ajoutez à cela la perte de temps et d'argent. Je voterai pour le Bill.

M. Nicholls—Je suis opposé au bill. L'adopter serait pour ainsi dire établir un déni de justice perpétuel. Il faut bien se rappeler que notre système de jurisprudence diffère entièrement de celui des autres Etats. Les points en litige sont tellement confondus qu'il est presqu'impossible de les distinguer les uns des autres. Il est presqu'impossible que justice soit rendue par un jury dans les affaires civiles. Mon expérience me conduit à croire que, sous l'empire de ce bill, dans plusieurs sections de l'Etat, les frais n'en seraient qu'augmentés.

M. Kenner—Je désire mentionner un fait. Dans la convention, cette question a été discutée avec talent. Quiconque en doute n'a qu'à lire les rapports du comité judiciaire dont Randell Hunt était président et dont MM. Roselius, Richardson et autres faisaient partie.

Tous les arguments avancés par le Sénateur se sont produits devant la convention avec une force et une clarté bien supérieures, je peux le dire sans injure, à tout ce qui a été dit ici sur le même sujet. Là la question fut traitée à loisir Elle ne se présenta pas à la fin de la session, à l'époque où chacun désirait retourner chez soi, au contraire, elle fut discutée à une époque où l'on avait tout le temps de l'etudier à fond.

M. Hodge—Le rapport du comité ne fut-il pas favorable à sa proposition ?

M. Kenner.—Je puis dire que le rapport de M Hunt, tel qu'il le présente, fut adopté à l'unanimité. Il peut y avoir eu un rapport de la minorite, mais je n'en ai pas le souvenir. Je ne relate ces faits que pour montrer que le sujet a été discute et si je ne présente pas maintenant d'argument contre la proposition, c'est simplement parce que je ne veux pas occuper le temps du Sénat et non parce qu'il n'y pas de de bons arguments à opposer.

Le bill est déposé indefiniment sur le bureau.

MESSAGE ENVOYE A LA CHAMBRE.

Le messager spécial du Senat informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans:

Acte pour remettre à Joseph Walker une somme d'argent restant au trésor comme lui appartenant.

Acte pour emanciper Joseph Ard et John T. Ard, mineurs, de la paroisse de Washington.

Acte pour autoriser et enjoindre à l'ingénieur de l'Etat de retirer du canal de la Rivière Rouge et de la rivière Ouachita des bancs de sable qui en gênaient la navigation.

Acte pour autoriser Asahel Curtis à construire un chemin à barrière de péage, de Point Pleasant à la rivière Bœuf.

Acte accordant certains pouvoirs au maire de la ville de Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour pourvoir à l'enregistrement des étampes pour marquer les animaux.

Acte pour amender la 3me section d'un acte intitulé «acte pour autoriser les proprietaires de plantations et d'autres terres, à se protéger eux mêmes contre l'inondation, approuvé le 18 mars 1853.»

Et que le Sénat a donne son concours à l'acte suivant en l'amendant :

Acte pour pourvoir au support du gouvernement de cet Etat.

Et que le Sénat a donné son concours aux actes suivans:

Acte pour autoriser l'auditeur et le trésorier d'Etat à placer certains fonds des écoles au crédit des paroisses qui y ont droit.

Acte pour régler le salaire et les dépenses contingentes de l'ingénieur d'Etat.

Acte relatif à la sauvegarde et à la conservation des armes de l'Etat dans les arsenaux publics de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Et il demande le concours de la Chambre pour les actes suivans:

Acte accordant une compensation à J. N. Carrigan, surintendant de l'education publique de l'Etat.

Acte pour venir au secours des securités de Wm. K. Stiles.

Acte relatif aux avis publics.

M. Derbès, du comité aux enrôlements, ayant rapporté comme correctement enrôlés les actes suivans, le messager spécial est requis de les rapporter immédiatement à la Chambre comme signés par le président.

Acte pour régler et définir les devoirs de trésorier de paroisse.

Acte supplémentaire à un acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts judiciaires.

Acte pour venir au secours de Wm. Long.

Acte pour incorporer la ville de Mount-Lebanon.

Acte concernant la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, le titre est amendé de manière à être conçu comme suit :

Digitized by Google

Acte pour étendre les lois de la Nouvelle-Orléans sur ses limites actuelles.

Acte pour émanciper Robert Scott Pyburn, de la paroisse d'Est Bâton-Rouge.

Acte relatif à l'élection des greffiers de cours de districts de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé : « Acte pour augmenter le nombre des jurés dans les paroisses de St-Bernard et de Plaquemines, de quarante-huit à soixante-dix, approuvé le 11 mars 1852. »

Acte pour émanciper Wm Desdemona et Elizabeth Robertson, enfans de George Robertson h. c. l., de la paroisse d'Est Bâton-Rouge.

Acte pour pourvoir à la vente d'une moitié indivise d'une portion de terre située dans la paroisse de St-Landry, et réclamée par l'Etat

Acte pour venir au secours de B. L. Hodge, de la paroisse de Caddo.

M. Derbès du comité aux enrôlements, ayant rapporté les actes suivans comme correctement enrôlés, le messager spécial est requis de demander pour eux la signature de l'orateur :

Acte donnant aux juris de police juridiction sur les arrondissements, levées, chemins et autres travaux publics.,

Acte pour améliorer la navigation du bayou Barthélemy.

Acte pour amender les actes intitulés « Acte pour incorporer la ville de Jefferson, approuvé le 2 mars 1850, et Acte incorporant la ville de Jefferson, approuvé le 11 mars 1852. »

Acte pour régler les sessions des cours de district

Acte pour incorporer la compagnie du chemin en planches de Grosse-Tête et de Bâton-Rouge.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours à l'acte suivant :

Acte pour amender un acte intitulé « Acte pour pourvoir à l'organisation des corporations de cet Etat, approuvé le 30 avril 1847, »

La communication suivante est reçue du gouverneur et lue.

BUREAU DE L'EXECUTIF,
Bâton-Rouge, 28 avril 1853.

A l'Hon. Senat de la Louisiane.

Je vous transmets ci-inclus, une copie de la lettre de résignation de M. Pierre Soulé comme Sénateur de la Louisiane au Congrès.

Très-respectueusement
Votre serviteur.
Signé : P. O. HEBERT,
Gouverneur de l'Etat de la Louisiane

Washinton, 11 avril 1853.

A son Excellence P. O. Hébert,
Gouverneur de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Monsieur,

Ayant accepté aujourd'hui la charge d'envoyé extraordinaire et ministre plénipotentiaire des Etats-Unis à la cour d'Espagne, auquel le président m'a nommé, il est de mon devoir de résigner, et je résigne maintenant entre vos mains le siège que m'avait assigné la Louisiane dans le Sénat de la nation

Profondement pénétré des obligations que je dois à mon Etat chéri pour toute l'importance politique dont j'ai joui, je me retire de son service avec le plus profond regret, et demande la permission de lui offrir par votre entremise, ma reconnaissance pour toutes les faveurs qu'elle m'a conferées et mes souhaits ardents pour son honneur, sa prospérité et sa grandeur.

Avec profond respect, votre obéissant serviteur, PIERRE SOULE.

SESSION CONJOINTE.

Le messager spécial informe le Sénat que la Chambre était prête à recevoir le Sénat dans son enceinte pour procéder à l'élection d'un Sénateur au Congrès.

Le Sénat se rend dans l'enceinte de la Chambre des Représentans. L'appel nominal ayant été fait, il appert que soixante-dix-huit représentans sont présents et les senateurs suivans repondent à l'appel de leurs noms.

L'hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Gouverneur et président du Senat.

MM. Boatner, Burthe, Clifton, Derbès, Dupré, Evans, Griffin, Hodge, Kemp, Kenner, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, Martin, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, et Thériot, 29 Sénateurs.

M. Marks nomme M. John Slidell.

M. Burthe nomme l'Hon. F. G. Hunt comme candidat pour sénateur des Etats-Unis pour remplir la vacance occasionnée par la résignation de l'Hon. Pierre Soulé.

En comptant les votes donnés en balot joint il appert que :

L'Hon. John Slidell a reçu 70 voix.

L'Hon. F. G. Hunt a reçu 37 voix.

Le président du Sénat déclare l'Hon. John Slidell dûment élu Sénateur au Sénat des Etats-Unis pour le terme non expiré de l'Hon. P. Soulé, résigné.

VENDREDI, 29 avril 1853.

M. Kenner demande la prise en considération de la résolution suivante :

Résolu que la somme de 500 piastres soit payée à J. B. Walton, sur les fonds destinés aux dépenses casuelles du Sénat, comme rémunération des services qu'il a rendu en qualité de secrétaire temporaire à l'ouverture de la session du Sénat; et que la somme de trois cents piastres soit prise sur les mêmes fonds pour être payée à Jules Cassard, en récompense de ses services comme assistant-secrétaire à la même époque.

En réponse à la question d'un membre qui demande quels sont les services pour lesquels on demande une rémunération,

M. Kenner dit : Je ne puis spécifier les services en particulier, mais je sais qu'il est d'usage d'accorder une certaine somme aux officiers du Sénat, qui ont fidèlement rempli leurs devoirs. Je puis déposer du zèle avec lequel ces services ont été rendus, et je ne crois pas que ce soit le moment de rompre avec les précédents établis.

M. Mouton—Je ne me lève pas dans le but de combattre cette demande en particulier; mais je suis déterminé à ne sanctionner aucune demande de rémunération extraordinaire. Ce peut être un usage; mais l'usage est mauvais. Nos salaires sont fixes; ils sont connus des individus lorsqu'ils acceptent les places. Que ces officiers aient bien rempli leurs devoirs, c'est là un argument insoutenable. La Louisiane a le droit de s'attendre à ce que tous ses officiers fassent leur devoir; elle nomme ses officiers avec cette persuasion. Ce n'est pas une raison suffisante pour nous décider à accorder une rémunération additionnelle que les officiers ont rempli fidèlement leurs fonctions. Pour mériter cette rémunération additionnelle, l'officier doit avoir rendu des services additionnels. Mais lorsque le salaire était fixé par la loi, et qu'il le connaissait au moment ou il a accepté sa place, il n'a pas droit à rien demander de plus. Ces arguments ne s'appliquent pas spécialement à la personne pour laquelle la résolution est présentée; ils s'appliquent à toutes les demandes de la même nature. Elles sont toutes basées sur un faux principe. Aussi bien devrions nous voter une compensation additionnelle à nos avocats-de-districts, à nos juges, parce qu'ils ont fait leur devoir. J'entends le senateur de Caddo demander comment j'ai voté à propos du bill qui augmentait le salaire de l'avocat-général. C'est là une question toute differente.

En votant en faveur du bill, je n'ai pas voté pour une rémunération additionnelle; ce n'était pas parceque l'avocat-général avait bien fait son devoir, mais parce qu'on lui imposait des travaux additionnels. Hier, un bill ayant pour effet d'augmenter le salaire de l'arpenteur-général, a été présenté. Je l'ai combattu, parce que j'ai pensé que nous ne devions pas faire de pareilles exceptions; que c'était fournir des motifs de plainte aux autres officiers et à leurs amis, auxquels on n'accordait pas la même faveur. Je suis en faveur d'un bill général ayant pour bût d'augmenter tous les salaires qui sont trop faibles.

M. Kenner.—Le sénateur insiste beaucoup sur les mots de rémunération additionnelle. Cette résolution ne parle pas de rémunération additionnelle; c'est une rémunération accordée à ces messieurs pour être venus ici nous assister à l'ouverture de la session.

M. Hodge.—Il y a une autre raison qui doit nous décider à accorder cette rémunération. Car le bill général d'allocation de la dernière session, une somme de $200 fut allouée pour payer le salaire de l'officier en question. Il vint ici pour l'ouverture de la session, perdit son temps, et changea tous les arrangements qu'il avait précédemment pris pour ses propres affaires.

Digitized by Google

La discussion se poursuit, puis la résolution est adoptée.

Une résolution est présentée par M. Millard, accordant $500 de rémunération additionnelle à A. Lavison, assistant-secrétaire

M. Kenner fait la motion d'insérer $700 pour Horatio Davis, lequel amendement est accepté.

M. Mouton —Je regrette de me voir forcé de combattre cette résolution, mais si nous accordons cette somme à ces officiers, nous avons à donner quelque chose aux autres officiers Nous avons à donner des rémunérations additionnelles à nos commis, nos traducteurs, notre portier, notre sergent d'armes, etc. Ne sont-ils pas de bons et fidèles officiers ; pourquoi ne seraient-ils pas aussi rémunérés ? c'est là un précédent, à l'aide duquel on justifiera plus tard le gaspillage des fonds de l'Etat. Je dénonce cette doctrine de rémunérations additionnelles Si les salaires que nous payons sont trop faibles, augmentons les dès maintenant. Nous comptons que tous les fonctionnaires de l'Etat font leur devoir, et cette fidelité à remplir leurs devoirs ne peut être avancée comme une raison suffisante pour leur accorder une compensation additionnelle. Voyez le rapport du dernier trésorier d'Etat, un homme qui occupe une haute position dans son parti; voyez ce qu'il dit, voyez comme il dénonce cet usage. Peu m'importe si ma conduite sera approuvée, tant que je croirai avoir pour moi le bon droit. Je demande l'appel nominal, attendu que je veux faire enrégistrer mon vote contre la résolution, bien que ces Messieurs soient mes amis politiques.

Après quelques débats, la résolution est adoptée.

M. Lewis demande la prise en considération du bill à l'effet d'augmenter le salaire du greffier de la cour du premier district.

M. McCay.—J'expliquerai la nature et l'objet de ce bill. Le salaire du greffier de cette cour a été jusqu'à présent de $1500 par an. La cour avait une juridiction concurrente avec les autres cours en affaires civiles. Les frais provenant de ces affaires joints à $1500 constituent un salaire suffisant pour le greffier et les deux députés dont les services sont indispensables. En sus de ces deux commis, il lui faut un commis aux minutes et un commis aux subpœnas, La Législature a enlevé à la cour de district la juridiction civile, conséquemment, il y a trois individus, le greffier et ses députés qui doivent vivre sur ce salaire annuel de $1500.

Nous avons retranché la juridiction civile de la cour, parceque nous avons pensé qu'elle avait à faire autant qu'elle le pouvait. Nous devrions lui donner au moins $4000 : $2500 pour le greffier et $750 pour chacun de ses députés. Ce serait encore un salaire fort modéré.

Si nous ne le lui accordons pas, cette cour perdra de sa valeur. Je me suis opposé à ce qu'on enlevât à cette cour sa juridiction civile, parceque je savais que l'Etat aurait à payer d'autant plus, Je pense avec le juge Larue, dont j'ai ici la lettre, qu'aucun homme compétent ne consentirait à remplir ces fonctions pour la somme de $1500. Nous devons augmenter le salaire.

M. Mouton.—J'ai l'intention de voter contre ce bill. Quand le bill judiciaire fut présenté, la Nouvelle-Orléans demanda une cour additionnelle. Cette cour lui a été accordée. Elle demanda un salaire de $3500 pour ses juges. Cela encore fut accordé. Quand le bill ayant pour but d'organiser les cours dans les différentes paroisses, fut pris en considération, je demandai un salaire de $3000 pour les juges. Ce chiffre fut repoussé et réduit à $2500. Aujourd'hui, un greffier de cour à la Nouvelle-Orléans demande $4000. Un greffier de cour! La Législature accordera-t-elle $4000 à un greffier de cour lorsqu'elle a refusé $3000 aux juges de la campagne? J'ai voté contre la proposition d'enlever à la première cour de district la juridiction civile, parceque je savais que la cour pouvait s'occuper de ces sortes d'affaires. Les représentants de la Nlle-Orléans étaient divisés sur cette question. S'ils ne l'avaient point été, la juridiction civile eût été conservée à cette cour, et par là, le salaire du greffier eût été suffisant. Dans les autres paroisses, les greffiers sont payés par leurs paroisses respectives.

M. Derbès—Voici quelle a été ma manière d'envisager la question à laquelle on vient de faire allusion. J'ai désiré que les cours de la ville fussent organisées de manière à satisfaire les membres de la campagne. J'ai voté avec la majorité des membres de la campagne sur la loi du judiciaire pour la ville. J'étais opposé à ce que la juridiction civile fut enlevée à la première cour de district.

Dans le Sénat, la délégation de la ville était opposée à cette proposition. Mais si ce bill n'est pas adopté, ce sera pour ainsi dire fermer la première Cour de District. Le greffier est obligé d'avoir des députés, et, s'il ne reçoit que mille piastres par an, qu'est ce qui restera au commis ! Vous ne pouvez avoir un homme capable pour moins de $2,000 et il est juste qu'il soit payé en même temps que ses employés le sont. Si vous n'adoptez pas ce bill, autant vaut laisser la cour sans greffier.

M. Mc Cay—Si je ne me trompe, un bill a été adopté à cette session qui donne aux paroisses les amendes et les forfaitures encourues pour les contraventions aux lois pénales.

M. Kenner—Je demanderai au Sénateur si le greffier ne reçoit pas un casuel dans les affaires criminelles on a beaucoup appuyé sur ce que nous avons enlevé le casuel dans les affaires civiles ; mais le greffier n'en a-t-il pas un dans les affaires criminelles. L'on m'a dit que ce casuel s'élevait jusqu'à $4000 par an.

M. Lewis—J'ai été shérif pendant 6 ans, et comme tel, c'est à moi que revenaient les droits à percevoir dans les affaires criminelles Je puis assurer le Sénat que ces droits ne s'élevaient pas à vingt piastres par mois.

M. Kenner—Je connais le bon cœur du Sénateur et sais qu'il aimerait mieux lâcher un criminel que de le presser pour les droits qui lui reviennent. Si le bill est amendé de manière à ce que la ville paie le greffier, comme Ascension paie le sien, je ne le combattrai pas.

M. Hodge—Comme nous avons donné aux paroisses les amendes et forfaitures dans les affaires criminelles, et cela pour le même objet, il est juste que nous les appliquions de manière à les faire servir à l'objet de la donation.

M. Derbès—Il est vrai que les paroisses de la campagne paient leurs greffiers, mais leurs cours ont à la fois des affaires civiles et des affaires criminelles. S'il en était autrement elles ne pourraient le faire.

M. Kenner—Les motifs sur lesquels je m'appuie, sont ceux-ci. Le juge de la cour du premier district nous a fait savoir qu'il n'avait pas assez à faire, que pendant plusieurs jours de la semaine il était sans occupation. Il voulait être occupé et pour cette raison désirait garder sa juridiction civile. Nous la lui avons enlever cependant, et maintenant on nous demande de donner $4,000 à une cour qui déjà n'a pas assez à faire !

M. Derbès.— J'ai toujours été opposé à ce que l'on enlevât à cette cour sa juridiction civile. Il est vrai que les amendes et les forfaitures dans les affaires criminelles ont été données aux paroisses, mais qui peut dire qu'elles seront suffisantes ? Qui peut prétendre que la ville doit payer pour des affaires qui regardent l'Etat en propre ? Pourquoi aurait-elle à supporter cette dépense ?

M. Lewis—Je puis dire avec assurance que le casuel dans les affaires criminelles ne s'élèvera pas à cent piastres par mois.

M. Kenner— C'est parce qu'il n'est pas collecté Mais si nous forçons la ville à payer le greffier de ses propres fonds, nous ne verrons plus prendre pour cautions des hommes de paille, ce qui est aujourd'hui si fréquent.

Le bill est adopté avec un amendement.

Le bill de la Chambre ayant pour but de diviser l'Etat en districts congressionnels est pris en considération.

Le président décide que, comme le bill n'était pas à l'ordre, un vote des deux tiers était nécessaire pour qu'il fut pris en considération.

Sur motion, le Sénat se réunit en session exécutive.

Les portes ayant été ouvertes, le bill est de nouveau appelé et le président répète sa décision.

M. McCay.— Je fais appel de la décision du président.

M. Kenner.—Est-ce là la marche à suivre ? Le sénateur fait appel, et pourquoi ? Le président a décidé et conformément à l'esprit et à la lettre de l'article 60 du réglement. Le sénateur a fait appel parce qu'il sait qu'il a une majorité et qu'il peut faire mettre de côté la décision du président.

Digitized by Google

M. McCay—L'objet de la majorite est de faire marcher les affaires. C'est dans ce but que les réglements sont faits. Quand on les emploie pour entraver les délibérations, nous avons le droit de les suspendre.

M. Martin—Le sénateur semble croire que nous sommes une minorité factieuse, et il nous fait la leçon. Les réglements sont faits pour protéger la minorité. Cette proposition est une insulte faite au president. Une juste estimation de votre dignité devrait vous engager à abandonner votre fauteuil. Je répète que c'est une insulte que l'on vous fait.

M. Nicholls— La question est simple et n'offre aucun doute. La majorité sait que votre décision est juste. Il y a assez d'indépendance dans le parti démocratique pour empêcher l'accomplissement d'un pareil outrage. Je connais quelques uns des membres de ce parti, et je sais qu'ils ne se rangeront jamais en faveur d'une pareille mesure. Je sais qu'il y en a quelques uns ici qui ont refusé de se retirer pour faire cesser le quorum, et je ne pense pas qu'ils donneront la main à de pareilles menées.

M. Patterson—Oui, et comme l'un de ceux qui n'ont pas eu recours à cette mesure, je vous demande si vous voulez faire aujourd'hui ce que vous avez condamné alors? Vous avez reproché alors aux membres d'entraver les travaux du Sénat et aujourd'hui vous cherchez à faire la même chose.

M. Nicholls—Notre conduite peut être factieuse, mais elle est autorisée par les réglements. Nous ne briserons certainement jamais un quorum, quelle que soit la conduite de la majorité.

M. Short—J'ai quelques mots à dire sur ce sujet. Il me paraît que ces messieurs se jouent des intérêts du peuple. Nous voici arrivés à la fin de la session, et ils ne devraient pas agir ainsi. Ils devraient aborder la question franchement. Si le bill est juste, qu'ils l'appuient, s'il est mauvais qu'ils le repoussent. Mais pourquoi recourir à des moyens de cette nature, pour entraver la législation. Je demande aux sénateurs si cette conduite est franche, si le peuple doit l'approuver. Je ne demande pas mieux que de laisser toute la question à être décidée d'après les principes. La motion du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans est juste. A des maux extrêmes il faut des moyens extrêmes, et s'il en est besoin, je voterai pour la proposition. Quand les motifs d'opposition sont de ceux sur lesquels s'appuient nos adversaires, je suis d'avis de les combattre à outrance. Lorsque mon ennemi se sert de flèches empoisonnées, je suis d'avis d'employer les mêmes armes.

Dès le commencement j'ai été disposé à agir honorablement. Ceux qui agissent de cette façon pour entraver les délibérations, mènent une conduite indigne de Louisianais. Je n'ai jamais attaqué les motifs qui faisaient agir mes frères en Démocratie. Je me suis rangé du côté des whigs lorsque j'ai pensé qu'ils avaient raison. J'ai reconnu qu'en politique comme en autre part, l'honnêteté est la meilleure des politiques.

M. Kenner—Je pardonne au Sénateur les observations qu'il a fait à cause de cette dernière phrase à l'honnêteté politiques." Je sais que généralement il se laisse guider par le bon sens. Je puis répondre pour le parti. Whigs, nous voulons tuer ce bill parceque nous croyons qu'il est d'une honnête politique de le faire Il y a une vieille maxime française qui dit: qui n'entend qu'une cloche n'entend qu'un son. Les Sénateurs répètent fraction! faction! espérant faire croire que nous avons tort quand ils savent que nous avons raison. Eh bien! quel est l'état de la question? L'année dernière une loi fut passée divisant l'état en circonscriptions congressionnelles. Qu'y voyons-nous? Nous voyons les districts divisés de manière à représenter les intérêts distincts de l'Etat; le Commerce, le Sucre, le Coton, et les autres branches d'Agriculture. Nous pensâmes que les Districts devaient être divisés d'une manière homogène, selon la nature de leurs intérêts, de telle manière que, lorsqu'un représentant de la Louisiane se lève au Congrès il peut faire un Discours pour le District qu'il représente. Nous donnâmes un représentant à la paroisse d'Orléans Nous établîmes un district sucrier un district cotonnier et nous fûmes forcés d'en faire un qui représentait la culture du sucre du coton et des autres cultures. Nous les divisâmes, en ayant égard à la population, mais sans perdre de vue la nécessité de faire représenter chaque intérêt. Le parti démocratique arriva au pouvoir. Il rétablit les anciens districts. Chaque sénateur me comprendra quand je dirai que les démocrates divisèrent la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans en donnant la moitié à l'intérêt sucrier qui a son siége dans les paroisses inférieures.

M. Derbès—Je me lève pour une question d'ordre. Le sénateur discute-t-il la question qui est devant le Sénat?

M. Kenner—Si je ne suis pas à l'ordre, je m'arrêterai. Mais je suis convaincu que le sénateur a trop d'honneur pour vouloir m'empêcher de discuter cette question. S'il ne désire pas entendre mes raisons, libre à lui, et le plus tôt qu'en le saura, le mieux ce sera. Je désire seulement que mes commettants connaissent la vérité. Le bill dont j'ai parlé n'a tenu aucun compte du chiffre de la population. Dans leur soif de pouvoir, les auteurs du bill n'ont jamais songé à cette partie du sujet. Le 1er district représentatif aurait une population de 65,000 âmes, le second, 12,000. Voyez comme ils ont consulté la population et les différents intérêts, la justice et l'égalité. Ils disent au peuple dans le premier district: l'un de vous vaut autant que deux hommes dans le second. Ce bill était une échelle destinée à l'élévation de certains individus que l'on voulait envoyer au Congrès, sans égard à la justice ou à l'égalité. Mais cela même n'était pas assez outrageant pour la Chambre inférieure. Dans cet ancien quatrième district, connu sous le nom de district de Morse, parce que celui-ci le représenta pendant 6 ans, le peuple à la fin prit pour le représenter un vieillard qui avait les mêmes opinions.

L'on pensa qu'il pourrait être élu de nouveau. Qu'y avait-il à faire? Il fut décidé de retrancher Ste-Marie et St-Martin et de les ajouter non pas au district inférieur, mais au district supérieur. Et l'opposition à une mesure semblable est appelée factieuse! C'est un bill d'abomination. Nous connaissons les règlements et nous savons les interpréter. Je prends Dieu à témoin qu'il n'y a rien de factieux dans notre conduite. Je dis au parti whig: Je sais que vous avez raison; maintenez votre position et, par le Dieu Eternel, vous ne pouvez être condamnés. Retournez vers vos commettants, dites leur ce qui est arrivé, expliquez leur la position que vous avez prise, et ils approuveront votre conduite.

Tenez bon, je le répète, car si vous ne le faites pas vous êtes indignes d'être Sénateurs de la Louisiane. Tenez bon. Je vous dis que vous avez le bon droit pour vous; si vous maintenez votre position, je sais que vous serez soutenus. Je prendrai ma part de la responsabilité.

M. Derbès—J'ai voté pour fixer l'ajournement à demain, mais ces messieurs ne nous dirent pas alors qu'ils avaient l'intention de s'opposer à ce bill. Le Sénateur dit: c'est l'intention de la majorité d'ajouter Ste-Marie et St-Martin. Personne n'est plus opposé que moi à cette mesure—Le fait est que toute la conduite de ces messieurs, n'est qu'une opposition factieuse.

M. Martin—Je demanderai au Sénateur s'il n'a pas laissé le Sénat et brisé le quorum dans une certaine occasion C'était là faire une opposition plus factieuse que nous n'en saurions faire en restant à nos sièges.

M. Derbès—Quand le sujet viendra à la discussion, je montrerai au Sénateur que j'avais raison. J'agirai ainsi de nouveau.

M. Kenner—Je fais la motion de prendre en considération un bill important, le Bill relatif à la manière de compter les votes dans les élections des juges de la Cour suprême.

Le Président—Le Sénateur n'est pas à l'ordre.

M. Kenner—J'en appelle de la décision du Président et procéderai à montrer.

Le Président—Le fonds de la question n'est pas devant le Sénat, la question pendante est le point d'ordre.

M Kenner—Je voudrai savoir qui peut dire, qui peut deviner ce que je dis avant que je l'aie dit. Eh bien! d'après le réglement 36.

M. Derbès—Je voudrais savoir si le Sénateur est à l'ordre.

Le Président—On ne peut pas encore discuter la question au fonds.

M. Kenner—Je veux discuter non pas les mérites, mais les démérites de la question. Je désire montrer que le Présipent a tort. Ce bill declare que le Secrétaire d'Etat, le Trésorier et l'Auditeur devront procéder à une époque donnée.

Digitized by Google

M. Derbès.—J'en suis fâché ; mais je suis obligé de rappeler le sénateur à l'ordre. Jusqu'à ce que le président décide contre moi, je dois insister sur ce point.

M. Kenner.—Le sénateur doit mettre son objection par écrit. Je ne le comprend pas. Je disais donc que, suivant la Constitution, le Secrétaire d'Etat.....

M. Derbès.—J'appelle de nouveau le sénateur à l'ordre.

M. Kenner.—Je ne vois pas comment le sénateur peut savoir ce que je veux dire. Du moment que je lâche le mot de Secrétaire d'Etat, il me rappelle à l'ordre. Eh bien donc, le Secrétaire d'Etat....

M. Derbès.—Je rappelle le sénateur à l'ordre.

M. Martin.—Que le sénateur mette son objection par écrit.

M. Derbès.—Je ne sais comment je puis être forcé de mettre par écrit mon objection sur une question d'ordre quand je réfère à la question elle-même.

M. Hodge fait une motion d'ajournement. Elle est perdue.

M. Mouton.—Je donnerai notice demain de mon intention de présenter une résolution à l'effet de rappeler la résolution fixant l'ajournement à demain et à l'effet de fixer l'ajournement à jeudi, 4.

M. Martin—Le sénateur n'est pas à l'ordre. La parole est au sénateur de l'Ascension.

M. Kenner—Comme j'étais en train de le dire, quand je fus rappelé à l'ordre, l'article 66 de la Constitution.

M. Derbès—Je rappelle le sénateur à l'ordre, l'article 86 n'a rien à faire avec le point d'ordre.

M. Kenner—Je suis fâché que le sénateur ne me comprenne pas. Je n'ai pas parlé de l'article 86 mais de l'article 66. Cela ne montre-t-il pas qu'il ne sait pas ce que je disais ? Où donc est maintenant l'opposition factieuse ? Comme je le disais, quand on s'est si grossièrement mépris sur mes paroles, l'article, 66 dit : (Ici le sénateur lit l'article 66.) Eh bien, monsieur, ce bill dit :

M. Derbès—Je suis forcé de rappeler encore le sénateur à l'ordre. Il a adjuré les démocrates de ne pas voter contre la décision du président. Sa conduite est-elle différente ?

M. Kenner—Le sénateur doit être persuadé que je ne puis montrer l'erreur du président à moins que je n'avance un peu—pas beaucoup peut-être—sur le fond de la question. J'aime à appeler d'un tribunal inférieur à un tribunal supérieur. Si le sénateur n'est pas satisfait, je fais la motion d'ajourner.

M. Short—Les dernières paroles du sénateur ont été, si je ne me trompe, une motion d'ajournement.

M. Kenner—J'ai fait une motion d'ajourner avec l'intention de reprendre la parole demain. C'est une politesse que l'on fait d'usage à un membre, lorsqu'il n'a pu achever son discours et qu'il se sent fatigué.

La motion d'ajourner est perdue.

M. Derbès—Je demande la question préalable.

M. Martin—Je fais la motion d'ajourner à demain neuf heures et demie, et je demande l'appel nominal La motion est perdue.

M. Hodge—Je fais la motion d'ajourner à huit heures.

M. Short—Je prends la parole sur une question d'ordre. Quand une motion d'ajourner est faite et perdue, une autre motion du même genre est-elle à l'ordre à moins que dans l'intervalle on ne se soit occupé de quelqu'autre question ?

M. Martin—Où est la règle qui pose ce principe ? lisez le règlement.

M. Short—La règle est basée sur ce qu'il y a de plus imposant sur la terre, sur le sens commun.

M. Martin—Ce n'est pas le sens commun, c'est le réglement qui gouverne ici.

M. Short—J'ai vu que ce n'était pas le sens commun qui gouverne ici ; mais j'espère que cela changera.

M. Hodge—Si je suis à l'ordre, je ferai la motion de prendre en considération le bill du revenu.

M. McCay—Ce bill a déjà été adopté au Sénat et est devenu loi.

M. Hodge—Eh bien, le bill général d'allocation. C'est celui que je voulais dire.

La motion est perdue.

M. Hodge—Je fais la motion d'ajourner.

La motion est perdue.

M. Derbès—Je donne notice que demain je présenterai une résolution à l'effet de rapporter la règle du Sénat.

Sur motion, le Sénat se réunit en séance exécutive.

Les portes ayant été ouvertes, M. Hodge fait la motion d'ajourner.

La motion est perdue.

M. Derbès—Je fais la motion que le Sénat procède dans l'ordre régulier de ses travaux, parce qu'aussi long-temps que cette question n'aura pas été décidée, je croirai qu'il est de mon devoir de garder mon siége. Le résultat sera, que plus de cent bills n'auront pas été enrôlés au moment de l'ajournement.

M. Hodge—Je fais la motion de prendre en considération le bill général des allocations. Nous cherchons a empêcher l'adoption d'un certain bill ; ces messieurs tâchent de le faire passer. Il y a d'autres bills importants à discuter. Occupons nous en, ce ne sera une concession, ni de part ni d'autre.

M. Derbès.— Eh bien ! je donne avis au sénateur que nous ferons passer le bill.

M. Hodge—C'est ce que nous verrons.

M. Martin—Je fais la motion de prendre en considération le bill général des allocations.

M. Boatner— Je voudrais savoir s'il y a un pareil bill sur le bureau du secrétaire.

Le Secrétaire— Le bill général des allocations n'est pas ici. Il y a un bill pour venir en aide au trésorier de l'Etat.

M. Martin— Très bien ; c'est le bill dont je veux parler.

La motion est perdue.

M. Derbès— Je fais la motion de suivre le cours régulier de nos travaux.

M. Kenner—Avant d'aller plus loin, je soutiens que j'ai le droit de demander le rejet d'un bill qui a été lu ce matin, et je le fais.

Le Président—Le sénateur n'est pas à l'ordre.

M. Kenner— Je fais appel de la décision du président. L'article 38 dit : (Le sénateur lit l'article.) Je crois que j'ai pleinement le droit de faire la motion, et je ne puis dire la raison pour laquelle je fais cet appel, sans recourir à l'article 66 de la constitution. L'article 66 dit.....

M. Derbès— J'appelle le sénateur à l'ordre. J'appelle son attention sur l'article 12 du réglement. Je l'ai déjà lu ; mais il paraît que je n'ai pas été compris. Je pourrai peut-être mieux réussir cette fois. (Il lit l'article.)

M. Kenner— J'appelle l'attention du sénateur sur l'article qui exige que les mots injurieux soient mis par écrit.

M. Martin—Je ne comprends pas la question d'ordre. Je désire qu'elle soit mise par écrit.

M Short.— Je ne vois pas que la question d'ordre ait trait aux mots injurieux. J'espère que le sénateur ne voudrait pas faire usage d'un pareil langage.

M. Nicholls—Je fais la motion que nous ajournions jusqu'à demain à neuf heures.

La motion est perdue.

L'appel de M. Kenner de la décision du président est rejeté.

M. Nicholls— Je demande la prise en considération du bill à l'effet de venir au secours du trésorier de l'Etat.

Le Président— Je donne avis que je n'aurai aucun égard aux motions oiseuses ou à celles qui ont déjà été présentées.

M. Martin—La motion n'est pas oiseuse; elle n'est pas faite avec l'intention de manquer au respect dû au président. Nous n'avons nulle intention pareille. Le bill est d'une grande importance; et devrait être adopté sans délai.

La motion est perdue.

Le bill à l'effet de marquer les limites des cimetières de la rue du Canal à la Nouvelle-Orléans, vient à la discussion d'après l'ordre régulier.

Motion est faite d'ajourner. Elle est rejetée.

M. Martin fait la motion de rejeter le bill.

M. Kenner fait la motion de déposer la motion sur le bureau. Cette motion est emportée.

M. Martin—Je demande la suspension des réglements afin de faire passer le bill à sa seconde lecture. Je suis en faveur de ce bill.

Digitized by Google

M. Kenner fait la motion de déposer la motion sur le bureau. La motion est emportée.

M. Derbès—Je demande la prise en considération du bill relatif aux Districts Congressionnels, et je demande la question préalable.

M. Martin—Je demande l'ajournement jusqu'à 5 heures, afin de donner au secrétaire, au secrétaire-assistant, au rapporteur et à diverses autres personnes attachées à ce corps, le temps de se reposer. Prenons ce temps pour dîner et nous reposer, et, alors, s'il est nécessaire, nous pourrons apporter nos lits ici.

La motion est rejetée.

M. Derbès—Maintenant j'insiste pour la prise en considération de ma motion.

M. Kenner—Je désire connaître la question, comme membre du Sénat, j'ai le droit de la connaître.

Le Président—La question est sur la suspension des réglements.

M. Derbès—Le Président se trompe. Ce n'est pas là ma motion, j'ai demandé de prendre le bill en considération.

M. Kenner—Je soutiens que la motion n'est pas à l'ordre. Nous ne pouvons prendre le bill sans une suspension des réglements.

Le Président—Telle est la décision du président.

M. Kenner—Eh bien, je demande que la question soit mise par écrit, afin que nous puissions savoir sur quoi nous votons, afin que sachions que le sénateur fait la motion de prendre en considération un bill hors de son tour d'ordre; que le président a décidé qu'une suspension des réglements était nécessaire, et qu'un sénateur a fait appel de la décision du président. Je désire voir ces faits placés sur le journal.

M. Kenner.—J'insiste pour qu'il soit bien établi que le sénateur a fait la motion de prendre le bill hors de son tour de rôle. Il ne vient pas à l'ordre régulier. Conséquemment, il faut un vote des deux-tiers pour la prise en considération. Je désire que la décision du president soit bien connue.

M. Derbès.—Je n'ai pas fait la motion que le bill fût pris hors de son tour de rôle. J'ai simplement demandé que le bill fut pris en consideration.

M. Kenner—Je fais la motion de déposer l'appel sur le bureau. Je dirai en deux mots à mes adversaires que s'ils sont déterminés à faire une pareille chose, à renverser une decision qui est si éminemment juste, si claire, qu'un enfant peut la comprendre, ils ne peuvent le faire que d'une manière. Le sénateur a demandé que le bill fût pris hors de son tour de rôle. Le président a dit que cela ne pouvait se faire sans une suspension du réglement, laquelle requiert un vote des deux-tiers. Les sénateurs qui nous sont opposés peuvent pretendre que la decision n'est pas correcte. Je défie n'importe qui de se lever et de dire qu'elle n'est pas correcte. Maintenant, si vous êtes déterminés à voter contrairement à vos convictions, c'en est fait de nous. Il faut courber la tête sous le joug. Si vous êtes déterminés à le faire, si vous désirez seulement satisfaire l'ambition de deux ou trois personnes qui desirent aller au Congrès, eh bien, vous renverserez la décision du president.

Je repète que personne ne peut prétendre que la décision n'était pas correcte. Maintenant, quel sera le résultat d'une pareille conduite? J'en appelle à votre conscience, j'en appelle à ceux qui pensent avant d'agir; et je suis heureux d'en pouvoir compter quelques-uns ici. Je suis heureux de voir qu'il y a deux ou trois membres du côté opposé qui ont quelque respect pour le droit. J'en appelle à eux, je leur demande de faire usage de la raison. S'ils sont déterminés à faire une pareille chose, c'en est fait des droits de la minorite; elle n'est plus protégée, et le plus tôt qu'elle quittera cetteenceinte, le mieux ce sera. Je ne désire pas briser le quorum; je désire montrer ma soumission aux lois, mais je proteste contre ces moyens violents.

M. Derbès—Le senateur montre une grande sollicitude pour l'inviolabilité du réglement, mais aujourd'hui il l'a violé plusieurs fois, et cela sérieusement. Il a parlé contrairement à l'ordre, lorsque le président le rappelait au réglement, et, il a persisté à le faire, même après avoir été rappelé à l'ordre.

M. Kenner—Voilà une question de faits sur laquelle je ne demande pas mieux que d'engager le combat avec le sénateur. Sur mon honneur, je déclare que je n'ai pas violé sciemment le réglement J'ai cherché à maintenir mon parti en ordre; j'ai tâché de le maintenir dans le réglement, parce que je sais que le réglement est sa seule égide contre la majorité. Je pense que le président commettait une injustice à mon égard, lorsqu'il décidait que je n'étais pas à l'ordre. J'aurais pu montrer que j'étais à l'ordre, si l'on m'avait permis de procéder.

M. Short.—Lorsque le sénateur a dit qu'aucun homme d'honneur n'agirait comme l'ont fait les membres de la majorité, il s'est servi d'un pitoyable argument.

M. Kenner.—Je n'ai pas dit cela. J'ai dit que la majorité agissait comme si elle n'avait aucun respect pour les lois de l'honneur et de la justice.

M. Short.—J'avais compris ainsi le sénateur. Si j'étais dans l'erreur, j'en suis enchanté. Je reconnais la puissance du réglement comme loi, mais le réglement est entre les mains de la majorité. Lorsqu'on le détourne de son but légitime, la majorité qui l'a établi, a le droit de le rappeler ou de le suspendre. Nous n'avons que peu de temps devant nous et beaucoup d'ouvrage à faire. Chacun doit y mettre du sien. Quand nous avons consenti à ajourner, nous savions que nous pourrions passer ce bill et la majorité le savait aussi.

M. Martin.—Je demande au sénateur s'il y avait aucune convention à cet égard.

M. Derbès.—Oui, il y avait une convention.

Mt Kenner.—Le sénateur prétend qu'il y avait une convention?

M. Short.—Je ne sais rien à cet égard.

M. Kenner.—Ne sait-il pas qu'il n'y avait pas de convention?

M. Short.—Je ne prétends pas qu'il y eût une convention par laquelle tous les bills qui étaient devant le Sénat seraient passés; mais quand nous consentîmes à abréger la durée de la session, nous ne pensions pas qu'au lieu d'expédier les affaires on les entraverait. Nous pensions que tous les bills seraient pris et discutés sur le fond. Nous nous plaignons du genre d'opposition que l'on nous fait. Il y a des exceptions à toutes les règles. Si nos adversaires ont recours à une tactique sauvage, en se renfermant dans le réglement, ils doivent s'attendre à la pareille. Il y a des circonstances où l'on peut mettre de côté le reglement, et on le peut quand une tactique semblable à celle dont nous sommes témoins a été adoptee.

M. Hodge—Je vais rectifier les observations du Sénateur. Il n'y a pas eu de convention à ma connaissance.

M. Kenner—Je dirai ce qui a eu lieu lorsque nous étions dans l'enceinte de la chambre occupés de l'élection d'un Sénateur au Congrès, l'orateur m'appela et me demanda si nous passerions une résolution à l'effet d'ajourner Samedi. Je lui répondis, je suis Whig, et je pourrais être soupçonné de quelque dessein ultérieur, si je tentais de faire passer cette résolution. Mais je dis clairement que j'en conférerais avec mes amis politiques, qui, j'en suis sûr voteront pour la résolution. Voilà tout. Si le Sénateur dit qu'il y a eu convention, je dis que non. S'il y a eu une convention avec d'autres, je l'ignore. Je n'en ai jamais entendu parler. S'il y a eu aucune supercherie, accusez-en qui de droit, accusez l'orateur de la Chambre, mais ne m'accusez pas.

M. Short—Je n'ai pas dit qu'il y ait eu une convention positive. Il n'y en a pas eu quant à moi. Je dis seulement que quand nous consentîmes à l'ajournement nous espérions que tous les bills qui devaient passer seraient pris en considération, et ne seraient pas écartés à l'aide d'une tactique qui entraverait tous les travaux.

M. Kenner—Le Sénateur a dit: "Quant à moi" n'est-ce pas donner à entendre qu'il y a eu convention avec d'autres?

M. Short.—Personne, à moins d'être doué de facultés surnaturelles, ne peut dire ce qui se passe dans la conscience d'un autre homme. La Bible dit «ne juge pas les autres, de peur d'être jugé toi-même.» En conséqueuce, je n'entreprendrai pas de dire ce qui s'est passé dans la conscience d'autres membres. J'ai dit toutefois, bien que je n'aie pas toujours le bonheur de me faire comprendre, que, quant à ce que je savais, il n'y avait pas eu de convention. Mais je supposais que l'ajournement avait été fixé d'une manière amicale, et que chacun était disposé à finir les travaux qui etaient devant le sénat et que l'on n'aurait pas recours à la tactique qui a été employée ce matin.

Digitized by Google

Voilà ce que j'ai entendu dire. Je ne pense pas que personne puisse s'offenser de pareilles paroles. Je pensais que nous devions procéder dans un esprit de concorde, que chaque Bill devait être examiné selon ses mérites, et que les questions politiques seraient décidées par la force respective des partis.

Si vous aviez le pouvoir, supposez-vous que je demanderai l'appel nominal vingt fois, que je proposerais de nous former en séance exécutive, quand nous n'avons rien à faire comme partie de l'exécutif, et demanderais l'ajournement quand il nous reste encore beaucoup à faire? Quand je condamne de pareils actes, j'espère qu'il ne sera pas dit que je le fais, poussé par d'indignes motifs. J'ai adjuré les Sénateurs de se conduire de telle manière que leur conduite puisse être approuvée par leurs commettants. Mais si je connais le peuple, je sais aussi que si un homme allait dire à ses commettants qu'il a présenté des motions à l'effet de se réunir en séance exécutive à l'effet d'ajourner et qu'il a demandé l'appel nominal sur chaque question seulement pour tuer le temps et pour empêcher le Bill de passer, je sais qu'il ne recevrait pas l'approbation du peuple Le peuple comprendra-t-il cette manière de travailler? Lorsqu'il comprendra qu'une majorité politique a établi certains règlements, afin d'expédier les affaires, que l'on a fait usage de ces mêmes réglements pour entraver l'action de la Législature, et que j'ai passé à travers ces réglements, comme je passerai à travers une toile d'araignée; je suis sûr qu'il applaudira à ma conduite. Voilà la raison qui me fait demander l'appel nominal.

M. Nicholls.— Le sénateur prétend-il que la question a pour but de rappeler le réglement? Aucune question semblable n'est devant le Senat. Le senateur sait que la décision du président est correcte. La question qui est devant nous est si la décision est correcte et si nous devons la maintenir.

M. Short—Quand le Senat a le droit de rappeler les réglements, il importe peu qu'ils soient rappelés ou que la décision soit renversée.

M. Nicholls—Je désire savoir si le sénateur prétend que la décision est juste ou non?

M. Short—Le president peut être gouverné par les réglements écrits et par un texte formel. Le Sénat a certainement le droit de rappeler les réglements.

M. Derbès—Je dirai quelques mots d'explication, non seulement comme sénateur, mais aussi comme homme. Quand j'ai dit qu'il y avait eu une convention et que j'ai été interrompu d'une manière fort peu parlementaire, j'allais dire que cette convention n'avait pas été passée, avec le senateur, qui depuis l'a niée, d'une manière si positive; mais que cette convention avait eu lieu avec une autre personne à laquelle je dis que, si nous ajournions demain, nous ne pourrions pas finir nos travaux. Elle me dit que nous avions tout le temps; que nous pourrions finir tout ce que nous avions à faire. Ce bill ne fait-il pas partie des travaux que nous avons à terminer? S'il est vrai que nous pouvons finir tout ce que nous avons à faire, et que ce bill fasse partie de ces travaux, ne devons-nous pas nous en occuper? Si ces messieurs persistent dans leur opposition, il ne feront que créer un délai qui empêchera l'enrôlement d'un grand nombre de bills. Il y a à peu près 150 de ces bills. Je le demande, n'est-ce pas le sénateur d'Ascension lui-même qui a dit que nous pouvions terminer? Je donne cette explication, parce que je crois que je me la dois à moi-même. J'ai tâché d'être poli envers tous les sénateurs et j'espère que je le serai toujours.

M. Martin—Je n'ai pas eu l'intention d'attaquer la parole du sénateur. Je nie seulement qu'il y ait eu une convention de ma part.

M. Derbès — L'explication du sénateur est suffisante.

M. Hodge—J'essaierai de montrer tout ce qu'il y a de faux dans l'argument du sénateur de Carroll. Comme il paraît être devenu très consciencieux, et comme je désire qu'il ne puisse y avoir aucun doute sur les motifs qui nous font agir, je vais montrer qu'il a tort sur la question de convenance. Je montrerai combien il a tort de prétendre que ce qui paraît mauvais sur le dossier peut devenir juste par une combinaison de circonstances, et je désire qu'il comprenne qu'il n'entre pas dans mes idées de manquer à aucun engagement, même tacite, que j'aurais pu prendre. Mon désir est que les réglements reçoivent leur plein effet. Ils sont l'expression de notre volonté, telle qu'elle s'est manifestée au commencement de la session. Je nedis pas qu'aucun homme d'honneur n'agirait comme la majorité a agi, mais je pose cette question: est-il un sénateur qui pût manquer à ses engagements sans faire violence aux principes d'honneur et de justice? Les réglements constituent un engagement contracté par les sénateurs les uns avec les autres; c'est un véritable contrat. J'aurais été aussi disposé à croire que la Constitution de la Louisiane devait être violentée, qu'à penser que ce contrat solennel devait être enfreint. Je n'ai pas assez d'imagination pour faire un tableau de tous les maux qui peuvent résulter d'un pareil acte. Mais qu'il me soit permis de dire qu'il aura pour effet de faire que la volonté passagère de la majorité soit la loi absolue, au mépris de tous les droits de la minorité. Je rappellerai l'affaire du bill de la Banque des Artisans et Marchands Ces messieurs présentèrent des motions à l'effet d'ajourner, de se réunir en séance exécutive; ils demandèrent la lecture formelle des bills à leur première lecture; tout cela pour empêcher l'adoption d'un bill particulier, bien que le senateur pense que cette conduite soit épouvantable. Mais nous savions qu'ils ne violaient aucun engagement. Ils se tenaient dans les réglements. Nous ne désirions pas enfreindre la convention que nous avions passée avec la minorité, lorsque nous avions adopté les réglements. Nous restâmes patients, bien que nous prissions plus d'intérêt à ce bill que ces messieurs n'en peuvent prendre à celui-ci.

Nous savions qu'il était d'une grande importance pour la ville et la campagne, qu'il affectait la prospérité de l'Etat; tandis que ceci n'est qu'une question politique, et n'affecte que l'intérêt d'un parti. Voici à mon avis quelle est la règle: Au commencement de la session nous convînmes qu'aucun bill ne serait pris hors de son tour de rôle, sans le consentement des deux tiers. Les sénateurs ne peuvent pas nier que tel n'ait été l'engagement pris par nous, et que les réglements ne soient pas l'expression de ce contrat. Ils ne peuvent nier que la décision du président ne soit correcte. Mais ces messieurs trouvent que les réglements ne valent rien; parce qu'ils ne leur permettent pas de faire tout ce qu'ils veulent, ils ne sont pas complets; ils ne lient pas assez l'ennemi, et conséquemment ils veulent que les réglements soient rappelés parce qu'ils ont le pouvoir de le faire. Ce n'est pas ainsi que j'interprète un contrat et une convention. Nous avons passé un contrat les uns avec les autres; nous avons pris un engagement, et nous sommes convenus de ne pas le dissoudre, si ce n'est sous certaines conditions. Ces conditions ne sont pas remplies, cependant le sénateur désire briser le contrat? Etait-ce compris dans votre contrat que s'il ne vous convenait pas vous pourriez le briser à votre plaisir. Je n'ai pas fait de pareil contrat, parce que je savais qu'un cas semblable à celui-ci pourrait survenir, et que nous aurions à recourir au contrat pour sauvegarder nos droits.

M. Short—Si le Sénateur m'adresse la question, je lui dirai que quand une motion d'ajournement est présentée, perdue et représentée immédiatement après, je ne reconnais plus le contrat que j'ai fait.

M. Hodge—Le plus jeune apprenti politique sait que cette tactique est très-usuelle. S'il ne le sait pas, c'est qu'il n'a pas suivi avec attention les débats du Congrès. J'ai pratiqué devant les cours de la Louisiane, et là j'ai appris que s'il n'y avait pas de règlement, tout serait plongé dans le désordre et le chaos. Vous pouvez violer des lois, vous pouvez violer la constitution, et quand le sens moral de la Louisiane sera être relaché, que vous en viendrez à enfreindre vos contrats, les cours ne voudront pas le parchemin sur lequel elles sont constituées. Je ne voudrais pas retourner dire à mes commettants que j'ai manqué à mon contrat. Je voudrais tout autant violer une loi de la Législature. Mais je ne suis pas effrayé de dire que j'ai voté pour un ajournement; que j'ai demandé l'appel nominal; que j'ai fait la motion de nous réunir en séance exécutive, tout cela afin d'empêcher une mesure injuste, et je le ferai parce que je serais sûr d'être approuvé. Mais je suis fier de penser que je n'ai violé aucun contrat. Les règlements du Sénat sont des lois. Les sentiment de justice qui nous fait les respecter n'a pas une origine terrestre; il vient du ciel. Je ne consentirai pas plus à les fouler aux pieds que je ne consentirais à plier sous la main de fer de la tyrannie et du pouvoir.

Digitized by Google

Cette question : « la motion du Président sera-t-elle maintenue » est mise devant le Sénat, et le Sénat refuse de la maintenir.

M. Kenner—Je demande maintenant au Président. Si un vote des deux tiers n'est pas exigé pour que le Bill soit pris en considération.

Le Président—Selon la décision du Sénat une simple majorité est suffisante.

M. Kenner—Je demande que le secrétaire lise l'article 14 du réglement.

Le Président—Je désire qu'il soit compris que ma conduite en ce moment n'est pas conforme à ma conviction, mais à la décision du Sénat.

M. Kenner—Je demande si ce Bill est à l'ordre.

M. Short—Nous avons révoqué le réglement en tant qu'il est applicable à ce Bill.

M. Kenner—Je demande que le Secrétaire lise l'article 60 du réglement.

Le Secrétaire le lit :

M. Kenner—Cet article dit qu'un réglement ne peut être revoqué ou amendé sans au moins un jour de notice. La notice requise a-t-elle été donnée. Je demande au Président s'il peut continuer à sieger et voir prendre ce Bill pris hors de son tour d'ordre et au mépris des réglements.

Le Président.—J'ai déjà décidé qu'un vote des deux-tiers était nécessaire. Le Sénat en a décidé autrement

M. Kenner.—Eh bien, je donne avis en mon nom et au nom de ceux qui agissent avec moi, que nous allons protester contre la conduite de la majorité, contre cette violation inouïe du réglement, contre cette insulte faite au droit et à la justice.

La question de la prise en considération du bill est mise aux voix.

Elle est emportée par 16 voix contre 10.

Le Président.—Suivant la décision du Sénat, le bill est devant lui.

M. Kenner.—J'en appelle du Sénat au Président. Souffrira-t-il cette infraction palpable du réglement ? Permettra-t-il que nos droits soient foulés aux pieds ? Le Président a le droit de sauvegarder les intérêts de la minorité, lorsqu'il les voit attaqués. Il ne doit pas permettre une pareille usurpation. Il sait que c'est un acte injuste ; il sait que c'est un outrage et il ne doit pas le permettre.

M. Patterson.—Le parti démocratique dans cette enceinte demande au Président de garder son siège et de se faire respecter.

M. Kenner—C'est là ce que nous désirons. Nous ne nous adressons pas au président comme whig ou démocrate ; nous désirons qu'il se place dans une sphère plus élevée, dans les régions de la vérité et de la justice ; nous désirons qu'il protége les droits de la minorité, et alors il tiendra une conduite conforme à la dignité de sa position.

Le président veut que sa position soit bien comprise. Le président a déclaré qu'il était contraire aux réglements de prendre en considération ce bill, sans un vote des deux tiers. La question a été décidée par le Sénat contrairement à l'avis du président et conséquemment, d'après cette décision, le bill est devant le Sénat.

Le bill est mis aux voix.

M Kenner—Je vote dans l'affirmative et donne avis que je demanderai une reconsidération demain. Mes droits seront-ils protégés ? Je le demande avec toute la déférence voulue, comme je suis convaincu que ces messieurs viennent de faire un acte qu'ils se reprocheront lorsqu'ils seront de sang-froid.

Le président—Le sénateur a le droit de donner avis qu'il demandera la reconsidération.

Le bill est adopté.

M. Kenner donne avis que demain il demandera la reconsidération.

—

SAMEDI, 30 avril 1853.

Le bill établissant une prescription pour les paiemens après dix années est pris en considération.

M. King.—Quoique je sois trop mal pour disputer cette question d'une manière approfondie, je dirai brièvement les raisons pour lesquelles je pense que le sénat devrait le rejeter. D'abord le bill doit entrer immédiatement en opération. C'est là une grande injustice. Il périme des jugemens qui, peut-être, n'avaient pu être executés précédemment. Il peut porter une atteinte considérable à des droits existants ; il peut ruiner ou léser beaucoup de gens qui s'endorment dans une sécurité illusoire, sans songer à une pareille loi.

Un bill à l'effet de payer les frais de levées faites depuis 1852, est pris en considération.

M. Martin.—Dans mon opinion, c'est là une mesure fort judicieuse.

M. Kenner.—Je ne pense pas comme le sénateur. Il a fixé dans son esprit une époque après laquelle certaines paroisses peuvent tirer avantage de la caisse des terres marecageuses. Nous qui avons eu à supporter en 1851 une taxe énorme, nous ne devons en retirer aucun avantage, mais les paroisses qui ont fait des levées depuis 1852 doivent en payer les frais. Ce bill est destiné à certains cas particuliers; il est fait pour l'avantage de quelques sections, et non de quelques autres dont les droits sont aussi fondés. Pourquoi ce bill n'embrasserait-il pas toutes les paroisses ?

Le bill est déposé sur le bureau.

Le bill à l'effet de fixer le salaire du greffier de la 1re cour de district, venant de la chambre avec un amendement qui retranche l'amendement par lequel le sénat avait ordonné que le salaire du greffier fut payé au moyen des amendes et des forfaitures, est pris en consideration.

M. Kenner.—Cela équivaut à annuler entièrement l'amendement du Sénat Cela équivaut à dire que le salaire sera payé des fonds de l'Etat. Les amendes et forfaitures s'elèvent à $50,000. Ces réclamations de l'Etat restent sur le bureau des greffiers de cour, et jamais le recouvrement n'a lieu. Un des objets du bill est de forcer les greffiers et les officiers de cour à faire leur devoir et à collecter ces amendes et forfaitures. C'est parcequ'ils vont dans le trésor et non dans la poche d'un individu, que la collecte s'en fait d'une manière si peu active.

M. Lewis.—Je demande pardon au sénateur. L'avocat de District a droit à une somme considerable sur ces fonds

M. Kenner.—Pourquoi alors ne voit-il pas à ce qu'ils soient collectés?

M. Hodge.—Je désire expliquer le vote que je donnerai dans cette question. Les sénateurs de la Nlle.-Orléans me disent que les amendes et forfaitures ne sont pas suffisantes, et que si nous persistons à maintenir notre amendement, la cour sera peut-être sans greffier. Je suis fâché que la Nouvelle-Orléans ne puisse payer l'ouvrage fait dans son propre intérêt, comme le font plusieurs paroisses. En vue de ces circonstances, je consens à ce que nous soyons taxés encore une année, mais quand la question se représentera, j'insisterai pour que la Nlle-Orléans fasse elle-même cette dépense. Néanmoins, je ne veux pas encourir le risque de la laisser sans cette cour, considérant surtout que les amendes et forfaitures vont à l'hôpital de charité.

L'amendement de la Chambre reçoit le concours du Sénat.

Le bill relatif au Canal de Barataria et de Lafourche est pris en considération.

M. Martin—Il a été passé un contrat par lequel l'Etat s'est chargé de finir les travaux, pour la somme de $53,000. Ce bill décrète une allocation de $33,000 pour l'achèvement des travaux. La Compagnie a dépensé plus de $300,000. Ce sont des travaux utiles et l'Etat a le premier gage sur ces travaux.

M. Kittridge—J'ai une autre observation à faire. L'Etat a déjà dépensé beaucoup d'argent pour ces travaux, et s'il ne les achève pas, il perdra toutes les avances qu'il a faites. Dans l'état où ils se trouvent, ils donnent un profit net de 4 pour cent.

M. Martin—C'est un contrat. Si nous ne remplissons pas les conditions du contrat, nous perdrons ce que nous avons déjà dépensé. Les personnes qui se sont faites les gardiens fidèles du trésor devaient y réfléchir.

M. Mouton—J'espère que je ne suis pas plus que le sénateur de l'Assomption le gardien du trésor; j'espère que je n'y ai pas plus d'intérêt que lui. S'il en était ainsi, j'en serais fâché. Mais je voterai contre cette aliénation du canal de Barataria, parce que j'ai entendu parler de cette question; je n'ai entendu parler que de cela pendant 14 années, et mes commettants sont opposés à cette aliénation.

Le bill est adopté.

Le bill à l'effet de restreindre la charge du juge aux questions de fait dans les affaires criminelles, est pris en considération.

Digitized by Google

M. Mouton—Je ne suis pas préparé à voter pour ce bill. Je ne vois pas comment le juge peut faire sa charge au jury sans examiner la question de fait.

M. Short—C'est là le mal auquel on veut porter remède. Le juge peut dans sa charge représenter les preuves, de telle manière qu'il pourra substituer le jugement de la Cour à la décision du jury. Le sénateur pense qu'il sera difficile de faire une charge sans s'occuper de la question de fait. Il n'y a là aucune difficulté. Si le juge dit que son opinion est telle et telle d'après les preuves; s'il dit par exemple que d'après les faits prouvés l'accusé ne pouvait pas se croire en danger, qu'il ne peut prétendre avoir agi à son corps défendant, s'il repasse les témoignages, et de là déduit la loi applicable au cas, il va au-delà de ses devoirs, c'est une usurpation des pouvoirs du juri.

M. Mouton — Peut-il le faire sous la loi existante ?

M. Short— Maintenant la seule chose qu'il ne puisse pas faire, c'est de dire au juri quel est le côté des preuves qui l'emporte. C'est là la loi anglaise. Mais s'il récapitule le témoignage, et d'après ce témoignage établit quelle est la loi, il substitue le jugement au verdict du juri ; parce que le juri prendra presque toujours l'opinion de la Cour. Ce Bill produira un excellent effet et portera remède à un grand mal.

M. Nichols— Ce Bill ne pas empêcher que le Juge ne présente un état de faits sous une forme hypothétique.

M. King— Je suis opposé à ce Bill. Il est de nature à faire des juges une simple machine et à entraver l'administration de la Justice. Il aurait pour résultat d'empêcher une décision dans beaucoup de cas, et produirait beaucoup d'autres inconvénients, Le Juge est le guide dans l'examen des affaires ; il ne doit pas être réduit au rôle de machine. Le système actuel a été en usage pendant des siècles; nos ancêtres ont vécu sous son empire sans inconvenient. Le changement proposé serait fatal à l'administration de la Justice. Souvent le mieux est l'ennemi du Bien. Mieux vaut, même en fait de maux, un certain qu'un incertain.

M. Short— Je suis étonné d'entendre un membre du barreau aussi ancien, raisonner de cette manière. Mais c'est là le plus fort argument que l'on pourrait faire valoir en faveur du Bill. Si le juri doit accepter les opinions du Juge comme paroles de l'Evangile, s'il ne doit être guidé que par lui, autant vaut supprimer les Juris. L'argumentation du Sénateur m'a rendu encore plus favorable au Bill que je ne l'étais d'abord.

Le Bill est adopté.

Le Bill général des allocations est pris en considération.

M. Kenner—Mon opinion est qu'un bill général d'appropriations doit s'occuper des allocations pour les salaires déjà fixes, que dans un bill général d'allocations, les salaires ne peuvent être augmentés. Je désire examiner le dossier afin de voir jusqu'à quel point il est vrai que ces changements ont été faits. Si ces messieurs désirent suivre l'acte de 52, je ne vois pas pourquoi ils ne le suivent pas dans son entier. Mais, par ce Bill nous ferions ce qui ne saurait être l'objet d'un Bill d'allocations. Ce Bill ne devrait pourvoir qu'aux salaires déjà fixés par la loi, Eh bien ! ce Bill a été dans le principe préparé par le Comité de Finances qui avait pourvu à tous les salaires d'après la loi Tout changement aurait dû prendre naissance à la Chambre. Je soutiens que ce n'est pas un moyen légitime d'arriver au but que l'on se propose. Si les salaires ont été augmentés, je ferai la motion de référer le Bill au Comité de Finances. Je ne le ferai pas pour gagner du temps, mais je ne désire pas favoriser un pareil mode de législation. Si nous voulons augmenter les salaires, passons une loi à cet effet, mais ne glissons pas cette disposition dans cette loi. Ce n'est pas l'objet d'un Bill général d'allocations.

Motion est faite d'effacer la somme de $2,000, et d'insérer $1,500 pour le salaire du secrétaire d'Etat.

M. Mouton— Je pense qu'il y a une loi fixant le salaire du Secrétaire d'Etat à $1500. En conséquence, je crois qu'il est de mon devoir de voter pour le salaire tel qu'il est fixé par la loi.

La motion est perdue.

La section allouant $1000 au commis du Secrétaire d'Etat est lue.

M. Kenner— Je voudrais voir la loi qui fixe ce salaire. Nous venons de donner au secrétaire d'Etat une augmentation de salaire de $500, et maintenant il faudrait donner à son commis mille piastres. Puis viendra une allocation pour le Copiste du Secretaire d'Etat. Je ne sais pas ce que tout cela signifie.

M. Mouton—Je pense qu'il y a une ancienne loi qui autorise le Secretaire d'Etat à employer une personne pour copier tous les actes de la Legislature pour être livrés à l'Imprimeur. Le montant alloué est certainement fort minime.

M. Kenner— Si cette loi existe, je serais curieux de la voir dans le Bill général d'allocation de l'année dernière.

M. McCay— Je pense que ce fait est susceptible d'explication. L'année dernière le secrétaire d'Etat avait $2,000 de fonds pour les dépenses eventuelles. Cette année cette somme a été reduite à $500. L'on a pensé en conséquence qu'il fallait porter cette somme comme allocation.

M. Kenner—Le Bill dont il s'agit ne semble s'occuper que d'augmentations de salaires ; ce n'est pas un Bill général d'allocations.

M. King— Qu'importe, l'effet est le même que s'il y avait un Bill séparé relatif au même objet. Je désire qu'il soit bien compris que je suis en faveur d'une augmentation de salaires.

M. Kenner — Si ce Bill est réellement un Bill à l'effet d'augmenter les salaires, et n'est pas un Bill general d'allocations, je ne vois pas pourquoi il n'est pas fait mention de l'adjudant général. Je fais la motion de porter son salaire à $1000.

M. King—Cette question a déjà été discutée dans la Chambre. Je ne crois pas que l'amendement ait chance de passer dans cette chambre.

M. Kenner—Si nous ne pouvons changer un mot à un bill, mettre un point sur un i, barrer un t, sans le consentement de la Chambre, je ne vois pas ce qui reste à faire au Senat de la Louisiane. Mieux vaudrait alors retourner chacun chez soi et économiser à l'Etat les quatre piastres par jour que nous recevons.

M. Martin—Ce n'est pas une chose extraordinaire que de nommer des comités de conference à propos du bill general d'allocation et cela le dernier jour de la session. Ces comités arrangent les differends en ce moment.

L'article pourvoyant aux arrerages dûs au greffier de la première Cour de District est pris en consideration.

M. Kenner—Voici la première fois que des réclamations ont été reconnues dans un bill général d'allocations, sans qu'une discussion prealable en eût decidé. Il faut que ce fait soit connu et je le déclare pour la satisfaction des Senateurs. Je ne pense pas que je puisse changer leurs opinions, mais je veux qu'ils sachent le fait.

M. Derbès fait la motion d'insérer $1,500 pour la Légion de la Louisiane et le Bataillon de Washington.

M. Derbès—Je fais cette motion parce que je sais qu'elle est juste. Ces compagnies sont toujours appelées au moment du danger. On ne saurait exagerer les services qu'elles rendent ; et cependant si l'Etat ne vient pas à leur aide, elles seront dissoutes; elles ont des dépenses considerables, ces dépenses s'élèvent à $10 ou $15 par an pour chaque homme. Quand l'Etat vient au secours d'autres associations, je ne vois pas pourquoi il n'assisterait pas les compagnies qui sont d'une si grande utilité. En outre du caractère général que présente cette milice, je puis dire que la Legion et le bataillon sont des associations charitables. Même avec cette allocation chaque homme n'aura pas plus de $2, ce qui certainement n'est pas considerable. Il est inutile d'énumérer tous les avantages que présentent ces compagnies. Au moment du danger, lorsqu'il y a une émeute elles sont toujours appelées et sont toujours prêtes à répondre à l'appel. En cas d'insurrection ou d'invasion, elles nous serviront de point de ralliement ce serait notre seule ressource. La prudence nous fait un devoir d'empêcher qu'elles ne se débandent.

M. Nicholls—J'abonde entièrement dans le sens du Senateur. Je pense que ce serait les deux meilleurs articles du bill. L'Etat doit contempler avec orgueil ces deux corps. Une saine politique doit nous dicter de les encourager, attendu que c'est d'eux que les citoyens attendent tout secours. Je ferai de plus la motion que $500 soient accordées aux canonniers de Donaldsonville un beau corps, qui est toujours mentionné avec éloges.

Digitized by Google

L'amendement est adopté.

Le bill passe.

M. Kenner présente le protet suivant, qui, sur motion, est insére dans le journal du Sénat.

Les soussignés croyant qu'une flagrante violation des réglemens du Sénat a eu lieu hier par l'action de la majorité de ce corps sur un acte, ou discussion pour diviser l'Etat en districts congressionnels, demandent la permission de faire insérer dans le journal leur protestation contre les procédures dans cette occasion.

Pour comprendre l'injustice qui a été faite dans cette occasion aux droits de la minorité, il est nécessaire que les faits qui se sont passés soient exposés. Pendant la lecture des ordres du jour, motion a été faite par M. Derbès, de la Nouvelle-Orléans, de prendre en considération, en dehors de son ordre régulier l'acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts congressionnels et pour procéder à la discussion et au passage dudit acte.

L'effet de cette motion fut de donner à cet acte la préséance sur tous les autres actes déposés sur le bureau du secrétaire.

Le réglement 14me du Sénat dit: Aucune motion ne sera faite pour prendre en considération un acte en dehors de son ordre régulier, à moins d'avoir le consentement des deux tiers du Sénat present.

D'après cette règle aussi claire dans son langage qu'il est impossible de se méprendre sur ses intentions, le president du Sénat, le lieut.-gouverneur Farmer, décida que la motion de M. Derbès, de prendre cet acte en considération en dehors de son ordre, demandait le vote des deux tiers des votes présents. Le Senat vota sur cette question, et il apparut que seize sénateurs votèrent pour la motion de M. Derbès, et dix contre.

Le nombre exigé des deux tiers n'ayant pas été obtenu, le president décida que la motion de M. Derbès était rejetée.

A cette decision du fauteuil, si conforme à l'esprit et à la lettre de la 14me règle, M. Short en appela à la décision du Senat.

Le Sénat vota encore par oui et par non.

Sur l'appel de M. Short, de la décision du fauteuil, il apparut que seize sénateurs, qui sont: MM. Boatner, Chilton, Derbès, Evans, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, Lacoste, Lewis, Millard, Mouton, McCay, Neal, Patterson, Short et Thériot votèrent pour renverser la décision du fauteuil, et que dix senateurs qui sont: MM. Dupre, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Slack et Taylor votèrent pour le maintien de la decision.

Conséquemment, par ce dernier vote, le Sénat renversa la décision du président et décida que les deux tiers des votes n'étaient pas nécessaires pour prendre un acte en considération en dehors de son ordre, en face du fait que la 14me règle exprimait, c'est-à-dire —«Qu'aucune motion de prendre en consideration un acte en dehors de son ordre ne pourra être faite à moins d'être soutenue par les deux tiers des votes presents.»

L'effet de ce dernier vote fut de suspendre le réglement 14me et de permettre à la majorité de prendre en considération et de passer un acte extrêmement nuisible à une grande minorité et à une violation positive des réglements qui avaient été adoptées par cette même majorité au commencement de la session par lesquels la minorité espérait être protégée contre tout exercice arbitraire du pouvoir par la majorité,

Nous sommes forcés de dire qu'une violation si positive, si ouverte et si palpable des réglemens d'un corps législatif, est sans exemple dans les annales de la Legislature de notre pays.

Il n'existe pas d'exemple, soit dans notre Congrès fédéral, soit dans nos Législatures d'Etat qu'une majorité, dans le but de forcer le passage d'un acte, ait renversé les réglements qu'elle s'était imposés pour se gouverne.

Il ne peut être dit non plus que le Sénat ait eu le droit inhérent de rappeler en tout temps ses réglements par une majorité de voix.

La règle 16me du Senat est ainsi concue: Ni aucun réglement du Sénat ne sera suspendu à moins d'un vote des deux tiers au moins du Sénat présent.

Conséquemment il était aussi impossible de suspendre la 14me règle par une simple majorité que de prendre un acte en considération en dehors de son ordre par une simple majorité.

Mais l'acte pour diviser l'Etat en districts congressionnels devait passer sinon en suivant l'ordre des réglemens du moins en les renversant

Voilà ce qui a été fait par le Sénat, hier, et nous présentons notre plus solennelle protestation contre cet exercice arbitraire du pouvoir.

Nous demandons de plus, respectueusement, la permission d'appeler l'attention de la minorité sur les notes suivants du manuel de Jefferson sur l'importance attachée aux réglemens

M. Onslow, le plus capable des orateurs de la Chambre des Communes avait l'habitude de dire que c'était une maxime qu'il avait souvent entendu dire quand il était jeune homme, par des membres vieux et expérimentés, que rien ne tendait plus à jeter le pouvoir dans les mains de l'administration et de ceux qui agissaient de concert avec la majorité de la Chambre des Communes, qu'une négligence ou un oubli des règles parlementaires: Que ces formes telles qu'elles sont faites par nos ancêtres, étaient un frein et un contrôle sur les actions de la majorité et que souvent elles avaient été un abri et une protection pour la minorité contre les atteintes du pouvoir.

M. Jefferson commente ainsi les paroles de l'orateur Onslow. Autant cette maxime est vraie et fondée sur le bon sens et comme il est toujours au pouvoir de la majorité d'arrêter par son nombre toute mesure impropre proposée par ses adversaires, les seules armes avec lesquelles la minorité peut se défendre contre de semblables attaques de ce pouvoir, sont les formes et les règles parlementaires qui ont été adoptées, quand on les a trouvées nécessaires de temps en temps et qui sont devenues les lois de la Chambre des Communes, pour l'adhésion stricte avec laquelle le parti faible peut se protéger contre les irrégularités et les abus que ces formes doivent contrôler, et que le pouvoir a trop souvent essayé de renverser de gaieté de cœur par de grandes majorités, soit que ces formes soit rationnelles dans tous les cas, ou ne soient pas de si grande importance. "Il est plus essentiel qu'elles nous gouvernent; car qu'elle est cette regle? qu'il y ait une uniformité régulière dans les procédures des affaires, non sujette au caprice de l'orateur, ou à la susceptibilité des membres.

Il est très essentiel que l'ordre la décence et la régularité soient conservées dans un corps public honorable.

Avec ces remarques de M. Jefferson comme un commentaire sur la conduite de la majorité de la veille, nous demandons la permission respectueusement de signer, etc.

N. A. LAUVE,
CHAS. A. SLACK,
THOS. C. NICHOLLS,
WM. B TAYLOR,
R. C. MARTIN,
B. L HODGE,
W. T. PALFREY,
E. R. KITTRIDGE,
ACH. DUPRE,
DUNCAN F. KENNER.

Le Sénat lève pour un moment la seance.

Le Sénat s'étant réuni de nouveau, plusieurs bills sont adoptés sans discussion.

Le secrétaire informe la Chambre que le Sénat n'avait pas d'autre communication à faire à la Chambre des Représentans et était prête à ajourner "sine die."

Mr. Boatner présente la résolution suivante qui subit ses différentes lectures et est adoptée.

Résolu qu'un comité conjoint consistant de trois membres du Sénat et membres de la Chambre, soit nommé pour se rendre auprés du Gouverneur et l'informer que la Législature etait maintenant prête à s'ajourner "sine die" et de lui demander s'il n'avait pas d'autre communication à faire à la Législature.

Le président nomme de ce comité,
MM. Boatner, Nicholl et Hodge.

Digitized by Google

Le secrétaire demande le concours de la Chambre pour ladite résolution:

Le Sénat est informé par le secrétaire de la Chambre, que la Chambre a donné son concours à la susdite résolution et que l'orateur a nommé dudit comité de la part de la Chambre, Messieurs Théard, Sandidge, King, de Saint-Landry, Texada et LeBlanc.

De la part du comité conjoint, conformément à la susdite résolution, Mr. Boatner rapporte que le comité a rempli son devoir et que le Gouverneur n'avait pas d'autre communication à faire à la Législature.

Par un message de la Chambre, le Sénat est informé que la Chambre n'a pas d'autre communication à faire au Sénat et était prête à ajourner "sine die."

Le President du Sénat W. W. Farmer délivre aux Sénateurs l'adresse d'adieu suivante:

Messieurs,

Je vous ai souvent obligé pendant votre session, [illegible] vous remercie pour la résolution flatteuse adressée au fauteuil, que vous avez passée, quoique je sens que je mérite très peu ce compliment.

Vous êtes au moment de retourner parmi vos constituants, après une session fatiguante, pour leur rendre compte de vos travaux. Vous avez tout lieu d'espérer qu'il sera satisfaisant, quoique des plaintes fréquentes ont été faites sur l'inaction de la présente Législature. Je n'ai aucun doute que lorsque vos travaux seront réunis en un volume, qu'il se soit trouvé peu de Legislatures qui aient passé plus d'actes que celle-ci, dans une session de la même longueur.

Quand les actes sur le judiciaire, les écoles, les améliorations intérieures, la milice, etc., qui ont été passées, seront réunies et comparées, aucune n'aura eu plus de sujets d'importance à agir dessus. C'est pourquoi je répète que les Représentans qui sont maintenant sur le point de rentrer dans leurs foyers, ont de grandes raisons d'espérer l'approbation de leurs constituants.

Cette nuit sera témoin pour la dernière fois, dans cette salle de la réunion du premier Sénat en vertu de la Constitution de 1852. Dans peu d'instans vous vous dirigerez vers vos foyers. Que Dieu vous conduise en sûreté dans les embrassements de vos familles qui vous attendent, et les félicitations de vos amis.

Suivant toutes les probabilités humaines, vous ne [illegible] ici encore: c'est avec cette pensée que je vous demande à votre départ comme une faveur, que s'il existe entre quelques-uns d'entre vous des mauvais sentimens individuellement, pardonner et oubliez-les comme différences politiques, et souvenez-vous les uns des autres comme amis et non comme ennemis.

Je déclare le Sénat ajourné "sine die"

DURANT DA PONTE, Rapporteur.

Digitized by Google

La. Doc. 1.11

OFFICIAL REPORTS OF THE SENATE

OF THE

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

MONDAY, January 16, 1854.

At 12 o'clock, M. the Senate met; present, W. W. Farmer, Lieut. Governor and President of the Senate in the chair; and present Messrs. Lacoste, King, McCay, Braud, Taylor, Trudeau, Kittridge, Key, Hebert, Lacey, Munday, Wickliffe, Clifton, Rivers, Scott, Palfrey, Moore, Pellerin, Boatner and Richardson.

The Senate then proceeded to elect officers, when the following named were unanimously chosen: Secretary, W. F. Wagner; Assistant Secretary, A. Levisson; Sergeant-at-Arms, B. Childers; Door-keeper, E. Drox; Translating Clerks, Oscar Arroyo, Emile Wiltz; Jules Dossat; Enrolling Clerks, R. C. Wederstrandt, L. B. Haynes, S. E. Hamlet, J. D. Stewart, M. Rills and P. Bienvenu.

Reporter, Durant da Ponte.

Mr. Rivers offered a resolution extending the thanks of the Senate to Horatio Davis, late Secretary, for the able manner in which he had performed the duties of Secretary. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

The Senate then took a recess.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE.

On reassembling, a message was received from the House, informing the Senate that the House was organized.

A message was received from the House informing the Senate that the house had appointed a committee of three to wait upon the Governor.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, a committee of three was appointed to act conjointly with the committee appointed on behalf of the House.

Mr. McCay offered a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee to report rules and regulations for the government of the Senate, and that till the said committee report, the rules and regulations of the last session be considered in force.

The resolution was adopted.

The Senate then adjourned.

TUESDAY, January 17, 1854.

Mr. Rivers—I have a resolution to offer, which I hope will meet with the favorable consideration of the Senate. It relates to the imprisonment of slaves, in the Penitentiary, a practice which has been found extremely deleterious to the public interests. The resolution simply instructs the Judiciary Committee to bring in a bill remedying the evil.

Mr McCay—On the part of the Special Committee to report rules and regulations for the government of the Senate, I beg leave to report the rules and regulations of the last session, with a single amendment concerning the construction of committees. On examination, it will be found that the only change occurs in the 33d section, by the consolidation of the two committees, last year called the Committee on Lands and Levees, and the Committee on Internal improvements.

The Secretary read the Report.

The President—I observe that the number of the Consolidated Committee is not specified in the Report.

Mr. Rivers—It should be a large committee, as the duties thrown upon it will, necessarily, be very onerous.

Mr. Palfrey—I would suggest nine as a proper number, so as to comprehend members from all parts of the State. There will be various, and perhaps sometimes conflicting interests to be represented, and they should all be entitled to a hearing in the committee.

The President—I would remark that in case the number of the committee is to be left discretionary with the Chair, I shall certainly appoint nine.

Mr. King—I have a subject, which I consider of some importance, to bring to the attention of the Senate. It is a motion, which I am about to make, for the amendment of the 11th rule; as that rule now stands, it is to the following effect—(Reads.)

I propose to make the following amendment: "provided that a motion to adjourn, once made, shall not be renewed until the Senate has made progress in some other business." The necessity and policy of the amendment must be obvious to every one at a glance. Its object is to prevent the recurrence of what has actually happened here in the Senate during the last session. On one occasion, a motion for adjournment which it was evidently the desire of the Senate not to entertain, was continually renewed til finally the Senate was forced to adjourn, even against its own will. As the rule now reads, and as I believe it was decided by the President at the last session, it seems to sanction this proceeding, and to give a member the right of perpetually renewing the motion to adjourn, even when no other business has intervened.

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR.

The following message from the Governor was received and read by the Secretary.

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The fearful Epidemic which prevailed during the summer months of the past year, over a greater portion of the State, while it filled with sorrow many a once cheerful and happy home, and consigned to a premature grave thousands of our best and most useful citizens, served to develope in others and to stimulate into active exercise the highest and noblest virtues that adorn the human character. Good Samaritans sprung up from the very hot-bed of the pestilence, in every condition and class of society—among the laity and the clergy, the rich and the poor—who, careless of their own safety, and following in the wake of the deadly scourge, ministered to the sick and relieved the less fortunate and more helpless sufferers. Many perished in the prosecution of these labors of brotherly charity—many a hopeful young physician—many a devoted minister and priest—many of those amiable sisters, the living types of the law of love, whose heroism is an every-day and familiar tale. Although they have passed from the sphere of human action, and are now enjoying their rich rewards with Him, whose agony on the mountain was closely followed by a divine glorification, their names will live in the memory of their grateful fellow-citizens, and be proudly cherished by their Mother-State, whilst their example—the golden chain which still may bind us to them—will serve to encourage and guide us in the path of honor and duty which they have followed.

But our debt of gratitude is not due these our citizens alone. When the Epidemic had progressed in malignity and enlarged the field of its destructive operations to an extent which defied our power to check its advance and our means to relieve its victims, the citizens of our Sister-States, with open hands and sympathizing hearts, hastened to our assistance, and cheerfully assumed a large share of our burdens. It is my pleasing duty, as the Executive of the State, to acknowledge with heartfelt thankfulness, these tokens of fraternal benevolence and affection, which have exhibited our country to the world, not only as a nation of sovereign States, united by frail paper compacts, but as a great patriarchal family—a nation of brothers and kindred.

Painful as it must be to you and to me to dwell upon a topic which recalls to our memories the melancholy scenes through which we have passed, the bitter experience acquired at the cost of so many valuable lives, must not be lost. The sanatory condition of the city of New Orleans, is no longer a question of local interest. When the meshes of railroads, which must eventually connect every part of the State with its great emporium, shall have been completed, the most distant villages on our frontiers will be as suburbs of New Orleans. The main threads of that vast system of intercommunication have already been laid and in a year or two the fertile and populous parishes of the West will be be brought into close and constant contact with Algiers; whilst the rattling trains, starting from the very centre of the city, will waft its atmosphere to the balmy forests of the Eastern parishes. The fate of all is therefore involved in the fate of New Orleans—the public health of the State must depend, more or less, upon the public health of its metropolis. In view of this fact, it becomes your duty, and I am sure it will be your pleasure, to bestow your most serious attention upon such measures as you may deem most advisable and efficient to mitigate the effects, if not to prevent the recurrence of such fatal diseases as the one which swept over our State during the past summer. This object is not entirely beyond your reach; but like all the great prizes which Providence holds up to the legitimate desires and ambition of man, it will be the reward of exertion, of scientific investigation and of repeated trials. Thus much, however, we know from experience and observation, that epidemics are bred and fostered to fatal maturity in large cities, and that their first appearance in certain localities may be traced to the time when the population of those localities had acquired a certain magnitude. The circumstances which attend these extensive agglomerations of human beings, must, therefore, have some agency either in producing these diseases, or increasing their virulence. Many of these circumstances, fortunately, are amenable to judicious and well-timed interference, and large and wholesome reforms have been effected in the densely populated cities of the Old World by skilfully directed systems of Hygiene looking to the general cleanliness of the inhabitants, the proper ventilation of their dwellings, the prompt drainage of the streets and the sewerage of other reservoirs of animal and vegetable detritus. It will be for you to consider what part, if any, the State will take in carrying out the plans which you may devise and sanction, or whether you will only delegate to the Corporation of New Orleans such powers as they may deem necessary to achieve the much desired ameliorations in their social and sanatory conditions But, whatever may be the result of our deliberations upon this matter, it seems to me but an act of sheer justice to allow them, for the drainage of the swamps and morasses which lie behind the city, and which are doubtless co-operative causes of disease, their due proportion of the proceeds of the swamp lands. A part of that munificent donation, made for the benefit of all, could not receive a more appropriate and generally useful destination than to secure the vigorous and healthy workings of the very heart of the body-politic.

Digitized by Google

In connection with this subject, permit me to invite your attention to the communication, which is herewith transmitted to you, from the sanatory commission appointed during the prevalence of the epidemic, to investigate its origin. character and causes. Composed as the commission is, of gentlemen of great attainments in their respective departments of science and of distinguished zeal for the public service, its suggestions will necessarily carry much weight with them. You will find in these gentlemen safe guides to consult and abundant sources of information in the prosecution of a part at least of your labors.

The report of the Treasurer will exhibit the financial condition of the State. It will be seen that the State debt proper, including the bonds issued for subscriptions of stock to the New Orleans and Jackson; the New Orleans and Opelousas, and the Shreveport and Vicksburg Railroad, is $3,281,809 41.

Under the operation of the law passed at the last session to provide for the deficiency of the State Resources by a loan of $750,000, the receipts of the Treasury for the current year have amounted to $2,148,467 65.

The expenditures for the same period, for the ordinary expenses of the Government, and to meet the appropriations made by the last Legislature, amount to..... $1,340,443 80

Showing a surplus of receipts over expenditures, of..... 808,021 35

But it must be remembered that this large surplus is due to loans authorized by the last Legislature and by their predecessors, which, deducted from the table of receipts, and from the balance now in the hands of the Treasurer, as shown by his report, would leave a deficiency. With these silent but persuasive vouchers of truth before you, it is unnecessary for me to advise you that the Treasury is not in a condition to meet extraordinary demands, and to dwell upon the necessity of husbanding our resources in order to enable us to meet our obligations as they mature, without resorting to taxation. The investment of a large proportion of the surplus in the hands of the Treasurer, which will not be needed, in productive securities, would at once place this surplus beyound the reach of improvident appropriations, and relieve the State of a corresponding amount of interest upon an equal portion of her debt. The friends of Public Education might well avail themselves of the opportunity to demand payment of the sum due to its fund; which properly invested would, before many years, provide in great part at least, to the support of the Schools, and thus insure their permanency.

I would not, however, be understood as recommending that false and contracted economy of the miser or the faithless steward, who hoards up his treasure, or conceals his talent under the ground; but the liberal and enlightened economy which invests the public money only in well-advised, well-timed and well-digested undertakings, promising the greatest benefits; and refuses every demand, however inconsiderable, to projects whose positive utility is not fully and clearly ascertained. The enormous sums of money thoughtlessly wasted upon wild and fanciful schemes, without any previous investigation by competent judges, even of their feasibility, and often actually expended in ridiculous efforts to achieve impossibilities, would have enabled the State, if concentrated and judiciously disposed of, after a full and conscientious examination of the proposed work, to put the finishing hand to many of the magnificent canals which Nature has excavated in every portion of our territory—leaving us to bestow but a mite of our labor and intelligence, to render them subservient to our uses. It is true that the money in these cases has been drawn from the internal improvement fund, but the mode of proceeding in appropriations out of the general fund, has not been essentially different.

A remedy to this evil is suggested by the cautious practice of the governments of the old world—a practice which their positive and negative experience recommends with equal force—never to hazard the hard-earned contributions of the tax-payers upon new measures or schemes which have not been subjected, in every aspect in which they may be viewed, to the test of the opinions and discussions of scientific and practical men. These examinations, conducted by Parliamentary Committees or by Commissioners appointed by the Government, although they may, at the first blush, appear tedious and expensive, result in the main in material savings of time and treasure, furnish a secure basis for legislation and impress the policy of the State with a character of consistency and unity of purpose which, it must be confessed, is not always apparent in our country. This slow, but safe process, would yield other fruits not less worthy of your appreciation. It would serve to exclude much of the private and special legislation which mars our system of laws and disturbs the jurisprudence of the State, by engrossing the time and attention of the Legislature with more serious subjects and more laborious and thoughtful methods of investigation.

In compliance with an Act of the last Legislature, providing for the draining and reclamation of the swamp and overflowed lands donated to the State by the General Government, I appointed a Board of Commissioners to execute the great works from which so much benefit was very reasonably expected by your predecessors and their constituents. The Board met at the Capitol in May last and appointed Engineers for the respective districts, as provided for in the Act.—The duties of these Engineers were, in part, to determine the locality, extent and dimensions of the necessary levees and drains to protect and reclaim the swamp lands of the State; and to require all contracts for the construction of levees and repairs thereto to be completed by the first Monday in December of each year. The other requirements of the Act are ample and judicious. The Auditor is authorized to pay all expenses incurred upon the warrant of the Commissioners, the money to be taken out of the sales of the swamp lands, which fund cannot be diverted to any other purpose than that contemplated by the Federal grant.

Digitized by Google

The Report of the Commissioners, to which I would direct your special attention, will enable you to comprehend fully the situation of this most important matter at the present time. It will be seen that they encountered insurmountable obstacles at the commencement of their labors. When they assembled, the Swamp Land Fund in the Treasury amounted to $250,000. Payment of the first warrant presented, was refused by the Auditor, for reasons doubtless satisfactory to himself, though they failed to convince the law-officer of the State and the Executive. It will be your duty to consider the matter promptly, and to take such measures as will enable the Board to execute the duties imposed on them by law. I have no doubt that your decision will exhibit a clear conviction and appreciation of the vast interest involved in the successful prosecution of the labors of the commission. No time should be lost. The portion of the year most suited to labor has, it is true, passed away; but with the opening of spring, or sooner, if found practicable, the work should be commenced and pushed forward with unflagging zeal and industry until the gratifying end in view is obtained.

The Report of the Commissioners is, from the cause above mentioned, necessarily confined to matters of preliminary preparation and plans, and to suggestions as to their future course. It will be seen, however, that embarrassed as they were in the very outset, and deprived of the means which the Legislature had placed at their command, they have not been entirely idle. It is due to the State and to them, to give the system which called them into action, a fair and impartial trial. Whatever may have been the differences of views at the time of its creation, it is the wiser course, now that it exists, to leave the test of its efficiency to time and experience.

Four Rail and several Plank Road Companies were chartered by your predecessors. The State was authorized by law to become a party to these enterprises, and to issue, from time to time, its bonds in payment of its subscriptions, "for an amount equal to one-fourth of the amount actually received by and paid to the company." In obedience to the mandates of the Legislature, I issued, on the 27th day of May, 1853, seventy-six bonds of one thousand dollars each, in favor of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad; on the 30th of July ensuing, another series of forty-five bonds, of one thousand dollars each; and in October, sixteen others of the same denomination were executed and delivered to that Company. The New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern line received, on the 18th of August, one hundred and sixty-five bonds of the State, also of one thousand dollars each.

I am happy to inform you that all these lines of intercommunication have been pressed forward with commendable energy. The New Orleans and Opelousas road has reached a point seventeen miles distant from its eastern terminus. The New Orleans and Jackson, and New Orleans and Mobile Roads, are moving onward under able management; and I am assured that the work upon the Shreveport road will soon be commenced, the surveys having been made, and a considerable amount of stock subscribed. The Plank Road Companies appear, also, to be animated by a laudable desire to prosecute vigorously their respective works.

Obstacles not contemplated, and against which no provision could be made, produced embarrassments in the management of these enterprises, which I am glad to inform you are not of a serious character.—Soon after the State bonds were issued, the money markets of Europe and of our own country assumed a material change, the rate of interest increasing to a considerable amount. The bonds were, in consequence, rendered unsaleable for the time. But neither this event, nor the prevalence of the pestilence in the city, dampened the ardor of the Directors. They have not, I believe, suspended operations at any time, and are now putting forth all their resources to meet the expectations of the public, and protect the interests of stockholders.

Provision was made by an act of the 10th of March, 1852, to relive the Citizens' Bank from the forfeiture decreed against it; but this rehabilitation is coupled with the condition that "the Bank shall restore to the Governor of the State, bonds of the State to the amount of $800,000. The requirements of the law were complied with by the exchange of $300,000 of Bank bonds for the bonds of the State, which were cancelled, and an additional capital of $984,430 was raised by the stockholders by means of a contribution of seven dollars per share, three of which have already been received by the Bank, the remainder to be paid in 1854, '55, '56 and 1857.

These provisions of the act having been carried into effect by the Directors then in charge of the Bank, an election was held, under the seventh section, for five Directors, on the part of the stockholders, who, together with the two appointed by me, were duly installed on the 1st day of July of last year. One of the first acts of the new Directors was to avail themselves of the benefits of the act "to authorize the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana to convert the shares secured by mortgage into cash shares," to increase their available capital by obtaining the payment in cash for 10,000 out of the 141,000 shares composing the capital stock of the Bank. This transaction brought about an agreement between the cash and mortgage stockholders, by which the entire assets, as they existed on the 1st of September last, (less $500,000 transferred to the Banking department) are to be worked for the benefit of the latter, and remain specially pledged for the then liabilities of the Bank. The mortgage stockholders are, besides, relieved from the expenses of administration, with the exception of the salary paid to the officer specially charged with the books and accounts of the mortgage stock department. This arrangement, while it secures the redemption of the liabilities of mortgage stockholders, secures the States to a corresponding extent against eventual liability upon the bonds issued to the Bank. A judicious managament of that institution, under the present agreement, will, it is hoped, produce a considerable surplus of profits to be divided between the mortgage stockholders and the State, according to the terms of the charter.

The Free Banking law passed at the last Legislature has gone into successful operation, and it is believed, will realize the expectations of its projectors.

In pursuaannce of act passed by your predecessors, and approved on the 28th of April, 1853, authorizing me to appoint a commissioner to ascertain and receive the amount due by the Union Bank to the State, by virtue of the 7th section of "an act to incorporate the Union Bank of Louisiana, approved the 2nd day of April, 1832," I entrusted the charge to Mr. Pemberton, of New Orleans, who, after a full examination, consented to receive the sum of sixty-two thousand dollars in payment of all the interest of the State in that institution Fifty thousand dollars of this amount to be paid in cash upon the order of the State Treasurer; and twelve thousand dollars in a note of the Bank, subscribed by the President and Cashier, dated on the third day of June, and payable four months after date. In consequence of this agreement, the connection of the State with that institution is at an end.

It was made my duty by an Act passed by the last Legislature, to provide the means necessary for the relief of the Treasury of the State, to cause to be advertised in due form, a notice inviting proposals for the purchase of State Bonds to the amount of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. At the expiration of the time prescribed by law, it was found that the only bid offered, was that of Messrs. J. Corning & Co., at par. The loan was therefore adjudicated to these gentlemen. Some delay occurred in the delivery of the bonds, on account of the failure of the Eugraver to execute his contract within the specified time.

Digitized by Google

Early in the month of November, the State Engineer repaired to the vicinity of the Raccourci cut-off which was represented as doing great injury to the lands immediately below it. His report on the "grand Levee" will point out the consequences of that unfortunate innovation. My views on this subject were fully expressed when I had the honor to hold the office of State Engineer, and subsequent reflection has confirmed them. I will, I trust, be pardoned for referring to them, when some of our good citizens still cling to a system, which, already tried, has proven so disastrous.

"How are we to reclaim the inundated lands of Louisiana? How are we to bring into safe cultivation those immense swamps and low-lands, by far the most productive lands of the State? How are we to protect the upper parishes, without injuring those lower down? And how are we to secure the lower sections without prejudice to the upper? In a word what means must we adopt to protect and reclaim the State at large, without injury to any portion of it? This is the problem to be solved. Can it be accomplished by levees? For local and temporary purposes levees will answer; but as forming a general and permanent system, they are defective. In addition to a great and constant expense, the gradual elevation of the bed of the river is the inevitable consequence of confining its turbulent waters between levees. This operation of course increases the danger of inundation. Experience has proved this, wherever it has been applied. The most superficial observer must have noticed this effect upon the Mississippi river. The characteristic danger of this operation is, that it is slow, almost imperceptible in its progress, but certain and fatal is its effects.

"The bed of the river is finally raised to a point where there is no remedy but the demolition and destruction of those very levees, constructed at so great a cost and loss of time. General inundation is of course the consequence; the waters resume the old, or make new channels, and the main body of the river returns to very nearly its original state, with the exception of its bed, which remains elevated. The situation of the country is therefore in no way improved by the final result; on the contrary, we find the difficulties of protection and draining greatly and permanently increased. To this state of things are we approaching, and to these fatal consequences are we rapidly bringing ourselves, if we persist in leveeing the Mississippi, and at the same time close its natural outlets. There is no fancy in this. It is the inevitable result of existing causes. It is as certain and true as that the waters of the Mississippi contain matter to deposit, and that these waters will seek their own level.

"Can we fix upon a better system? The question is easily answered, if we consider the formation of the country through which the Mississippi flows.

"The upper strata of the Mississippi, at high water, by which I mean those above the level of the lowest lowlands, on either side, flow apparently along the crest of a ridge. (Here I do not, of course, refer to the Mississippi in its whole depth, as must be evident to any one, but plainly to the surplus waters—the inundating portion which it is our object to dispose of.) This ridge has two slopes, or inclinations—one in the direction of the general course of the river, and one at right angles to it. Every one is aware of this. Can we desire or meet with a case, where the mode and means of drainage and protection are so clearly pointed out and so easy of application? Take a similar case, on a small scale, upon the land of a planter of ordinary intelligence. A small bayou, subject to overflow during heavy rains, runs through his plantation; the land falls in the direction of, and falls from the bayou on both sides. How would he permanently protect the banks of this bayou from inundation without an embankment? Naturally by throwing the surplus water upon the low grounds, on either side, through outlets or canals leading from the bayou. In this way the object is immediately and easily accomplished.

"Now suppose, that after increasing the facilities of discharge of the stream itself at its mouth, we should, along the lowest line of the adjacent low grounds, which line will be nearly parallel to the course of the stream, extend these lateral canals to the lake or reservoir, into which the bayou is discharged.

"Is it not plain that in this manner the whole surplus water can be disposed of, the banks of the bayou completely secured, and the very adjacent low grounds and swamps drained and reclaimed, down to the lowest level of the lake or gulf into which the waters are discharged? Is not this almost self-evident? Is it not practicable, no matter how immense the quantity of water to be disposed of? Clearly it is. The question then becomes one of expense, not of truth. Any country can be drained, any river brought within its banks, and reduced to its bed at highest flood, no matter how extensive the one, or how high the elevation, or great the quantity of water of the other. The very waters assist in this system, by washing out their own channels. In most cases it would be sufficient to commence the work, and leave the balance to be finished by the velocity of the water. So that water, now to us an element of destruction, becomes the strongest and most effective agent in the system.

"This is the system to be applied to the Mississippi. As firmly am I convinced of its practicability and successful operation, as I am of the truth of the clearest mathematical demonstration. The water can be reduced to near the level of the Gulf of Mexico, and every foot of land above high tide, brought into safe and successful cultivation. Of this there is not a particle of doubt. Shall we do it? Shall we adopt and vigorously prosecute an enlarged system, calculated to develop a thousand fold the vast resources of this State, regardless of local and particular interests, and unawed by the magnitude of the project? Nature has commenced the work—will it be left unfinished? Untold millions lie concealed in the beds of our swamps; shall we lay them bare? The world offers no country more susceptible of improvement; none where it is more needed; none where it can be accomplished at so little outlay; none where the results can be as grand and beneficial."

Permit me to call your serious attention to the present system of Internal Improvements, and entreat you to devise a remedy for its defects, the evil consequences of which will at no distant day be felt by all. The State Engineer has no discretion whatever as to the improvements to be first accomplished, nor as to the time to be employed in any particular work. Many works of a local nature, are ordered without any preliminary surveys, or examinations, and required to be finished in a given time, without any regard to their magnitude or importance. The natural consequence is, that the State hands, after passing from bayou to bayou, and oscillating from point to point, leave no visible traces, or permanent improvement behind them. The system has fallen in such disrepute, from its total failure to achieve the most insignificant results, that the fund itself, by which it is supported, is abandoned to the most unreasonable demands.

Any drain upon it will receive the assent of the Legislature, either because experience has proved it to be valueless, or because many who do do not live in the districts in which most of this fund is expended, suppose they have no interest in fostering or protecting it. It would be well, however, for all to reflect that when the sources from which this fund is derived shall have been exhausted, general taxation will have to be resorted to. From this there will be no escape. The fertile lands bordering upon the great net work of our Bayous, and Streams, are daily receiving occupants, who will soon have the power of imposing upon the inhabitants of other parts of the State the penalty of their own improvidence. The Legislature will, it is hoped, apply a corrective. The Internal Improvement force of the State is too small to be divided: all human contrivances, looking to great ends, aim at the accumulation of power—the system now in force is based upon a contrary principle, it atomizes power. Besides, no appropriation should receive the sanction of the Legislature before correct preliminary surveys have been made and a thorough conviction of the importance of the proposed improvement produced. The work should then be commenced and permanently completed, when a reasonable toll might be imposed for its maintenance.

I was authorized by an act of the last Legislature, to appoint commissioners to modify the contract existing between the State and the Barataria and La-

Digitized by Google

Barche Canal Company. This duty was performed, and a satisfactory adjustment of the whole matter, it is believed, has been obtained. The contract made by the former Engineer of the State was so altered as to throw the completion of the work upon the company on certain specified conditions. The State consents to pay the appropriation of 1833, the balance of the appropriation of 1852, and transfers to the company all the materials, implements, &c., purchased with the several sums granted at different times. The company binds itself under heavy penal obligations, to execute the contract made under the law of 1848, so modified as to dispense with the lock on the west side of the Lafourche, and with one gate at the Mississippi terminus of the canal. The bond furnished by the company secures both the amount of the appropriation and the faithful performance of the contract.

By this arrangement the State loses the labor already bestowed upon the work while she gains the improvements upon Bayous Black, Terrebonne and Caillou. The payment and application of the State funds are under the control of the State Directors, and the appropriation of twenty-three thousand dollars deposited in the New Orleans Bank is subject to the order of these latter only. The entire work must be completed by the 1st of February, 1855.

After a thorough examination of this contract, I have no hesitation in saying that the commissioners have consulted the best interest of the State. The ill advised agreement which was superceded by it, would have resulted in constant demands upon the Treasury, and in ultimate loss to a very considerable amount. We have now, as far as human prudence can command it, the assurance of the speedy completion of a work which must prove, at no distant day, a great artery of our internal commerce.

The official report of the commissioners, which I submit to you, will furnish you with a more detailed account of their transactions with the company.

The other specific duties enumerated in the act of 1853, above named, have been performed in accordance with the directions of the law.

The interesting subject of public education will be brought to your notice by the Superintendent of that Department. The system, thus far, has produced admirable results in densely populated districts, whilst in the sparsely settled parishes it has fallen below the expectations of the public and surely disappointed its best friends. But these partial short-comings will, it is believed, be gradually remedied as our population increases. In the meantime such palliatives may be applied as the local circumstances of each school district may suggest to your judgment. The object to be attained is of such a magnitude as to challenge your constant zeal and attention—in such a cause even unsuccessful experiment deserves credit.

The Report of the Secretary of State will exhibit the condition of his department and of the State Library. Too much praise cannot be awarded to the Librarian for the intelligence which he has displayed in the exchanges which he was authorized to make of our own public documents and reports for other foreign and domestic works.

500 volumes have thus been added to our stock, which, if continued under the same good management and zeal, will soon compare with the largest and the most select in the Union.

The passage of laws entailing additional labors upon the Office of the Executive and that of the Secretary of State, calls for a remuneration corresponding with the onerous duties which the clerks in those offices have to perform. In order to effect this object, without trenching upon the Treasury, I would particularly recommend the enactment of a law, similar to that existing in nearly all of the States, conferring upon said officers the right of demanding certain adequate fees for the filling out, registering and sealing of all blanks—as, for instance, commissions issuing from the Executive, for all offices of a pecuniary character, whether appointed or elective. I cannot too strongly urge upon your honorable body, the propriety,—nay, the real economy—of rewarding every public officer in accordance with the duties and responsibilities of his trust. The justness of such a principle is apparent, and it is equally clear, that by the exercise of this principle, we ensure to the State the most competent and faithful officers.

The report of the committee appointed in virtue of a law passed at the last session, to examine the Insane Asylum at Jackson is herewith transmitted to you.—I have not as yet received that of the administrators of the Charity Hospital of New Orleans and of other institutions of the same character in and out of the city. I will lay them down before you as soon as they reach me. But it is within my knowledge, that the hospital is not only free from debt but has a surplus on hand. The usual annual appropriation, however, together with an additional sum of twenty thousand dollars, will be required in order to make the repairs in the building which have now become absolutely necessary. The Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind has been in successful operation during the past year. The new buildings, delayed somewhat by the prevalence of the epidemic, are now being vigorously prosecuted. The number of pupils has considerably increased, and the want of adequate accomodations is beginning to be seriously felt. Additional appropriations will be required for the completion of the buildings and for the current expenses of the school. The Board of Administrators have evinced a laudable spirit in carrying out the designs of the Legislature with regard to this noble institution, and the peculiar fitness of the Superintendent, manifested in his paternal care of the pupils, in his superior qualifications as a teacher, and in his general management, has largely contributed to the good standing and prosperity of the Institution.

The lease of the Penitentiary expires in October next. It will become your duty to decide upon the expediency of releasing it, or of placing it under the exclusive and immediate management of the State.—The question involves considerations of a moral and social character, compared to which all others sink into utter insignificance. The sums heretofore received by the State under the present system are certainly too trifling to exercise any influence upon your decision, whilst large amounts have been appropriated to the erection of new buildings and workshops. If these advances were not intended as mere gratuities, if they were made with the expectation that they would produce, at some future day, some corresponding returns, the time has come to devise and adopt some scheme by which these anticipated advantages may be realized. In a word, if economical considerations prevail, competition for the lease should be invited; if moral ones, neither the present plan of electing the lessees, nor that just suggested, of selling the lease to the highest bidder, deserves commendation—the former being amenable to all the objections urged against the latter, besides being less advantageous in a pecuniary point of view. Whatever is desirable in all these, might perhaps be obtained by selling the lease to the highest bidder and reserving to the State the appointment of the officers and wardens of the institution.

The Report of the Directors will inform you of the condition and management of the Institution during the year which has just elapsed.

I have thus endeavored, fellow-citizens, to sketch rapidly the administrative history of the State for the past year, and to offer such suggestions as would, in my judgment, promote the interests of our common constituents. But my duty to you and to the State at large would be but partially and imperfectly accomplished, if, confining myself entirely to questions of internal policy, I did not call your attention to a subject which, although not within your immediate jurisdiction, is of too vital importance to this and to the other Southern States of our confederacy to be passed unnoticed. It is impossible to resist the conviction produced by a close scrutiny of the events now transpiring in the Island of Cuba—events which were foreshadowed by the appointment of the present Captain-General of that colony—that Spain, urged on by the interested counsel of England and France, and by that blind fanaticism of hatred which has often marked her political and social history, has determined to follow the example of her powerful allies, and to add another State to the black empire which would then extend from the mouths of the Orinoko to the outlets of the Mississippi. Under the pretext of a compliance with her treaty obligations, she has already inaugurated the new policy, and she is preparing to consummate it by the introduction of what she terms free laborers to-supply the place of still larger numbers of emancipated Africans. The interested and ambiguous contradictions of European diplomatists cannot diminish the significance of these facts, and of the quasi-official declarations of the organs of the Cuban Government. Neither are the inferences drawn from them fairly and satisfactorily met by the argument such a course would be suicidal to Spanish interests The question of emancipation will not be decided in Cuba, but in Madrid, in London and in Paris, where opinions, widely different from ours, are entertained upon this matter; and by philanthrophists who will bear no part of the consequences of their gratuitous benevolence; the Cubans will have no voice—no representation—in these councils. The truth of this is fully attested by the history of the West India Islands. The French and Danish possessions were precipitated into the abyss of emancipation, even when the warning voice of the English Colonies could be heard from the depths below; and Brazil, although an independent empire, and vast as her interests are in the maintenance of her present system of labor, is gradually yielding to the threats of England and to the influences of her transatlantic affinities. But Spain has another—an European—interest which she must consult, and which, coming home to the prejudices and pride of her governing classes, may outweigh any mere pecuniary consideration she might attach to the preservation of the actual order of things in Cuba—an interest whose cohesive action has produced remarkable, although apparently unpremeditated, concert between the monarchial powers of the old world in every difficulty which has arisen of late years between any one of them and our government. Jealousy of our increasing power and prosperity, and fear of the influence of our example, are the bonds of this Union—to thwart and impede our progress, is the common advantage, and must be the common aim. Besides, of all the States of Europe, Spain is the least able to resist the machinations of that government which has pursued not only the emancipation, but the actual Africanization of some of her finest colonies, to an extent and by means which would stagger the easiest credulity—had they not been avowed and published to the world by their very authors. With a meagre treasure to provide for a proverbially profligate administration and a constantly widening chasm between her receipts and expenditures, her indebtedness to English subjects amounts to upwards of £50,000,000 sterling, upon which the unpaid interest has been accumulating for many years Threatened as she is by internal dissension, circumstances may easily be imagined in which the action of the causes above enumerated would prove irresistible. Will the Federal Government, charged with the international interests of States, anticipate the threatened peril; or patiently and quietly await the occurrence of it? The evil would then be irremediable. Confiding as we may justly be in the firmness, patriotism and truly national spirit of the Chief Magistrate of the Union, the deliberate expression of the sentiments of the people of Louisiana upon this all-important subject would at once sustain the watchfulness of the Administration, and strengthen their hands in executing any measure for our protection which they might deem necessary to adopt. P. O. HEBERT.

Digitized by Google

January, 1854.

Mr. Wickliffe.—I move to print 5000 copies of the Message.

Mr. Rivers.—That will be too large a number. I think 2500 will be enough.

Mr. Wickliffe – The cost of printing 5000 will be very little more than the cost of printing 2500. We printed 5000 copies of Governor Walker's message. This is an equally important document, and ought to be extensively disseminated.

Mr. Rivers.—I thought we had only printed 3000 copies of Governor Walker's message. I shall make no captious objection to the printing of the number desired by the gentleman. I withdraw my objections.

AMENDMENT OF THE 11TH RULE.

Mr. King's motion for the amendment of the 11th rule then came up.

Mr. King.—I have already specified the object with which I have made this motion. I think the Senate will agree with me that it ought to be adopted, in order to rescue the Senate from the danger of being placed entirely in the power of one or two members, and thereby prevented from doing business whenever it may suit any member to act on the construction given to this rule at the last session.

Mr. Rivers.—I have no disposition to interpose any objection which might appear captious or ill-founded; but I must say, that I cannot see any good reason for the change proposed by the gentleman from New Orleans. We have managed, hitherto, to proceed with our business well enough under the rules as they stand, and I do not think an alteration is required now. The allusion made by the gentleman in relation to a certain occurrence at the last session, is, I presume, intended for myself. The gentleman is right in saying that I did what he has mentioned. But it was done under a strict sense of duty, on an occasion when I thought a monstrous injustice was about to be perpetrated, and the rights of the minority trampled on and annihilated by a domineering majority. We, on this side of the House, were in a hopeless minority. A great wrong was about to be perpetrated upon us—a wrong which, I felt confident, would not be insisted on when reason should reassert her sway over the minds of the majority on the other side. I therefore, in order to prevent the consummation of the wrong which I feared, did move to adjourn, and I did renew the motion until finally the Senate consented to adjourn. But this is an extraordinary case. It is a case which may not happen again. It certainly may not occur for a long time to come; and it is to be hoped that the circumstances which gave rise to it at the last session may never have their counterpart in the future. Under these circumstances, I can see no good reason for adopting the amendment. The rule, as it stands, affords some protection to the minority, and we know that the rules are, in a great measure, intended to protect them. Make the change proposed by the gentleman from New Orleans, and you virtually sweep away all the defences which the rules interpose to shield them from tyranny of a domineering and unscrupulous majority. I hope the Senate will not adopt the amendment.

Mr. King—In speaking of the occurrences during the last session, when a motion was continually renewed, with the design of interrupting the business before the Senate, I had no reference to the gentleman from Concordia, who has just taken his seat. I did not know, or at least I did not recollect the connection of that gentleman with any such event. If it happened, with him, and that it did so there can be no better authority than his own acknowledgment, it must have been at some time when I was absent. I alluded to another occurrence of the same kind, and which, I presume, is still within the recollection of every Senator who was present on the occasion. It appears then that this thing was done twice—not once only as I had supposed—and this fact makes the necessity of the change which I have proposed still more apparent. It is a serious thing for the Senate to be placed in the power of one man, who, by a privilege given to him under our own rules, may not only retard business, but actually prevent us from doing anything at all. This is entirely too great a power to be placed in the hands of one or two men. The only objection made to the amendment is that the case I have recited is an extraordinary one and may not occur again. If so there can be very little necessity for the rule even if it be, as the gentleman insists, only an adequate protection for the rights of the minority. But if it is not likely to occur frequently, let us prevent its occurring at all. Let us make it impossible for the whole Senate to be placed in the power of one man.

Mr. Rivers—If the object of the Senator is to secure justice, he ought to be opposed to placing the minority entirely at the mercy of the majority.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Ryan—I have a resolution which I am about to lay before the Senate, and to facilitate the speedy passage of which I shall ask for a suspension of the rules. In connection with this bill, I shall offer a few remarks by way of explanation, in order that the Senate may understand the facts of the case. The Tax Collector of the parish of Rapides, Mr. H. M. Neal, died a short time before the period at which he should have made his payment into the Treasury of the State. In consequence of his not having made payment at the time fixed by law, he became, apparently, a defaulter.

Digitized by Google

Since his death, his administrators have paid everything due by him to the State, a receipt to which effect, from the Auditor, I now hold in my hand. I therefore offer a resolution to pay the Commissions to which H. M. Neal, late Collector of the Parish of Rapides, would have been entitled, had he made his payments in time, and to strike his name from the list of defaulters. I hope the Senate will dispense with the rules, and allow the resolution to pass immediately.

Mr. Rivers.—I have no objection to the introduction of the resolution, but I think it ought to be referred.

Mr. Griffin.—I shall oppose the reference. There can be no good objection to a resolution so manifestly just.

Mr. Kenner.—I think that every bill of this kind ought to be referred. Members naturally wish to favor their constituents, and think that their claims are superior to all others. But I do not think we should act in this hasty manner I have no objection to suspend the rules to permit the introduction of the bill, but I am not willing to pass it without an examination. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Griffin.—Who are the Committee on Claims?

Mr. Ryan. I move that it be referred to a Special Committee of three.

Mr. Kenner.—There is no objection to a Special Committee. I only want the resolution examined.

The resolution was referred to a Special Committee.

PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. Trudeau.—I am about to offer a resolution which, inasmuch as it relates to a very important subject, I do not desire to be hastily acted on. It concerns the health of the State—a subject on which there are so many conflicting opinions, that it seems to me nothing but thorough investigation and mature consideration can produce any permanent good There are many discrepancies of opinion, even in regard to the simple matter of quarantine; and in New Orleans itself, ideas are by no means concentrated and harmonious on that point. It is therefore incumbent on us to inquire, and, if possible, ascertain, whether a system of quarantine will, in reality, be productive of beneficial results.

Mr. Trudeau then offered a resolution, providing for the appointment of a committee of three, to inquire into the best means of preserving the health of the State.

The resolution was laid over.

JOINT SESSION.

The Senate then proceeded to the hall of the House of Representatives, to count the votes for State officers.

The Senate then adjourned till to-morrow morning, at 10 o'clock.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 18, 1854.

Mr. Palfrey—I have a bill which I am about to offer to the Senate, and for the purpose of facilitating the speedy passage of which, as it is a matter of some importance, I shall call for a dispensation of the rules. It is a bill to extend to certain officers the time for the procuring of certificates of not being defaulters. I shall trouble the Senate with a very few words on the subject, merely to show the necessity which exists for the passage of this bill. At the last session of the General Assembly an act was passed to secure the more prompt payment of the public moneys, of which act the 2d section was in the following words: (reads 2d section.) Now, sir, when we consider the general terms in which the title of the bill is expressed, and the little information afforded by it as to the contents and nature of the bill, we cannot view it as a matter for much surprise that many persons, even those directly interested in its operation, remained ignorant of it, and failed to comply with its provisions. I have consulted with the Secretary of State in relation to this subject, and I learn from him that many officers have, up to this time, omitted to fulfill the requirements of this law, either through ignorance or some other cause, and their commissions have consequently been withheld. It will be seen at once that the public business might be seriously delayed if these offices be declared vacant, and new elections ordered to fill the places of those who have failed to furnish the required certificate. My attention has been called to this subject by the fact that the Assessor of the parish which I have the honor to represent on this floor, finds himself in this dilemma. It was at one time my intention to introduce a bill for his relief. But, on consultation with the Secretary of State, I learned that there were many other cases of the same kind, and consequently I have introduced this bill to cover them all.

The rules were dispensed with and the bill passed.

Mr. Ryan—On behalf of the Special Committee, appointed yesterday, to inquire into and report on a bill for the relief of H. M. Neal—I beg leave to report, that Mr. Neal was lately tax collector of the parish of Rapides, and died a short time ago, being only a few days before the time appointed by law for the payments to be made. At present all his indebtedness is paid up, and the committee has therefore reported the bill which I shall read to the Senate. (Reads the bill.) I now, Mr. President, ask for a suspension of the rules, in order to have the bill passed with as little delay as possible.

The rules were suspended and the bill passed.

Mr. Trudeau—I beg leave to be excused from serving on the Committee on Enrollment. Of the six persons appointed by the Senate to perform the duties of clerks to this body, only two understand both the French and English languages, and of those two, one only understands both languages well. This, it will be observed, will operate as a serious inconvenience. I have no idea of doing the business of the clerks, and I therefore desire to be excused from serving on this committee. Last year, I understand, Mr. Barthe, the gentleman whose successor I am, occupied a place on the committee, and I am informed that almost all the labor devolved on him.

Mr. Wickliffe—I have no desire to pluck any laurels from the brow of my friend, Mr. Barthe, but I have been under the impression, and it is an impression which still exists on my mind, that last year most of the work fell on Mr. Derbes.

Mr. King—I think the objections urged by the honorable member from Jefferson, against serving on the Committee on Enrollment, are at least premature. So far, nothing has occurred to justify them. It appears to me that only four enrolling clerks are positively necessary at this time—two for each language. That number will certainly be sufficient for the first three or four weeks of the session. I hope, therefore, that the Senator will not press his desire to be excused from serving on he committee, and that the Senate will not be deprived of his valuable services.

Mr. Trudeau—I must insist on being excused. Nevertheless, I will consent to serve if the Senator will add his valuable services to the committee. I will then cheerfully undertake the task.

Mr. King—If the gentleman will assume the duties of three or four places which devolve on me, I will accept his proposition.

The vote was taken, and the Senate refused to excuse the Senator from Jefferson.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. Boatner—The 16th article of the Constitution makes it incumbent on this Legislature, at this session, to make an apportionment of the State, in accordance with the census recently taken. I shall therefore move to appoint a Special Joint Committee of five on apportionment.

Mr. Kenner—Does the 16th article of the Constitution require a committee to be appointed, in order to pass the apportionment bill?

Mr. Boatner—It does not require a committee to do it, but it requires the Legislature. I do not pretend to have the legislative experience possessed by the gentleman, and I am willing to accept suggestions from those who are better versed in such matters than I am.

Mr. Kenner—The only suggestion that I have to make, is to change the character of this resolution so as to form a Special Committee of the Senate, to which the subject of apportionment should be referred.

Mr. Boatner.—I offered the resolution in accordance with the advice and suggestions of abler Senators than myself.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Kenner.—I move to insert 7 in place of 5 as the number of the committee. It is a matter of importance, and various interests are to be consulted in framing a bill. The members of the committee should be selected from different parts of the State.

Mr. Boatner.—I accept the amendment. I have no objections to seven.

The resolution was adopted.

THE LATE TREASURER.

Mr. Macmurdo.—I have a resolution to offer providing for the cancellation of the official bond of Mr. McWhorter, late Treasurer of the State. I will state that, at the last session of the Legislature the accounts of that officer were examined and found correct. This resolution was not introduced then as it should have been, and I therefore offer it now.

The resolution was adopted.

EXTRA COMPENSATION.

Mr. Wickliffe introduced a resolution to pay $500 to Gen. Horatio Davis, late Secretary, for services rendered by him in assisting to open this session of the Senate.

Mr. King—I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. Wickliffe.—I shall oppose the reference of this resolution to the Commitee on Contingent Expenses, or any other committee. It is a very plain resolution and does not require a report from a Committee to elucidate it. I presume that every Senator present understands it thoroughly, and is now prepared to vote on it. It has always been the custom to grant this compensation under similar circumstances, and I hope the Senate will not refuse it now when the recipient is an old and faithful servant, who certainly deserves this slight recognition of his long services. I hope the Senate will pass the resolution, and not refer it to a committee, a course which can do no good, because it can throw no new light on the subject, nor make it any plainer to the Senate.

Mr. King.—I am opposed to the resolution. On a previous occasion, during the last session my views upon the subject were made known. A habit has grown up of squandering the public money in mere bounties to the officers of the Legislature. In this manner at each session, thousands of dollars are voted away. I do not consider that we have any right thus to use the public Treasury. This money is paid by the people, to meet the necessary expenses of Government. To bestow it in mere gratuities and bounties is in my estimation an abuse of the trust reposed in us. In the present instance, it is peculiarly objectionable as Mr. Horatio Davis in addition to his per diem, which was fourteen dollars per day, last session received extra compensation to the amount of seven hundred and fifty dollars, which was a mere bounty, and not founded upon any pretence of extra services.

I object to the allowance now of five hundred dollars, not from considerations peculiar to this case, but because I am opposed to all such applications of the public money. This is the first motion of the kind which has been made this session, and in order to put a stop to this description of legislation I feel it my duty to meet it at the thresh-hold. I wish the Senate to adopt some uniform rule of action on the subject which they will adhere to. If this application be refused, I hope all similar ones will meet with the same fate. If it passes then prepare to open your hands widely, and to lavish thousands of the public money, in useless and gratuitous bounties.

Mr. Wickliffe.—I have listened with attention.—the remarks which have fallen from the Senator to They are of such a nature that, if I did not know him as well as I do, I should imagine he was striving to obtain and merit the appellation of the watch dog of the Treasury. But, on reflecting on the course he has hitherto taken in the Senate, I find that such a conclusion as that would be unwarranted by facts. I remember well, and I presume it is, likewise within the recollection of other Senators on this floor, that, during the last session of the Legislature, the honorable gentleman as Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements reported to this body in favor of printing certain documents which were not of sufficient importance to justify the heavy expenses to which the printing of them subjected the State. They cost, I believe, many thousand dollars, and yet, though the gentleman was not only willing to incur, but actually recommended this lavish expenditure, he now rises in his seat and opposes the payment of the small sum of $500 to our late Secretary in accordance with the invariable custom of the Senate,—a custom which has never yet, to my knowledge, been departed from, and which was sanctioned by this body even as recently as last winter.

The gentleman has called this an application of Gen. Horatio Davis. I must correct the gentleman on that point. It is not an application. General Davis never spoke to one on the subject. I informed him this morning that I intended to introduce such a resolution, and that is the only communication that has passed between us in reference to the matter. I represent a constituency which I know will warrant me in voting $500 to an old and faithful servant who retires from among us after many years devoted to the services of the State. I do not fear for a moment that my constituents will condemn me for introducing and urging this resolution. On the contrary, sir, they will feel as I feel, and as I had hoped every Senator would feel, that it is only the observance of a good custom, which, being sanctioned by so many precedents should not now be violated. I move, sir, to lay the gentleman's motion to refer on the table.

Mr. King—I am extremely sorry, Mr. President, that I have been under the necessity of making objections to the motion at present before the Senate. It has not been from any personal feeling on my part. My object has been to induce the Senate to adopt some general rule in reference to all such applications. This is the first one of the kind which has occurred during this session, and I think this the proper time to make a stand. The public treasury has been squandered to a vast amount heretofore by this species of legislation. So far as precedence has been invoked to sustain the motion, it was a bad precedent, and the sooner we change it the better. The reformation must be begun at some time, and I think this the most appropriate.

The honorable gentleman insists that the present application is not a mere bounty. I should like to know by what rule of compensation he estimates the services of our former Secretary at $500 for the present session.

He has already received his per diem of $14 per day for the last session; and, in addition to this, had received some $750 at the end of the last session, bestowed upon him as a mere gratuity. What are the services performed by him the present session, which entitle him to the sum of $500?

He appeared here at the opening of the Senate, and officiated as our Secretary some two or three hours, until we elected a successor to him. This is all he has done, and upon it is based the claim of $500, in addition to his per diem of $14, to which he was entitled. It is said he had to come all the way from New Orleans to open the Senate. Who asked him, in the first instance, to come all the way from New Orleans here to run for the office? He did so of his own volition, and was, no doubt, very happy to be elected after he came here. There is no law which requires us to elect a Secretary from a distant part of the State, much less any law which authorises us to pay a Secretary extraordinary compensation because, at his own choice, he came here from a distant part of the State to run for the office. Suppose Mr. Davis had resided in Baton Rouge, would there have been any foundation whatever for the present application. Now, I contend he has no more right to expect the compensation now asked, than if he had resided in Baton Rouge. The services, then, for which he is entitled to ask compensation, are two or three hours service as our Secretary. For this the law allows him $14; a very ample compensation? For what are we to pay him the $500? The honorable gentleman insists it is not a bounty. What is the meaning of a bounty? I understand that it is where money is given without any adequate services performed therefor. If I be right in this definition of the term, then I insist that the proposition to give Mr. Horatio Davis $500 was properly characterised as a bounty. The members of the Senate serve for four dollars per day; the Lieutenant-Governor for eight dollars. When we pay our Secretary fourteen dollars per day, I think he is fully compensated for his services. Anything beyond that sum, without even the pretence of any extraordinary services, I consider a mere bounty; and a use of the public money which we cannot grant without a betrayal of the trust confided to us by our constituents.

Digitized by Google

For uttering sentiments like these, the Hon. Senator has thought proper to call me the "bull-dog of the Treasury."

Mr. Wickliffe—The gentleman is in error. I did not call him the "bull-dog" of the Treasury. I said he seemed to be anxious to gain the name of the "watch-dog" of the Treasury. For my part, I do not think he is any such thing.

Mr. King—Well, sir, he said "bull-dog," or "watch-dog," or something of that kind.

Now, if I am to be stigmatized with epithets for endeavoring to discharge my duty here, I must be content to endure them; and can assure the honorable gentleman that their humiliation will be relieved by a consciousness of the justness of the cause in which they are incurred.

The Hon. Senator has thought proper to allude to a bill introduced by myself the last session as chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements. I was instructed by the Committee to report the bill, which I did with my own cordial concurrence. I may have been wrong, but I thought the bill right then, and think so now.

Mr. Wickliffe—Will the gentleman inform us how much that Ricker expedition cost the State?

Mr. King—I shall explain the whole subject. A committee had been appointed under a resolution by the Senate to report to the next Legislature upon the best means of preserving the State from the danger of inundation. They were required to act during the recess of the Legislature, and to report to the next session. Under the resolution, the committee felt authorised to employ various persons to make the necessary examination of the Mississippi river, and the principal outlets of that river. In making that examination, it became necessary to employ steamboats and other vessels. The services of a number of the most competent engineers of the State were secured, and the result of their labor reported to the State. Most of the persons thus engaged have presented their claims against the State for compensation. The aggregate amount of those bills, as well as I can now recollect, was about $75,000. A considerable number of those bills were for money actually expended, and others for compensation for services proved to have been rendered. Some of the individuals were pressing their claims separately, and had even obtained favorable reports from committees on them.

I considered it unjust to pay some and refuse to pay others. I thought they ought all to be paid or that none should be paid. The Committee of Internal Improvements, after an investigation on the subject, reported a bill, reducing the amount of the claims to about five thousand dollars. This the Committee at the time did not consider as a full compensation for all the services; but as it was somewhat doubtful whether the Senate Committee had the right to incur the large amount of expenditure made by them, a sum was allowed by the Committee of Internal Improvements only sufficient to save the persons thus employed from absolute loss.

The laborers, the owners of the vessels and the engineers employed, very naturally supposed that the Senate Committee had the right to employ them. It was not for them to presume that the Committee were transcending their powers. They performed important and arduous services. Some of them were engaged for months in this service. The result of their labor was reported by the Senate. Their reports have been printed by the Senate.

The Hon. Senator has taken me to task for having voted in the last session for the printing of those reports. He has estimated the expense of the printing at some fifteen thousand dollars. I have not seen the printer's bill and cannot therefore say, with certainty, what was the cost. I, however, well recollect that, before the printing was ordered by the Senate, I made an estimate, which fixed the cost at some $900. I am sure the Hon. Senator is grossly mistaken in stating the expense of the printing of those reports at the very large figure he has assumed.

The Hon. gentleman seems disposed to cast a slur upon those reports by insinuating they were worthless. I can only say that I considered them of the utmost importance. They were calculated to throw much light upon the most vital of all questions affecting the interests of Louisiana. The documents, when printed, were more sought after than any other documents printed during the last session. In my opinion it was the best used money expended in printing documents during the last session.

With regard to the bill reported by the Internal Improvement Committee of the last session, allowing some $5000 to cover all the expenses incurred by Mr. Rickers' Committee, I believe that if some such bill does not pass, the various claimants will separately present themselves and will finally get the original amount of their claims. Last session some of them succeeded in obtaining favorable reports on their claims from committees. The bill reported by the Internal Improvement Committee would have put an end to all such claims, and would, in the end, as I believe, save the State some $20,000. The bill unfortunately was not acted on the last session, and the subject will again probably be brought to the notice of this Legislature. In supporting that bill, then, I believed I was right. But suppose I was not, does that justify the Hon. Senator in lavishing the public money in mere bounties? In giving to Mr. Horatio Davis $500, to which he is entitled by no rule of compensation for the services he has performed?

The Hon. Senator objects strenuously to paying the engineers and laborers employed by Mr. Ricker anything for their faithful and arduous labors; he objects to reimbursing the owners of the various vessels engaged by him in the service of the State the expenses they actually incurred, and yet is willing to bestow upon Mr. Horatio Davis $500 for some two or three hours' work, for which the law already allows him fourteen dollars per day. I am opposed to this bounty to Mr. Davis, and hope the Senate will sustain me in that opposition.

Mr. Wickliffe.—I have no disposition to trouble the Senate with a speech, after the manner of the Honorable gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. King) who has just taken his seat. But I feel constrained to say a very few words in reply to one position which that gentleman has assumed. In the course of the remarks he has just made, he has told us that the Ricker expedition was authorized by the Senate. Now, sir, I join issue with him on that point. I contend—and an examination of the records will fully justify me in making the statement—that Mr. Ricker was not authorized to do what he did. She Senate never contemplated any such thing. The gentleman has complained that I imputed to him a reproach that he had introduced the bill at the last session appropriating $5000 to pay the expenses of that unauthorized expedition. I do reproach him with it. The gentleman has informed us that $25,000 would be a reasonable amount at which to estimate our liabilities on account of that expedition, if all the bills were paid in full. Is not that a startling proposition? Let me ask again, whether Ricker really had any authority to engage in that wild expedition? If he had not,—and I here repeat that he was invested with no such authority,—it is evident that we are not responsible for the liabilities incurred by him. Yet the gentleman introduced here a bill which is the entering-wedge of a system, under which Mr. Ricker and his employees will receive that whole amount of $25,000, if we should once begin. And let me tell the gentleman, that by getting those documents printed to which he seems to attach so much importance, he has established a precedent for the payment of these claims; he has used the labor of a number of persons, —and he could not, therefore, refuse to pay them for it.

Now, sir, I will take this opportunity of repeating my hope that the Senate will pass the resolution I have laid before it. I hope the Senate will cheerfully give this small amount, as an act of justice to a grey-headed old man, who has for so long officiated as our Secretary; who came here at his own expense, from another part of the State, and assisted to open the Senate. Hon. Senators should take these facts into consideration. He is certainly entitled to something for the services he has rendered, and I do not see why we should act towards him in a sordid and niggardly spirit.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Ryan.—I have listened with attention to the arguments which have been presented to the Senate by gentlemen who have spoken on either side of this question. It seems to me that the discussion has taken a course entirely irrelevant to the main point at issue. The question is not what has been spent in other matters; or whether this or that gentleman has been consistent or inconsistent in the course he has hitherto chosen to pursue in the Senate; the only question before us is, whether this appropriation is usual and proper. If it is in accordance with the usual custom of the Senate, I shall certainly vote for it.

Mr. Wickliffe's motion to lay the motion of Mr. King on the table, was lost.

The motion of Mr King to refer the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, was carried.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. Kenner.—I am about to offer a resolution that no committee be allowed to appoint a clerk without the consent of the Senate. My object in presenting this resolution, is to save the State an expense of about $5000. I am perfectly aware of the fact, that the business of some of the committees compels them to have a clerk; but there are only a few on which so much labor devolves. It is a moderate estimate to place the compensation of each clerk of a committee at $200. If every committee had a clerk, this would amount to nearly $5000. But most of the committees do not need any clerk at all. I recollect perfectly well one committee which employed a clerk during the last session, and only one bill was referred to it during the whole time—and that bill did not require fifteen minutes' consideration! I think that this whole thing ought to be stopped, and it is time for us to begin the good work. I do not like to see every committee, whether it has work before it or not, appointing a clerk, merely because it is fashionable to do so. I wish to save the State the expense to which this system subjects it. But, as I have said before, there are some committees which need clerks. I have in my eye one gentleman, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who has arduous duties to perform—perhaps more arduous than those of any other gentleman on this floor. If he, at any time, should rise in his place in the Senate and ask permission to employ a clerk for some specific duty, I presume the Senate will readily grant his request. But I do not want to see the money of the State expended in the lavish manner which the general appointment of committee clerks would induce.

Mr. Lacey—As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I must inform the gentleman from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) who has introduced this resolution, that it will be impossible for the committee to get along in the manner proposed by him. The duties of the committee are not only arduous, but they are also incessant. If we can only employ a clerk for a specific duty, and then are compelled to ask permission of the Senate every time we have something for a clerk to do, we shall be utterly unable to get through with our work. I hope the gentleman will consent to modify his resolution, so as to eliminate this feature.

Mr. Wickliffe—If gentlemen will consider, they will recollect that a resolution of nearly precisely a similar character was passed at the last session, and in three days all the committees which had clerks at all were supplied with them. I was chairman of a committee last year, and did all the writing myself—I did not ask for a Clerk. The gentleman from New Orleans had a clerk.

Mr. Kenner—I have no objection to amending the resolution so as to make it acceptable to the gentleman from East Baton Rouge. I hope notice will be taken of the fact that the gentleman from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) had no clerk. The fact was creditable to him.

The resolution was amended and passed.

Mr. Trudeau—I beg leave to call up the resolution appointing a joint committee to inquire into the best means of preserving the health of the State—the resolution which I introduced yesterday. It is certainly my earnest desire that this resolution pass the Senate, and I hope we shall be enabled to avoid unnecessary discussion in regard to it. It relates to a subject in which we are not well versed; and it is in order that we may, by investigation, acquire such information as will enable us to legislate wisely, that I have introduced this resolution. A great calamity visited our State during the last summer. The pestilence swept over us like the Destroying Angel, and snatched too many of our friends and brothers from among us. To ward off such a calamity for the future should be our earnest care. We should use every means in our power to preserve the health of our citizens, and to prevent the attacks of another epidemic like the one which has so recently visited us. But, sir, as time fades away into the dim regions of the past, our memory of even the greatest calamities becomes obscured. The history of the human mind shows that the impressions of an event which to-day is deep and vivid, may to-morrow be almost imperceptible. As instance of this truth, I may mention the flood which five years ago devastated a portion of the city of New Orleans and the surrounding country. It ruined many a family, and caused the loss of an immense amount of property. Yet, now we repose in fancied security on the borders of the Great Father of Waters, as if his waves, which roll in silent grandeur to the ocean, might not again rise and overwhelm us. We live on as if the mighty Mississippi had no longer any claim on our fears. And now, the badge of our mourning has scarcely been thrown aside; the lines of sorrow have scarcely faded from our faces, and yet we have nearly forgotten that 12,000 of our citizens, in one city, were but recently swept into eternity. During that fearful epidemic, the city of New Orleans suffered much. Grievously, indeed, was she afflicted. But not alone the city suffered. The country was scourged as severely. Almost every portion of our wide-extended State felt the force of the deadly blow. It is due, therefore, to all sections, that measures should be taken to prevent the recurrence of such a calamity. But the city may be assured that I will not support any bill which does not consult her interests, equally with those of the country. I desire to do injustice to no section; I ask justice for all.

The resolution was taken up and passed.

The Senate adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

THURSDAY, Jan. 19.

The report of the Attorney General was laid before the Senate.

The report was ordered to be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Kenner—Is it a long report?

The Secretary—Yes, sir.

Mr. Kenner—I should like to know what it is about.

Mr. King—The Attorney General is compelled by law to make a report.

Mr. Kenner—I know he is; but I am as far from knowing the contents of the report as I was before. I merely wish some gentleman to state what the report is about; but I am not myself willing to inflict the reading of it on the Senate in order to satisfy my curiosity.

BILL TO REGULATE SUCCESSION SALES.

Mr. McCay called up the bill to regulate succession sales in the parish of Orleans.

Mr. Trudeau—It seems to me that there is no necessity for a change in the law as it stands. The system established by the statute now in force is one which accords with the general spirit of our laws and institutions, and against which no complaint has reached us. Under that statute, the party having the disposal of succession property is empowered to select either the sheriff or any auctioneer he may please, to make the sale. The supposition is that he will make that selection which he considers most conducive to the interests of the succession. If he thinks it will be more advantageous to have the property sold by an auctioneer than by the sheriff, why deprive him of the right? Why compel him to select one person, in preference to another, to make the sale? Why interfere with him in the matter at all? I am perfectly willing to admit that if the sale be a sale on execution and seizure, it ought to be made by the sheriff. But there is no analogy in the case of succession sales. In such cases the administrator ought to have the privilege of selecting whom he pleases, and I can see no reason why he should not be permitted to choose a licensed auctioneer if he choose to do so. I am perfectly willing that the sheriff should have every seizure sale; but not that he should enjoy a monopoly of succession sales. To give him such a monopoly would be improper, and injurious to the interests of the public.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Lacey—On behalf of the Judiciary Committee, by which committee this bill was reported to the Senate, I wish to explain the reasons which, I believe, influenced the committee in its decision. At the time this bill was brought before us for action, the committee was full, with the exception of one member, a gentleman who has not been present during this session. The committee was unanimous in favor of the bill, with the exception of the absent member. It appeared to us that there were considerations of a legal character which strongly recommended the bill. When succession sales are not made by the sheriff, there is not so much security in the title. The proces verbal is not so full, and omissions may be, and I believe they are frequently made, of such a nature as greatly to interrupt the business of the Court. Another recommendation for the change proposed by bill is, that sheriffs' sales have more publicity than those of auctioneers. The sheriff is the proper officer to make judicial sales, of all kinds. He is the executive officer of the Court, and if it be known that these sales are all to be made by him, they will certainly obtain a higher degree of publicity than they could in any other manner. The committee, after consideration, came to this conclusion. They thought, for reasons —some of which I have mentioned, and for others to which I have not alluded—that the sheriff is the proper officer to take charge of judicial sales of all kinds. The committee has, therefore, recommended the change proposed by the bill. The Senate will, of course, take such action as it deems right.

Mr. Kenner—I shall certainly call for the yeas and nays on this bill. I have heard no reasons to satisfy me that the change proposed by it is desirable.

Mr. Palfrey—I would ask the gentleman who introduced this bill, whether it is intended to apply to succession sales?

Mr. McCay—Yes; to all sales under an order of Court.

Mr. Ryan—I coincide in opinion with the gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Trudeau,) who has opposed this bill. I am not satisfied of its expediency by the arguments of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, highly as I respect the acquirements and opinions of that gentleman. In the first place, the bill proposes nothing that cannot be obtained under the present law. If it be to the interests of the parties concerned that the sheriff makes the sale, they have the power to select him for that purpose.

If a sale by the sheriff gives publicity to the transaction, as we are told by the distinguished Senator from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey,) then that publicity can easily be secured now by the parties interested, because the law gives them the right to select the sheriff. There are cases where it is evidently to the advantage of the party having succession property to dispose of, to select an auctioneer to make the sale. If it were not so, auctioneers would not be chosen for the purpose. The cost in such cases is less than it would be, were the sheriff to have exclusive control of the matter, because the commissions paid to auctioneers are less than the fees paid to the Sheriff. This advantage is one which is not to be overlooked, because to compel an increase of the expenses attending judicial proceedings will be very much like the imposition of additional taxation. The system now in force has everything to recommend it to us. Parties have the right to select either the sheriff or an auctioneer to make the sale, and consequently to avail themselves of the advantages of either method. If they think a sale by an auctioneer more expedient, they can select an auctioneer; if, on the contrary, they think a sale by the sheriff would give greater publicity, as contended by the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, they can choose him. There is no restriction on their action. They have all the rights that are extended to them by this bill, with others of which the bill deprives them. Under these circumstances, great as is the respect which I have for the Judiciary Committee, I cannot consent to give my vote for the bill. It is recommended by no considerations of policy; but, on the contrary, would, in my opinion, be productive of evil results by establishing a monopoly, in place of what is now free and unrestricted.

Mr. Kenner—I cannot let the occasion pass without making use of it to express my views in regard to this bill. My opinion of it coincides with those expressed with so much force by the Senator from Jefferson, (Mr. Trudeau,) and the Senator from Rapides, (Mr. Ryan.) I think the effect of the bill, if passed, would be to establish an odious monopoly. The idea that when people have property to sell, the right of making the sale must all be vested in one man is so preposterous that I had scarcely imagined it could be expressed, much less receive the support of any one on this floor.

The gentleman from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) in the remarks he made in favor of this bill, spoke of the greater publicity which would be given to a sale of property by placing it in the hands of the sheriff; of the great crowds which would attend the sales by that officer, and the consequent advantages therefrom. Now, sir, this argument is a fallacy from beginning to end. The sheriff advertises in only one newspaper, and that one probably not the newspaper having the largest circulation. The auctioneers, on the contrary, publish their advertisements in several different papers, so that the knowledge of the sales they are to make necessarily reaches a much larger number of people. We all know, sir, that sheriff's sales are not, and cannot, be attended by that degree of publicity which characterise sales made by auctioneers. And again, sir, the effect of the bill would be to compel persons having charge of these sales to give them all to the sheriff. This is anything but Democratic. It is opposed to the spirit of the age, and of our own institutions. It encourages monopoly of the worst kind. I am in favor of giving the poor debtor a chance of selecting the person who is to sell his property. Our object should be, in part, to preserve the rights of the poor debtor, not to oppress him still more than he is oppressed by his own misfortunes. I ask whether there is one country member on this floor who would be willing to extend the principle embodied in this bill to the country parishes? Is there one country member here who would say that the sheriff is the only officer in his parish capable of making sales of property? I am sure there is not one who would proclaim such a doctrine. Why, then, attempt to establish it in the city? Why hand over the poor debtor to the tender mercies of the sheriff, who may perhaps be his enemy, or interested some way in oppressing him? Why seek to create an odious, an unindurable monopoly, in place of the present liberal system. For I contend, sir, that the principle involved in this bill would, if acceded to by the Legislature, establish a monopoly more odious and more oppressive than exists in any country in the world, merely in order to swell the already enormous income of one pampered official. I ask gentlemen from the city, who ought to be acquainted with the subject, what fees the sheriff now receives for every piece of property he sells, and then state the amount sold in the course of the year. We can then form some estimate of the amount of fees now received by the sheriff, and of the amount he would receive under this bill.

There are gentlemen here from the city conversant with commercial affairs, not lawyers; but gentlemen who represent the commercial interests of the city. I want to hear from them on this subject. I want them to give us the information on this subject which is doubtless in their possession. Then we may find that the sheriff would receive under this bill at least a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. McCay.—This bill is no new thing. Previous to 1847, succession sales were made exclusively by the sheriff. At that time a change was made. This bill only contemplates a restoration of the system which isted before the passage of the act of 1847. That act, ex- in its second section, which I shall read to the Senate, fixes the amount of fees to be received by the sheriff. (Reads.) It makes no difference whether the fees be received by the sheriff or an auctioneer. The cost to the public would be precisely the same. There is another reason in favor of this bill which ought to have some weight. The auctioneers give a bond of only five thousand dollars, while the amount of succession property sold in the course of the year is immensely greater. They are, of course, liable to an action at law for any injury they may cause, but there is no certainty that they are responsible for so large a sum as they might be made liable for. At all events, the amount of their bond bears no proportion to the amount of the risk incurred. Another objection to the present system is that the auctioneers hold their sales in different places. Two, or three or more sales of succession property may be going on in various parst of the city on the same day. It is impossible for a person who may wish to purchase to be present at all of them. Consequently competition is, to that extent, prevented. It is our policy to simplify the operations of the law as much as possible. We should not let a thing be done by a dozen which can be performed by one. By concentrating the sales in the hands of the sheriff, we give greater security to the purchaser, and obtain higher prices for the property. Thus the interests of all parties would be subserved.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Ryan.—The gentleman from New Orleans advances as an argument in favor of this bill, that the auctioneers give a bond of a small amount in comparison with that given by the sheriff. Now, sir, in the country, where a large amount of property is sold annually, the sheriff gives a bond of only $5000. Consequently, by analogy, if the gentleman's argument is well founded, the sheriffs in the country are not competent to make sales. In the parish of Rapides, which I have the honor in part to represent, the sales amount to at least $120,000 a year, and yet, as I have said, the bond given is for only $5000.

I have no doubt the same thing is the case in other parishes, yet we are not told that the sheriffs are, on that account incompetent to make judicial sales.—Therefore the gentleman's argument leads to conclusions which I am sure he will himself admit are untenable. If the object of this bill were to increase the facilities with which sales are made, by adding more officers for that purpose, I would agree with the gentlemen who support it, but where it is evidently intended to create restrictions, I must vote against it.

Mr. Kenner. The question which I asked a few moments ago in relation to the fees of the sheriff, and the amount of property annually sold, has not yet been answered by any gentleman from New Orleans. While that question remains unanswered we are without the light which an explanation of that kind would throw on the subject. Now, sir, I wish it distinctly understood that I am opposed to any legislation for the especial benefit of any individual or class. I think that this bill is intended for the especial benefit of one official; I therefore want to know what is the amount of fees already received and how much they would be increased by the operation of this bill. We shall then see the enormity of the proposition to concentrate all these sales in the hands of one man, merely in order to swell to an unprecedented extent, his already large income. The people are the best judges of the proper persons to sell their property. They are certainly much better judges than we can by any possibility be. If in every case of the sale of property we were to say to the people, "you must go to one particular officer to sell your property for you," they would say we were fools, and they would say so with justice, too. We could scarcely be regarded in any other light than as fit subjects for a lunatic asylum. If we should pass a law declaring that people, having property to sell, should go the sheriff of Concordia and get him to do it, every body would see the absurdity of the proceeding. You do not say exactly this in the bill, but you tell me, if an inhabitant of the city, that when I am dead, and my property is to be divided among my children, they must go to the sheriff to have it sold. I call this, sir, a monopoly—a monopoly of the wort kind. Why, sir, it is as bad as that Russian despotism, which we regard as the synonyme fo oppression.

There is one point on which I beg leave to correct the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay.) That gentleman remarked that the bill only contemplated restoring the position of things as they existed before 1847. In this the gentleman is in error. No such thing, as contemplated by this bill, existed before or since 1847. There was no such monopoly. Before that time the administrator had the right to make the sales. From what the gentleman said, it seemed as if the sheriff had the exclusive right of making them all.

Mr. Munday—After examining this bill, and listening to the arguments which have been urged by the different gentlemen who have spoken on the subject, I have come to the conclusion to support this bill. I will state a few of the reasons which influence me in this course. Under the Constitution of 1813, judicial sales were made by the parish judge. That officer concentrated in himself the various duties of judge, clerk, and even auctioneer. By the Constitution of 1845, the parish judgeships were abolished. Now, the sales are made by the sheriff, the administrator, or an auctioneer, as the administrator may determine. The administrator receives no fees, in case he makes the sale himself. The sheriff now, as always before, sells all property disposed of under a fi. fa. In these cases, the man whose property is sold has no right to select the officer who is to sell it. That power is vested exclusively in the sheriff. Yet we hear nothing said about that being a monopoly, although the man whose property is sold under a fi. fa. has as direct an interest in the sale, perhaps even a greater interest, than an administrator has in the sale of succession property. This cry of monopoly is based on false premises, and is therefore a false conclusion. Now, sir, it is correct policy to concentrate the operations of the law in as few hands as possible. It is simpler and more economical, than to diffuse the administration of the law among a great number of irresponsible parties. If we give to the sheriff the right of making these sales of succession property, we secure the advantage of thus simplifying legal operations. On the score of economy, it is evident that the public are not injuriously affected by the change. The only difference is, that the fees now paid to the auctioneers will then be paid to the sheriff. What difference can this make to the administrator? In either case the payments come out of the succession, and not out of the administrator. These are some of the reasons which will induce me to cast my vote for the bill. In order, however, still further to curtail the expenses of judicial proceedings in these cases, I think something could be done by the Legislature. I should recommend the appointment of a Special Committee, with instructions to prepare a proper fee bill for the whole State. I must reiterate my opinion that the sheriff is the officer most competent to make succession sales. He is, to some extent, possessed of legal knowledge, and is acquainted with the various forms of law. At all events, he has a legal adviser, whose counsel can be given in every case. Purchasers, buying from him, would run less risk than in buying from an auctioneer, and title would have a more secure basis—would be clearer, and not so liable to contain errors. I can see, therefore, no reason to agree with those gentlemen who oppose the bill. I think it presents so many advantages over the system now in operation, that we should not hesitate to adopt it.

Mr. King—I did not expect to take any part in this discussion, but the manifest errors which have appeared in the course of the debate, constrain me to say something to clear up the obscurity in which the subject seems now to be involved The gentleman from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) seems to be under the impression that the debtor has now the right to select the person who shall sell his property when it is seized under an execution.

Mr. Kenner—I did not say he could do so now. I said persons having succession property to dispose of can do so, and I wanted to give the poor debtor the same right.

Mr. King—Well, sir, the poor debtor, by whatever title you may designate him, is, in the sense in which the Senate alludes to him, a person against whom there is a judgment. Now, sir, I would ask the gentleman how we are to collect debts, if the debtor or the person whose property is to be sold under judgment and execution, should have the right of selecting the person who is to sell it. To give him the right would be an innovation on all legal principles, which, I imagine, the gentleman himself would not seriously contend for. But the bill makes no change in that repose. It does not affect—it does not contemplate affecting, that point at all. The only change from the present system, which it makes, is in the manner of conducting succession sales. It simply devolves that duty on the sheriff, and this change involves no increased expense. The fees to be paid are the same; the expense will be in all respects the same as at present. The public will not be affected by it in a pecuniary point of view. There is still another error which has been made during this debate. It has been said that, at one time, the administrator made the sales; as if he had taken the stand in person, and acted the part of an auctioneer. Now, sir, during my experience as a lawyer, and I have had some, there has never been that day in Louisiana when the administrator could mount the stand, and, in person, dispose of succession property. Previous to 1847, the business was conducted in a different manner. The administrator procured an order of Court, and the sheriff sold the property.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Palfrey—Previous to 1845, the sales of succession property were made by the Register of Wills.

Mr. King—I believe the gentleman is right I remember now that previous to that time the Register of Wills was the person who made these sales.

The gentleman from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner,) has painted to us a very sombre picture as the consequence of passing this bill. He has told us that it would be a piece of despotism worse than Russian in its nature—that it would be contrary to the spirit of the age, and of the institutions under which we live. It is, not long, sir, since this very system that the gentleman denounces as so bitterly oppressive, was in operation among us. It was not then stigmatised as despotic. I do not believe that our love for liberty, and our abhorrence of despotism are any more intense than that of our ancestors, who risked their lives to save these shores from the perils of invasion, or even than that of the people who lived but a very few years ago. If the system contemplated by the bill were such an odious and insupportable tyranny, I do not believe the gentleman from Ascension would be the first to make the discovery. We all know, sir, the history of the Legislature by which the change was made from the old system to the new. It was done at a time when the office of sheriff was held by a person not pleasing to the dominant party in the Legislature. The majority were opposed to him in politics, and they thought they could do their party a service by plucking a feather from the sheriff's wing. He was no favorite of theirs, and they therefore wished to cut down his fees. It was not a very admirable motive. It was not such a motive as should have influenced the legislation of the State of Louisiana. But our motives in restoring the old method of selling succession property are very different. Our object is to protect the minor and the widow in their just rights. We wish to secure to them their property, and to prevent the possibility of their being defrauded by dishonest Administrators. We wish to have succession property fairly sold, so that both the purchaser and the minor will be more secure.

It is not of the slightest possible interest to the public whether Mr. A., B. or C. makes these sales, as a mere question of expense. The only question involved is, whether the sheriff is the proper officer to make them, and whether anybody would be benefited by making it a part of his duty to sell succession property. This is a question which can be easily settled. Everybody knows that at sheriff's sales bids are eagerly made. They are attended by numbers of persons who are convinced that there will be no jockeying, no tacit understanding between the sheriff and other parties. They know that the sales must necessarily be conducted fairly, and they have confidence in the titles to property thus acquired. At sheriff's sales higher prices are obtained than at any other kind of forced sales. Now, sir, I repeat that it is not only good policy, but it is our imperative duty to protect minors and widows against the possibility of being defrauded. If we do not protect them who will? The present system is liable to the grossest abuses, and is an incentive to the greatest frauds. Under it the rights of minors and married women are open to attack from any corrupt administrator into whose power they may be thrown. We all know that many of these successions get into the hands of designing persons. In the city of New Orleans there is a class of persons who, I am sorry to say, make a business of watching for successions in order to procure the curatorship. When a man dies and his succession is left vacant, these harpies watch even his funeral with greedy eyes, calculating the profits they may derive from administrating on his property. They wait eagerly for a moment when they can fasten their talons on the dead man's estate. They rush to the court, they get appointed administrators. And with what object? What motive actuates them to such indecent haste? It is the auri sacra fames—the love of gain. And the opportunities offered for this, under the present system, are such as to tempt cupidity. The administrator has the full control of the estate. At its most important crisis—the sale—he disposes of it entirely without the supervision of the court. The law abandons the minors and their interest to his mercy. He has the whole city before him from which to select an auctioneer. There are many auctioneers in New Orleans. Most of them are undoubtedly honorable men. I cannot say positively that any are dishonest; but I would not swear by all of them. And if the administrator wishes to act dishonestly—if he has made up his mind to defraud those whom he should protect—the honest auctioneer would be the last one he would select; he would choose some creature of his own—some knave obedient to his will, whom a share of the spoils could tempt to join the conspiracy. This may be done, and I believe has been done. In addition to those dangers, to which a succession is now subjected, the property, when sold by an auctioneer, does not bring so high a price as it would if sold by the sheriff, even if the auctioneer sell it fairly. The stands of the auctioneers are scattered through various parts of the city; sometimes five or six of them are making sales at one time; no one man can attend them all. At sheriff's sales, on the contrary, there are always large crowds of eager and expectant bidders. Now, sir, it is important to the public interests that these sales should take place in the broad light of day, in some place known to every body, so that the estate, when sold, will bring its full value. At present, some man of straw may make the sale, pocket the proceeds, and be off; he has given no security of any considerable amount, and therefore there is no redress. When a rich man dies, half a dozen auctioneers are immediately found knocking at the doors, in order to obtain the sale of the estate. In such cases the estate is sometimes divided out among five or six different auctioneers, who may all make their sales on the same day. Is that a fair method? Is that the way to obtain the highest price for the property? Every one can see that it is not.

There is another part of this subject to which I shall advert, and that is the subject of fees. There is much misapprehension as to the amount of fees received by the Sheriff. It is true there is much succession property left every year, but it belongs mostly to the estates of rich men. This is rarely sold. There is generally money enough left to pay the debts of the succession, and the remainder of the property goes to the heirs. It may happen sometimes that a rich man may die, leaving a large amount of property to be sold. But the chance of such an event is very small. But even admitting that the Sheriff should receive a large amount, in the way of fees, what difference would it be to the public whether he or an auctioneer be the recipient? And what would be the importance of the fees, in comparison to the rights of minors and married women.

I did not expect the opposition which this bill has encountered. It is intended entirely for the benefit of the city. It affects the city alone. But it appears that we have civil guardians where we did not expect them. I should feel much more indebted to them if they would be as kind to the widows and orphans of our city as they are to the auctioneers.

Mr. Ryan.—I have no desire to follow the various ramifications of the elaborate argument of the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King.) I am a new member of this House, and consequently cannot be expected to be acquainted with facts which the gentleman has said were familiar to the old members. I am not familiar with the secret motives which may have governed the Senate in framing the present law, nor do I think I should be in any degree influenced by them. In coming to a conclusion on the subject, I shall be governed by the law as it stands. I have heard the bill read, and have listened attentively to the arguments, pro and con. I must say that I think it liable to the objections which have been urged against it. I should not reply to the gentleman at all, if he had not, in the course of his remarks, insinuated that we wished to throw the property of minors and widows into the hands of speculators The gentleman, sir, is not felicitous in his argument. He has stated suppositious cases, which have no counterpart in law or fact. He has spoken to us of harpies who hang around the Courts and watch for opportunities of getting themselves appointed administrators, in order that they may fatten upon the spoils of the succession. The gentleman, sir, is a lawyer. Does he not know that when an application is made for a curatorship or administratorship, the Court is the judge of the propriety of granting the request of the applicant, and in all cases fixes the amount of the bond required. And even if the property be sold by the Sheriff, would not the administrator have the right to go to that officer and demand the proceeds of the sale? and after obtaining them, could he not leave the city and go to California, or anywhere else, just as well as the auctioneer? If he were disposed to be dishonest, he could do it just as well in one case as the other.—The conclusion of the gentleman is not warranted by his premises. There is no logical analogy between the facts and his illustrations. There may be good grounds for passing this bill, but they have not been stated by the gentlemen who favor it. Their arguments are by no means forcible enough to induce me to vote for it. They have shown no reason for the proposed change. If they have any reasons more pressing than those they have already stated, I should like to hear them.

Digitized by Google

I am willing to give all due credit to the opinions of the Judiciary Committee. Their views would, under ordinary circumstances, have great weight with me. I once had the honor to occupy the position of chairman of that committee in the other House, and I know the responsibilities it entails, and the careful investigation it requires. But I must repeat that the committee has shown no good reasons for the change it proposes to make in the law relating to succession sales. I profess to act on principle, and though I have great respect for the opinion of the Judiciary Committee, I cannot consent to yield my honest convictions. My duty to the public, as a Senator of Louisiana, requires me to vote against this bill, and I shall do it without fear.

Mr Lacey—I cannot help expressing my surprise that a bill which, like this, is entirely local in its nature, and which receives the support of the city delegation, should encounter so much opposition. We, who do not represent the city, and whose interests are in no manner affected by the bill have, it seems to me, nothing to do with the question. We should put the responsibilities of those measures which affect the citizens of New Orleans alone to the gentlemen who are so well able to represent them.

When the gentleman from Rapides asks something which is purely local in its nature, which has no bearing beyond the limits of his own district, I shall take great pleasure for voting with him. I shall take his word for the fact that it is desired by his constituents, because I do not believe any gentleman on this floor would ask the Senate to pass a bill which he did not know to be desired by the people of his district, and I for one, am willing to extend the same courtesy to the Senators from New Orleans. Now, sir, in what does the opposition to this bill consist? I am sorry to say that it has been made a mere question of fees. The whole controversy seems to be whether we shall give these sales to the sheriff or an auctioneer. For my part, I am as willing to give them to the sheriff as to an auctioneer, and even though he may happen to be a member of the party to which I belong, I do not see any reason why, on that account, I should refuse to him what I think, on principle, ought to be given to him. The opposition to this bill has no weight. Gentlemen have stated their objections with much force, but they have certainly failed to convince me. On the contrary, what are the advantages which it presents?

I have alluded to them before; but I shall repeat them now. In the first place, if the sale be made by the sheriff, greater publicity is insured, which is surely a great desideratum. This is secured by various attendant circumstances. The place where the sheriff makes his sales is fixed, and is known generally to the community. The time also is fixed. These facts give greater publicity to the sale than if it be made by an auctioneer. He advertises in some trifling paper, which, perhaps, is never read by the commercial portion of the community. The sheriff selects one paper of large circulation, in which he advertises. In addition to all this, the titles given by the sheriff are more secure. The auctioneer is not so careful, and does not devote so much attention to the proces-verbal. If any property in New Orleans presents a perfect chain of title, it is that which has passed through the hands of the sheriff. I do not say that the auctioneers are dishonest—I do not say that I know any of them who would engage in frauds.

But the system which now prevails will open the door for fraud; it will, at least, be an incentive to fraud which the law ought to avoid instead of encouraging. Suppose, for instance, that I have control of a certain succession, which has to be sold; if I am dishonest, and feel inclined to commit fraud, I have the best possible opportunity presented by the liberty which the law gives me, of selecting an auctioneer. Of course, under such circumstances, an honest auctioneer would be the last I would choose. I would select some one whom I could influence, to join me in the intended fraud, and his profession would afford him the means of carrying out the object. Thus, as I have said, a door is opened for fraud. To prevent this, is one of the objects of the bill. I hope the Senate will endorse the action of the Committee, by passing the bill. I feel some interest in having the action of the Committee, of which I have the honor to be the Chairman, endorsed by the Senate.

Mr. Kenner.—One position has been assumed by the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, which I consider so untenable that I cannot help saying a few words in reply. If the doctrine be once admitted here, that because a question is purely local in its nature we are only to sit here to ratify the decision to which the Senator representing the district in question may come, we might as well go home and let each district legislate for itself. There would no longer be any use for a Senate of Louisiana. If four Gentlemen from New Orleans can meet in a room and decide on all matters which relate to that city, and then gentlemen of distinction, like the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee (Mr. Lacey) and the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements, (Mr. King) rise in their places and tell little outsiders like us, to go home and mind our own business, I think we might just as well follow their advice. Now, sir, if no better reasons than this can be advanced in favor of this bill, is it not evident that there must be something evil about it—some hidden motive which gentlemen do not like to avow? The gentleman (Mr. King) has said that, as we have undertaken to be the guardians of Senators, he would prefer that we should extend our guardianship to the city of New Orleans. I would not undertake to act as the guardian of any person so erratic as some of the gentlemen from New Orleans on this floor.

Mr. King —I beg leave to correct the gentleman. I said that since he seemed to have to taken the city of New Orleans under his protection, he would extend that kindness to our widows and orphans.

Mr Kenner—But, sir, this is not so entirely a local question as gentlemen seem to consider it. Nothing connected with the great city of New Orleans can be entirely local. I hope gentlemen will not try to hush us down, and prevent our expressing an opinion on an important subject of this kind, by telling us that it is exclusively local, and that we have nothing to do with it. And again, sir, I do not know that the entire delegation from New Orleans is in favor of this measure. Only two have advocated it, and they are both lawyers. When the commercial interests come to us and tell us that this measure is necessary, I might then hesitate; but when only lawyers advocate it, I cannot believe that it is required by others than those who live in the purlieus of the courts.

Digitized by Google

Mr. King—I do not live in the purlieus, but in the courts.

Mr. Kenner—Well, I dare say the gentleman lives in the courts themselves. I know that he sat at the feet of Gamaliel for a long time. I know that, for a number of years he reported the decisions of the Supreme Court, and therefore I am the more surprised that, but a few months ago, he made an eggregious mistake in quoting a law. Gentlemen have spoken as if we made this a mere question of fees. I would ask whether the very object of this bill is not to place fees in the pockets of a certain official. The gentleman (Mr. King) gave, what he called, a history of the manner in which the present law was passed. He says it was done by a Whig majority in order to reduce the perquisites of a Democratic sheriff. Now, as the gentleman seems to be so well informed in everything that relates to this subject, let him tell us who was Sheriff at the time.

Mr. King—General Lewis was sheriff at that time.

Mr. Kenner—Well, in that year the House contained a Whig majority, and the Senate a Democratic majority. Why did the gentleman not tell us that? As he seems to know so much about the subject, he must have known that. He did not mention that fact because he wished to make an appeal to the Democratic party on this floor. He wished to carry his point by exciting partisan feelings. But I hope that such a motive will be spurned by the intelligent gentlemen who compose the majority of this Senate. I do not oppose this bill from any personal feelings. On the contrary, my personal predilections would induce me, if anything, to favor its passage. I have the highest regard for the present sheriff of the parish of Orleans, the gentleman for whose benefit this bill is intended. We were boys together, and have known each other from youth. But I am not willing to create the monopoly which would result from this bill, even to increase his emoluments. I voted for the present law, not with the motive the gentleman has attributed to me, but to liberalize the system, by giving the heirs or the administrator the right of selecting the person he might wish to sell his property. I said the effect of the bill before the Senate would be to create a monopoly, and that to pass it would be an act of despotism. I repeat it, sir—it would be an act of tyranny unworthy of this enlightened age. The gentleman (Mr. King) said that no administrator in this State ever had the right of selling property himself. I refer the gentleman to the law of 1847, which, I think, will disprove his assertion.

But to return to this bill. Is there any petition in its favor, from the commercial interests of New Orleans. Has the slightest whisper of a desire for this change reached us? No, sir; there is not the slightest indication that it is needed, or desired. The gentleman from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey) said that the Sheriff had fixed times and places for his sales.—Does he not know that there is no fixed time for succession sales? Therefore, no greater publicity attends a Sheriff's sale than an Auctioneer's

But to return to that portion of the subject which elicited these remarks. If the idea prevails that this bill is entirely local, and therefore we have nothing to do about it, of course our opposition will be of no avail. But if reason prevail—if the subject be attentively examined, and gentlemen act on their mature convictions of right and wrong, the bill will be rejected. I asked gentlemen who urged the passage of this bill, to state the amount of property sold in the course of the year, in New Orleans, and the fees received by the Sheriff. I have received no reply to the question. I call attention to the fact, that I have received no reply to these important inquiries. It is ridiculous to tell us what New York was in 1812—thirty years since—when it was but a village in comparison with what it is now. The idea that all the succession busines of New Orleans can be transacted by one man, is absurd.

In conclusion, I move that the bill be referred to a special committee, in order to ascertain the facts I have alluded to—the amount of property sold, and fees received—and report the result of their investigation to the Senate.

The bill was referred to a special committee.

Monday Jan. 23d 1854

The report of the State Librarian was read, and 800 copies ordered to be printed.

The report of the State Engineer was read. (For reports, see appendix)

Mr. Evans asked for a suspension of the rules to enable him to call up a bill for the emancipation of a minor named Gilmer. This young man, said Mr. Evans, is a brother of Col. James Gilmer, of Bossier parish. He is heir to a considerable estate, and his mother wishes to have him emancipated in order that he may take charge of the property.

Mr. Moore.—I object to a suspension of the rules with any such object. I prefer to have the bill referred and reported on by the appropriate committee. I see no good reason for passing bills of this kind. The law already furnishes an easy method of accomplishing the object sought for, and I can see no necessity for the Legislature to meddle in the matter at all. When the law points out an easy path to be pursued in such cases. I do not see why we should be troubled with applications of this kind. The object can be attained by the intervention of a family meeting composed of the friends and neighbors of the applicant. These should know the merits of the case. If they do not see fit to grant the request, there must be some good reason why it should be refused. At all events, I am opposed to passing the bill in such haste. I move that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The bill was referred.

Tuesday, January 24th 1854.

APPORTIONMENT.

The report of the Committee on Apportionment was laid before the Senate.

Mr. Moore--The minority of the Committee on Apportionment have prepared a report. I shall ask the permission of the Senate that the minority be allowed to make their report before the bill is acted on. With the permission of the Senate, I shall read the report now.

(Mr. Moore read the report of the minority.) I move that these documents be printed, in order that the public may be enabled to judge of the merits of the question.

Mr. Boatner.—Does the gentleman mean that the documents must be printed immediately, and no action on the subject till they are printed? If so, I consider it a useless waste of time. We may proceed to action on the matter now, and print the documents afterwards.

Mr. King.—Does the report include the census?

Mr. Boatner.—The majority report does.

Mr. Moore.—The minority report includes the electoral census. By having this printed, the people will be enabled to see that they are deprived of a large representation by the report of the majority.

The documents were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Boatner—I move a dispensation of the rule, in order to take up the bill.

The motion was carried, and the bill taken up, and passed to a second reading.

LEVEES IN CONCORDIA AND TENSAS.

Mr. Rivers—I hold in my hand, sir, a resolution for which I claim the favorable consideration of the Senate. It relates to that section which I have the honor to represent, the parishes of Concordia and Tensas. It is known to all who are acquainted with the topography of that section of the State, that it is very peculiarly situated. It is bounded entirely by water. The rushing waters of the Mississippi roll past it on the east; while bayous Black and Tensas form its western boundary. It is thus rendered peculiarly liable to inundation. In fact, these two parishes are, I believe, more exposed than any other portion of the State. It might, with truth, be said of it—

"Sic erat instabilis terra, innobilis unda."

The inhabitants are annually kept in fear of inundation. They do not know at what hour the swelling waters may rise and sweep off their crops and their dwellings, and devastate their lands. The dangers to which they are subjected, is increased by the large bayous which traverse the country, and are liable to overflow their banks whenever the parent streams, whose exhaustless reservoirs supply them, are swollen beyond their ordinary limits. Under these circumstances the inhabitants have not been idle. They have not contented themselves with imploring the aid of the State, as long as they possessed any power or means to avert the evil. They have, therefore, imposed upon themselves an annual tax of from 5 to 10 per cent, which goes towards the formation of a general levee fund. Sometimes special taxes are imposed in double this proportion. The amount thus paid, every year, by one of these parishes alone, is not less than $10,000. There are now levees around this exposed section, with the exception of a few places on two bayous, which subjects to inundation a space eight miles wide, by forty miles long. The resolution simply provides that the engineer of that district shall examine the locality, and report the result of his investigations. It is but justice to that heavily burthened portion of the State that this should be done. The people there have suffered long, and much, without a murmur of complaint. They have done all that they could do to protect themselves from the devastating flood. The State has, up to this time, done nothing to assist them. I hope, therefore, the Senate will view this resolution with a favorable eye, and suffer it to pass under a dispensation of the rules. The expense will, of course, come out of that portion of the fund belonging to that district, if the Engineers and Commissioners take action in the matter.

Digitized by Google

Mr. King—I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Rivers—I hope the resolution will not be so referred. There is no necessity for a report on the subject. To refer it to the Committee on Internal Improvements would only be unnecessarily delaying its passage. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion. Senators can vote understandingly on this subject now, just as well as at any future time.

Mr. King—This is a matter of more importance than the gentleman seems to think. I should be disposed, as far as I am concerned, to grant him any courtesy he might ask; but in this case my duty interferes with my desire to favor the gentleman. I remember, and I have no doubt other gentlemen now present remember the same thing, that last year the Senator from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner) in some remarks made by him on a kindred subject, demonstrated the evil effects of pursuing a system of which this resolution is one of the concomitants. He showed how injurious it was to the very interests we were endeavoring to cherish, for Legislators to abandon their legitimate functions, and usurp those of professional Engineers. We are here, sir, as Senators, not as Engineers. We have provided for a general system, which, we think, ought to carry out our designs. We have competent men to carry into effect and develope the objects of that system. They are supposed to know what is right and proper to be done, better than we can by any possibility know it. I am, therefore, opposed to converting ourselves into a Board of Engineers, and keeping our regular Engineers dancing from one end of the State to the other, on missions which may or may not be of importance and utility. This is the first appropriation of this kind that has been asked at this session. If it pass, there will be probably, forty more of the same kind brought forward, and if we grant one we cannot refuse the others. For my part, I do not wish to fetter the Commissioners in their operations. They will have enough to do without our imposing additional labor on them. They are supposed to be competent men; if they are not, they ought not to hold the position they occupy. We should not take on ourselves to do what they are appointed to do. The vicious effects of such action have already been manifested and appreciated, and I hoped we had abandoned it. Legislation of this kind cannot prove otherwise than injurious. We ought not to fetter the Commissioners. We ought to give them full scope for carrying out the system we have established.

Mr. Rivers—I am under the impression that the gentleman has misunderstood the object of this resolution. I think, on investigation, he will find it to be different from that which he imagines it to be The object of the resolution is not to fetter the Engineer or the Commissioner of that District. It simply provides that the Engineer shall make an examination of a part of the State which, I am sorry to say, is very little known. The Parish of Concordia does not ask the State to do this work, though she might ask it with a great deal of propriety. The resolution simply directs the Engineer to proceed to the spot, and report on the practicability, and the expense of, reclaiming from the danger of inundation, a district which is, as I have said eight miles broad and 40 miles long. It is desirable he should report on the extent to which the district is inundated, and on the amount of money which would be required to protect it—He should also inquire and report how much money has been paid into the State Treasury on the faith of these lands being reclaimed by individual enterprise. He will find that the amount is certainly not less than $15,000. If this work be done, the additional amount which will be secured to the treasury will be at least $10,000. Now, all that the resolution asks, and it is certainly not an exorbitant request, is that the Engineer report on these facts, and then if he think the State ought to do the work, let it be done by the State. When the gentleman from New Orleans made the motion to refer, I am sure he could not have correctly understood the object of the resolution. It does not ask an appropriation of money. It does not ask that anything be drawn from the Internal Improvement Fund. If the work ought not, or cannot be done by the State, then it will be done by individual enterprize, although it is scarcely fair that our section of the State should be the only one on which such a burthen is thrown. Nevertheless, in spite of the objections raised by the gentleman. I am convinced the enterprise is of so much importance, the State owning a large quantity of land in the vicinity, which is directly affected by the measure, that the State itself will, on examination, take the matter in hand: I hope the gentleman will withdraw his opposition, and not insist on a reference.

Mr. De Russy—I would ask the gentleman whether this subject has been brought to the notice of the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. Rivers—I believe it has not.

Mr. King—I feel constrained to adhere to my motion. The gentleman, I have no doubt, is perfectly sincere in all that he has said on this subject. When he says he does not intend to fetter the Commissioner, or the Engineer, I believe he does not see that such would be the effect of his resolution. He tells us that the Engineer may do the work or not; but if the Engineers may disregard the resolution, what use can there be in passing it. I take it for granted that, if the work is necessary and proper, the Engineer will perform it, if he is a competent officer; and if it is not needed it ought not to be done. We are told that the section of country referred to by the resolution is very little known to the rest of the State, and the object is to call the attention of the Commissioner and Engineer to its situation. Now, sir, it is the duty of those officers to know all the facts of the case. The gentleman says that they do not, but I have no doubt that they will make an examination for themselves, and act as they may find expedient. It is their duty to do what the gentleman asks, if it is right and proper, and no one can deny that they are, or ought to be the best judges of the propriety and necessity. If we adopt the plan recommended by the gentleman, we assume the duties of Engineers. I, sir, for one, am not an Engineer; I am not paid as an Engineer; I have no pretension whatever to be an Engineer. At the last session the gentleman from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) convinced us of the impolicy of adhering to that old system of legislation from which so many evils have sprung. He showed the bad effects which had resulted from the habit of legislators usurping the functions which properly appertain to Engineers, and attempting to regulate and decide what we do not understand. These are duties which can be performed by the officers appointed especially for the purpose. When we interfere in the matter we are liable to do much more harm than good. It is possible that, after an attentive examination, I may agree with the gentleman as to the propriety of this resolution. But I cannot consent to vote for it without investigation. It appears to me objectionable on its face as violative of the system we have established. When we have a system let us adhere to it. If not, we had better abandon it altogether.

Digitized by Google

But let us at least give every part of the State a clear field; let us make no invidious distinctions. There is no section of the State I would rather improve than that to which this resolution refers, but I cannot think that necessity demands our interference. We cannot understand the case. We have to take it altogether on ex parte statements, which, although no doubt made in perfect good faith, must be biassed by sectional or local feelings and interests.

It is the duty of the Commissioner and Engineer of the District to do the very thing contemplated by the resolution, if it is necessary. To them it should be left. I repeat again, sir—and I hope Senators will reflect well on it, because my words are only the echo of experience—that if we once enter on this system of special legislation, we shall only impede the march of improvement, and may produce the most disastrous results.

Mr. Rivers.—I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Commissioners are not divided in their opinions as to their powers under the present law—whether they are agreed that they have the right to construct levees where there are riparian proprietors? If such a doubt has arisen in the minds of the Commissioners, it would be necessary to take some action.

Mr. King.—I have not read the reports, or held any conversation with the Commissioners on the subject. I am, consequently, unable to answer, definitely, the question propounded by the gentleman. I must say, however, that I have heard rumors to such an effect. I believe I have heard a report that the Commissioners had taken up an absurd idea that the law does not mean what it says. But I paid no attention to these reports. I hear a thousand idle rumors, which do not merit a thought—and this one is so improbable, that I did not bestow a single thought on it. As I said before, I have not read the reports, and I shall not read them till they are printed. Until then, I cannot give an opinion on the subject to which the gentleman has directed my attention.

Mr. Rivers.—In order to show the gentleman that there is a conflict of opinion among the Commissioners, I shall read a letter which I have received from one of them. [Reads letter.] I have caused this letter to be read, in order to show the gentleman that what I have stated was no idle rumor. It will thus be seen that the State ought to take this case in charge, as the Commissioner hesitates to do it, and it is of pressing importance.

The resolution was referred.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 25, 1854.

THE JACKSON RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McMurdo—I move to take up the resolution from the other House, appointing a Joint Committee to inquire into the condition and affairs of the Jackson Railroad Company. The resolution is of some importance, and I hope will be taken up and passed without delay. I would ask the indulgence of the Senate while I say a few words in explanation of its object. It is a fact of such general notoriety, as to have escaped the attention of but few persons, that during the last summer, there was some discusion in the public press, as to the manner in which the affairs of the Jackson Railroad Company were conducted. At the same time, serious charges were preferred against the President and Directors of the Company. As the State has a large interest in the Company, she owes it to herself to make some inquiries touching the matter, and it is also due to those gentlemen who had been arraigned before the public, that an investigation should be instituted. It would, no doubt, be more satisfactory to them, and it is the duty of the State, no less towards them than towards herself, to make this examination. I hope, therefore, that the resolution will pass the Senate without delay.

Mr. Martel—I move to take up the bill to repeal an act to organize the Police Jury of the parish of St. Landry.

Mr. Kenner—I would ask the Senator whether the bill meets the approbation of his colleague. If it does not, as that gentleman is not present, I think the bill ought to be laid over.

Mr. Martel made a remark, after which the bill was taken up and passed.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The Apportionment bill was then taken up.

Mr. Moore—I move to substitute the following report and bill of the minority of the Joint Committee, for that of the majority:

Minority Report.

The undersigned, members of the Joint Committee appointed to divide the State into Senatorial Districts, and apportion representation among the parishes and election districts, ask leave to present the following minority report:

The undersigned are fully apprised of the importance of the duties assigned them, and deeply regret that there was not unanimity of opinion on this important subject in your committee.

The undersigned, disclaiming all intentions of a factious opposition on their part, submit the following as some of the reasons that compel them to dissent from the report of the majority.

The undersigned believe that the doctrine of Equal Representation is too well settled to admit of a cavil in this place. And the undersigned are equally certain that when circumstances prevent or positive law forbids that exact equality which constitutes the beauty and strength of the Representative system, it is nevertheless an imperative duty to approximate as nearly as possible to that equality.

Have the majority done this?

Most assuredly they have not

There are nineteen Parishes in this state, (nearly one half) with an aggregate population of 88,551, and they are represented at the ratio of 4660—only a little over half of the ratio adopted by the majority. The undersigned having these facts before them, and the constitution declaring and commanding that Representation shall be equal and uniform, feel impelled, from a high sense of duty, to recommend the lowest ratio possible under the constitution, which is 6503; and in so doing, feel that they are simply fulfilling a constitutional obligation. The undersigned would further suggest, as a consideration worthy the attention of this House, that we are now making this apportionment on a basis that is entirely novel to the people of this State, and one, too, that is already, in anticipation, odious to a large portion, if not a majority of them, as depriving them of their proper right and influence in this House; for which reason, policy as well as duty should dictate to us to adopt that ratio that would be least likely to deprive any parish or district of its present Representation.

The undersigned have also to state that they dissent from the report of the majority in the division of the State into Senatorial Districts.

The undersigned are clearly of opinion that the formation of large districts, (out of the city of New Orleans) with two Senators, is in contravention to the spirit and true intent of the 16th article of the Constitution, and is only permitted by the Constitution when absolutely requisite in carrying into effect the other great features—equal and uniform representation.

The undersigned are fully convinced that the district composed of the Parishes of Caddo, DeSoto, Sabine and Natchitoches, is in express violation of the latter clause of article 16 of the Constitution, which says—"If a Parish or District fall short of, or exceed the ratio one-fifth, then a district may be formed having not more than two Senators, but not otherwise." Caddo and De Soto are two contiguous parishes, having an aggregate population (19,130) large enough for one district, and do not exceed the ratio, (16,011) one-fifth; therefore, there cannot be any plausible reason for that district being joined to another.

Sabine and Natchitoches are two contiguous Parishes, having an aggregate population (18,485) large enough for a district, and do not exceed the ratio one-fifth—demonstrating clearly that the contingency under which, alone, such districts may be formed, not having occurred, such district can only be formed by doing violence to that clause of the Constitution.

The undersigned herewith submit a project showing the number of Senatorial Districts and their population, together with the population of each Parish, and the number of representatives every Parish has, under each ratio, 6503 and 7000.

Digitized by Google

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. BONNER,
H. J. HEARD,
JOHN MOORE,
PHILIP B. KEY.

AN ACT

To divide the State into Senatorial Districts and apportion Representation among the several Parishes and elective Districts.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Assembly convened, That hereafter, until the next apportionment, the city of New Orleans and several parishes in the State, shall be entitled to elect Senators as follows, namely:

The city of New Orleans five.

The parishes of Plaquemines, St. Bernard and Orleans, on the right bank of the Mississippi river, one.

The parish of Jefferson one.

The parishes of St. Charles and Lafourche one.

The parishes of St. John the Baptist and St. James one.

The parishes of Ascension, Assumption and Terrebonne two.

The parish of Iberville one.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge and Point Coupee one

The parish of West Feliciana one.

The parish of East Feliciana one.

The parish of East Baton Rouge one.

The parishes of Livingston, St. Helena, St. Tammany and Washington one.

The parishes of Concordia and Tensas one.

The parishes of Madison and Carroll one.

The parishes of Catahoula, Caldwell and Franklin one.

The parishes of Ouachita, Morehouse, Union and Jackson together, two.

The parishes of Claiborne, Bossier, Bienville and Winn, two.

The parishes of Caddo and DeSoto one.

The parishes of Sabine and Natchitoches one.

The parishes of Calcasieu, Rapides and Avoyelles two.

The parishes of St. Landry and Lafayette two.

The parishes of Vermillion and St. Martin one.

The parish of St. Mary one.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That hereafter until the next apportionment, the several elective districts in the city of New Orleans, and parishes of this State shall be entitled to elect members to the House of Representatives as follows, viz:

The parishes of Plaquemines, St Bernard and Orleans on the right bank of the Mississippi river, each, one.

The first, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth districts of the city of New Orleans, each, two.

The second and tenth districts, each, three.

The third district four.

The ninth district one.

The parishes of St. Charles, St. John the Baptist, West Baton Rouge, Livingston, St. Helena, St. Tammany, Washington, Madison, Catahoula, Caldwell, Franklin, Ouachita, Morehouse, Jackson, Union, Bienville, Bossier, Winn, DeSoto, Sabine, Calcasieu, Lafayette and Vermillion, each, one.

The parishes of Jefferson, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Lafourche, Terrebonne, Iberville, Point Coupee, East Baton Rouge, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Concordia, Tensas, Carroll, Claiborne, Caddo, Natchitoches, Avoyelles, St. Martin, and St. Mary, each, two.

The parishes of Rapides and St. Landry, each three.

APPORTIONMENT.

Apportionment of Senators and Representatives made under the census of 1853, in compliance with the 8th, 15th, and 16th articles of the Constitution The ratio for a Senator out of the city of New Orleans being 16011; ratio for Representative being 6503.

parishes and dists.	population.	population in the Senatorial dists.	number of Senators.	No. of Reps ratio of 6503	No. of Reps ratio of 7000
1 Plaquemines	6348			1	1
1 St. Bernard	4011			1	1
1 Orleans rt bank	3404	13763	1	1	1
N. Orleans 1st dist	13457			2	2
2d do	18679			3	3
3d do	23243			4	3
4th do	15053			2	2
2d 5th do	14415	15307	5	2	2
6th do	15905			2	2
7th do	16451			2	2
8th do	11769			2	2
9th do	9449			1	1
10th do	18586			3	3
3d. Jefferson City		14225	1	2	2
St. Charles	5734			1	1
Lafourche	12134	17868	1	2	2
St John Baptist	6674			1	1
St James	12462	19136	1	2	2
Ascension	10622			2	2
Assumption	12134			2	2
Terrebonne	1963	82719	2	2	1
Iberville		15112	1	2	2
West Baton Rouge	6060			1	1
Pointe Coupee	11747		1	2	2
West Feliciana		12679	1	2	2
East Feliciana		13825	1	2	2
East Baton Rouge		15916	1	2	2
Livingston	5734			1	1
St. Helena	5105			1	1
St. Tammany	4409			1	1
Washington	5491	16739	1	1	1
Concordia	9794			2	1
Tensas	10233	20027	1	2	1
Madison	8756			1	1
Carroll	10359	19085	1	2	1
Catahoula	6931			1	1
Caldwell	3365			1	1
Franklin	3441	13768	1	1	1
Ouachita	5975			1	1
Morehouse	5426			1	1
Union	9393			1	1
Jackson	7575	28169	2	1	1
Claiborne	10599			2	2
Bienville	7489			1	1
Bossier	8792			1	1
Winn	2631	29612	2	1	1
Caddo	9950			2	1
De Soto	9180	19130	1	1	1
Sabine	4692			1	1
Natchitoches	13793	18485	1	2	2
Calcasieu	3500			1	1
Rapides	18548			3	3
Avoyelles	9853	31901	2	3	1
St. Landry	22084			3	3
Lafayette	7631	29715	2	1	1
St. Martin	1977			2	2
Vermillion	3818	16795	1	2	1
St. Mary		16101	1	2	2
		585314	32	95	88

The motion was lost.

Mr. Ryan—Mr. President, as a member of the Committee, I feel it my duty to explain my views in relation to this bill. I never intended to vote for that portion of the bill which fixes the Senatorial Apportionment. I will state very briefly, the reasons by which I am influenced. I have no desire to trouble the Senate with a speech; but as a Senator, representing the parishes of Rapides and Avoyelles, I cannot remain silent when I see palpable injustice about to be committed on a portion of those constituents who have confided their interests, in part, to my hands. I consider it my duty towards my constituents at least to protest, if I can do nothing more. I was a member of the Joint Committee, by the majority of which this bill has been reported; but I was not present when the Committee made its decision. I had been called to the city of New Orleans, on pressing business. When I left the Capital, I was assured that in arranging the Senatorial districts, Rapides was to have one Senator; that she was to form a district by herself, an arrangement which would have been only an act of justice towards that parish, since her population is more than enough to entitle her to a Senator. When in the city of New Orleans, I discovered that the arrangement I had supposed was decided on, had been changed, and the parish of Rapides placed in a Senatorial district with the parish of Avoyelles. Rapides has a population of over 18,000. This is more than enough to entitle her to a Senator by herself.

Digitized by Google

Now, sir, all that I ask is, that justice be done towards my constituents. I should be false to my trust did I fail to make this appeal. I cannot persuade myself to vote for anything that operates unjustly towards those whom I represent on this floor. No considerations of temporary expediency could tempt me to such a course. I am willing to make all reasonable sacrifices for my party; but a sacrifice of duty and conscience—never. I cannot aid in the perpetration of an injustice on my own constituents. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the first section was adopted. I wish to record my vote against it, in order that my constituents may see and know that I have acted towards them the part of a faithful representative.

Mr. Boatner—I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The motion was laid on the table.

The report, which is as follows, having been adopted, the accompanying bill passed:

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE.

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieut. Governor and President of the Senate.

The Joint Committee to which was referred a resolution to apportion the representation among the several parishes and election districts, also, the apportionment of the Senate, report that they have complied with the duty assigned to them, and herewith submit a Bill as required by articles 8 and 16 of the Constitution.

The Committee, on examining the office of the Secretary of State, found that the census returns had not been made from four parishes, to wit:—St. Charles, Rapides, Caddo and Vermillion. The Committee, however, made estimates of the population of those parishes by allowing four per cent. per annum, on the census returns of eighteen hundred and fifty, as their probable increase.

The total population of St. Charles, in 1850, was 5120; 4 per cent. on this for 8 years gives her a population of 5734. The total population of Rapides in 1850, was 16,561; the same allowance gives her a population of 18,548. The population of Caddo in 1850, was 8884; the same per centage gives her a population amounting to 9950. The population of Vermillion in 1850, was 3409; under the same rule, she now has 3818.

The Committee, after much consultation, assumed 7000 as a representative number in apportioning the representation in the House of Representatives; this basis reduces the actual number from 97 to 88, a circumstance, in the opinion of the Committee, much to be desired, as that body at this time is much too large and unwieldy, and the Committee being firmly impressed, too, with the conviction, that legislation would progress with much more rapidity, before a smaller body.

This consideration, in connexion with the fact, that it would cause an annual saving to the State of about $4000, caused them to decrease the number in that branch of the General Assembly. The Committee, therefore, recommend 7000 as the representative number for the House of Representatives.

The Committee made the Senatorial representation in strict compliance with article 16 of the Constitution, 16011 appearing as the representative number. This gives twenty-one Senatorial districts, as will appear by reference to the Act accompanying this report.

The document marked A. as hereto annexed for reference. The Committee ask for the passage of the Bill based upon the foregoing estimates.

M. BOATNER.
Chairman of the Senate Committee.

AN ACT,

To apportion the representation in the Senate and House of Representatives in the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, according to the first census made in eighteen hundred and fifty-three, under the eighth Article of the Constitution.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of [redacted] in General Assembly convened, That until the next census and apportionment shall have been made, the State shall be divided into the following Senatorial districts, to wit:

The parishes of Plaquemines, St. Bernard, and all that part of the parish of Orleans on the right bank of the Mississippi river, shall form one district, and shall elect one Senator.

All that portion of the parish of Orleans on the left bank of said river, including the city of New Orleans, shall form one district, and shall elect five Senators.

The parish of Jefferson shall form one district, and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of St. Charles and Lafourche shall form one district, and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of St. John the Baptist and St. James shall form one district and elect one Senator.

The parishes of Ascension, Assumption and Terrebonne shall form one district, and shall elect two Senators.

The parish of Iberville shall form one district, and shall elect one Senator.

The parish of East Baton Rouge shall form one district, and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge, Point Coupe, and West Feliciana shall form one district, and shall elect two Senators.

The parish of East Feliciana shall form one district, and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of Washington, St. Tammany, St. Helena and Livingston shall form one district, and elect one Senator.

The parishes of Concordia and Tensas shall form one district and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of Madison and Carroll shall form one district and elect one Senator.

The parishes of Morehouse, Ouachita, Union and Jackson shall form one district and shall elect two Senators.

The parishes of Catahoula, Caldwell and Franklin shall form one district and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of Bossier, Bienville, Claiborne and Winn shall form one district and shall elect two Senators.

The parishes of Natchitoches, Sabine, DeSoto and Caddo shall form one district and shall elect two Senators.

The parishes of St. Landry, Lafayette and Calcasieu shall form one district and shall elect two Senators.

The parishes of St. Martin and Vermillion shall form one district and shall elect one Senator.

The parish of St. Mary shall form one district and shall elect one Senator.

The parishes of Rapides and Avoyelles shall form one district and shall elect two Senators.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c, That until the next census and apportionment, the representation in the House of Representatives shall be apportioned among the several parishes and districts at a representative number of seven thousand.

The parish of Plaquemines shall elect one.
The parish of St. Bernard shall elect one.
The parish of Orleans, right Bank shall elect one.
The first Representative district in the parish of Orleans and city of New Orleans shall elect two.
The second district shall elect three.
The third district shall elect three.
The fourth district shall elect two.
The fifth district shall elect two.
The sixth district shall elect two.
The seventh district shall elect two.
The eighth district shall elect two.
The ninth district shall elect one.
The tenth district shall elect three.
The parish of Jefferson shall elect two.
The parish of St. Charles shall elect one.
The parish of St. John the Baptist shall elect one.
The parish of St. James shall elect two.
The parish of Ascension shall elect two.
The parish of Assumption shall elect two.
The parish of Laforche shall elect two.
The parish of Terrebonne shall elect one.
The parish of St. Mary shall elect two.
The parish of St. Martin shall elect two.
The parish of Iberville shall elect two.

Digitized by Google

The parish of West Baton Rouge shall elect one.
The parish of East Baton Rouge shall elect two.
The Parish of Livingston shall elect one.
The parish of St. Helena, shall elect one.
The parish of Washington shall elect one.
The parish of St. Tammany shall elect one.
The parish of East Feliciana shall elect two.
The parish of West Feliciana shall elect two.
The parish of Point Coupee shall elect two.
The parish of Avoyelles shall elect one.
The parish of Concordia shall elect one.
The Parish of Tensas shall elect one.
The Parish of Madison shall elect one.
The Parish of Carroll shall elect one.
The Parish of Catahoula shall elect one.
The Parish of Caldwell shall elect one.
The Parish of Franklin shall elect one.
The Parish of Ouchita shall elect one.
The Parish of Union shall elect one.
The Parish of Jackson shall elect one.
The Parish of Claiborne shall elect two.
The Parish of Bienville shall elect one.
The Parish of Winn shall elect one.
The Parish of Bossier shall elect one.
The Parish of Caddo shall elect one.
The Parish of DeSoto shall elect one.
The Parish of Natchitoches shall elect two.
The Parish of Rapides shall elect three.
The Parish of Sabine shall elect one.
The Parish of Calcasieu shall elect one.
The Parish of Lafayette shall elect one.
The Parish of Morehouse shall elect one.
The Parish of St. Landry shall elect three.
The Parish of Vermillion shall elect one.

NAMES OF PARISHES.	Qualified Electors.	Number of free white people.	Number of free people of color.	Number of Slaves.	Number of free white Males between 18 and 45 years.	Total Population.
		[A]
Plaquemines	608	2045	877	3926	603	63541
St. Bernard	323	1447	78	1794	369	4011
Orleans Rt Bank	208	2312	128	994	631	3404
" 1st Rep Dis	1252	11290	435	1732	2489	17467
" 2d " "	2221	16374	228	2077	3733	18679
" 3d " "	2750	20183	824	2234	5629	23243
" 4th " "	2021	12681	9200	11.2	4000	15653
" 5th " "	1167	10356	1214	1815	3054	14415
" 6th " "	1793	11795	2141	1669	1479	15905
" 7th " "	1007	7239	3011	2201	1560	12451
" 8th " "	1453	10110	1288	373	3032	11769
" 9th " "	708	8252	196	1001	1731	9449
" 4th " Laf.	1885	16615	441	1530	3929	18586
Jefferson.....	1074	9254	791	4580	3004	14625
St. Charles.....						5734
St John Baptiste	388	2336	288	4050	350	6674
St. James.....	628	3440	92	8930	719	12462
Ascension.....	673	3520	2 3	6889	660	10622
Assumption.....	1167	6095	70	6407	1086	12572
Lafourche.....	1219	6473	111	56 0	1346	12134
Terrebonne	578	4409	345	5194	808	9903
St. Mary.....	827	3670	589	10846	767	15101
St. Martin.....	1074	5573	731	6673	985	12977
Iberville	860	5426	169	9517	1092	15112
W. Baton Rouge	381	1782	106	4178	325	6060
E Baton Rouge..	905	7895	700	7320	2200	15916
Livingston.....	649	2709	19	916	577	3734
St. Helena.....	494	2621	4	4487	484	5105
Washington.....	502	2 97	0	1094	365	3491
St. Tamany... ..	498	2588	447	1373	382	44 9
E. Feliciana.....	880	3796	39	9090	724	13825
W Feliciana....	560	2331	70	10278	523	12679
Pointe Coupee...	720	3042	695	8000	865	1173
Avoyelles.....	803	4284	121	54 8	786	9853
Madison.....	402	1361	16	7351	429	8726
Tensas.....	313	1078	13	9142	323	10233
Concordia.....	376	1221	14	8559	348	9794
Carroll.....	606	2199	1	78 9	590	10389
Catahoula.....	702	3090	37	3831	588	6961
Calcasieu	441	2367	280	853	385	3500
Natchitoches and Winn.....	1131	5141	982	7670	982	18793
Ouachita.....	79	2831	7	2287	499	5775
Bossier	656	3130	14	5643	688	8792
Caldwell.....	389	1906	0	1460	357	3386
Lafayette	720	3767	215	3649	682	7631
St. Landry	1888	10003	2298	10783	1437	22984
Morehouse	734	2701	27	2696	672	5422
Franklin.....	893	1703	10	1728	376	3811
DeSoto	864	3764	0	5416	852	9180
Sabine	717	3472	2	1218	624	4694
Bienville & Bossier	865	4451	18	3020	727	7480
Union & Claiborne	1236	3863	0	3580	1180	9343
Winn	354	3032	33	567	380	2932
Claiborne.....	1221	6709	0	3890	1000	10529
Rapides						15548
Caddo						9946
Jackson	857	4662	2	2911	856	7575
Vermilion						3884

THURSDAY, January 26, 1854.

Mr. Lacoste called up a bill to attach to the Parish of Plaquemines a portion of the Parish of Orleans situated on the right bank of the river.

A motion was made to refer the bill to a Special Committee.

Mr. Lacoste—There is no good reason for referring this bill. The inhabitants of the portion of the Parish of Orleans, which the bill contemplate attaching to Plaquemines, are all in favor of the measure, and the representative from the right bank in the other House, will not oppose it.

Mr. King—I certainly think the bill should be referred. I understand that it intends a division of my Parish. I do not like to see this done without knowing something more about it.

The bill was referred.

BILL TO APPOINT WEIGHERS OF SUGAR AND COTTON.

Mr. Wickliffe called up the bill to appoint weighers of Sugar and Cotton for the city of New Orleans.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. Kenner—I should like to know who introduced this bill.

Mr. Wickliffe—I can give the gentleman the information he desires. I introduced the bill. I will further state that it is the same as the bill which passed the Senate last year. It is imperatively demanded by the interests of the country.

Mr. Ryan introduced a resolution instructing the Finance Committe to inquire and report on the amount of the liabilities to the State, of —— Leckey, late Sheriff of the Parish of Rapides. Mr. Ryan said:—

"This person, Mr. Leckey, was formerly Sheriff of the Parish of Rapides. He became a defaulter, and ran away to California, leaving his securities to pay. There is a contestation now going on as to the amount of his liabilities. The resolution is intended to ascertain the true amount for which the securities are liable, and which they stand ready to pay whenever it is determined on.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. King called up the bill to amend the 1116th article of the Civil Code.

Mr. King—Gentlemen will observe, that under the law as it now stands, very serious injuries are liable to arise. At present Courts are compelled to appoint two curators, whenever two apply for the office. In New Orleans, where persons make a business of seeking Curatorships, this leads to great evils. The bill which I have brought in, so amends the article as to leave to the Judge the discretion of appointing one or two Curators. It is absurd to compel the Judge to appoint two Curators when his own common sense tells him that one is enough.

The bill was taken up and passed.

The bill to amend article 329 of the Civil Code was taken up.

Mr. King—With the permission of the Senate I will explain the objects of this bill. In accordance with the provisions of the article as it now stands, the Judge appoints the appraisers of property. It so happens that sometimes an inventory is to be taken in a distant parish. The Court is therefore compelled to appoint appraisers in a different part of the State, where probably, it can have no information on the subject. The Judge of the Probate Court in New Orleans is probably compelled to make more appointments of this kind than any Judge in the State. He frequently finds great difficulty in making selections, which in fact is very natural, as he can scarcely be expected to be familiar with persons in distant parishes. In cases of [redacted] the appointment ought to be made by the Notary who makes the Inventory. I am told that here frequently difficulties arise from the same cause. The change proposed will be beneficial both to the city and country.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Moore—If I understand the bill correctly it gives the appointment of appraisers to the Notaries.

Mr. King—Not in all cases. The amendment is so drawn up that when the appointment is to be made within the limits of his own parish, the Judge shall appoint. But when the appointment is to be made in a distant parish the appointment is to be made by the Notary who takes the inventory.

Mr. Moore.—I have no objection to the bill.

The bill passed.

EMANCIPATION OF A SLAVE.

The bill to emancipate the slave ———, of Mrs. J. A. Withers, wife of Joseph M. Kennedy, was taken up.

The Secretary read the report of the Judiciary Committee, showing that the slave had saved the life of a child of Mrs. Kennedy.

Mr. Trudeau.—I should like to know whether the Judiciary Committee, in making their reports on these bills, are guided by any instructions from the Senate. I should like to be informed whether the Senate has made any general rule applicable to these cases. The custom adopted in framing their legislation, by countries and States where slavery exists, is to guard emancipation as much as possible. It must be confessed that sound policy combines with justice; to dictate exceptions in cases like this. But where exceptions are made, and slaves are permitted to be emancipated, they should be sent out of the State. We should have some general rule on which to act. If not, we will become a Board of Emancipation, rather than a State Senate—and the only question for our decision will be, "What slaves in the State shall remain in a condition of servitude?"

Now, sir, I think the time has arrived when we should put a stop to these proceedings. If we continue them, and by our affirmative action sanction the presentation of claims of this kind, we shall soon be unable to attend to any other business. At this moment I have my desk full of applications for emancipation, and I presume other members have at least as many as I have. I would call the attention of the Senate to this subject, in all seriousness. The evil has become one of such magnitude, that it already threatens the most injurious consequences. Let us stop it while we may. Procrastination will but increase the evil.

Mr. Lacey.—I will state that the Judiciary Committee, by whom this bill was reported, has not been unanimous on the subject of emancipation. If the care question of emancipation had been involved in this matter, it would certainly have been extremely difficult to obtain a favorable report from the committee. Indeed, I doubt whether it would be possible to procure a favorable report on such a proposition. But this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee. The case involved in it is one which deserves to be made an exception from our general rule of legislation. The facts are such as to demand our favorable consideration of the request which has been presented to us. I, sir, have felt the strength of parental ties, and I can appreciate and sympathize with those feelings when entertained by others. This is a case which appeals to the heart of every parent. The slave whose freedom is sought, saved the life of the little child of her mistress. The mistress, prompted by gratitude for the preservation of her child, asks us to grant freedom to this slave to permit her to remain in her native State. I am glad to hear the Senator from Jefferson, who is opposed to emancipation in general, declare that he will vote for this bill. I hope that every Senator will vote for it.

Mr. King.—I wish to make a few remarks on this subject, as I consider it one of some importance—perhaps of more importance than it would seem from a merely casual examination. At the last session of the Legislature, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate unanimously reported against emancipation bills in general. It was not long before the practice ceased, of referring such applications to the Judiciary Committee, and they were pressed through [redacted] any reference or report. By a system of begging and representing each one as a particularly hard case, appealing to the sympathies of members, every one was passed. Every appeal for emancipation was granted. Now, sir, we all know that we are called on to act on these cases entirely on ex parte statements. We are assured that this girl ought to be emancipated for such and such reasons, or that the other should be emancipated for some other reason. These statements are always made, and no doubt made sincerely. But we should act on evidence, not on mere ex parte statements, however much confidence we may have in the gentleman making them.

Now sir, where is the evidence in these cases? Can any Senator point it out? Have we anything more tangible in most of these cases than the mere assertion of the member who may introduce the bill? I have the greatest confidence in the Senator who reported this bill, but I cannot see that he has any good evidence of the statements on which the report is based; if there is such evidence it ought to be laid before us. At the last session I voted for one bill to emancipate a minor. I was under the impression at the time that the reasons were good; they were such as had been presented to me by persons supposed to be worthy of confidence. But I did not then know all the circumstances of the case. I did not know what I afterwards ascertained to be a fact, that the parties had made the same application to a court and failed. They then came before the Senate and asked us to pass an act to grant them that which they could not succeed in obtaining in the regular way. I merely mention this as illustrative of the fact that we are always liable to be betrayed into errors, when we act on merely ex parte statements. In this case, when I went home, I found the circumstances very different from those which had been represented to me. I found the record evidence of a court directly opposed to granting the request which we had granted, and for which I had been induced to vote. Applicants for favors of this kind can always bring forward good reasons in support of their claims. They can always show something to recommend their request to the benevolent mind. But who can tell that the statements are true? What evidence is placed before us? They tell us a moving tale, and appeal to our sympathies, and we, in the generosity of our hearts, grant their requests.

There is still another reason why I am opposed to this kind of legislation. I am fully convinced that in granting this prayer, we actually do no favor to the recipient of our intended kindness. On the contrary, I believe the worst evil that can befall her is for us to accede to her request. While she remains in servitude, she lives beneath the protecting power of a kind master, who has shown his love by this very application. Whatever she may be now, if she is freed, if released from the kind control and guidance of her master, she becomes the worst of all things shocking. She may, she probably will be reduced to the lowest condition a human being can occupy, and be an example of the injurious results of a too ready yielding to an amiable impulse. Let me also call the attention of Senators to another fact, deduced from a calculation which is incontrovertible If we emancipate one per cent. per annum of the slaves in this State, in 100 years our whole slave population will have become free. There will no longer be a slave in the State, and by our own act we will have brought on ourselves the subversion of our institutions. One hundred years may be a long time—it may be beyond the span of the life of man; when a century has rolled round, we, and all who now walk the earth, may be mouldering in our graves; but we should remember that what may be a long time to us, is but a short time in the history of a nation or a State. Nor should we legislate for ourselves alone. Those who have truly at heart the prosperity and welfare of their country, look to the future as well as to the present—to posterity as well as to themselves. We ought not to inflict on those who are to come after us, evils or burthens which we would not like to endure ourselves. This consideration should have some weight with honorable Senators.

I am told that even now there are fifty applications of this kind in this House. A favorable action on any of them, will be the signal for the presentation of a host of others. If we once embark in this system we cannot tell whither it will lead us. But, sir, if we grant any of these prayers—if we do emancipate any of our slaves, we should send them to a country where freedom is really a boon. We should send them where they can enjoy the social and political privileges of freemen. We should not suffer them to remain here where they fill the State with an anamolous class, the existence of which among us is a continual reflection on our institutions, and may become dangerous to our peace. This, sir, is not good policy. It is fraught with evils, and must inevitably produce the most dangerous consequences. Let us not do anything to encourage it. Our duty is rather to diminish the evil, and avert the danger.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Kenner—I move that this bill be recommitted, and I offer a resolution that the Judiciary Committee be instructed to bring in a bill authorizing the courts to emancipate a slave who may have saved the life of his master or mistress, or performed eminent services to the State.

Mr. Boatner—The gentleman only proposes to do what the existing law now authorizes. The Code itself provides for the emancipation of a negro under such circumstances.

Mr. Kenner—Then I am still more decided in my determination to vote against the bill. If the courts have power to do this, why do the parties come here to annoy us with their applications.

Mr. Boatner—I do not know why, unless because it is a less expensive process than going through the courts.

Mr. Kenner—It may be less expensive to the applicants, but it is not less expensive to our constituents.

Mr. Munday—The difference simply is, that when they are emancipated by the courts they are not permitted to remain in the State. In regard to the gentleman's resolution, I think it of such a kind as not to be in order. At all events, I hope it will not pass. Now, sir, in regard to the argument of the gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King.) He tells us that we have no evidence of the truth of the statements made in support of this petition, and that, therefore, we cannot act on it impartially. Now, sir, if I am not mistaken, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee stated certain facts to the Senate—at least, I believe them to be facts, for as such he tells us they were represented to him by trustworthy persons. This, sir, is the evidence. It is not evidence written down and sworn to; but is the kind of evidence on which we usually act, and I am willing to take the word of the gentleman.

This bill has been reported on favorably by the Judiciary Committee, who have doubtless critically examined the case. Is there a Senator here who will vote against a bill of this nature? It has been the policy of the State for years, to grant emancipation under such circumstances. The subject is a poor slave who has saved the life of the child of her mistress. I do not think we can refuse the request.

Mr. Moore—Have the master or mistress petitioned to have this done?

Mr. Lacey—I do not think there is a petition, but the case was placed in my hands by the master, Mr. J. M. Kennedy, late Clerk of the House of Representatives, a gentleman of respectability and standing in the city. I understand that the mistress is equally anxious for the passage of the bill. All the considerations of policy and humanity should induce us to vote for it.

Mr. Kenner—I think the humanity is all on my side. I propose to do for all what the gentleman wishes to do for this one. He has no advantage of me on the humanity question. The method I propose gives power to the courts to emancipate for certain causes. If a slave go before the court and is emancipated, and then comes here and asks permission to remain in the State, I shall vote to allow him to do so, if I think the circumstances of the case warrant it.

Mr. Trudeau—I think that in the discussion of this bill a wrong issue has been presented to the Senate. I do not desire to impede the emancipation of the slave Angela. I think her case is one deserving of our consideration, and I shall certainly vote for the bill now before us. I would suggest to the Senator from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner) to withdraw his resolution for the present, and we can take it up and pass it afterwards.

Mr. Moore—The only question is whether we will permit the negro to remain in the State. The code positively provides for the rest.

Mr. King—The only way that suggests itself to me is to amend the act of 1850 so as to make exceptions in cases which ought to have been made by the act.

The resolution of Mr. Kenner was laid on the table subject to call.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. Trudeau—I am now about to offer a resolution which I think, will go to the merits of this question. There is no necessity to pass a general law at this moment. The act in existence, which covers most cases, will be found sufficient. The only question is, therefore, whether we shall adhere to the provisions of the act of 1852. The resolution I am about to present to the Senate only proclaims our determination to adhere to the act of 1852. As we are now going on, the Judiciary Committee will soon have little else to do than to report on applications for emancipation. The object of the resolution is to lay down a general rule for the guidance of the Judiciary Committee, and to report against all applications for emancipation except in those cases, in which the slave has saved the life of his master or mistress, or of one of their children, or has rendered some services to the State. I consider this subject, sir, one of great importance to the planting interest. The contact and association with free negroes cannot but have an injurious influence on our slave population. There is no planter on this floor who will not admit this. Indeed the baneful effects of such association are too evident not to be appreciated. If we read history with an attentive eye, and mind its lessons, we cannot avoid coming to the conclusion that the daily contact of a free and slave population of the same race is calculated to produce the most injurious effects on both. It ought to be a matter of surprise that such legislation should be found on the statute books of a Southern State. It is incompatible with the permanency of our institutions, and with the general policy which almost every one admits ought to be pursued. It is so evident that the association of free negroes and slaves must be productive of injurious consequences, that it cannot escape the observation of the most unreflecting person in the State. I now leave the resolution with the Senate, hoping that it will receive the sanction of an affirmative vote.

Mr. Ryan—To pass the resolution presented by the Senator from Jefferson, (Mr. Trudeau) would be entirely a work of supererogation. In 1852 a law passed the Legislature in relation to this subject, which contained the following provisions, (reads.) The conditions of the law are precisely those laid down by the gentleman's resolution. Power is given to the courts to emancipate slaves who have performed any of the actions referred to, and they are then furnished with means sufficient to enable them to remove to some other State or country. The gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Trudeau) proposes to instruct the Judiciary Committee to report exactly in the manner indicated in the existing law. I consider such a resolution superfluous. It is not necessary for us to resolve that we will adhere to the provisions of a law already in force. The law of 1852 covers everything contemplated by the resolution of the gentleman from Jefferson. The resolution, if passed, would be nothing more than a declaration of the Senate, through the Judiciary Committee, that the law now in force shall be maintained. There can, therefore, be no use in passing the resolution. The law is now in force, and will remain in force till a case presents itself for consideration which ought to be made an exception. In such a case the Senate shall inquire whether policy and justice require the exception to be made. As a slave owner, I am directly interested in the safety of the institution, and am as careful as any Senator on this floor, not to do anything that may produce injurious consequences. I am therefore opposed to emancipation in general, believing that it must be productive of evil effects. But I can imagine cases which ought to be made an exception to this policy.

Digitized by Google

I am conscious of services rendered by a slave, such as saving the life of his master or mistress, or something else nearly as strong, as in the case before us, for instance, which would dictate a relaxing of the rigid general rules of the law. I can imagine also that there may be other inducements nearly as great. I am opposed, therefore, to instructing the Judiciary Committee to report against emancipation for any other causes than those specified in the resolution. There may be other good causes. I do not see why we should limit our action to the narrow bounds of the resolution. We ought to inquire into the merits of each case, and if we find the reasons good, I do not see why we should preclude ourselves from acting on them. A law exists now providing for emancipation by the courts under certain contingencies;

I approve of that law. It is a good law, and I hope it will be adhered to. But to pass a resolution declaring that we will adhere to it, is, as I have before remarked, totally unnecessary and superfluous. We might as well declare our intention of maintaining every law of the statute book. As I have said, cases may arise in which it may be necessary to make an exception to the general law. I myself coincided in passing the law of 1852. I was in favor of it then; I am in favor of it now. I hope it will be maintained and enforced. But I do not see the necessity of passing any resolution on the subject.

Mr. Trudeau.—I beg leave to correct the gentleman in some particulars. He seems to be mistaken in regard to the nature of the question before the Senate. The resolution which I have had the honor to introduce is not a bill; if passed, it will not be an act. It is a simple resolution declaratory of the manner in which we wish the Judiciary Committee to act in certain cases. If it do not pass, I hazard nothing in saying that we shall soon be inundated with petitions for emancipation. But if it be understood that such applications will not be entertained, or that, under a rule of the Senate, they must be reported on unfavorably, we shall cease to be annoyed by them. As I have remarked, the resolution is no bill. It does not declare what the law should be; it does not even declare what the law is; it merely instructs the Judiciary Committee to report on a certain subject, whenever it comes before them in accordance with the provisions of the law. I agree with the Senator that there may be other cases deserving of our consideration. But the resolution would only prevent the Judiciary Committee from making a report on them; it would not prevent their being presented and passing the Senate. They can be brought before the whole House, and considered without a reference. But I want some general rule of action under which these applications can be disposed of without subjecting us to the annoyance and loss of time, consequent on the presentation and consideration of these innumerable applications.

Mr. Ryan—I move to lay the gentleman's resolution on the table.

The motion was carried.

THE SANITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. Trudeau—I rise, sir, for the purpose of moving that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House to grant a clerk to the Sanitary Committee. I would state to the Senate, that since the organization of the Committee, I have been to New Orleans on business connected with the important subject which induced the appointment of the Committee. I had an interview with the Mayor and other authorities, and the Mayor very kindly granted to the Committee the use of the Council Chamber in which to hold their sessions. In the meantime the Committee have not been idle, but have been busily engaged in the important work confided to their charge. They have propounded inquiries to various physicians as to the probable cause of the late disastrous epidemic, and the effects of quarantine as a preventive measure. Many answers have been received, which will be laid before the Senate when the Committee makes its report. I think the labors of the Committee may be much lightened by having a clerk. I think we can get through our work in ample time for action at this session. Some members of the Committee from the other House have a disposition to sit during the recess, and report at the next session. I wish to get through the work at this session, and it is in order to expedite the business that I ask the resolution of the House to be concurred in.

Mr. King.—I must confess that I do not see any reason for passing this resolution. The Sanitary Commission appointed by the city of New Orleans has been some time engaged in an examination of this subject. They have traveled all over the United States in search of information, and have collected a great many facts and statistics, which, I am informed, will be presented to the Legislature at its present session. What then is the necessity of sending a committee to New Orleans, to do what has already been done? The best use the committee can make of their time, is to obtain from the Sanitary Commission of the city of New Orleans the information which they have obtained. I am told by Dr. Barton, the Chairman of that Commission, that he will be ready to make his report in a short time. That report will contain all the information that our committee can obtain, and probably a great deal more. If this committee really intends to do anything in time for action by this Legislature, they will require half a dozen clerks.

Mr. Lacey—It appears to me that the gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) has not touched the real question at issue, in the remarks he has just addressed to the Senate. The senator from Jefferson (Mr. Trudeau) has told us that the committee needs a clerk, in order to get through with its business efficiently and expeditiously. That committee was appointed by the Senate in order to perform a certain duty, which no one can deny is of the greatest importance to the people of the State. The gentleman (Mr. King) has told us that the Sanitary Commission appointed by the city of New Orleans has thoroughly investigated this subject, and that it is composed of men of ability and industry, to follow in whose footsteps would be for us merely a work of supererogation. We are told that the gentlemen composing that Commission have acquried all the information that can be obtained, and that it is unnecessary for us to do anything more. But, Sir, that committee was appointed entirely with reference to the city of New Orleans. The epidemic which but lately scourged our people, visited every section of our wide-extended State. But few parishes were exempt from it—but few were spared its terrors. All parts of the State, then, have an interest in the subject, and it becomes the State itself to take such action as may be necessary to secure our people from any future visitation of the scourge. I do not think, sir, that our committee should play second fiddle to the Sanitary Commission of New Orleans. We should investigate for ourselves, and though we may have every confidence in the ability of the gentlemen appointed to act on the part of the city of New Orleans, we should not make a decision based entirely on their views. I imagine, sir, that our committee will give due weight to the opinions of the Sanitary Commission, but as other interests than those of the city of New Orleans are to be consulted, it is but proper that we should have the views of others than those who are entirely identified with that city. It is therefore evident, sir, to my mind, that we have not done anything superfluous in appointing this committee, and if we desire it to perform its work speedily, effectually and satisfactorily, we should grant the request of the gentleman from Jefferson and permit the committee to employ a clerk.

Mr. Trudeau—I cannot do less than thank the gentleman from East Baton Rouge for the convincing reply he has made to the remarks of the Senator from New Orleans. It is very true, as the gentleman has remarked, that there are other interests to be consulted than those to which the Sanitary Commission of New Orleans would naturally confine their attention. The Senator from New Orleans has a regard for the interests of his constituents, but we are also compelled by our duty towards our own constituents, to pay some regard to their interests. Now, sir, the committee had something more to do than the gentleman from New Orleans seems to imagine. We had not only to inquire into the character and probable causes of the epidemic, but also into the effects of quarantine as a preventive measure. It was useless to tell us that the Sanitary Commission had already done the work; because they had not done that which was one of the most important portions of our labors. There were questions presented to us for solution, and I hope that when our report is made it will be seen that our labors have not been useless. Shall we quarantine the Balize? Shall we quarantine Mobile? What will be the effect of quarantine on commercial interests? Shall we shut one door, and leave the other open? These questions all come before us for investigation, and I hope the gentleman from New Orleans will confess that we really had something to do.

Digitized by Google

The resolution passed.

MONDAY, January 30th, 1854.

The bill for the relief of —— Murphy was taken up.

Mr. Kenner—Before I vote for this bill, I should like to know something of the case. I do not like to vote in the dark. When the bill was up before the Senate, the gentleman who reported it from the Judiciary Committee said that he would inform himself on the subject concerning which I was then desirous to obtain information. What I wish to know is, whether the children referred to in the bill are colored.

Mr. Lacey—The facts, which I can state to the gentleman as they have been stated to me, are these. The father of these children lived with their mother. They are his offspring, and of course he feels towards them the natural affection of a parent. He wishes now to educate them. I believe that so far as their color is concerned, they are not exactly white; but they should certainly be brought up in accordance with the wishes of their father. If he desires to bestow on them such advantages as his means will permit, he ought to be permitted to do so. They are recommended to us by respectable and eminent citizens of New Orleans. I am confident that they would not ask us to do a wrong, or be anxious for the passage of this bill, unless the case were one requiring our intervention. There can be no objection to allowing this person to dispose of his property as he may see fit. There is no good reason why we should interpose the power of the law to prevent him from accomplishing what must be considered a laudable object. After having brought these children into the world, he desires to perform towards them those duties which nature and humanity impose on every parent. He wishes to educate them in such a manner as to make them fit to encounter the perils and trials of the world, and to bestow on them his property, in order to rescue them from want, and to enable them to live without becoming a burthen to society. Why should we deny to him this privilege? We injure no one by it. We confer a benefit without doing any harm. There are no forced heirs in this case, and consequently, in passing the bill, we violate no principle of our law. I cannot say, of my own knowledge, whether the children are white, black or grey—nor would it affect my vote. I think the request of the gentleman is not only a reasonable, but a natural request, and should be granted by the Legislature without hesitation.

Mr. Kenner—The gentleman from East Baton Rouge has not definitely informed us whether or not these children are white. As I have before remarked, sir, I do not wish to vote in the dark. I wish to cast an enlightened vote on this and every other bill that may come before me as a Senator of the State of Louisiana. If I ascertain that these children are white, I will vote for the bill, because then I can do so without violating what I conceive to be the settled policy of our law. If they are not white, I will not vote for the bill. I do not wish in any manner to encourage this illicit intercourse between two races which are separated from each other by nature and by law. One of the greatest evils that afflicts this community is, I regret to say, sir, this intercourse between the two races. We should do all in our power to discourage it, rather than in any manner to give countenance to it. We should endeavor to put a stop to it. It should be remembered that we live in a slaveholding community, and that our safety demands that we do nothing to disturb the permanency of the institution. If this bill pass, there will be fifty cases of the same kind from my own district, and if we grant one request of the kind we cannot refuse another.

Mr. Wickliffe—If these children are black, I shall vote with my friend from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) against the bill. I agree with him in everything he has said on the subject. I cannot consent to do anything to disturb the settled policy of our law in this respect. If, on the contrary, the children, are white I shall vote for the bill.

The bill passed.

TUESDAY, Jan. 31, 1854.

Mr. Lacoste—I would beg leave to call up the bill authorising the Coroner of the parish of Plaquemines to appoint a deputy. I would state in explanation of the object of this bill, that it is absolutely necessary that it should be passed. The parish of Plaquimines is eighty miles in length, extending along both sides of the Mississippi river. It is entirely too large a district for one man to attend to; in fact, it is almost impossible for the Coroner to attend to his duties properly without assistance. This bill simply authorizes him to appoint a deputy.

The rules were suspended and the bill passed.

THE REGISTRY LAW.

Mr. Hodge—I ask leave of the Senate to introduce a bill providing for the registration of voters in the city of New Orleans. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Elections, and made the order of the day for Monday next.

Mr. Wickliffe—This is a very important bill. It will have to be printed and laid before Senators for their examination before we can act on it.

Mr. Hodge—The bill is printed already.

Mr. Wickliffe—Where is the order for printing?

Mr. Hodge—It was printed last year. There is no necessity of going to the expense of having it printed over again.

Mr. Wickliffe—The Chairman may not be able to make a report by Monday next.

Mr. Hodge—I am informed by the Chairman that he will make a report by that time.

Mr. Wickliffe—The reason I oppose making this bill the order of the day for Monday is, that none of the members from the city are present. It is important that we should have a good registry law for the city of New Orleans. Some of the members from the city will not be here by that time, and it is evident that we ought not to proceed in this matter without reference to their desires and advice. I am, therefore, opposed to making a bill of this kind the order for any day during their absence.

Mr. Hodge—If the city members are not here at the time proposed, I will, myself, move for a postponement.

Mr. Wickliffe—Under those circumstance I withdraw my opposition.

A bill in relation to the Destrehan Canal was taken up.

Mr. Boatner—I am not prepared to vote for that bill. I should like to have more information on the subject than I at present possess. It may be a local bill, or it may be a general bill, but I should like it to have the endorsement of a Committee before I vote on the subject. I am sure the gentleman who introduced it can have no objection to a reference. Such a course would delay the bill but a few days, and would be much more satisfactory. Though it purports to be for the benefit of one individual, yet it may affect the interests of a great number of persons. I move, sir, that the bill be referred to the Committee on Lands and Levees.

Mr. Kenner—I will explain the object of the bill, and then if the gentleman insists on his motion to refer, I shall make no opposition. The person who sends in this memorial wishes to build a lock to connect this canal with the waters of the Mississippi. He thinks this will facilitate the means of communication of the planters of that section with New Orleans; and there can be no doubt that his idea is correct. At the same time he will derive a profit from it himself. For my part, I do not think we could prevent him from doing it, even if we wished. He has a perfect right to build this lock without any authority from us. It is no more than every rice planter does when he makes locks to flood his rice fields from the waters of the Mississippi.

Mr. Boatner—I must say that I should prefer to have the endorsement of a committee in regard to this pro just. I think this bill is one of great importance, inasmuch, as it may effect the interest of a good many persons.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Kenner—I have no objection to the reference. The bill was, accordingly, referred.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 1, 1854.

An act for the relief of Pierre Caze, Bertrand Caze and Jacques Caire, was taken up.

Mr. Hodge—I think it would be impolitic to grant the relief asked for in this bill, as a law passed at the last session of the Legislature gives the fines and forfeitures in criminal cases to the several parishes. It seems to me that the proper party to apply to for relief, in such a case as this, would be the police jury of the parish, as the fines and forfeitures have, by our own act, been given to it. We have no right to go to the parish treasury and take money out of it, after having parted with our title.

Mr. Wickliffe—The bond was forfeited before the passage of the act referred to by the gentleman, and, consequently, his objections does not apply.

Mr. Hodge—That makes no difference. The law applies to all fines and forfeitures, whether they accrued before or after the passage of the act. All fines and forfeitures, of whatever kind, are to revert to the several parishes, and the act does not except those which accrued before its passage, if they were not collected at the time, they go to the parish treasury. I will read the law to which the gentleman alludes.

"SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That all fines and forfeitures hereafter collected, for violations of the criminal laws of the State, and which have heretofore been required by law to be paid into the treasury of the State, shall belong to and be paid into the treasury of the parish in which the same may be collected, and in the city of New Orleans the same shall be paid into the treasury of said city."

A fair construction of this law, in its letter and its spirit, does not justify the interpretation which the gentleman has placed on it. I claim to know something of the intention of this law, because I introduced it myself, and I never had any such idea as that of the Senator. The act speaks of fines and forfeitures hereafter to be collected, obviously including all those which were uncollected at the time of its passage. The money on this bond, when collected, must go into the treasury of the parish of Iberville. We cannot take it away, because it does not belong to us.

Mr. Wickliffe—The act certainly was not intended to have a retroactive effect. By no process of reasoning can the Senator make it appear that the money, when collected on this bond, must go into the treasury of the parish of Iberville. The law, as quoted by the gentleman, does not justify such an assumption. It was clearly intended to apply only to such fines and forfeitures as accrue after the passage of the act. The term "collection," is intended by the act to apply to all fines and forfeitures whatever, and the word "hereafter," used in the law, shows to which of them it refers. We have a clear right to dispose of this money in any way we see fit.

Mr. Hodge—I stated before, that I introduced this act myself, at the last session of the Legislature, and I must be allowed to know what I intended by it. If it had meant what the gentleman says, it would have read, "that all fines and forfeitures hereafter due, &c., shall belong to and be paid into the treasury of the parish in which the same may be collected."

But it does not say this. It says that "all fines and forfeitures hereafter collected." The practice in my Parish has been in accordance with this interpretation of the law, which is in accordance with reason and common sense. In my parish, all fines and forfeitures, whenever due, whether before or after the passage of the act, are considered as belonging to the parish treasury, if they had not been previously collected. Of course, in that case, they belong to the State.

Mr. Ryan.—The act itself will settle this disagreement. It says:

"Be it enacted, &c., That all fines and forfeitures hereafter collected for violations of the criminal laws of the State, &c., shall belong to, and be paid into the Treasury of the Parish in which the same may be collected."

I have never read the act before. My attention was drawn to it by the Senator from Caddo, (Mr. Hodge.) But I must say that I do not think the law bears out the construction given to it, that all sums heretofoer due, and not collected, are to go into the several parish treasuries. The sums due before the passage of the act, clearly belong to the State. The law itself does not justify the construction which the gentleman from Caddo places on it. One says that all sums of this kind herctofore due, but not collected, are to enure to the parish treasuries. Another takes the ground that the right to these sums still vests in the State. Now, in my humble opinion, the law only relates to such fines and forfeitures as may thereafter become due. This is a just and reasonable construction. It is not to be presumed that the Legislature of Louisiana intended to donate to the several parishes the large sums which might have been due before the passage of the act. There may have been thousands and thousands of dollars then due, and the Legislature certainly did not intend to give up its right to such sums.

Mr. Hodge.—The reason for passing this law was, that the previous Legislature had passed an act making it incumbent on the several parishes to defray the expenses of criminal prosecutions within their limits. This necessity subjected them to heavy expenses. It was therefore only just to give them the fines and forfeitures, in order to enable them to defray those expenses. It was with this view that I introduced the bill referred to. I intended it to cover all these cases—not only the fines and forfeitures hereafter to become due, but likewise those which were then due ann had not been collected. A case exactly in point occurred in my own parish, and it was decided in accordance with the views I have expressed.

Mr. McCay.—I shall vote for the bill under discussion. It is indifferent to me whether the bill was intended to be retroactive or prospective in its operations. I think the Legislature has full control of the money, in any event, until it has been received into the treasury of the Parish of Iberville. The only question is, whether these persons deserve the relief they seek.

Mr. Hodge.—I shall vote against the bill, and wish my vote to be recorded. I shall therefore call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Moore.—I have listened with attention to the discussion which has been had on this bill. I shall vote against it, because I am firmly convinced thet we have no right to give away that money. We cannot pass a retroactive law. We have already disposed of the money, and it no longer belongs to us. I. it were not for that, I do not say that I should vote against the bill. But we cannot take this money from the parish to which it belongs, and give it to any individual whatever.

Mr. Kenner—I wish to explain the vote which I intend to give on this bill. It does not make any difference whether this money belongs to us or to the parish of Iberville. The only question is whether the money is due on this bond. We must all admit that it is not. It would be an act of injustice to exact it. Therefore to make an individual suffer, simply because there is a difference of opinion in the Senate, on a point of this kind, would be manifestly unjust. For this reason I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. Hodge—I regret to be compelled to come before the Senate again on this subject, after having, as I thought, already made the point sufficiently clear. I regret, also, that the Senator from Ascension takes such ground as he has taken. I am as much opposed to doing injustice to an individual, whoever he may be, as any Senator on this floor. But there are certain relations between the State and individuals, and the State and the several parishes, which require to be taken into consideration in a case of this kind. The gentleman is willing to acknowledge that the parish of Iberville is the rightful proprietor of this money. Yet he says he shall vote for this bill which takes the money from her.

Digitized by Google

Why, sir, if we can do this, we can just as well take a thousand dollars out of the pocket of any citizen of the State. We might just at well pass an act to take the gentleman's sugar plantation from him. I contend, sir, that this money belongs to the parish of Iberville, and it is not only unjust, but unconstitutional to pass an act depriving her of it. The question is not whether the money is due by these gentlemen on this bond. We have nothing to do with that. We have no interest in it. It is a question to be settled between these parties and the parish of Ibervilla. There is a great legal principle involved in this matter, sir We have to decide whether we can pass an act to dispose of money which does not belong to us. The argument of the Senator from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) does not touch the question at issue. He says the money does not go to the parish because it is not yet collected. I know very well it cannot go to the parish till it is collected. But that proves nothing. Neither can it go to the State. The right to it is in the parish. The State is only the trustee of these funds for the parish, if they were due before the passage of the act of 1853 and not yet collected. They belong to the parigh and we have no right to dispose of them. It would be a violation of a great constitutional right. I, for one, protest against it as an outrage on law and justice which is unworthy of the Senate of Louisiana. I shall vote against the bill, and insist that my vote be recorded on the journal.

On motion of Mr. Hebert, the rules were suspended, and the bill was read twice; and when on motion to adopt the first section, Mr. Hodge called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Braud, Clifton, Deffreese, Evans Hebert, Kenner, Key, Lacoste, Lauve, Lacey, McCay, Munday, Martel, Pellerin, Ryan, Richardson and Wickliffe—18 yeas.

Messrs. Hodge and Moore—2 nays.

Consequently the first section was passed.

On motion of Mr. Hebert, the bill then passed.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House requested the signature of the President of the Senate to the following enrolled bills and resolutions:

An act to enadle Wm. A. Shaffer, of the parish of Terrebonne, administrator of the estate of Benjamin and Anastasia Cross, of the parish of Lafourche, to to give security residing without the limits of the parish.

An act for the relief of William Edmund Murphy.

An act to provide for the payment of the members, officers and contingent expenses of the General Assembly.

Resolution authorizing the State Engineer to appoint a special assistant for the purpose of examining Bayou Lafourche.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills and resolution:

An act to amend the thirtieth section of an act entitled "An act for the uniform regulation of elections in the State of Louisiana, excepting the parish of Orleans.

An act to change the name of Assenath Melissa Clayton, to that of Hortense Helena Tiffin.

An act to authorize Pierre Whip, of the parish of Iberville to change his name from Pierre Whip to that of John Reames.

An act changing the time of holding the terms of the District Court of the Ninth and Eleventh Judicial District Courts of this State.

An act to provide for the execution of sentences of death in the parish of Orleans.

Resolution appointing a committee to examine into the system of pilotage established at the mouth of the Mississippi river.

And he informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the following entitled bill and resolution of the Senate:

An act to extend the time allowed to certain parochial and other officers for the purpose of procuring certificates of not being defaulters, in virtue of the second section of an act entitled "an act to secure the collection and prompt payment of public moneys," approved 28th April, 1853.

THURSDAY, February 2, 1854.

Mr. Boatner, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a memorial of J. H. Maddox, reported the same back to the Senate, with request that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions that that committee make their report thereon as soon as practicable.

On motion, the request of the committee was granted, and the memorial was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

The Private Secretary of the Governor reported that the Governor has approved and signed the following bill, entitled

An act to apportion the representation in the Senate and House of Representatives in the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, according to the first census made in eighteen hundred and fifty-three, under the eighth article of the Constitution.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Assistant Secretary requested the concurrence of the House in the following bill and joint memorial and resolution, entitled

An act for the relief of Pierre Caze, Bertrand Caze and Jacques Caire.

Joint memorial and resolution in relation to granting public lands within the State of Louisiana, for railroad purposes.

And he informed the House that the Senate has concurred in the bills and resolution, entitled

An act to increase the compensation of Jurors in the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act to repeal so much of the 3d section of an act entitled an act to regulate the terms of the District Courts, (the parish of Orleans excepted,) approved April 29th, 1853, as relates to the courts of the Eighth Judicial District, and regulate the holding thereof.

An act for the relief of James Upshaw, Sheriff of the parish of Bienville.

Resolution relative to improvements on the grounds of the State Capitol and the Hall of Representatives.

He requested the signature of the Speaker to

An Act to extend the time allowed to parochial officers for the purpose of procuring certificates of not being defaulters, in virtue of the second section of an act entitled "an Act to secure the collection and prompt payment of public moneys, approved 28th April, 1853.

He requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills, entitled

An Act to emancipate Abner Nash Ogden, Jr., of the parish of Jefferson.

An Act for the relief of Henry Hanmoth.

An Act to authorize Pierre Whip, of the parish of Iberville, to change his name from Pierre Whip to that of John Reames.

He informed the House that the President has appointed Mr. Ryan, one of the members of the Special Committee to enquire into the system of pilotage at the mouth of the Mississippi river, in lieu of Mr. Griffin, who is absent.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in an act for therelief of Asa Emanuel, State Tax Collector for theparish of Winn.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Lacey, from the Judiciary Committee, to which was referred an act concerning the licensing of drinking houses, and the sale of intoxicating liquors in this State—reported favorably.

And he reported adversely to a memorial of the citizens of St. Landry and Pointe Coupee, asking the passage of a law protecting the timber on the State lands from the depredations of the wood choppers.

Mr. Clifton, from the Committee on Banks and Banking, to whom was seferred "an Act authorizing the Auditor of Public Accounts and the State Treasurer to credit the Union Bank of Louisiana with a certain amount, and for the relief of John Pemberton for settling the interest of the State in the said Bank, reported favorably.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Hodge introduced the following resolution, which was read and passad:

Resolved, That the Attorney General of the State, and the District Attorney of the parish of Orleans, be and they are hereby requested to inform the Senate what action has been taken under an act entitled "an Act for the relief of the securities of William K Stiles," approved April 30th, 1853; and particularly whether suit has been instituted as contemplated by said act.

FRIDAY, Feb. 3d. 1854.

Mr. Macmurdo called up

An act authorizing the Auditor of Public Accounts and the State Treasurer to credit the Union Bank of Louisiana with a certain amount, and for the relief of John Pemberton for settling the interest of the State in said Bank.

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, it was read the third time, and it passed.

Mr. Macmurdo also called up a bill authorizing the State Treasurer to sign a certain railroad bond issued by the State to the Nashville Railroad Company.

Mr. Evans--I should like to have some information in regard to this bill before I vote for it.

Mr. Macmurdo—It is very easy to give a satisfactory explanation of the matter. The State issued this bond to the old Nashville Railroad Company, but by some mistake or negligence, it was not signed by the Treasurer. In consequence, whenever the interest became due, it was necessary to make an affidavit to show that this bond had really been issued by the State. The bill simply provides that the Treasurer be now authorized to sign it, in order to obviate the difficulty.

Mr. Moore—There should be no difficulty in this matter. It is perfectly right that the bill should pass. I have myself seen the bond. There appears to have been an omission to sign the coupons on the part of the State Treasurer. There can be no objection to letting them be signed now.

The bill was passed.

Mr. Lacey called up the following bill, and on motion the rules were suspended, and it was read for the second time section by section—

An act authorizing the courts in certain cases to receive judicial sureties residing out of the parish.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That whenever it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge of any of the courts of this State having jurisdiction thereof, that any person who has been appointed to discharge the duties of administrator, executor, tutor, curator, or of any fiduciary trust whatever, is unable to give security in the parish, then and in such case, the judge shall have power to order that sureties residing in any other parish be received.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That in all cases where suroty is tendered of persons residing out of the parish, the judge alone shall pass upon the sufficiency thereof, and shall require such proof as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That all actions on bonds against the sureties aforesaid may be instituted in the parish and court having original jurisdiction of the subject matter, and the parties thereto, when legally cited, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of said court.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall be in force from and after its promulgation.

Mr. Hodge—I cannot say that I see any necessity for passing this bill. Unless the Honorable Chairman of the Judiciary Committee (Mr. Lacey) will explain it, and show some good reason existing in its favor, I shall feel myself compelled to vote against it. I should like to hear the reasons if there are any. The system now in operation has prevailed for a long time, and I am not aware that it has produced any injurious consequences. I would not consent to change it unless I hear some very cogent reasons in favor of a change.

Mr. Lacey—The only reason I can give for the proposed change is that sometimes the holder of a fiduciary trust may not be able to give security residing in the parish. If he could give security elsewhere, I do not see why it should not be taken. If he be prevented from giving such security, or limited to a place where it may be impossible for him to procure it, he may be precluded from taking the trust at all. The bill was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee, which certainly ought to entitle it to some consideration.

Mr. Hodge—The reason given by the gentleman I do not consider sufficient to justify so radical a change in our system of laws as that proposed by the bill. The object of the existing law, that the security must reside in the same parish with the executor or administrator, tutor or Curator, is, that the Judge may see the person offering to become security, and be satisfied personally of his qualifications. It is necessary that the Judge should be satisfied of the solvency of the security. Now, under this bill, security residing at the North, or in some Western State, might be offered. The Judge would then have to rely on the representations of third parties in order to come to a conclusion on the point. While it pretends that the Judge must be satisfied, it leads to great expense and risk in order that he may be satisfied, and even then he would be extremely liable to err. I prefer that the law should remain in its present form, because I have never known any hardships to result from it. If, as pretended, a person might be unable to procure security in the parish, but yet could obtain it elsewhere, it would be easy for him to get such letters of credit as would put it in his power to procure the security in his own parish. During a practice of several years in the courts of this State, I have never known an instance where the holder of a fiduciary trust failed to obtain the security required by law. It is to the interest of the State, and in accordance with the general policy of our legislation, that these bonds should be good and sufficient. Suppose, now, that the security on one of these bonds resides at the North, and it should be necessary to proceed against him; the delay and the injury which might result are obvious. But all this delay and injury might be, and in fact are obviated by making the security reside in the same parish as the executor or administrator. I see no reason for so radical a change in existing laws as is proposed by the bill. I shall vote against it, and call for the yeas and nays.

The bill then passed.

On motion of Mr. King, the vote on the fourth section was reconsidered, and the section stricken out.

On motion of Mr. Evans, the following bill was called up and read for the second time—

An act for the relief of Harmon A. Drew.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the sum of one hundred dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Harmon A. Drew, late District Attorney of the Tenth Judicial District, said sum being the amount coming to him as his portion of the fine inflicted on D. W. Trotter for selling liquor to slaves, and which fine he was prevented from recovering in consequence of the same having been remitted by the Executive.

Sec. 2 Be it further enacted, &c., That this act be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Wickliffe—I will give my reason for opposing this bill. If I understand the bill aright, it is intended to give to the late District Attorney of the Tenth Judicial District a portion of a fine remitted by the Governor and the Senate—that portion to which he would have been entitled had the fine not been remitted. I must say that if I had been here at the time the proposition was before the Senate, I should have voted against remitting the fine. But it has been remitted. I do not think the District Attorney has a vested right in it. It has been wiped out by the deliberate action of the Governor and Senate, the authorities legitimately entitled to perform the act. There is then no longer any fine; there is nothing in which the District Attorney can have any right. He has no claim till the party be convicted and the fine collected. The fine cannot be collected till the proceedings have passed through all the forms of law. The action of the Governor and Senate is one of those forms. If they choose to remit the fine, it is equivalent to annulling the proceedings. If we pay the District Attorney what he claims as his portion, we should have to pay it out of the State Treasury. It will not be claimed that we are bound to do that.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Hodge—I do not remember how I voted at the last session on the proposition to remit the fine referred to in the bill. But I consider that no longer an open question. Last year an application was made by the District Attorney of East Feliciana for a portion of a fine which had been remitted by the Governor and Senate. That was precisely a similar case, and I believe it was decided in favor of the claim of the District Attorney. It may be true that he takes the office cum onere, and that the possible action of the Governor and Senate is one of the contingencies to be anticipated in a case of this kind. But there is such a thing as justice in a case of this kind; and we should act justly always. Now, sir, this gentleman has actually done the work imposed on him by law. He has convicted the man, and that is as far as he can go. The Governor and the Senate have seen fit, on account of something outside of the case, to remit the fine. I say "outside of the case," because it is to be supposed that the fine was remitted for reasons which could not come before the Court, but were brought to the notice of the Governor and Senate. The judgment of the Court shows that the fine is collectable. If, then, the Governor and Senate choose to remit the fine, for some reason of their own, should the District Attorney be deprived of that portion to which he would have been entitled? The Senator from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) draws some very nice distinctions between rights vested and rights not vested. He contends that the District Attorney has no vested right in this fine. I say, sir, that when a conviction has been procured and the District Attorney has attended to the case, and performed every duty required of him by law, he has acquired a right which the State cannot take away. Yesterday we passed a bill remitting a fine imposed on a person in this parish, but reserving to the District Attorney his portion. We should not make the case now before us an exception

Mr. McCay—In the case alluded to by the gentleman, occurring in this parish, the fees were reserved to be paid by the defendant, not by the State. By the bill before us, the fees would have to be paid out of the treasury of the State. They are, therefore, not analogous cases. When the District Attorney accepts his office, he takes it subject to the pardoning power of the Governor and Senate. If I vote for this bill now, I shall probably have to vote for a dozen more of the same kind next year. I am therefore opposed to the bill, and shall vote against it.

Mr. Moore—As I voted against the bill to-day, to remit a fine imposed on certain parties in Iberville, and shall vote against the motion to lay this motion on the table, I would like to explain, briefly, the reasons which influence me. In that case I thought we had no right to remit the fine, as I considered that it belonged to the parish of Iberville. But this is a different case. We have, by our own act, remitted the fine. That is very true. But the District Attorney has done his duty. He has fulfilled every obligation imposed on him by law. He has performed the work, and is entitled to the remuneration which the law promised him. We have no right, by any act of ours, to take it away from him. He has a legal and a constitutional right to his portion of the fine, and if we prevent him from recovering it from the defendant, we are bound to pay it ourselves.

Mr. King—I should also like to explain my views in reference to this matter. We have, before now, given money to others in precisely the same way. I believe, for my part, that the principle on which we have acted is all wrong. But if we refuse to do for this person what we have already done for others on precisely the same ground, we would be committing an injustice. It would be partial legislation. We should not have commenced the system in the first place; but having sanctioned it by several precedents, we ought not to make exceptions in cases which offer no distinct grounds of objection.

Mr. Wickliffe—I do not understand what the gentleman means by partial legislation. I vote for a bill if it appears to be good on the face of it. If I think it bad, I will oppose it without reference to any other bill. In this case I think the District Attorney has no right to the money. I will never vote to give money to District Attorneys in cases like this, when the pardoning power has been exercised by the Governor and Senate.

Mr. Macmurdo—I shall vote for the bill on the ground that it is the policy of the State to encourage District Attorneys in the discharge of their duties.

The motion to lay on the table was lost, and the bill passed.

Mr. Macmurdo gave notice that he would, at some future day, introduce a bill to repeal the act entitled an act granting pensions to the veterans of 1814 and 1815, approved April 30, 1853.

Mr. Macmurdo—The act referred to was intended by the last Legislature to prevent the abuses that had been committed under the act entitled an act granting pensions to the veterans of 1814 and 1815, approved March 17, 1852. That act had entirely failed in its purpose. The demands on the Treasury continued to the same, if not a greater extent. An appropriation of ten thousand dollars to meet the requisitions of the law of 1853 was exhausted in a few weeks after its passage, and there are now numerous claimants under that act. Being convinced that the only way to put a stop to this inroad upon the Treasury is to repeal the act referred to, and leave the system as it existed prior to the passage of the act approved 17th March 1852, I have given this notice.

Mr. Palfrey—If the Senate has no urgent business before it, I move that this bill be now taken up. (The rules were suspended.) I will explain briefly the object of the bill. At the period of the invasion of Louisiana by the British troops, and while it was still uncertain at what point the enemy would land, detachments were sent to different points upon the lake shore for purposes of observation and defence. The men composing these detachments exhibited the same zeal, endured equal hardships, and were supposed to be exposed to as much danger as those who remained with the main body of the army, and who subsequently fought at the lines. Notwithstanding this, however, they are excluded from the privileges of the Pension Law, and it is for the purpose of placing them on the same footing as those who fought at the lines, that this bill is introduced.

The bill passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the following entitled bills of the Senate—

An act creating two additional notaries for the parish of Rapides.

An act to change the time of holding the terms of courts in the Sixth Judicial District, and making jury terms.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following entitled bills—

An act to provide for the appointment of one notary public for the parish of Plaquemines.

And that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills—

An act to authorize Hypolite Chretien and Celestine Cantrelle, his wife, to dispose of, by deed of sale or otherwise, a family of slaves.

An act to extend the time allowed to certain parochial and other officers for the purpose of procuring certificates of not being defaulters, in virtue of the 2d section of an act, entitled an act to secure the collection and prompt payment of public moneys—approved 28th April, 1853.

Digitized by Google

MONDAY, February 6th, 1854.

Mr. King, from the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees, to whom was referred an act to create a branch of the State Land Office at Monroe in the parish of Ouachita, made the following report:

To the Hon. the President and Senate of the State of Louisiana:

A majority of the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees have instructed me to report unfavorably upon the bill referred to the committee, entitled an act to create and establish a branch of the State Land Office at Monroe, in the parish of Ouachita.

(Signed) WM. W. KING,
Chairman of Int. I., S. L. and L. Committee.

Mr. Rivers called up said bill, which was read as follows:

AN ACT

To create and establish a branch of the State Land Office at Monroe, in the parish of Ouachita.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That there shall be created and established by this act a branch of the State Land Office at Monroe, in the parish of Ouachita, for the sale of located public lands, and for the sale of such public lands as may hereafter be located, donated by Congress to the State of Louisiana, situated in the district of lands North of Red river.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That immediately after the passage of this act, the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a Register and Receiver for said branch of the State Land Office, who shall hold their office for the term of two years, unless removed in due course of law, whose salary shall be the sum of two hundred dollars each, in addition to which said salary they shall be entitled to receive the same fees from the purchasers, and the same perquisites of office as are now allowed to the Register and Receiver of Public Moneys of the United States in the State of Louisiana.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Register and Receiver appointed by the Governor in conformity with the second section of this act, shall, before entering upon the discharge of their respective duties, take an oath before one competent to administer oaths, to support the Constitution and the laws of the United States and the State of Louisiana, and to perform the duties of their offices faithfully, and shall give bond, with good and sufficient security, to the satisfaction of the Governor of the State of Louisiana, in the sum of three thousand dollars, for the faithful discharge of the duties of their offices.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the Register of said branch of the State Land Office, to perform all the duties, and subject to the same rules, limitation, penalties and responsibilities that now are or may hereafter be prescribed, for the Register of the State Land Office at the seat of Government, so far as relates to the sale of lands within the district described in the first section of this act, and shall make quarterly returns to the Auditor of Public Accounts of all lands that may have been sold at said branch, describing the same and the amount of sales.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Receiver of Public Moneys at said branch shall perform all the duties, and be subject to the same rules, limitations, penalties and responsibilities prescribed by law for the State Treasurer, in relation to the entry and sale of lands belonging to the State, within the limits prescribed by the first section of this act, and shall settle his accounts with the Auditor of Public Accounts and pay over quarterly to the State Treasurer all moneys that may come into his hands belonging to the State.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That so soon as the said Register and Receiver have been appointed and shall have taken the oath and given the bond prescribed by the fourth section of this act, the Register of the State Land Office, at the seat of government for the State of Louisiana, shall deliver over to the Register of the branch of the State Land Office, created and established by this act, all the maps appertaining to the State land within the district hereby established, with a correct statement of all lands sold by the State therein, or located within the same, under warrants sold by the State.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That an act entitled an act to create and establish a branch of the State Land Office at Winnsborough, in the parish of Franklin, approved May 4th, 1847, together with all laws contravening the provisions of this be, and they are hereby repealed, and the Register of the Land Office at Winnsborough is hereby required to deliver over to the Register of said branch of the State Land Office at Monroe, created and established by this act, all maps appertaining to the State land, within the district hereby established, with a correct statement of all lands by the State sold therein, or located within the same, under warrants sold by the State, so far as the same may have come to his knowledge.

Mr. Defrees—I must say that the report made by the Committee on Internal Improvements on this bill is to me a matter of astonishment, as well as regret. I am sorry that the Committee has thought proper to make this unfavorable report. The importance of the subject demanded a different decision. By establishing the office provided for in the bill, a large and very important section of our State would be greatly benefited, by securing facilities of which it is now entirely deprived. In that district there is a large quantity of public lands which would be brought into market more speedily if the contemplated office were established at Monroe. Now, persons desirous of entering those lands, are compelled to come here to the capital, a long distance from home, and thus much unnecessary expense and delay are incurred by them, which might be obviated in the way proposed by the bill. It is, I may say, absolutely necessary to have a branch office at Monroe. The Committee has not thought proper to give us any reasons for reporting unfavorably on this bill. I regret this exceedingly. I should like to hear their reasons for objecting to it. I think it a very important measure—one deserving of more respectful consideration than is manifested by a simple adverse report. We, who are in favor of the bill, can give our reasons for advocating it. I hope the Committee will do us the favor to explain theirs. I hope they will lay before us the reasons which have influenced them in coming to the conclusion indicated in the report. If there are any sound reasons why this bill should not pass, I ask gentlemen to explain them. If there are no reasonable objections, I call on them to support the bill. Let it become the law of the land. It is of great importance to a large and growing section, and will operate beneficially to the interests of the State. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. King—It is true that the Committee has not, in its report, given expression to the reasons which influenced it in opposing this bill. But the gentleman may be sure that the Committee did not act without substantial cause. The fact is, we thought the establishment of a branch office at Monroe totally unnecessary. If we commence to divide this office, we shall be called on to establish a branch in almost every parish of the State, and the result will be, that the whole revenue derived from our swamp lands will be consumed in the payment of salaries. There is, I am forced to say, no part of the State for which I have a greater sympathy than for that portion for the benefit of which it is proposed to establish this branch Land Office. If we divide the office at all, undoubtedly that section would be entitled to our first consideration.—But the Committee did not think it judicious to divide the office at all, for the reasons I have stated. I cannot think the gentleman from Jackson (Mr. Defrees) will think I am animated by any motives except those of public policy, in opposing the bill.

Mr. Hodge—I move, as an amendment, to insert after the words "Monroe, in the parish of Ouachita," the words "Shreveport, in the parish of Caddo."

Mr. Kenner moved to insert as an amendment to Mr. Hodge's amendment, the words "Donaldsonville, in the parish of Ascension."

Mr Moore moved as an amendment to Mr. Kenner's amendment the words "Opelousas, in the parish of St. Landry."

Mr. King moved to lay the bill and the amendments indefinitely on the table.

Mr. Defrees—I hope the gentleman will not take that course. I trust he will allow a vote to be taken directly on the bill.

Digitized by Google

The bill was laid on the table.

Mr. Macmurdo moved to take up the bill to provide for the payment of coupons of interest, detatched from the bonds issued by the State, and which coupons may be past due.

Mr. Macmurdo—This is, I need hardly inform the Senate, a very important bill, and it is necessary to pass it with as little delay as possible. I will endeavor, in a few words to explain its merits. The Constitution, as is well known, provides that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, and no appropriation shall be made for a longer time than two years. We are in the habit of making our appropriations for the payment of the State debt and interest, from year to year, and if the coupons are not presented within the two years required by law, which is frequently the case, they are not available. Coupons are sometimes detatched from the bonds, and are not offered for payment till long after they are due. This bill contemplates the formation of a fund, out of which these coupons of interest may be paid on presentation. I hold in my hand an extract from the Journal of Commerce, one of the leading papers of new York, which shows the importance of this bill. I will read it for the information of the Senate.

A respectable house in this city, with English connections, recently received from London, for collection, twenty coupons of interest upon Louisiana State Bonds, to the amount of $600 all due, and forwarded them to Baton Rouge for payment. He has just received the cash for seventeen of them, amounting to $510; but three of them, amounting to $90, were returned without payment, the proper officer at the Treasury in Baton Rouge saying that no farther provision had been made for payment, but that the Legislature would meet during the present month, and would, no doubt, provide for them. Is there no one in Louisiana who has $90 to the credit of his bank account to loan that State at this pinch? The following is a copy of one of the coupons returned:

> LOUISIANA STATE BOND.
> Dir. Warrant for $30, due 11th Sept., 1853, and payable at the place named in the endorsement hereof. F. G., Treas'r.
> No. 70.

If this be permitted to continue, it cannot be doubted that the credit of the State will suffer in consequenes. Cases of the kind alluded to in the Journal of Commerce frequently arise, and it is necessary that some provision should be made to meet them.

The bill passed with an amendment.

THE CITIZENS' BANK.

Mr. Clifton, from the Committee on Banks and Banking, reported favorably on the following bill:

AN ACT

Amendatory of the Charter of, and of the several acts relative to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the proviso contained in the 8th section of the act of 30th January, 1836, entitled, "An act amendatory and supplementary to the several acts relative to the act to incorporate the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana," which reads as follows, viz: "Provided that no person or persons who are not free white citizens of the United States, and domiciliated in the State of Louisiana, shall be directly indirectly owner of any part of the capital stock of idcompany," be, and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That the ninth section of the act aforesaid, of 30th January, 1836, authorising the Bank to charge on all notes having more than one hundred and twenty-four days to run six per cent discount, and all loans over one hundred and twenty-four days, seven per cent discount, and the eighth section of the act of 13th March, 1839, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act amendatory and supplementary to the several acts relative to the act to incorporate the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, authorizing the Bank to charge eight per cent discount on loans for a term exceeding six months or more, be, and the same are hereby amended as follows, viz: That it shall be lawful for the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana to charge on all loans (stock loans excepted,) not having more than ninety days to run, six per cent discount, and on all loans over ninety days, eight per cent discount.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That the section of the act of February 12th, 1836, entitled, "An act supplementary to the several acts relative to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana," which reads as follows: "That hereafter no nomination of the officers of the Bank will take place without having given eight days notice of the same in French and English in two of the papers of this city be, and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That so much of the seventh section of the act of 1st March, 1852, entitled, "An act for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, authorizing the stockholders to elect five directors, be, and the same is hereby so amended that the stockholders of said corporation shall have the right to elect seven directors, who, with the two appointed by the State, shall constitute the Board of Directors of said Citizens' Bank of Louisiana."

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall be in force only after having been accepted in writing by a majority in number and amount of both the mortgage and cash stockholders of the Bank.

Mr. Macmurdo—I move that the bill be taken up and acted on now.

Mr. Evans—I cannot say that I thoroughly understand this bill, and without understanding it I cannot consent to vote for it.

Mr. Macmurdo—I shall endeavor to explain the nature of the bill so that the gentleman may be enabled to understand it. The object of the bill is a good one, and I think will command the general approbation of the Senate. In plain terms, it is intended simply to allow the Citizens' Bank to charge eight per cent. on loans for more than ninety days, thus putting that Bank on an equality with the others. It is a privilege granted to the free Banks established under the act of the last session, and with which the Citizens' Bank comes in competition. Moreover, this will benefit the country, where the loans made are generally for 90 days, and if the Citizen's bank be not allowed to charge the same rate as the others, it cannot of course extend its loans to a period beyond the ninety days. It is also designed to benefit the mortgage-stockholders, among whom the State has a residuary interest. I can see no possible objection to the bill, and I am sure the gentleman will have none after I have informed him that its only object is to put the Citizens' Bank on an equality with the other Banks, by granting it the same privileges which they enjoy. It will benefit the State and the country stockholders, and cannot have an injurious effect on any one.

Mr. Moore—Does the gentleman intend to increase the interest on mortgage notes?

Mr. Macmurdo—The only intention is to allow the money to be so invested as to give the mortgage stockholders some return for the large contributions which are levied on them.

Mr. Trudeau—If I understand the bill correctly, its object is this: The Citizens' Bank occupies a different position from that which is occupied by others. It has a right to discount paper for longer than 90 days, but on all paper running more than that time, it is restricted to 6 per cent. The object of this regulation is to prevent that Bank from discounting for a longer period than 90 days, by making it against her interest to do so. But the other Banks have the privilege of discounting for a longer period than 90 days, at 8 per cent. This of course operates as a great detriment to the country customers of the Citizens' Bank, because she will not discount at a lower rate than others, and therefore cannot extend her loans beyond 90 days. In fact some banks have the privilege of charging 9 per cent. after a certain time, but she does not ask to be permitted to charge more than the legal rate of interest. She is now, by the operation of the provision I have referred to, restricted entirely to discounts on short paper. She ought to be permitted to have the same privileges as the other Banks. As the Senator from New Orleans very justly remarks, the State has a direct interest in the matter, which she should consult, for her own sake at least.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Moore—The bill ought to be so amended as to exclude loans on mortgage from its operation. By the charter of the Bank she has no right to take more than 7 per cent. on mortgage loans, and the bill should, therefore, be so amended as not to violate that provision of the charter. If the bill is so shaped as simply to affect loans on promissory notes, I have no objection to it, but if it includes mortgage loans, I shall oppose it, because it would contravene a special provision of the charter. The reason for the restriction in regard to mortgage loans, is evidently that when the security is perfect the rate of interest ought not to be so high as when the security is imperfect. If I am wrong in stating that such a restriction exists in the charter, I hope that some gentleman who is better informed on the subject than I am, will correct me.

Mr. Macmurdo—The bill excepts stock loans.

Mr. Moore—Then I move to except loans on mortgage.

Mr. Trudeau—I object to the amendment. The rate of interest in New Orleans, it is well known, is very high. It is even difficult to procure money on mortgage at 8 per cent. If we make the rate which she is permitted to take, lower than the rate of conventional interest, the only effect will be to prevent the Bank from lending money. There is no clause in her charter compelling her to do so. If she cannot make loans at the same rate as other Banks, she will not make any loans of that kind at all, because she can lend money on short time at better rates. If she be put on the same footing with other banks, she will be willing to extend those accommodations to the planting community of which they stand so greatly in need.

Mr. Kittridge—I hope the amendment will not prevail. If it be adopted, it will deprive the country of the advantages which it expected to derive from the re-establishment of this Bank. When planters go to the city to borrow money, they do not expect the Citizens' Bank to lend them money at a lower rate than is charged by other Banks. It could not be expected that the Bank would do it, and therefore the planters would lose the benefits of the institution.

Mr. Palfrey—I am opposed to increasing the rate of interest which this Bank is allowed to charge. My impression is that it is not optional with the Bank what amount she may lend on particular securities. I think she is bound to lend a certain proportion on notes, a certain proportion on mortgage, &c.

Mr. Macmurdo—It is of great importance to the interests of the Citizens' Bank to be put on an equality with the other banks in New Orleans. It is with great difficulty that loans on mortgage can be obtained in the city at 8 per cent. The old banks are authorized to charge nine. This bank is more extensively connected in the country than any other, and it is but just not only to herself, but likewise to her customers, that she should be put on an equality with the rest.

Mr. Hodge—I shall vote against the bill because it gives the bank the right of charging a higher rate of interest than individuals are permitted to receive. There is a difference between eight per cent. interest and eight per cent discount. Allowing the Bank to charge eight per cent discount would entitle it to receive more than eight per cent interest. There is no reason why the bank should be suffered to charge more than an individual. It shall never be done with my consent. It is unfair and unjust, and tends to foster monopolies. I will not make any discrimination in favor of banks simply because they happen to be corporations.

Mr. Macmurdo—Individuals charge more than eight per cent. every day in the year.

Mr. Hodge.—Then that is usury, and vitiates the contract.

Mr. Macmurdo—but the discount usually charged is eight per cent. That is sanctioned by custom.

Mr. Hodge.—Have the Free Banks the right to charge eight per cent?

Mr. Macmurdo—Yes, sir.

A motion was made to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Hodge—I move to lay the bill indefinitely on the table; but before the question is put, I should like the gentleman to read the section of the Free Banking law which authorizes them to charge eight per cent.

Mr. Evans—Will it be in order to move to lay the bill on the table indefinitely? For my part I am always doubtful about the propriety of giving additional powers or privilges to banks, and as I do not yet thoroughly understand the proposition before the Senate in regard to the Citizens' Bank, I should not at this moment be willing to vote for it. Nevertheless I shall vote against laying the bill indefinitely on the table, because if I can be convinced of its propriety, I shall support it. I would therefore move to have the bill postponed to some future day.

Mr. Kenner—I shall second that motion. There seems to be some misapprehension in regard to the bill, which, I am satisfied, will be removed when senators shall have had time to reflect on it. In a few days I think it will pass without opposition.

Mr. King—I find there is an amendment necessary to the bill. In its present shape it interferes with the charter of the bank, without consulting the stockholders on the subject. We ought to insert a section providing that the stockholders shall accept the amendment before the act can have effect. The charter is a vested right in the stockholders, and we cannot alter it without their consent.

Mr. Moore—As I have before remarked the charter compels the bank to lend a certain proportion on mortgages. Now this amendment proposed in the bill may be necessary, it may be productive of beneficial results to the community at large, but I am inclined to a different opinion. I think its only effect will be to legislate money into the pockets of the stockholders. I have no hesitation in affirming that in two days after this bill passes, the stock of the Citizens' Bank will be worth 110. This is an important fact. I do not consider this a fair method of legislation.

Mr. Hodge—The gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. Macmurdo) remarked that the banks established under the Free Banking law have a right to charge eight per cent discount. I take issue with him on that point. He says those banks have a right to charge the highest legal interest. In order to come to a just conclusion we have to inquire what the highest legal interest is. It is eight per cent. But eight per cent. discount exceeds eight per cent. interest, as I have before stated, and as the gentleman himself fully knows. Now, sir, I am opposed to granting greater privileges to banks than are extended to individuals. Why should we do it? What claims have they on our favor? I say again, sir, it is a wrong principle, and shall never receive the sanction of my vote.

Mr. Macmurdo—I am sorry the gentleman has taken issue with me on the right of persons to charge eight per cent discount. I would ask the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements, (Mr. King) whose authority as a lawyer I am perfectly willing to take, whether such contracts are not recoverable at law.

Mr. King—Eight per cent is the legal rate of interest, as has been stated. That is called conventional interest. But if a person choose to buy a note, deducting any discount which may be agreed on, he can recover the amount of the note,

Mr. Hodge—Do I understand the gentleman to say that the usury laws of the State can thus be set aside? It is the first time that I have heard it seriously urged that a thing could be changed by changing its name. It is the first time I have heard that a man could thus with impunity violate the usury laws. They are made for the purpose of fixing the amount of profit which a man may make on loans of money, and to prevent imposition on those whose necessities compel them to have recourse to money lenders. To take more than a certain rate is usury; and it is usury still, whether you call it discount or interest. I have frequently heard of this way of getting around the usury laws, but I never before heard it said that the law itself countenanced such a system.

Digitized by Google

The bill was made the order of the day for Wednesday.

THE RICKER EXPEDITION.

Mr. King asked and obtained leave to introduce an act to repeal, in part, art 1546 of the Civil Code. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Also an act to compensate various persons employed by the committee of the Senate, appointed in the year 1850, to preserve the State from inundation.

Mr. King—I move to refer the bill last presented to the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Wickliffe—I move to refer it to the Committee on Claims. That Committee is not pledged on the subject either way. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his motion to refer it to the Committee on Internal Improvements. It is known that the Chairman of that Committee is hopelessly pledged to the payment of these claims. For my part, I think these claims are not founded in justice. I may be wrong, but that is my opinion, and I think when the bill comes up, I can show it to be well founded. Now, sir, this thing is a claim, and as such ought to be examined by the appropriate Committee. All other claims are treated in that way, and I hope an exception will not be made in this case. What has the Committee on Internal Improvements to do with a matter of this kind? The bill contemplates nothing more or less than the payment of certain claims against the State, and the proper Committee to examine a question of that kind is the Committee on Claims I think, as I have said, that I can show that these are not good claims. That famous expedition of Mr. Ricker was a perfect wild goose chase for which he had no authority from the State. I again venture to express the hope that the gentleman will not persist in his motion, when he is irredeemably pledged in favor of the bill.

Mr. King—The gentleman thinks this bill ought not to be referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, because I am, as he says, irredeemably pledged in its favor. But, sir, I am not the whole Committee I am not authorized to speak for it, except when instructed to do so, or to pledge it for or against any particular measure. I, sir, have introduced this bill. I am certainly pledged to my own bill. It would be strange if I were not. But there are other members on the Committee who are entitled to an equal voice with myself. The gentleman certainly would not be unwilling to trust to their discrimination. The gentleman asks what the Committee on Interna Improvements has to do with this matter. If he had read the title of the bill he would not have asked the question Mr. Ricker was the chairman of a committee appointed by this Senate to devise ways and means to save the State from inundation. The Committee on Internal Improvements is intended to perform the same duties. That shows at once that this Committee is the one peculiarly adapted to the investigation of the bill The gentleman says these are not good claims. I think, on the contrary, that they are eminently just. I think I can show, when the bill comes up, that they are just, though I may fail in convincing the gentleman who is so irredeemably opposed to them. I will show the gentleman now. Mr. Ricker, as Chairman of the Senate Committee, reported the results of his investigations to the Committee on Internal Improvements. That Committee has before it all the maps, plans, papers and other documents which were collected by Mr. Ricker. It has, therefore, at its command, means of information not possessed by the Committee on Claims. The gentleman has thought proper to state that I am pledged in favor of the bill, and has left us to infer that the Committee of which I have the honor to be Chairman is affected in the same way. I contend, sir, that the Committee on Internal Improvements is no more pledged than the Committee on Claims. Last year the claim of Mr. Burke, one of the gentlemen employed by Mr. Ricker, was laid before that Committee. It amounted to $800. The Committee reported on it favorably. The Internal Improvement Committee cut down the same claim to $100. So, if the Committee on Claims, following this precedent, should report favorably on all the bills in full, it would take $25,000 to pay them. The Committee on Internal Improvements, on the other hand, makes the sum only $5,000. I repeat that these are just claims, and I therefore think they ought to be paid. The Committee on Internal Improvements, with all due deference to the Senator from West Feliciana, is precisely the Committee to which the subject ought to be referred, as the one best qualified to investigate it. The Committee on Claims cannot possess so correct a knowledge of the matter, because it has not the means of information. As to the Committee on Internal Improvements being pledged, I have shown that to be a mistaken view of the subject. I do not know a single member who is pledged, so that the fears of the gentleman on that score are utterly groundless.

Mr. Wickliffe—The gentleman says that the Committee on Claims is pledged, equally as much so, I believe he stated, as the Committee over which he presides as Chairman, Now, sir, what will be thought of this statement, when I call the attention of Senators to the fact that not a single member of that Committee of last year now occupies a seat on this floor. I repeat that I see no reason why this bill should be sent before a Committee whose Chairman is pledged to its support, while other bills are sent before unpledged Committees. This, sir, is an invidious distinction. The argument of the gentleman that the Committee on Internal Improvements possesses superior means of information is not tenable. The gentleman himself who takes so much interest in Mr. Ricker will certainly not object to showing those maps and plans and documents of which he has spoken to the Committee on Claims, in order to aid it in its investigations. I know that his amiability and amenity are such as will not permit him to refuse.

Mr. King—I beg leave to assure the gentleman that I will not take the trouble to run to the Committee on Claims to show plans and documents of any kind. That is not my business. I will also tell him that I have no interest in this bill, except that which every Senator should feel. I consider the claims just, and I think they ought to be paid.

Mr. Kenner—I should like to settle this matter without delay, I therefore move to lay the bill indefinitely on the table. This Ricker claim has been before the Senate for the last three years. It has become a decided bore, at least to me, and I am sure there are very few of the other members who want to hear any thing more about it.

Mr. King—If we do not pass a general bill of this kind, we shall be annoyed by numberless petitions and special claims in the consideration of which much valuable time will be unavoidably consumed, and the result may be that the State will ultimately be subjected to much more expense than if this bill were to be passed at once.

Mr. Kenner—As I perceive there is an evident desire on the part of the Senate to investigate this subject, I withdraw the motion to lay on the table indefinitely, and second the motion to refer to the Committee on claims. That is the proper committee.

Mr. King—I have no objection to withdraw my motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Internal Improvements. I do not oppose the investigation of these claims by any committee, as I believe them to be just and proper

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. King called up House bill entitled,

An act to make effective the provisions of an act entitled an act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands donated to the State of Louisiana by an act of Congress entitled an act to aid the State of Louisiana in draining the swamp lands therein, approved March 2d, 1849.

On motion, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Wickliffe—I move to take up the House bill to provide for the registry of legal and tacit mortgages, and refer it to the Judiciary Committee. The reason I do so is, because the bill is introduced by a distinguished lawyer of the other house, who has devoted much time and labor to preparing it. I have great confidence in his judgment, and I believe he has produced a bill which will command the approval of the Senate, as it did that of the lower House. I wish the committee to have that bill before them before they act on the subject.

Digitized by Google

ORDER OF THE DAY—THE REGISTRY LAW.

This being the day set apart for the consideration of the following bills, entitled—

An act to provide for the registering of voters in the city of New Orleans, in pursuance of Art. 11 of the Constitution, and

An act to provide for the registry of the names and residence of all qualified electors in the city of New Orleans.

Mr. McCay said—I have to ask the indulgence of the Senate for not having prepared a report on these bills. The reason I have not done so was, because one of my colleagues on the Committee on Elections, (Mr. Dupré,) was called away from the capital on urgent business. Mr. Ryan, the other member of the committee, was also absent on business. That gentleman has, I believe, two bills on the same subject in his hands. I myself have two, which I should like to place before the committee. I therefore move that the bill be made the order of the day for Tuesday next. The motion was adopted.

THE BILL TO EMANCIPATE W. H. BOATNER.

Mr. Lacey called up the House bill to, emancipate the minor W. H. Boatner.

Mr. Trudeau—I object to the passage of that bill at this time. I must say that that I cannot consent to favor it until I have obtained some information in regard to it. If I recollect aright, all minors have now, by law, the right to be emancipated by a family meeting or the judgment of a court, when properly applied to. If this is so, I do not see why the Legislature should be continually called on to interfere with such matters. I wish to know whether, under the act of 1848, the family has not a right to do this thing, and whether a family meeting has been called in this case. If the family meeting does not wish to do it, there must be some concealed motive which prompts this application to the Legislature. It shows that the tutor wishes to effect the object in direct oppostion to the desires of the family meeting. The fact is, these applications are becoming entirely too numerous. There were so many bills for the emancipation of minors and slaves before the Senate last week, that I am not sorry I was not here to be annoyed by them. Not a general bill was acted on during all that time. Now, sir, I wish the Senate to understand me. I am opposed to legislation on special grounds, and I am therefore adverse to this emancipation of a minor in opposition to the wishes of a family meeting. I think the time has arrived to put an end to this course of proceeding, and I have therefore taken this opportunity of presenting my views to the Senate. We have general laws under which the same results can be obtained as through an act of the Legislature, if the merits of the case demand. Let parties take advantage of those general laws, and cease to annoy us with their applications.

Mr. Lacey—When I inform the gentleman that the minor whose emancipation is contemplated by this bill, is a brother of one of my colleagues, representing the parish of East Baton Rouge in the other House, and also of one of the Senators on this floor, I hope he will see that the case is not of that kind which he suspects. The object in view of the parties is to make a division of property. The estate is small, and would not justify the expense of the legal proceedings which would be necessary under the general law. The Senate has before passed bills of this kind. It has passed them at this very session. I know the gentleman is opposed to the principle. I am myself opposed to it. But the Senate has sanctioned the priuple in a number of instances, and it would be unjust to make an exception in this case, if there are no other reasons than those which applied to the others. This is a peculiar case. It demands action of some kind, and as the parties have come before us for relief, under the precedents which we ourselves have set, I do no not see how we can, in justice, refuse to grant their request.

Mr. Trudeau—I should like to grant all due courtesy to the gentlemen, but I cannot consent to support a bill to the principle of which I am opposed. I do not make an exception in this case, since my action has been adverse in all. I think there is danger in this system of emancipating minors. Members were surprised when I told them there was no necessity for legislation on the subject—that it was already completely provided for in a general law, and that the object could be accomplished by application to a court. I am opposed to the principle, and I shall make no exception in favor of any bill. I shall vote against them all whenever I have an opportunity.

The bill passed.

Mr. Rivers submitted and read the proceedings and resolutions passed by the citizens of the parishes of Carroll, Madison, Tensas and Concordia.

On motion of Mr. Rivers, they were referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees.

TUESDAY, Feb 7th, 1854.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock—17 Senators present.

A memorial was presented from citizens of New Orleans against an act regulating Judicial sales.

Mr. Kenner—I ask for the reading of the names to the memorial. It is not often I agree with the Democratic party, and I want to hear their names.

The names were partly read.

Mr. King—I am glad the names have been read.—If those are Democrats there must be very few Whigs left in New Orleans.

Mr. McCay called up the following bill—

An act to provide for the seizure, upon conservatory process, and under execution of all judgments and all rights and claims in suit.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the passage of this act, all judgments and all rights and claims to property, moveable and immoveable, money, rights and credits, when asserted in court by way of petition, opposition or reconvention and all claims upon tableau of distribution, shall be subject to seizure under execution in all cases and upon conservatory process in the cases in which by the existing laws, such process can issue.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That all persons entitled to process, whether mesne or final, and who shall have caused the same to issue in any of the cases mentioned in the preceding section, and seizure to be made, shall cause the Sheriff to notify the debtor, when the latter is a resident of the parish in which the seizure is made, as in ordinary cases, and when the debtor is not a resident of the parish, then notice may be served upon any one of his attorneys of record in the case in which the right, claim or judgment shall be seized.

Mr. King—I propose to amend by adding notice to judgment.

Mr McCay—The present law already does that.

Mr. Lacey—I hope the bill will be referred for the purpose of amending and perfecting.

Mr. McCay—The bill seems very clear to me without amendment, but I will interpose no objection to the reference if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. Munday—I think that parties might be injured under the provisions of this bill, and I insist, with Mr. Lacey, that it should be referred.

The bill was made the special order for Wednesday next.

On a resolution to ask for a daily mail between New Orleans and Baton Rouge—

Mr. Kenner—I do not know that the remote, small voice of Louisiana will be heard by the general Government. But every little town, nearly, in the United States, has a daily mail, and Baton Rouge, the capital of the State, has none. I mean nothing political in this, and cast no reflections on the present head of the Postoffice Department. He is only doing what all the Postmasters preceding him have done. We have been refused it because it would not pay to establish a daily mail, but we must have it.

The resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

An act regulating the retailing of spirituous liquors.

Mr. McCay—I am in favor of the general provisions of the bill, but to require wards in the city to act on their own independent vote, I cannot submit to; and the bill requires that the vote onthis question be taken annually, and we already have enough elections to attend to.

Mr. Munday—Mr. President, I would like to know the objection to the vote being taken by wards. I am in favor of letting every ward vote for itself.

Digitized by Google

Mr. McCay—I will state one objection. Those wards that reject the coffee houses, will thereby concentrate them into particular wards, and wards having a majority in favor of license would thus be increased. For uniformity, let the whole parish vote whether there shall be a license or not.

Mr Munday—I think it is perhaps better to print the bill, and let us examine it, as it concerns the happiness of so many people. I, however, cannot understand the gentleman's special pleading.

Mr. Palfrey—Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote making the tacit mortgage bill the special order of the day for Thursday week, and change it to Monday week, because several committees would be absent, and there should be a full Senate when the bill was acted on.

Mr. King—I am opposed to delaying this matter, as was done at the last session, for the convenience of fancy committees. If this delay is intended to defeat the bill, I shall oppose it, and insist on the order standing as it is.

Mr. Palfrey—I will inform the Senator that the committees do not go to New Orleans from choice. For my own part I prefer remaining here and attending to the business of the Senate.

Mr. Lacey—I concur with the Senator from New Orleans. I would rather dispense with the committees than that their absence should delay and defeat the bill.

Mr. Munday—I desire to be here as much as any gentleman. I am in favor of the postponement in order to have a full Senate. I am compelled to go away with a committee. I do not suppose that every thing will be swept away, even if this bill should fail.

Under consideration "an act to reenact and amend article 116 of the Civil Code."

Mr. King—Mr. President, I move that the Senate refuse to concur in the House amendments. The bill as it passed the Senate ought not to be amended. The judge should have some discretion in the appointment of curators.

The Senate refused to concur.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Assistant Secretary informed the House that the Senate had concurred in a bill entitled

An act changing the time of holding the term of the District Courts of the 9th and 11th Judicial District Courts of this State.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in a bill entitled

An act to provide for the payment of coupons of interest detached from the bonds issued by the State, and which coupons may be past due.

And that the Senate has concurred with amendment in a bill entitled

An act for the relief of F. L. Glover.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Pellerin asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill entitled

An act for the relief of Armand Hulot, of the parish of Lafayette.

On motion the rules were dispensed with, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Evans gave notice that he would, on some future day, introduce

An act granting State aid for the building and endowing colleges and first class seminaries of learning.

Mr. King, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to authorize Joseph Emily Valée to adopt Elizabeth Burnett, his legal heir.

On motion of Mr. King, the rules were suspended, it underwent its several readings, and it passed.

Mr. Macmurdo, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to continue in force and amend the act entitled an act to incorporate the Presbyterian Church and Congregation of the city and parish of New Orleans, approved March 1, 1834.

On motion, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. King asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to fix the time for the election of State Printer.

On motion, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The same Senator introduced

A petition of Eugene Musson and J. F. Pepin—which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Kenner asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to emancipate the slave Louis, belonging to the widow Patrick Uriell, of the parish of St. James.

On motion, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Also, an act to authorize the Recorder of the parish of St. James to appoint a deputy.

On motion of Mr. Kenner, the rules were suspended, it underwent its several readings, and it passed.

Mr. King asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to provide for the internal improvement of the State, and for making the necessary levees and drainage to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands of the State.

On motion of Mr. King, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and on motion of Mr. Kenner, it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees.

Five hundred copies were ordered to be printed immediately in Baton Rouge, and that the original be handed to the printer.

By a message from the House, the signature of the President of the Senate is requested to the following enrolled bills and resolutions of the House:

An act to authorize Pierre Whip, of the parish of Iberville, to change his name from Pierre Whip to that of John Reames.

An act to increase the compensation of jurors in the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act to repeal so much of the 3d section of an act entitled an act to regulate the terms of the District Courts (the parish of Orleans excepted) approved April 29th, 1853, as relates to the courts of the 8th Judicial District, and regulate the holding thereof.

An act to authorize James M. Meredith and Josephine Larsh, his wife, of the parish of Caldwell, to adopt Eliza Jane Rice, an orphan, and to change her name to Eliza Jane Meredith.

An act for the relief of Samuel Patterson, Sheriff of the parish of Livingston.

An act for the relief of James Upshaw, Sheriff of the parish of Bienville.

Resolution instructing our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure a weekly mail between Stony Point, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and Springfield, in the parish of Livingston.

And that the House had concurred in the following entitled bills of the Senate:

An act for the relief of H. McNeal.

Mr. Lacey gave notice that he would shortly introduce the following bills:

An act providing for the navigation of the Bayou Manchac.

Also an act granting to the Baton Rouge Grosse Tête and Opelousas Plank Road Company the use of the convict slaves, and the negroes, now under confinement in the penitentiary.

Mr. Trudeau asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to secure the rights of pre-emption.

On motion the rules were suspended; it was read twice, and it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

First Reading.

An act to authorise Tilmon Hemphill, of the parish of Bienville, to adopt Miranda Indiana Owen and William Napoleon Owen, and to change their names to Miranda Indiana Hemphill and William Napoleon Hemphill.

An act to amend the thirtieth section of an act entitled, "An act for the uniform regulation of elections

Digitized by Google

in the State of Louisiana" (excepting the parish of Orleans)

An act to change the name of Henry Lightfoot Williams.

An act relative to the removal of the seat of justice of the parish of Concordia.

An act to change the name of Assenath Melissa Clayton to that of Hortense Helena Tiffen.

An act to provide for the re-districting of the parish of Concordia into police jury wards.

An act to emancipate John Fletcher Wyche, Jr.

An act to incorporate the college of New Orleans.

An act to exempt clerks, workmen and employees of the Branch Mint of the United States, at New Orleans, from serving as jurors in the District Courts of New Orleans.

An act to incorporate the Louisiana German Draymen's Association, of New Orleans.

A bill to amend the tenth section of the act organizing the District Courts of New Orleans.

An act to authorize Louis Auguste Leopold Bernard to make certain disposition of his property.

An act to create an additional Justice of the Peace and Constable in and for the parish of Washington.

An act to authorize Christian Mathes and Wahlburga Stiep, his wife, mutually to adopt Peter Mathes and Josephine Stiep, and to make donations in their favor.

An act for the relief of Ivy F. Thompson.

An act to provide for the appointment of one notary public for the parish of Plaquemines.

An act to emancipate John McWillie, Jr., and Annie McWillie.

Resolution requesting Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure the passage of a law giving to each settler, who is not an owner of any land, 160 acres.

Resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to obtain a weekly mail from St. Martinsville, via the Bayou Portage, and crossing Lake Fausse Point to Bayou Chenne, in the parish of St. Martin.

Resolution relative to the printing of bills, resolutions and reports of both Houses.

Second Reading.

An act to protect creditors against the surreptitious distribution of the assets of successions and insolvencies in the parish of Orleans.

An act to regulate parish taxation in the parish of Concordia.

An act to increase the pay of jurors of Carroll parish.

Resolution requiring State Engineer to repair to the Ouachita river and examine the shoals therein.

On motion, it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees.

An act concerning the licensing of drinking houses and the sale of intoxicating liquors in this State.

On motion it was ordered to be printed.

Resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure a weekly mail from New Orleans to Buras Settlement, in the parish of Plaquemines.

On motion the same was laid over, subject to call.

On motion the rules were suspended, the following bills were read a third time by their titles, and they passed, and were concurred in—

An act concerning the payment to owners of slaves condemned to death or the penitentiary by the State.

An act relative to proceedings on judgments rendered by justices of the peace in the parish of Orleans.

An act to provide for the execution of sentences to death in the parish of Orleans.

Resolution instructing Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their utmost exertions to procure the passage by Congress of several bills now pending, having for their object a grant of land by the General Government to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad.

THIRD READING.

The following bills were laid over, subject to call:

An act to authorize the emancipation of the slave Angela.

An act for the relief of Antoine Joseph Buras.

WEDNESDAY, February 8th, 1854.

Senate met—18 Senators present.

An act to amend and re-enact an act to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands.

Mr. Kenner—I understand that this bill is to cover works done last year. I would ask what has been done?

Mr. King—I am not furnished with the details of the work for which $50,000 is asked. There is a contract for $12,000 for Grand Levee. Another work would cost $25,000. Then there are the expenses of engineering. The fund intended for them had been refused by the Auditor of Public Accounts, for constitutional reasons.

Mr. Macmurdo—I am in favor of the appropriation.

Mr. Kenner—I do not wish to vote in the dark. Let me ask if the $50,000 is to include $30,000 for Grand Levee?

Mr. Munday—I would state that a portion of this money is to go for a very fine work on Atchafalaya.

First section was adopted.

Mr. Macmurdo—I move a reconsideration. My object is to protect the Internal Improvement Fund, and that this bill shall not make an appropriation for any new works.

Mr. Trudeau—I am preparing an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. Kenner—I have no objection, if it is not intended to pay for new contracts. Bill passed.

An act for the relief of Thomas S. Sanders.

Mr. Boatner—I think, Mr. President, as there is a school fund, the parishes deriving the benefits should pay such claims.

Mr. Moore—The parish of St. Mary has not drawn the fund of $50,000 of 1847, and this bill is for services rendered.

Mr. Boatner—The wording of the act is too general. It ought to be worded so as to show that it goes to the parish of St. Mary only.

Mr. Moore—I think it will be understood, as I have cited, in the bill, the acts referred to. This money is not to come out of the school fund. It is for services rendered before the public schools went into operation. The act of 1847 was for the years 1846, 1847 and 1848, and the services were rendered in 1848. Bill passed.

Mr. Moore asked and obtained leave to introduce the following joint resolutions:

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the Swamp Land Commissioners and their Engineers be requested to furnish an account of the contingent and other expenses incurred under their administration, and of all contracts made and entered into not already reported.

On motion of Mr. Macmurdo, the following amendment was inserted in the same:

Provided, That the commissioners be instructed to enter into no further contracts for building levees, except in case of some emergency or threatened crevasse.

Mr. Rivers offered the following amendment to be added to Mr. Macmurdo's amendment, which was adopted:

"During the present session of the Legislature."

On motion of Mr. Moore, the rules were suspended; it underwent its several readings, and it passed.

On motion the Assistant Secretary requested the concurrence of the House thereto.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr McCay asked and obtained leave to introduce—

An act to amend an act entitled, "An act to fix the time for making Sheriffs' and Coroners' sales, and for other purposes," approved March 5, 1842.

On motion the rules were suspended; it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

By a message from the House the Senate was requested to concur in—

An act to repeal Articles 130, 131, 132, 133 and 134 of the Constitution, said articles relating to the Board of Public Works, and

An act to provide for the revision of the statutes of the State of a general character.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Assistant Secretary of the Senate requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills, entitled—

Digitized by Google

An act to authorize the Recorder in and for the parish of St. James to appoint a deputy.

Resolution in relation to the establishment of a daily mail between the cities of New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Bayou Sara, and all intermediate postoffices on the Mississippi river.

An act to authorize Joseph E. Vallée to adopt Elizabeth Brunet his legal heir.

An act concerning the payment to owners of slaves condemned to death or the Penitentiary by the State

An act to amend and re-enact Article 1116 of the Civil Code.

And he informed the House that the Senate had concurred in—

An act to provide for the execution of sentences of death in the parish of Orleans.

Resolution instructing Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their utmost exertions to procure the passage by Congress of several bills having for their object a grant of land by the General Government to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Lacey, from the Judicary Committee, reported favorably on the following bills, entitled—

An act giving permission to certain slaves belonging to the estate of the late H. R W. Hill, of the city of New Orleans, to remain in the State after their manumission by their owner

An act concerning divorces.

Petition praying for a change in the law relative to drawing jurors.

An act to provide for the trial by jury of certain cases of probate jurisdiction.

An act relative to motions in arrest of judgment in criminal cases.

And he reported unfavorably on

An act relative to the proceedings on judgments rendered by Justices of the Peace in the parish of Orleans.

And an act relative to persons injured by the Raccourci Cut-off.

The committee reports that it cannot agree, and report the fact to the Senate, together with the bill, for its action in the premises.

Mr. Moore, from the Committee on Public Education, made the following report:

The Committee on Public Education, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas S. Sanders, have had the same under consideration, and find his accounts duly certified and sworn to, under the provisions of the act of 26th March, 1842, 27th February, 1847, and March 16th, 1848, and that he was employed as a teacher of a public school in the parish of St. Mary previous to putting into operation the act of 1847, to establish free public schools.

The act of 1842, and 27th February, 1847, provides that whenever the police jury of any parish shall have imposed a tax of not less than $200, nor more than $400, then the State Treasurer was authorized to pay double the amount for the support of common schools in such parish. The act of March 16th, 1848, re-affirmed the same principle, but provided that the payments should be made through the Auditor of Public Accounts. On the 4th of May, 1847, an appropriation of fifty thousand dollars was made to defray the expenses incurred under the provisions of the acts aforesaid for the years 1846, 1847, and 1848.

It appears that the parish of St. Mary drew the sum of $800 for each of the years 1846 and 1847, and that the part of that appropriation for the year 1848 remains unpaid to that parish. It appears further, that the petitioner received his pro rata allowance upon the amount received for the years 1846 and 1847, though his entire claim, as certified for those years, was not paid. It appears, further, that of the sum of $1001 71, which he claims, there is due him the sum of $806 83 for services in the year 1848. It appears, further, that there remains in the Treasury, from the appropriation of 1847 for the payment of such claims, the sum of $24,170 dollars. Several precedents are formed for the payment of like claims.

The Committee, under the circumstances, think the petitioner entitled to re ief, not exceeding the amount that might have been drawn by the parish of St. Mary for the payment of such claims, and report a bill accordingly.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

This being the day set apart for the consideration of a bill entitled

An act amendatory of the charter of and of several acts relative to the Citizen's Bank of Louisiana.

On motion the reading of the bill was resumed, section by section, and it passed.

On motion the Assistant Secretary requested the concurrence of the House therein.

The reading of an act to provide for the seizure upon conservatory process under execution, of all judgements and all rights, claims and suits, was resumed as follows:

The section was adopted as amended.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That in all cases where the debtor resides out of the parish in which the seizure is made, and has no attorney of Record, or the attornay of Record is dead or absent, the seizing creditor may, by motion in court, in the case in which the process has issued, obtain the appointment of a curator ad hoc to represent the debtor, and upon said curator the notice of seizure shall be served.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Sheriff, upon making a seizure in any one of the cases provided for in the first section of this act, shall make out a notice of the seizure, designating the right, claim, or judgement seized, and the said notice shall serve upon the Clerk of the Court in which the right, claim, or judgment seized, shall exist or be asserted.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the Court upon whom notice of seizure shall be served as provided for in the preceding section, to immediately file said notice of seizure in the record of the case in which the right, claim or judgment seized shall exist or be asserted, and also to state the fact of the seizure upon the docket of the Court, giving the name of the seizing creditor, and the date of the seizure.

Sec. 6. Be it further enacted, &c, That no seizure made in any case provided for in this act shall be postponed to, or defeated by any sale, assignment or transfer, unless evidence of such sale, assignment or transfer shall exist in the record of the suit at the time of the service of the notice of seizure upon the Clerk of the Court, as provided for in this act.

Sec. 7. Be it further enacted, &c, That the purchaser of any right, claim or judgment sold in any case provided for in this act, shall stand in the place of the debtor, and of right be subrogated to all of his actions, rights, privileges and mortgages.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, &c, That all sales of rights, claims or judgments seized as provided for in this act, shall be made after ten days advertisement, and no appraisement shall be necessary.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, &c, That nothing in this act shall be construed to provide for the seizure of any personal right now exempt from seizure, nor shall anything therein contained be deemed to interfere with the right of garnishment as the same now exists.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, &c, That the act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

On motion of Mr. Trudeau, the words in second and third lines of the third section, "parish in which the seizure is made," were stricken out and the word "State" was inserted, and

On motion of Mr. McCay, the words "or by application at Chambers" were inserted, and the third section was then adopted as amended.

Mr. Lacy offered the following as the fourth section of the bill, which was adopted:

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever any judgment, right or claim, may be seized as provided for in the first section of this act, notice of such seizure must be given to the defendant in the right, claim, suit, or judgment, seized as aforesaid, and whenever any person or persons other than the defendant in the writ, under which the seizure is made, claims to be the owner of such judgment, right or claim, and has appeared of record, then, and in that event, notice shall also be served upon him; provided, however, that if either of the parties herein above orth resides out of the State, and has no Attorney of Record, or the Attorney of Record is dead or absent, a curator ad hoc may be appointed or provided for the defendant in the writ, in section third of the act.

Digitized by Google

The fifth section, in lieu of the fourth section of the original was then read and adopted; also the sixth section in lieu of the fifth section of the original bill was read and adopted.

Mr. Lacey offered the following amendment as the seventh section in lieu of the sixth section of the original bill:

Section 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That no seizure, made in any case provided for in this act, shall be defeated by any sale, assignment, or transfer, unless evidence of the legality and reality of such sale, assignment or transfer be provided in due course of law: provided, (however, that if evidence of such sale, assignment or transfer shall not exist in the record of the suit, at the time of service of notice of seizure upon the Clerk of the Court, as provided for in this act, the transferee shall be liable for all costs of seizure, notwithstanding the validity of the transfer may be maintained.)

On motion of Mr. Trudeau, all that part of the seventh section of Mr. Lacey's, commencing in the seventh line after the word "law," to the end of the section, was stricken out.

And the section was then adopted as amended.

The eighth section was then read and adopted in lieu of the seventh section of the original bill.

On motion of Mr. McCay, the eighth section of the original bill was stricken out.

The ninth section of the original bill was then read and adopted, and

On motion of Mr. Moore, the tenth section of the original bill was stricken out.

On motion of Mr. McCay, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

THURSDAY, Feb. 9, 1854.

Mr. Wickliffe presented the memorial of Josiah Beams, a veteran of 1814-'15.

Mr. Rivers—I ask that the memorial be referred.

Mr. Wickliffe—I will explain why I desire the bill to be taken up now. The applicant was a pensioner under the act of 1850. He had applied for his pension under the act of 1852, but before his proper certificates were returned to the Auditor the money was all gone.

The first section of the bill was then adopted.

Mr. Deffrees—Mr. President, there is a general law for pensioners, and I prefer to have this case referred to a committee.

Mr. Wickliffe—This individual was entitled to a pension under the act of 1850.

Mr. Deffrees—I withdraw my opposition.

Mr. Macmurdo—Mr. President, I was not in the Senate when the question came up, and I would, therefore, ask if the case has been made out.

Mr. Wickliffe—Yes, sir.

Mr. Trudeau—Mr. President, I shall vote against the bill, and every such bill, until a general bill is adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe—There is a general law now.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. Lacey introduced an act for the improvement of Bayou Manchac.

Mr. Lacey—I will state to the Senators, that there is a necessity to pass this act. The Florida parishes have been very much neglected, while other portions of the State have been attended to. For the small amount asked for in the bill, we can have free navigation 80 miles in the Amite and 15 miles in the Bayou Manchac. This would enable the people who live along these streams to ship every week their sugar, cotton and other products. I trust the Senate will throw no impediment in the way of this improvement, which will only cost the small sum of $3500. The State Engineer has said that great injustice has been done in this matter, and let us not now withhold what has been so amplp awarded to other sections of he country.

Mr. Rivers—I shall not vote for the bill unless it is eferred and comes up regularly endorsed from the nternal Improvement Committee.

Mr. Lacey—The facts are before the Senators. The Internal Improvement Committee have heard the facts, and I cannot think that the pitiful sum of $3500 will frighten them from that liberality which has been bestowed elsewhere.

Mr. Rivers—Then why should the gentleman object to the reference to the Committee, if he knows they could not object? It will only delay it one day.

Mr. Trudeau—I have not received much light from Committees. The sum is small, and I shall vote for the bill now.

Mr. Kenner—Mr. President, I have been along these streams. They are in my district, and if there is any benefit to be derived from it, my constituents will get it. But I must insist on having the bill referred to the Committee. This is a large work. It extends up the Amite and Manchac to Brown's plantation, on the Mississippi. I would like to have a report, to show if this sum would do the work.

Mr. Lacey—The improvement will not extend to the Mississippi river. Soundings have been made; the proper examinations have been made, and nothing but snags have to be removed. I trust the bill will be permitted to pass.

Mr. Moore—This is putting into operation a new principle. We now have an Engineer Corps costing $6000, with boats, etc., costing $10,000, and if this new mode is to be adopted, let us adopt it generally and not specially, and abolish our Engineer Corps. There was an appropriation made to this river years ago, and no very great good had ever been heard of it.

Mr. Rivers—I hope the gentleman from East Baton Rouge will not understand me as being opposed to the bill. I only ask for its reference to a Committee. But if the Senator will agree with Mr. Trudeau, that the Committees have thrown no light on questions before them, I will not insist on the reference.

Mr. Trudeau—Mr. President, I will now favor the reference, because two Senators, whose constituents are interested, are opposed to each other.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. McCay asked to introduce a joint resolution, instructing the Sanitary Committee to enquire into and report upon the practicability of purchasing Luzenberg's Hospital exclusively for contagious diseases, and moved to suspend the rules.

Mr. Moore—I object to suspending the rules.

Mr. McCay—It is a mere resolution of inquiry. So far as I am concerned, I would vote to purchase the Hospital. Cases of ship fever and other contagious diseases get into our hospitals and spread all over the whole establishment. If the gentleman will examine the resolution and still objects, I will withdraw it.

The resolution was read.

Mr. Moore—There is one word I object to—"practicability." It may be very practicable if they have the money, and thousands of dollars may be expended.

Mr. Trudeau—Necessity would be a better word.

Mr. McCay—No; insert expediency.

This was agreed to and the resolution was adopted.

"An act to provide for the filling of vacancies in District Judgeships," having been passed:

Mr. Moore—Mr. President, that law is unconstitutional. The Constitution says:

"The Judges of the several inferior courts shall be elected by the duly qualified voters of their several districts or parishes." Get over that if you can.

Mr. Wickliffe—The gentleman asks us very emphatically to get over the article in the Constitution he has just read. If he will listen he shall hear.

Mr. Moore.—Very well.

Mr. Wickliffe—(Reads the article of the Constitution) There is no provison for filling vacant Judgeships.

Mr. Moore—It is plain the Judges shall be elected. The article the gentleman read only applies where vacancies exist, and unless a vacancy does exist, the bill is clearly unconstitutional.

A motion to reconsider was lost.

"An act giving permission to certain slaves of H. R. W. Hill to remain in the State after their emancipation by their owner," was called up by Mr. Trudeau.

Mr. Trudeau—Mr. President, I understand this bill

Digitized by Google

emancipates about twenty negroes in my district, and I want to be here when it is discussed, and would like to have it made the order for some particular day.

Mr. Lacey—I wish to know if the gentleman intends to take charge of Mr. Macmurdo's bill in his absence.

Mr. Trudeau—I am taking charge of a bill to take effect in my district.

Mr. Lacey—It is not usual to take up a bill in the absence of the Senator who introduced it

Mr. Trudeau—He is in the lobbies somewhere. I want to be here when the bill is acted on, and willing the gentleman shall be here also.

Mr. Wickliffe—I want the bill postponed to a day fixed. I have ten or twelve similar bills, and if I support one I shall support all.

Mr. Martel—Mr. President, I have some twenty-five bills of the same sort which I wish passed if others are passed.

Mr. Trudeau—I have in my desk about thirty-five.

The bill was postponed.

An act to exempt the clerks, workmen and employees of the Branch Mint at New Orleans from jury duty was taken up.

Mr. Trudeau—I move to amend so as to exempt all public officers.

Mr. McCay—I would like to have the amendment in writing. I wish to know if it exempts all officers, generals, colonels, &c

Mr. King—Mr. President—I would state that almost all public officers are already exempt.

The bill was then referred to a committee.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Lacey asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to authorize the purchase of 175 copies of Eyma's works entitled "The Laws of Louisiana on Insolvency."

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Trudeau called up an act giving permission to certain slaves belonging to the estate of the late H. R. W. Hill, of the city of New Orleans, to remain in the State after their manumission by their owner.

On motion it was made the order of the day for Tuesday, the 21st February, 1854.

Mr. King called up an act to exempt the clerks, workmen and employees of the Branch Mint of the United States at New Orleans, from serving as jurors in the District Courts of New Orleans.

Mr. Trudeau moved as an amendment to insert, at the end of the seventh section, the words, "and all public officers."

And he moved to lay the bill and amendment indefinitely on the table.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe, in the chair; Messrs. Clifton, Defreese, Kenner, Key, Kittridge, McCay, Palfrey, Rivers, Scott, Taylor and Trudeau—11 yeas.

Messrs Boatner, Evans, Griffin, King, Lacey, Macmurdo, Munday, Martel, Moore, Pellerin, Richardson and Wickliffe—13 nays.

Consequently the Senate refused to lay the bill and amendment on the table.

On motion, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr, Wickliffe asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act for the relief of Josiah Reames.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the rules were suspended, the second section of the bill was stricken out, it underwent its several readings, title was amended, and it passed.

Mr. Lacey asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to provide for the navigation of the bayou Manchac and the river Amite.

On motion the rules were dispensed with, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, &c.

Mr. Palfrey asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to amend an act entitled an act to prevent trespasses, approved April 6th, 1842.

On motion the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Rivers asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to amend the fourth section of an act to reorganize the free public schools in the State of Louisiana.

On motion of Mr. Trudeau, the word "practicability," in the fourth line, was stricken out, and the word "expediency" inserted in lieu thereof.

On motion the rules were suspended, and the resolution underwent its several readings, and it passed as amended

Mr McCay asked and obtained leave to introduce the following joint resolution:

JOINT RESOLUTION:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the Joint Committee on Health be instructed to inquire into and report upon the practicability of purchasing the Hospital known as the Luzenburg Hospital in the city of New Orleans, to be used exclusively for the reception of contagious diseases.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. King, from the Committee on Internal Improvement, &c, made the following reports:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, President of the Senate:

The committee on Internal Improvement and Swamp Lands and Levees, to whom was referred the report of the Commissioners appointed by the Governor under the act of 30th April, 1853, in reference to the Barataria and Lafourche canal, have instructed their chairman to report that they consider no action necessary upon said report.

But as the papers referred to the Committee contain valuable obligations in favor of the State, it is proper they should be filed in the office of Auditor of Public Accounts. The Committee recommend the passage of a resolution to that effect.

(Signed,) WM. W. KING,
Chairman of the Committee.

And he submitted the following resolution, which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to deliver to the Auditor of Public Accounts, the report of the Commissioners appointed by the Governor under the act of 30th of April, 1853, in reference to the Barataria and Lafourche Canal Company, and the obligations and documents accompanying this report.

And he submitted the following report, which was read:

The Committee upon Internal Improvements and Swamp Lands and Levees, to whom was referred the resolution of the House requiring the State Engineer to repair to the Ouachita river and examine the shoals therein, beg leave, through their Chairman, to report favorably, with the following amendment:

Strike out in the sixth line the words "with the least possible delay," and insert the words "as soon as practicable.

(Signed,) WM. W. KING,
Chairman of the Committee.

Mr. Lacey, from the Committee on Judiciary, to whom was referred an act concerning the Judiciary, reported favorably by substitute.

On motion of Mr Lacey the rules were dispensed with, the substitute underwent its several readings, and it passed.

Mr. Palfrey moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and he called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Defrees, Evans, Kenner, Key, Moore, Palfrey, Rivers, Scott, Taylor and Trudeau—ten yeas.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, De Russy, King, Lacey, Macmurdo, McCay, Munday, Martel, Palfrey and Wickliffe—eleven nays.

The Committee on Public Schools reported favorable, with amendments, on said bill.

On motion of Mr. Rivers the bill was taken up, the rules were suspended, it underwent its several readings, and it passed.

On motion the Assistant Secretary requested the concurrence of the House to the same.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Rivers, from the special committee to whom was referred a preamble in relation to the imprisonment of slaves in the Penitentiary, &c., reported the following bill, entitled

An act to abolish imprisonment of slaves in the Penitentiary.

On motion the rules were dispensed with, it was read, and it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. King, from the Committee on Internal Improvements, &c., to whom was referred an act to abolish the Board of Public Works provided by the Constitution, reported favorably.

On motion of Mr. Kenner it was made the special order of the day for March 1st, 1854.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House informed the Senate that the House had concurred in, with amendments, to the following entitled bill:

An act to provide for the payment of coupons of interest, detached from the bonds issued by the State, and which coupons may be past due.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following resolution:

Resolution requiring the State Engineer to repair immediately to Bayou Plaquemines, and remove the obstructions to the navigation of said bayou.

And that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill of the Senate:

An act for the relief Pierre Caze, Bertrand Caze, and Jacques Caire.

And to request the signature of the President of the Senate to the following enrolled bills of the House:

An act to make effective the provisions of an act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands donated to the State of Louisiana by act of Congress entitled an act to aid the State of Louisiana in draining the swamp lands therein, approved March 2, 1849.

An act authorizing the courts, in certain cases, to receive judicial sureties residing out of the parish.

MESSAGES TO THE HOUSE.

The Committee of Enrollments reports as being correctly enrolled, the following bills:

An act to change the time of holding the terms of courts in the Sixth Judicial District, and making jury terms.

The Assistant Secretary requested the signature of the Speaker of the House thereto.

And that the President has signed the following bills:

An act to authorize Pierre Whip, of the parish of Iberville, to change his name from Pierre Whip to that of John Reames.

An act for the relief of James Upshaw, Sheriff of the parish of Bienville.

An act to authorize James M. Meredith and Josephine Larsh, his wife, of the parish of Caldwell, to adopt Eliza Jane Rice, an orphan, and to change her name to Eliza Jane Meredith.

An act to increase the compensation of jurors in the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act to repeal so much of the third section of an act entitled an act to regulate the terms of the District Court, (the parish of Orleans excepted,) approved April 29th, 1853, as relates to the courts of the Eighth Judicial District, and regulate the holding thereof.

And the Assistant Secretary requested the signature of the Speaker to An act for the relief of H. M. Neal.

The Committee on Enrollments reports as being incorrectly enrolled the following bills:

An act for the relief of Samuel Patterson, Sheriff of the parish of Livingston.

Resolution requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure a weekly mail between Stony Point, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and Springfield, in the parish of Livingston.

FRIDAY, Feb. 10, 1854.

THE RIVER AMITE.

Mr. Griffin—I am instructed, by the Committee on Internal Improvements, to report favorably on a bill to provide for the navigation of the bayou Manchac and the river Amite.

SECURITIES OF WILLIAM K. STILES.

The President, pro tem., laid before the Senate the following communication:

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 8, 1854.

To the Honorable President and Members of the Senate of Louisiana:

Gentlemen—

The act of the last Legislature for the relief of the securities of William K. Stiles, being a private act, had escaped my attention until it was directed to the act by the Resolution of your honorable body making inquiry upon the subject. Upon its reception, I immediately took the necessary steps to carry into effect the provisions of the act, and this morning suit was instituted by me, in the Third District Court of New Orleans, to enforce the claim of the State against the several sureties. As soon as the proper notices have been served upon all the parties, the case will be fixed for trial. This may require some delay, as the parties are numerous, and some of the original parties being dead, it will become necessary to ascertain their legal representatives.

I have the honor to remain

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) B. S. TAPPAN,
District Attorney.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. King, from the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands, and Levees, made the following reports:

The Committee on Internal Improvements and Swamp Lands and Levees, to whom was referred "An act to improve the navigation of the Atchafalaya." The Committee accept the following as a substitute for section one:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the navigation of the Atchafalaya and Courtableu rivers shall be improved from the junction of the former with the old bed of the Mississippi river to mouth of and up the latter to the head of the "Petit Diable," and a levee shall be made on southern bank of the latter, so as to prevent the escape of the current, which draws the drift from the Atchafalaya therein, and a passage shall be cleared of snags sixty feet wide through the whole extent."

Also the following amendment: After the word "required," the last word in section two; add "not exceeding the sum of four thousand dollars at one time."

The Committee being equally divided upon the merits of the bill, beg leave, through their chairman, to report unfavorably.

WM. W. KING,
Chairman of Committee.

The Committee on Internal Improvements and Swamp Lands and Levees, to whom was referred "An act to secure the right of pre-emption to actual settlers and first proprietors on all swamp and overflowed lands, situated in the rear and donated by the General Government to the State," beg leave, through their chairman, respectfully to report that the Committee accept the following amendments:

1. In section one, line five, strike out the word "eigbty," and insert the words "forty-two."

2. In section one, line nine, strike out the words "two sections," and insert the words "one section and a half."

3. In section one, line thirty-nine, insert after the word "time," "at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per acre."

4. After the word "void," the last word in the last line of section one, insert "provided that any front proprietor, who shall fail to enter the land within the time prescribed, shall be prohibited from entering said land, or any portion thereof otherwise, before or within six months thereafter."

Your Committee beg leave to report unfavorably upon the bill.

(Signed) WM. W. KING,
Chairman.

Mr. Richardson—(after having called up the bill for the relief of Ivy F. Thompson,) I will state, for the information of the Senate, that Mr. Thompson rendered services as District Attorney pro tem., under apquietment of the Court. When he served in Livingston parish, there was no District Attorney; when in St. Helena, he served in place of the District Attorney, who was ill at the time, and could not attend to the duties of the office. The object of this bill is simply to pay him for his services. There can certainly be no objection to it.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Taylor—The usual course pursued in cases of this kind, is to refer such bills to the Committee on Claims. I make a motion to that effect.

Mr. Richardson—I shall object to referring the bill, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion. The bill has already been examined by a committee of the other House, reported on favorably, and passed. There can be no necessity for the delay which would be occasioned by the reference.

Mr. Taylor—It makes no difference that the bill has been examined in the other House. It is the usual course to refer bills of this kind in the Senate. The action of the House is not by any means binding on us. Bills which have passed the lower House are frequently rejected here.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Secretary of the Senate requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills, entitled

An act for the relief of Jonas Reames. And

An act to provide for the filling of vacancies in the office of District Judges.

Mr. Griffin, from the Committee on Internal Improvements, to whom was referred

An act to provide for the navigation of the Bayou Manchac and the River Amite—reported favorably

The Assistant Secretary reported to the House that the President, pro tem., of the Senate has signed

An act to make effective the provisions of an act entitled an act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands donated to the State of Louisiana by an act of Congress, entitled an act to aid the State of Louisiana in draining the swamp lands therein—approved March 2, 1849.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The Special Messenger informed the Senate that the House persists in its amendment to the bill of the Senate entitled

An act to amend and re-enact article 1116 of the Civil Code,

And asks for a Committee of Conference.

And that the House has concurred in the following entitled bills and resolutions of the Senate—

An act to authorize Mrs. J. A. Withers, wife of Jos. M. Kennedy, to emancipate her female slave Clarisse, with permission to remain in the State.

An act to repeal an act, entitled an act to incorporate the New Iberia Lodge, No. 36, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the State of Louisiana.

Resolution in relation to granting public lands within the State of Louisiana for railroad purposes.

Resolution in relation to the establishment of a daily mail between the cities of New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Bayou Sara, and all intermediate post offices on the Mississippi river.

And to request the concurrence of the Senate to the following entitled bills of the House.

An act to authorize W. C. Wilson to emancipate his slave David.

An act for the relief of the veterans of 1814 and 1815.

An act to authorize John Cousins, of the parish of St. Tammany, to emancipate the slave Frances and her three children.

An act providing for the subscription by the city of New Orleans to the stock of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, and the stock of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad.

And he requested the signature of the President of the Senate to the following enrolled bills of the House.

An act to provide for the execution of sentences to death in the parish of Orleans.

An act for the relief of Samuel Patterson, sheriff of the parish of Livingston.

An act for the relief of H. McNeal.

Resolution instructing our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their utmost exertions to procure the passage by Congress of several bills now pending, having for their object a grant of land by the General Government to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad.

And to report as incorrectly enrolled the following entitled bill of the Senate—

An act to change the time of holding the term of courts in the Sixth Judicial District, and making jury terms.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Mr. King asked and obtained leave to introduce without previous notice the following bills, entitled

An act to amend an act entitled an act concerning the emancipation of slaves in the State—approved March 18, 1852. And

An act to aid in the colonization in Africa of the free people of color.

On motion of Mr. King the rules were dispensed with, and these bills were severally read twice by their title, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Evans introduced a memorial from citizens of New Orleans in relation to a bill now pending entitled

An act to create weighers of sugar and cotton in the city of New Orleans—which was read.

On motion of Mr. Evans it was referred to the Committee on Commerce and Agriculture.

Mr. Richardson called up the House bill entitled

An act to authorize John Cousins, of the parish of St. Tammany to emancipate his slave Frances and her three children.

On motion of Mr. Richardson the rules were dispensed with, and it was concurred in.

Also, an act to create an additional justice of the peace and constable in and for the parish of Washington.

On motion of Mr. Richardson the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and on motion of Mr. Richardson, the word "sheriff," in the second line of the second section, was stricken out, and words "President of the Police Jury" was inserted in lieu thereof.

On motion the bill was then read the third time and it passed as amended.

Mr. Taylor, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills, entitled

An act to enable married women to contract and bind their paraphernal or dotal property.

An act to repeal articles 1480 and 1491 of the Civil Code, and abolish the legitime.

On motion of Mr. Taylor these bills were severally read by their titles, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

MONDAY, February 13, 1854.

BAYOU MANCHAC AND THE RIVER AMITE.

Mr. Lacey—If there is no objection, I should like to have a suspension of the rules with a view of passing an important bill. It is the bill for the improvement of the navigation of the Bayou Manchac and the River Amite. It has been reported on favorably by the Committee, and I believe a majority of the Senate is in favor of it.

The rules were suspended and the following bill taken up:

AN ACT

To provide for the navigation of the Bayou Manchac and the river Amite.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That Thomas Green Davidson, J. West McMain, Dr. F. M. Hereford, —— Cotton and George S. Lacey, be, and they are hereby appointed Commissioners for the purpose of providing for the navigation of the bayou Manchac, from the mouth of the same to Hereford's landing, and the river Amite, from the mouth of bayou Manchac to Mrs. Johnson's ferrry, and as much further as the waters of the said river will permit.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That in order to enable said Commissioners to take such steps as may by them be deemed necessary for the purpose of improving and securing the navigation of the bayou Manchac, and the river Amite, as set forth in the first section of this act, the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated out of the Internal Improvement Fund, which said sum shall be paid by the Treasurer to the said Commissioners, or to their order, upon the warrant of the Auditor of Public Accounts.

Digitized by Google

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c. That the said Commissioners, previous to obtaining the warrant allowed by the second section of this act, shall file with the Auditor of Public Accounts, to be approved of by him, bond and security, conditioned that the moneys received by the Commissioners shall be well and faithfully applied by them to the improvemect of the river Amite, and the bayou Manchac, as contemplated by this act, and to no other purpose whatever.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall go into effect from and after its passage.

Mr. Hodge—I would like the Senator to explain the object of the bill.

Mr. Lacey—I made a full explanation of this bill when it first came before the Senate for consideration, but I believe the Senator was not present at that time. I will, therefore, endeavor to explain it again. The bill is, as I have said, a very important one, contemplating the improvement of at least 100 miles of navigation. The State Engineer, in his report, states that great injustice has been done to the Florida parishes. These are his words:

"I frankly confess that during the last season the Florida parishes have been entirely neglected, and have received no benefit from the State force. Justice to them, seems to me to require, that during this year they should receive something more than their share of the public work."

When I state that the work provided for in the bill will render navigable about 15 miles of Manchac, and 80 miles of the Amite river, I am sure he will interpose no objection, particularly when he reflects on the injustice which has been done to that portion of the State. That section has had nothing from the State. It has seen the State force employed in almost every other parish, and has suffered long and in silence, notwithstanding the pressing nature of its wants. A regular packet is much needed, to carry the produce of that section to market. It would be of incalculable benefit to the planters, and would tend to stimulate and develop the productive industry of the State.

It would be better to pass this bill and make the appropriation required, than for the State to undertake to do the work herself. I am certain it would be much cheaper in the end, besides being better done. I will state in this connection, that some years ago the State attempted to do something in that quarter. During the progress of the work many trees were felled, which, together with much rubbish, were thrown into the stream and thus obstructed the channel, which has never since been cleared out. The State herself has thus committed an injustice which she should repair, if she act on principles of common justice. The third section of the bill makes bond and security necessary to insure that the money received by the Commissioners shall, in the words of the bill, "be well and faithfully applied by them to the improvement of the river Amite and the bayou Manchac." There can, therefore, be no danger that the money will be misapplied. Now, sir, the amount asked for is a pitiful sum. It is small enough in comparison with the immense amounts which have been showered by the Legislature, with a lavish hand, on other parts of the State. I hope the Senate will pass the bill, and thus do justice to a section whose claims and wants have, so far, been entirely overlooked. The State force has hitherto been actively engaged in other quarters, particularly in north western Louisiana. This section has received no benefit, and it now asks that a small sum be appropriated to what must be acknowledged to be an important and beneficial purpose.

Mr. Hodge—I am not prepared to vote for that bill, notwithstanding all which has been said in its favor by the gentleman from East Baton Rouge. In the first place, I consider the method in which it is proposed to do the work to be wrong. It ought to be done by the State hands, under the direction of the State Engineer. I do not deny the assertion of the gentleman, that the section of the State comprised within the Florida parishes has been treated unjustly during the last year. I am willing to take the authority of the Engineer on that point. But I am under the impression that it had previously received as much of the benefit of the State aid, as any other part of the State. I cannot deny, either, that the State hands have been employed in north-western Louisiana. They probably have been; but if so, the result of their labor has not been very extraordinary, as that section has yet received but little benefit. On the other hand, I do not recollect that the State Engineer says that the work done in the Florida parishes has produced injurious consequences. The gentleman admits that the work has been done there. The Engineer, in his report, expresses his willingness and his intention to complete it. I think he is the proper person to attend to it, and that we ought not to interfere in the matter. Under these circumstances, I believe that the work ought to be done by the State hands, and I am opposed to making a special appropriation for it. I shall certainly record my vote against the bill.

Mr. DeRussy—I would suggest to the gentleman who introduced this bill, that he had better consent to its postponement to another day. The Committee made an unfavorable report on it, on the ground that the amount in the Internal Improvement Fund was too small to admit of the subtraction of so large a sum; that there were many applications of this kind before the Committee, and they could not all be acted on. For my part, I think the improvement contemplated in the bill will prove very beneficial to a large section of the State, and therefore ought to be effected. But there are others perhaps equally as important, which ought to be made also. The Chairman of the Committeee is not in his seat. I think it would be better to wait for his return before acting on the bill.

Mr. Richardson—Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Committee had made an unfavorable report on this bill?

Mr. De Russy—Yes, sir.

Mr. Richardson—I am compelled to inform the gentleman that he is laboring under a very serious error. The Committee made a favorable report on the bill.

Mr De Russy—I was under the impression that there was a tie in the Committee, and that the Chairman gave the casting vote against the bill.

Mr. Richardson—The gentleman is again mistaken. The Committee, as I have said before, reported favorably on the bill The bill on which an unfavorable report was made, was the one introduced by the Senator from St. Landry. (Mr. Martel.)

Mr. Hodge—I would ask why the Committee reported unfavorably on that bill, and favorably on the other.

Mr. Richardson—The gentleman will have to apply to the members of the Committee for information on that point.

Mr. Moore—I move to lay the bill on the table subject to call. I have no doubt that a majority of the whole Senate is in favor of it, and that it will ultimately pass. Nevertheless, I would not like to see it pressed at this moment.

Mr. Lacey—I hope the gentleman will not insist on his motion. There is a clear majority in favor of the bill now present, and I should prefer to have the vote taken on it. The amount asked for is not large. It could easily be spared for a purpose whose importance has been demonstrated by the favorable report of the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Moore—The reason I make the motion is, that there is a bill of the same kind, for the improvement of the Atchafalaya, before the Committee. Some members of the Committee voted differently on the two bills, which I confess I am not able to account for, as they are of the same nature. Both ought to follow the same rule and share the same fate. There is no reason why the Atchafalaya should be drowned in the struggle. It was introduced many long days before the bill which is now brought up for the consideration of the Senate, and certainly should not be overlooked. If either deserves precedence, that one is entitled to it. But surely this one should not be passed and the other left to die an inglorious death. They both stand on the same ground; they are both of the same nature; they ought both to be acted on together, and both be disposed off in the same way. I am favorable to this bill because I am favorable to the other. I shall support both, and I hope both will pass.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Lacey—I must again be permitted to press the hope that the gentleman will not press his motion, as I think it will be disastrous to the prospects of this bill. I am a friend of the Atchafalaya bill, in which the gentleman takes so much interest, and shall cast my vote in its favor when it comes before us. I shall spare no effort to secure its success in the Senate. This I proclaim now. But that does not prevent me from advocating an immediate vote on the bill now under consideration. It ought to be passed now. There is no good reason for postponing it. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will do the same by my bill as I intend to do by his.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, the reading of this bill was commenced, and the first section was adopted.

On the adoption of the second section, Mr. Hodge called for the yeas and nays.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe, President pro tem, in the Chair; Messrs. Boatner, De Russy, Deffrees, Evans, Hebert, Lacey, McCay, Munday, Martel, Moore, Pellerin, Ryan and Rivers—13 yeas.

Mr. Lauve was excused from voting.

Messrs. Dupré and Hodge—2 nays.

Mr. Moore—I think the gentleman had better consent to the postponement of the bill. It is sure to pass ultimately.

Mr. Lacey—I must object to postponing it. Now is as good a time to pass it as any. The bill is before the Senate. Gentlemen may defeat it or pass it at their option. It is within their power to do either. But if they defeat it, let them beware of their Atchafalaya bill.

> The first are strong, the last are fleet,
> The second and third are exceedingly sweet,
> And all are uncommonly hard to beat!"

Mr. Moore—The Senator seems to take offence because I moved to postpone the bill, for the present, though I have avowed my friendly disposition towards it. I repeat that I am in favor of the bill. I supported it in committee, and I shall support it when it comes before the Senate. But I do not want it pressed now, as there is another bill in which I feel a deep interest, which ought to be acted on at the same time.

Mr. McCay—I move to make the bill the special order of the day for to-morrow."

The motion was lost.

No quorum being present, the Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to bring absent members.

On motion of Mr. McCay, the Secretary proceeded with a call of the House.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe, President pro tem., in the chair; Messrs. Boatner, De Russy, Deffrees, Dupré, Evans, Hodge, Hebert, Lauve, Lacey, McCay, Munday, Martel, Moore, Pellerin, Ryan and Richardson.—17 Senators answered to their names.

On motion of Mr. Moore to postpone the further consideration of the bill, Mr. Lacey called for the yeas and nays.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe in the chair; Messrs. Dupré, Hodge, Lauve, McCay, Moore and Wickliffe—6 nays.

Messrs. Boatner, De Russy, Deffrees, Evans, Hebert, Lacey, Munday, Martel, Pellerin, Ryan and Richardson—11 nays.

Consequently, the Senate refused to postpone the bill.

On motion of Mr. Lacey to adopt the second section, Mr. Hodge called for the yeas and nays.

Pending the call,

On motion of Mr. Lacey, the further consideration of the bill was postponed, and it was made the special order of the day for to-morrow.

THE ISLAND OF CUBA.

On motion of Mr. McCay, that portion of the Governor's message referring to the Island of Cuba, was referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House requested the signature of the President of the Senate to the following enrolled bills and resolutions of the House:

An act for the relief of F. L. Glover.

An act changing the time of holding the terms of the District Courts of the 9th and 11th Judicial District Courts of this State.

A resolution instructing our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure a weekly mail between Stony Point, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and Springfield, in the parish of Livingston.

And he informed the Senate that the House has concurred in the following entitled bills:

An act to emancipate George E. Gilmer.

An act to emancipate John W. Hewitt.

An act authorizing Robert M. Lea and Letitia M. Lea to adopt Eleanor Lombard.

An act to emancipate Andrew Lawson, jr., of the parish of Bossier.

An act to emancipate Eliza Morin.

An act for the relief of Matthew Watson, sheriff of the parish of Caddo.

An act for the relief of L. F. Steele, tax collector for the parish of Bossier.

An act to emancipate Abner Nash Ogden, Jr., of the parish of Jefferson.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following bills and resolution of the House.:

An act for the relief of Jesse Sykes, L. W. Baker, A. G. Milbank and Samuel Williams.

An act to emancipate Don Louis Maurin.

An act for the relief of Thomas Kilgore.

An act to emancipate Sally, child and of slave Willis Carney, f. m. c., of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act for the relief of Antoine Marrero, late State tax collector for the parish of St. Bernard.

An act for the relief of E. A. Sibley, sheriff of the parish of Sabine.

An act to repeal so much of the tenth section of an act entitled an act relative to the trial of slaves, approved June 1, 1846, as requires slaves convicted of capital offences to be executed within the prison walls.

An act to authorise Edward D. Woods, to accept the tutorship of Lewis E. Woods, a minor.

An act for the relief of the sheriff of the parish of Lafourche.

An act for the relief of J. H. Dillard, tax collector for the parish of De Soto.

An act to emancipate James Y. and Emily L. Williams, of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act for the relief of Edgar E Voorhies, late superintendent of public schools in the parish of St. Martin.

An act abolishing the probate terms of courts in the tenth judicial district of this State, and fixing the time of holding the jury terms thereof.

Resolution instructing the Swamp Land Commissioners to cause a survey to be made of that portion of country lying in the parish of Madison, known as Diamond Island Bend.

THE BOARD OF SWAMP LAND COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. Moore, from the joint special committee, made the following report, which was read, and two hundred copies ordered to be printed immediately.

The joint special committee, appointed under a resolution to examine the accounts of contingent and other expenses of the Board of Swamp Land Commissioners and their Engineers, and the contracts made by and under their authority, report that they have performed the duty assigned them, and from the accounts presented, find that the expenses incurred and contracts made are as follows:

General Expenses of the Board.

Salary of Secretary of the Board	375 00
Stationery, $133 80; Printing, $100	233 80
Notarial fees	12 00		620 80
Salaries.
1st Dist—Commissioner, 9m	1,125 00
Engineer	540 00
Ass't Engineer	567 74	2,192 74
2d Dist—Commissioner	1,125 00
Engineer	838 44
Ass't Engineer	300 00
Engineer to fill vacancy	692 46	2,955 90
3d Dist—Commissioner	1,125 00
Engineer	1,832 20	2,957 20	5,105 84
Contingent and other Expenses.
1st Dist—Traveling and other expenses of

Digitized by Google

	the Commissioners and Engineers, supported by vouchers	1,051 51
	Without vouchers.....	168 05—	1,219 56
2d Dist—	Traveling expenses of commissioner.....	95 25
	Engineer Kirkland, deceased ..	40 65
	Assistance and traveling.....	115 00
	Do. of present Engineer.....	179 85
	Advertising $46, for stakes $29 50	75 50
	For maps from Engineer's office	62 00—	568 25
3d Dist—	Traveling expenses of commissioner..... ...	133 40
	Traveling and other expenses of Engineer, with vouchers...	238 60
	Without vouchers.....	136 90
	Paid staff-bearer $45 per month .	180 00
	Advertising.....	17 50—	706 40—	2,494 21
	Contracts.
1st Dist—	Levee at Drausin Labranche's...	3,137 00
	Levee at M. Bouligny.....	2,212 00
	Levee at Mathers	968 00
	Levee at Messrs. Duncan & Co.'s	900 00
	do do	400 00—	7,617 00
2 Dist—	Levee at Lake Bayou. 8529 cubic yards, at 20c..	1,705 80
	Levee at Middle Bayou. 4000 cubic yards, at 19¾c.....	790 00
	Levee at Picket's Bayou, 3800 cubic feet, at 20c.	760 00
	Levee at West Bayou. 3500 cubic ft. at 20½c.—	875 00—	4,130 80
3d Dist—	Contracts with J. C. Young, at 15c. cubic yard	13,468 00
	Contract with J. Reynolds, 15c. cubic yard....	399 00
	Contract with J. Cheny, at 15c. cubic yard.....	4,559 00
	Contract with D. A. Smith, 15c. cubic yard.....	1,593 00
	Contract with L. Wilson, at 15c. cubic yard....	10,705 00
	Contract with S. L Compton, 10c. cubic yard....	4,529 00—	35,263 00—	47,010 80
TOTAL.....				$58,231 65

This Amount is chargeable to three Districts, as follows:

FIRST DISTRICT.
Salaries of commissioners and engineers	2,192 74
Traveling and other expenses.....	1,219 56
Contracts for making and repairing levees.....	7,617 00
One-third of the general expenses of the Board.....	206 93—	11,236 23
SECOND DISTRICT.
Salaries of commissioners and engineers	2,965 90
Traveling and other expenses.....	568 25
Contracts for making levees.....	4,130 80
One-third of the general expenses of the Board.....	206 94—	7,861 89
THIRD DISTRICT.
Salaries of commissioners and engineers	2,957 20
Traveling and other expenses.....	706 40
Contracts for making levees.....	35,263 00
One-third of the general expenses of the Board.....	206 93—	39,133 53
TOTAL.....		$58,231 65

This statement does not include the work on the grand levee at Point Coupee, in the 2d District, the accounts for which were not yet prepared, and the work not yet finished. Mr. Stephen Van Winkle, the Commissioner of that District, who has the superintendence of the work, promises to have them ready in a short time. He states that the amount disbursed for that work amounts to $19,873 95, and that considerable further disbursements will be required to finish the work.

PUBLIC EDUCATION.

Mr. Evans—According to previous notice I introduce a bill to provide for the improvement of our system of public education. I am induced to do so because I have received many communications on on the subject of endowing Colleges. I have no hope of obtaining a special appropriation for the endowment of Colleges, and I have therefore drawn up this bill in the form of a general law. I should like to have it read in order that Senators may know what kind of an act I desire, I wish, then, to have it referred to the Committee on Public Education.

The bill was read and referred to the Committee on Public Education.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1854.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Lacey, from the Judiciary Committee, reported favorably on

An act to prevent trespasses.

An act to authorize John Cousin, of the parish of St. Tammany, to emancipate the slave Frances and her three children.

An act to aid in the colonization in Africa of free people of color.

An act to authorize the purchase of one hundred and seventy-five copies of Eyma's work, entitled "The Laws of Louisiana on Insolvency."

And he reported unfavorably on

An act to repeal articles 1480 and 1481 of the Civil Code, and abolish the legitimo.

And favorably, with amendments, on

An act to enable married women to contract debts and lend their paraphernal or dotal property.

Mr. Hebert, from the Committee on Enrollments, reported as correctly enrolled, the following bills, entitled—

An act to repeal an act entitled, "An act to incorporate the New Iberia Lodge, No. 36, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the State of Louisiana."

An act to authorize Mrs. J. A. Withers, wife of James M. Kennedy, to emancipate her female slave Clarisse, with permission to remain in the State.

An act to change the time of holding the terms of Court in the 6th Judicial District, and making jury terms.

An act to provide for the payment of coupons of interest, detached from the bonds issued by the State, and which coupons may be past due.

Joint resolution requesting Swamp Land Commissioners and their Engineers to furnish account of the contingent and other expenses, &c.

And the Assistant Secretary requested the signature of the Speaker thereto.

He also informed the Senate that the following House bills were correctly enrolled—

An act for the relief of Samuel Patterson, sheriff of the parish of Livingston.

An act for the relief of F. L. Glover.

An act changing the time of holding the terms of the District Courts of the 9th and 11th Judicial District Courts of this State.

Resolution instructing our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure a weekly mail between Stony Point, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and Springfield, in the parish of Livingston.

Resolutions instructing our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their utmost exertions to procure the passage by Congress of several bills now pending, having for their object a grant of Lands by the General Government to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas railroad.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Ryan, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills—

Digitized by Google

An act relative to the appointment of administrators under certain circumstances.

An act relative to taking testimony in certain criminal cases.

On motion of Mr. Ryan the rules were dispensed with, they were read separately twice, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Munday, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills—

An act to emancipate George H. Packwood.

An act relative to the disposition of all forfeited bonds, recognizances and fines imposed in criminal cases.

On motion, they were separately read twice, and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Also, an act for the relief of Martin Kohler.

Which underwent the same ordeal, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Hodge, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills, entitled—

An act to extend the privilege of the vendors of moveable effects.

And an act to provide for the maintenance, &c., of all persons ordered by the authorities of one parish to another for safe keeping.

On motion of Mr. Hodge, the rules were dispensed with, they were separately read twice, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. McCay asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to manumit and emancipate Cecelia and her children, Celeste, Victoria, Emile and Cecelia, slaves of C. Rosalie Morris, of the parish of Orleans.

Mr. Evans asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to emancipate Moses C. Cavett and James R. Cavett.

On motion, the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Lacey called up

An act to aid the colonization in Africa of the free people of color.

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, and the bill was read the second time section by section.

On motion, the first section was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Richardson to adjourn for the want of a quorum, Mr. Hodge called for the yeas and nays.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe in the chair.

Messrs. Deffrees, Hodge, Moore and Richardson—4 yeas.

Messrs. Boatner, Evans, Hebert, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Martel, Pellerin and Ryan—10 nays.

Consequently the Senate refused to adjourn.

The Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to bring in the absent Senators.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 15th, 1854.

BAYOU MANCHAC AND THE RIVER AMITE.

Mr. Lacey asked leave to call up the bill, entitled

An act to provide for the navigation of the bayou Manchac and the river Amite.

Mr. Hodge—I am opposed to this bill, as the gentleman well knows, and I am therefore averse to taking it up out of its regular order. I should not like to make an opposition to it which might seem factious, but being opposed to it, I of course desire to procure its defeat. I cannot, under these circumstances, vote to grant a dispensation of the rules.

The rules were suspended.

Mr. Hodge—As the rules have been suspended and the bill is now before the Senate, I desire to make a few remarks explanatory of my reasons for opposing it. In the first place, I consider it objectionable because it permits the Commissioners, on their own warrants, to draw from the Treasury, the appropriation of $3,500. In the next place, the bill does not make any provision for the manner in which the work is to be done, but leaves everything to the discretion of the Commissioners. The only restriction in any way placed on them is that they are compelled to give security that they will expend the money for the purpose contemplated in the bill. The Commissioners may draw the whole of the money at once, while no particular time is fixed for the performance, or completion of the work. No time at all is specified, while they can obtain the money on their own warrants whenever they choose to apply for it. I have no desire to impugn the character or motives of the Commissioners; on the contrary, they may be, and doubtless are, highly honorable gentlemen. But, as far as the law is concerned, they may draw the money and retain it as long as they please. In these respects, the bill is objectionable. There is still another objection to it. It creates an office unknown to the law, and foreign to the system of Internal Improvement which the State has adopted. We already have an officer whose special duty is to attend to matters of this kind, and who is in all respects unexceptionable. Are we not giving our State Engineer $3500 a year to perform the very duty which the bill proposes to transfer to Commissioners? Have we not several steamboats, and over a hundred negroes, all of which are supported at a very great cost? Is the State Engineer not capable of doing this work? Has he not already expressed his willingness and his desire to do it? With what propriety, then, can the gentleman ask that $3500 be taken out of the Internal Improvement Fund, and placed in the hands of irresponsible parties? When we have an officer whose capacity is not questioned, and to whom we pay a large salary to superintend our internal improvements, why should we make an exception in this case? The State has already purchased negroes and steamboats; let them be devoted to this purpose, under the superintendence of the proper officer. The only ground, apparently, on which this appropriation is asked, is that the State Engineer has reported that, during the last year, so much work has not been done in that district as in some others; and that it has therefore been treated with injustice. But that officer distinctly informs that he will do the work this summer. Can the Commissioners do it in the same space of time? I think they will consume that much time in having surveys made, and determining what they intend to do. Now, sir, I should like to call the attention of the Senate, for a moment, to the effects of this kind of legislation. If I could not pass a bill on its own merits, if its intrinsic qualities did not recommend it to the favor of the Senate—I should not attempt to force it through by threatening Senators with the defeat of some other measure. When this bill was before the Senate, the other day, the gentleman from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) said, in a threatening manner to a respected Senator on my left, that he would not support a bill in which that gentleman took a peculiar interest unless he (Mr. Moore) would support the bill then before the Senate.

This, sir, is what I call log-rolling. It is making one bill gain votes for another, and that is a system of legislation which precludes just consideration and impartial action. I, for one, am opposed to it, and will never sanction it. On the contrary, I shall denounce it whenever I have an opportunity. I ask gentlemen if this way of proceeding is fair? Did it not show some weakness in this bill—some inherent defect—when the gentleman threatened to defeat the Atchafalaya bill, unless this one were passed? The Senator on my left (Mr. Moore) wishes to procure an appropriation of $15,000 for the improvement of the Atchafalaya. I, with as much propriety, might ask $100,000 for Red River. The relative importance of that stream would justify and more than justify such a demand. I ask gentlemen to reflect on the consequences of this kind of legislation. This bargaining of votes cannot but be productive of the most injurious results. It is wrong, and should not be tolerated. Every bill ought to stand or fall on its own merits. In that way only can just and impartial legislation be secured. To return to the bill before us. I have conversed with the State Engineer on this very subject. He informs me that, during the coming summer, he will do this work, and will effect as much in four weeks as the Commissioners can do with the whole of $3500 which the bill proposes to appropriate. It is true, as the Senator (Mr. Lacey) has said, that the amount asked for is a small sum; but it is of small sums that large ones are composed. If we pass this bill, where are we to stop? What will be the effect? Who can tell how many of the same kind we will have to pass, or else lay ourselves liable to the charge of partiality and of patriotism? We are told that this work is necessary, and therefore we should pass the bill. So will every other section of the State come to us with applications for appropriations which, we will be told, are equally necessary. I say, sir, such a system if once initiated, must be productive of disastrous results. I am opposed to it, and will always continue firm in my opposition. If the importance of the work, and its necessity, be the sole considerations, I might with as much propriety, as I have previously remarked, demand a hundred thousand dollars for Red River, a stream which is of much more importance to the interests of the State. So might every other section, with equal justice, demand an appropriation for some local object. And with what justice could we refuse them, if we establish the precedent by passing this bill? We could not refuse. We should be compelled to pass every bill of the kind that may come before us, and, as a consequence, we should behold the annihilation of our system of Internal Improvements, and the squandering of our Internal Improvement fund. We might then just as well sell our boats and negroes, and discharge our State Engineer. We could certainly have no farther use for them, after expending all our money on objects of this kind. These, sir, will be the inevitable consequences if we once launch out on such a troublous sea as that on which we are about to embark. I ask the serious attention of the Senate to these considerations. I am animated by no spirit of sectional jealousy. On the contrary, I desire that all parts of the State be improved. But I wish to see it done in the proper manner—not wildly and recklessly, but under the system which we have adopted as the most practicable and efficient.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Lacey—I had hoped, Mr. President, that a bill like this, so just on its face, so important to the interests and prosperity of a large portion of the State, would certainly secure the favorable consideration of every Senator on this floor. In behalf of such a bill, log-rolling is not necessary. The gentleman much mistakes my intentions and my language, if he supposes that to carry it I would resort to such means. I hope he is mistaken when he supposes that such means are necessary to carry it through the Senate. Nor do I think, Mr. President, that anything has fallen from me which could justify such an accusation. The gentleman has certainly misinterpreted my remarks. I said that if Senators who were anxious for the passage of other bills, similar in principle to this one, and having the same claims on our favorable consideration, should throw impediments in the way, and procure the defeat of my bill, they could not reasonably expect my support for their peculiar measures—and why should I not say so? Why should I feel myself called on to support bills similar to this one, after the Senate should have rejected this one? If those gentlemen should refuse to extend to me the courtesy of permitting my bill to come fairly before the Senate for discussion and decision, why should I do anything else in regard to theirs? That was the only argument I used. I did not, nor do I seek to carry one bill by the interest of another. I do not seek to encumber one bill with another. I tell the Senator now—and I hope he will not misunderstand me—that whatever the result may be, whether this bill be destined to success or doomed to defeat, it will not affect my course towards the other. I had hoped that my bill would be considered on its merits; that it would be brought up fully and fairly before the Senate, and receive the attention to which its importance entitles it. And are its merits not patent on its face? Are they not manifest to any one who will take the trouble to examine it, and reflect on its objects. I ask if it is not evidently a good bill, when I show, as I have shown that it opens nearly a hundred miles of navigation, which are now closed against the products of a large portion of the State; when I show that by it a market will be opened for the industry of a large and enterprising population. Will gentlemen not be convinced of its propriety when they see, as they must see from the report of the Engineer himself, that the bill only asks justice for my section of the State, which has not, hitherto, been treated justly? I repeat, sir, that I do not seek to carry this bill by log-rolling. I repudiate any such influences. Confident that its own merits will secure for it success, I ask only the fair and impartial consideration of the Senate. I have shown its advantages; I have shown that its passage is required as an act of justice to a section of the State which has been treated with undeserved neglect. I ask for it the vote of Senators, on the ground that it is good in itself. I do not put it forward as a log-rolling measure. I repudiate any such idea with as much indignation as the gentleman from Caddo himself. Nor do I desire to threaten any Senator, and thus secure support for my bill. My course on any other bill will not be affected by the fate of this one. Far be it from me to let myself be influenced in my votes or acts as a Senator on this floor, by any such considerations. No, sir, I ask the votes of Senators for this bill because I think it is intrinsically good. I hope it will pass by such a majority as will enable us to send it to the other house with the stamp of our decided approval. I am confident that when it reaches our colleagues in the other house, it will pass by as large a majority as I hope it will receive here. It is a good bill, a just bill, an important bill. Considerations alike of justice and of policy demand its passage. Let us, then, give it our sanction without further delay.

Mr. Moore—The observations which have fallen from the gentleman from Caddo, (Mr. Hodge,) makes an explanation, on my part necessary, and I hope therefore, the Senate will grant me time to say a few words. I supported this bill before the Committee, because I was convinced that it provided the best means for accomplishing the object. I could not, conscientiously, oppose this bill, when I support another, based on precisely the same principle, and intended for another section of the State, which was presented by the gentleman from St. Landry, (Mr. Dupre.) I know that bill is necessary for the interests of a large portion of the State. It contemplates the improvement of a stream which is the only outlet to the Mississippi for the inhabitants of a large, fertile and productive section. It has been entirely neglected for the last ten years. Nothing has been done to improve it. In vain have the people of that section waited for the State Engineer to take some action in the matter. Nothing has been done, nor is there any indication that anything will be done. That stream, as I have said, is the only outlet for a large and important portion of the State. It is the channel through which the produce of St. Landry, Avoyelles, Calcasieu, St. Martin and other rich and flourishing parishes, finds its way to market. Those parishes produce, yearly, over 100,000 hogsheads of sugar, and 40,000 bales of cotton. During seasons of low water this immense amount of produce is kept back, and much inconvenience, and sometimes destress is the consequence. At present this is the condition of affairs. The water is very low, and therefore nothing could, at this moment, be made effectual. But the State Engineer, even if he should try, could not accomplish anything with the force at his command. It is therefore necessary to make the appropriation contemplated in the bill introduced by the Senate from St. Landry, (Mr. Dupre.) I therefore feel it incumbent on me to support the bill now before the Senate, because it is the same, in principle, as the other. I will state, also, that I am not to be intimitidated by threats. I never was influenced by them, and never shall be. I shall give my vote as becomes a Senator of Louisiana, in accordance with my honest convictions.

Mr. Hodge—If the Senate will allow me, I will read the passage from the report of the State Engineer, which has been adverted to in the course of this discussion.

"I frankly confess that, during the last season, the Florida parishes have been entirely neglected, and have received no benefit from the State force. Justice to them, seems to me to require that, during this year, they should receive something more than their share of the public work."

"Unless otherwise directed, I will make such examinations as will satisfy me at what places I can do the most good, in the least time, and then apply the labor at the proper moment.

In connection with this, I would state to the Senate that I have called on Mr. Morse, the State Engineer, in relation to this matter. He told me that, in a few weeks, he could send the boats there and commence the work, and that he would be enabled to do as much this season, as the Commissioners could effect with the whole $3500. It is true that the amount comes out of the Internal Improvement Fund, but this is not just to the Engineer Department, which is supported out of that fund.

Digitized by Google

The bill passed to a second reading.

Mr. Hodge—I would ask the Senator from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey,) whether he does not think that this is an office unknown to the Constitution, and if so, can we pass this bill, and vote the money of the State into the pocket of Thomas Green Gavidson, a member of the other House? I merely ask this question in order to get the gentleman's opinion on the subject.

On taking the final vote no quorum voted.

Mr. Ryan asked, and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of John K. Elgee, of Rapides, and of Marie F. Ledoux, his wife.

Mr. Ryan—The reason I ask the indulgence of the Senate, in order to have this bill taken up in this way, is because it is entirely local in its character. It affects only Mr. Elgee and his wife. The gentleman is known to many Senators on this floor, and is one of my own constituents. The bill will on examination be found to be strictly just in every particular. It only gives a right which the parties enjoyed before their marriage, that of making any conditions they choose, in regard to the community of acquets and gains, which subsists under our laws. It may be said that, in passing this bill we should be making an exception to the general law of the State, and deviating from our general policy. But it must be recollected that before 1808, parties had this right, they have it now under the laws of Spain, and in the colonies where her laws prevail. I do not see then any reason for refusing the request in this instance. The high character of the applicants, and their standing in the community, where they reside, preclude the possibility of any wrong motive. It is so entirely local in its character, and so limited in its application that no one could have the slightest cause to complain.

Mr. Hodge—I move that the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Dupre asked and obtained leave, without previous notice, to introduce an act to authorize Donato Martin, testamentary executor of the last will and testament of Donato Martin, deceased, to emancipate certain slaves.

Mr. Deffrees—I hope the gentleman will not persist in pressing this bill at the present moment. The Senate is not full. Many of our members are not in their seats, and I should prefer that they were here before a vote is taken on a bill of this kind. For my own part, I shall certainly vote against it if it be pressed to-day. If the gentleman insist on urging a vote now, I think I hazard nothing in saying that it must be defeated. It is, to say the least, introduced at an unpropitious time. The gentleman may think it propitious for its passage, since so many seats are vacant, but I differ with him in opinion on that point. He must, I think, concede that we would not be acting justly towards absent Senators if we were to take a vote on the bill now There is barely a quorum present, and under such circumstances, I do not think we ought to act on subjects of importance. A full Senate is necessary to obtain a correct expression of opinion. I must say that, as a general rule, I am opposed to legislation of this kind. There may be rare cases, presenting extraordinarily meritorious features, which might elicit my sanction, but I have yet to learn that this is one of that kind. I must repeat the hope that the gentleman will suffer this bill to lie over till a future day.

Mr. McCay—The Senator from Jefferson (Mr. Trudeau) now absent, has I believe, expressed a wish to have all bills of this kind made the special order for some particular day, as he wished to discuss the general principle involved in them. He did not desire to make a speech on each one separately. and therefore preferred to take all at a single shot, if I can use the term. It would only be manifesting a just courtesy towards that gentleman if we were to defer this bill till his return

Mr. Ryan—I should like to know why we should be called on to make an exception in this case. To use a trite, but very expressive phrase, "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." We have established a precedent, why should we not follow it? We have passed other bills of this same kind, why should we not pass this one? and why should the Senator prophesy the defeat of this bill, when this very Senate, only a few moments before, passed a bill of a similar kind? We have, in the course of this session, passed many bills of this nature—why should we make this one the limit. If the gentleman can show any good reason for his opposition to this bill, I may be induced to vote with him. I am open to conviction. I am to be influenced by reason. If it can be shown that this bill should be made my exception to our general course of legislation, I shall be ready to join the gentleman in his opposition. But we have passed other bills of this same character, and without further information I cannot consent to go against the precedent which has been established. I have no peculiar interest in this bill. I do not even know the people for whose benefit it is intended. But I do know the respectable Senators from the district in which they live, one of whom has introduced this bill. I know they would not do anything wrong or ask anything is right.

Mr. Moore—I will state, for the information of the Senate, that I know the people for whose benefit this bill is intended. They are considered, although of the colored race, to be among the most respectable inhabitants of country where they reside. They are known through all that region, and respected by all.

Mr. Deffrees—The Senator from Rapides (Mr. Ryan) has given as a reason for the passage of this bill that the Senate has to-day established a precedent by passing others of a similar character. I can inform that gentleman that no bill of this kind has passed the Senate with my assistance or sanction this day. I can tell him also that I never will lend the endorsement of my vote to such legislation. I care not for the respectability of the parties. It is sufficient for me to know that the children are colored children, to induce me to vote against the bill. They are the children of a white man—the fruit of an intercourse condemned, alike by morality and the law. They ought to have the mark of reprobation placed upon them by our laws. Until this is done in all instances of this kind we shall never be enabled to check the flood of immorality which threatens to sap the foundations of society and subvert our institutions. If we grant applications of this kind, immorality will increase instead of diminishing. The law should reprobate instead of encourage it. If a man will cohabit with his own property—if he will violate the laws of decency and morality he should take the consequences. He has no right to call on us relieve him from the dilema which his own evil conduct may place him. If he beget children in this way, let him take them as he finds them. If he can place them above the want of the world, let him do so. I would not desire to interfere with him. If he can send them to another country or another State, where the laws, the institutions and the social habits of the community will allow them to take a superior position to that which they occupy here—where they can enjoy greater privileges, and be relieved from the stigma which our institutions cast upon them—let him send them thither. We have too many free negroes here already. Reliable statistics disclose the fact that there are 28,000 in the State of Louisiana, and it is a well known fact that the number increases every year. They form class of population whose presence is injurious to the State, and whose number should be diminished rather than increased. This should be our settled policy. We are already called on to recognize it by adopting a measure the tendency of which will be to decrease the number of the free negro population. We have before us a bill, taxing every free negro in the State to the amount of one dollar, for the purpose of raising a fund to be devoted to the cause of African Colonization—in other words, of sending the free negroes out of the State. If any refuse to pay the tax, they are to be reduced to servitude for a limited time. This bill is strenuously advocated by many Senators, and its introduction shows the conviction which exists of the impropriety of suffering an increase in our free negro population. Yet we every day act against this principle by passing bills for the emancipation of slaves, thus increasing the number of that class whose presence among us is conceded to be eminently dangerous—a class which we are about to declare must be sent out of the State or again reduced to servitude. Yet, because I am opposed to such proceedings, because I express my opinions against them, I am called to an account for it. I am asked for my reasons, and am told that I have no right to prophesy the defeat of this bill, or even to vote against it. But I tell that gentleman that I shall insist on opposing these bills. I am firmly convinced that we ought not to encourage this kind of legislation. We ought, on the contrary, to place a stigma on those who thus violate the decencies of life and place themselves and their innocent offspring in this unfortunate position before the world. As long as we pass such bills, this kind of immorality will go on increasing, and we, by our legislation, will be stimulating, instead of endeavoring to abate the evil. If, in other States or countries, people of this class enjoyed the rights of citizens, let them go there and assume the position which it is impossible for them to occupy here. But let us not be asked to violate our principles by encouraging vice. If these people must be emancipated they should not be permitted to remain in the State. The true policy is, send them away, and that is a policy recognized by existing laws. There are cases in which exceptions might, with propriety, be made, such as where a slave has rendered eminent service to the State, &c. But these are cases of rare occurrence. I do not understand that this is one of them. In opposing this bill, and others of similar kind, I but act in accordance with my conscientious convictions, and my sense of duty as a Senator of Louisiana.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Martel—I hope that, after I shall have made a few observations explanatory of the merits of this case, the Senator from Ouachita (Mr. Deffrees) will not persist in his opposition. A few days ago a Senator, now absent, remarked, in the way of pleasantry, that he had thirty or forty of this kind of bills in his desk. I am aware that there have been too many bills of emancipation presented. But I can say, with sincerity, that there is no man who has been more constantly opposed to the emancipation of slaves than myself.

I have voted against the system on principle, and I agree with the gentlemen in all that he has said of its evil effects. But my conscience would reproach me if I were to refuse to vote for this bill. The old man, whose children these are was for many long years resident of the section of the State which I have the honor to represent. He was sincerely attached to this country, and proved his devotion by joining the defenders of our soil when they repelled the British invaders from New Orleans. Though a colored man, he was, as my friend from St. Martin has said, respected by all who knew him. This man, old Donato, when on his death bed, recommended these children to his white friends, hoping that they would protect them and secure the preservation of their rights. In his old age he took up with a slave of his own, a young mulatto girl, and being a colored man himself, the act was not so reprehensible. By her he had several children. It was natural that he should desire them to enjoy the benefits and privileges of freedom. He accordingly, in his will, desired that they should be emancipated, and left the subject in the charge of his friends, the whites. Besides these children, he had legitimate offspring. On them he imposed the condition, by testament, that they should permit these children to share his immense fortune. I must here state that old Donato was one of the richest men in Louisiana. He paid taxes on an immense amount of property, and was an honorable and upright man. I am opposed to the emancipation of slaves in general, considering it injurious to our institutions; but this is one of those instances which deserve to be made an exception. As I have said before, my conscience would reproach me if I should refuse to support the bill. Old Donato was nearly a hundred years old when he died, and during the whole of that long life he had enjoyed the confidence and respect of the entire community. The Senator from Ouachita, after my explanation, will pay but very little respect to my appeal, if he should not now consent to withdraw his opposition. I have made an explanation which I consider satisfactory, and if I do not mistake the gentleman it will prove so to him. I hope the Senate will pass this bill, and permit the children of old Donato to remain in their native State where they have spent their whole life, and where they are surrounded by all the associations which make life pleasing, or even endurable. I assure the gentleman that the entire population of my section of the State will not only be satisfied, but will be delighted to see the wishes of old Donato carried into effect.

Mr. Deffrees—Do I understand the Senator from St. Landry to say that the father of these children was a colored man.

Mr. Martel—That is precisely what I said. Old Donato was a colored man who was held in high esteem by all who knew him. He had been a resident of Louisiana for eighty years past, had assisted in repelling the English from before New Orleans, and paid taxes on property valued at more than half a million of dollars.

Mr. Deffrees—The statement of the gentleman places the subject in a very different light from that in which I had previously viewed it. I suppose that the grounds of my opposition have been understood by the Senate. I was under the impression that this was one of those cases in which the father was a white, who, by what is a breach of the proprieties of life, had placed his offspring in this unfortunate position. In such a case I would not interfere to relieve him from the consequences of his own imprudence. I will here state that, in the matter of emancipation, I draw what I consider a just and equitable distinction; where the father is a colored man, and his children are free by will, I do not desire to drive them from the State, where every object is endeared to them through their earliest associations, where they have the home of their birth around which their tenderest affections cluster. Such as these I would permit to remain in their native State. It is only in those cases to which I alluded in the remarks I have already made on the subject. Under the circumstances, as they have been explained to me by the gentleman from Ouachita, I feel compelled to withdraw my opposition to the bill.

The bill passed.

MONDAY, Feb. 20, 1854.

Mr. Palfrey called up the following bill, entitled

AN ACT

To amend an act entitled an act to prevent trespasses, approved April 6, 1843.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the fourth section of the act to which this is an amendment, which is in the following words, viz: "That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, take possession of any tract of land, or any part thereof, or of any house or other tenement, being the property of another person, without any legal right so to do, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on due conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, in the sum of not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars, and imprisonment of not less than ten days nor more than six months, and pay the costs of prosecution; provided, that such possession shall not have continued one year without disturbance," be amended and re-enacted as amended in the words following, to wit:—That any person who shall, after the passage of this act, take possession of any tract of land, or any part thereof, or of any house or other tenement, being the property of another person, without any legal right so to do, or shall willfully and maliciously burn, tear down, or otherwise destroy the enclosure or fences around the field or lot of ground belonging to another person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on due conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, the fine to be in the sum of not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars, and imprisonment of not less than ten days nor more than six months, and pay the costs of prosecution; provided, that such possession shall not have continued for one year without disturbance, and provided also, that the fact being proved, the burden of proof of the absence of malice, shall rest with the defendant.

Mr. Martel—I move that the bill be printed. It is one of the most important that has been before the Senate this session.

Mr. Palfrey—I see no necessity for delay. There can be no particular objection to the bill. It has been referred to a committee and received the endorsement of a favorable report. I will briefly state the object of the bill. The law already provideds a remedy for the illegal taking possession of buildings. This bill is intended to prevent the distruction of fences, &c., a thing which is not now provided for by law. The object is certainly a good one, and I imagine the gentleman, after a little reflection, will withdraw his opposition to the bill, or rather his motion for printing.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Martel—I should like to hear the bill read again. It is possible I may withdraw my motion.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. Martel—I waive my motion to have the bill printed, but I shall be compelled to vote against it.—At the first glance, gentlemen not acquainted with our back country, and its peculiarities, might think this a good bill. But this would be a great mistake, as I think I can show. It has for a long time been the custom for persons possessed of large wealth to enclose lands belonging to the Government, and in this way preventing lands from being entered by actual settlers. I have known many instances of the kind where public lands had been appropriated in this way, and could not be reached by settlers because some wealthy individual had enclosed them with a view of preventing squatters from taking possession of them, or settling in the vicinity. This class of persons—these squatters I mean—have all my sympathies. They should have the privilege of squatting on the public lands, even though those lands have been enclosed. It is a privilege extended to them by law and with which no one has a right to interfere. If, by our legislation, we permit this thing to be done with impunity, we will cut off our poor laboring population from all the benefit of the pre-emption laws, not only of the United States, but of the State of Louisiana.—It is so much the habit of wealthy persons to do this kind of thing, that even they ask the Legislature to grant them special privileges But I, for one, think we ought not to interfere with the rights secured by the pre-emption laws, which we will assuredly do if we pass this bill. The law on this subject is already too severe. The State of Louisiana has already gone too far in punishing those who seek to avail themselves of their right to settle on the public domain. The United States has never passed laws so severe as those with which Louisiana oppresses her own children. Our penal law is too stringent now, and I am astonished that it is not modified instead of intensified. We have seen that under the present law a man is not even required to make title to the property which he alleges to have been trespassed upon. Suppose, for instance, a man squats on certain lands which he supposes to be public lands, and which, in fact, are public lands. Some person has, however, enclosed them.—He makes affidavit against the squatter, has him arrested, and brings him before a judicial tribunal. The complainant is not even compelled to prove title; it is sufficient for him to prove possession. The man whose rights the law ought to respect is not even permitted to be heard in his own defence.

When he squats on land claimed by a man who may have no title at all, he is arrested and brought up before a grand jury on a criminal accusation. No inquiry is made into the title The State is the prosecutor, and the unfortunate squatter is compelled to pay attorneys, and be put to many other expenses which he is generally ill able to bear. He is not permitted to show that the complainant has not even a title, but only the bare possession of lands which in reality belong to the Government. For my part I think we ought rather to modify the severity of the law in such cases than increase its rigor. We ought rather to make it milder than to throw additional impediments in the way of the industrious settler. Now, sir, I do not speak from conjecture in relation to the statements I have made. I speak from the record, from facts within my own knowledge.

Mr. Ryan—I should be pleased to hear the Secretary read the bill again. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to its objects. (Secretary reads) I thought the gentleman was mistaken in his view of this bill. The burthen of his remarks consists of an appeal for the protection of the squatter against the encroachments of the rich; for his argument, what there is of it, is in favor of the bill. What is the argument? The gentleman says that many persons of large wealth are in the habit of fencing in lands belonging to the Government. The gentleman believes is a this species of encroachment on those poor people who are entitled to populate the soil by settling on vacant public lands. Now the bill says that whenever any person shall enter on the lands of another or destroy his fences, he shall suffer a certain penalty which is specified in the bill. If the property or fences belong to the United States, the trespasser is equally subject to the penalty. So it appears that so far from tending to oppress the settler, the bill actually gives him more rights than he enjoys now, because it prevents the rich man from doing those things to which the gentleman has alluded in the course of his remarks. So if a person enter on the property of another, whether of a private individual or of the United States, he will be liable to the penalties of the law. The arguments of the gentleman therefore, certainly do not apply, as objections to this bill. Take the instance which the gentleman has specified Suppose a squatter to settle on United States land which has been enclosed by one of these rich persons, and is brought before a court on an accusation of trespass: in that case all he has to do is to say that the land did not belong to the complainant, and that consequently he had a right to enter on it. The land belonging to the United States, of course the argument of the gentleman is not applicable, and can have no weight in a legal sense. If a person should fence in public lands, and bring up a squatter for settling on them, the squatter could oust him with costs, because he could plead that he had a perfect right to settle on the lands; that they did not belong to the complainant, and he could have no title under which to bring an action. This would be the natural and proper course. The argument of the gentleman, or rather his declamation about the poor and the rich, might be suitable for a stump harangue before a political meeting during an election campaign, but certainly is not of such a kind as should characterize debate before Senators of Louisiana, who are supposed to be elevated above such ad captandum appeals and to know something of the style of argumentation befitting a Senator. Such appeals may be adapted to the stump, they certainly are not suitable for the Senate chamber.

Mr. Martel—I am sorry, Mr President, to be forced to acknowledge that I can lay claim neither to the political genius nor the legal knowledge of which the gentleman from Rapides seems to have so plentiful a supply. I hope no one will impute to me such pretensions.

But I must be allowed to say that the gentleman, in the course of his remarks just addressed to the Senate, very disingenuously disguised not only what I meant, but actually what I said. I am opposed, sir, to the principle of this bill, I shall oppose the making of such an act a criminal offence as long as I hold a seat on this floor. I did not mean to pass any imputation on the rich as a class. Persons who are fortunate enough, by their enterprise or their industry, to acquire wealth, should be honored for it, as the presumption is, or ought to be, that they acquired it by legal means. But when the gentleman goes beyond this I take issue with him. I say that in no country in the world is there a law of this kind. In no place is it sought to protect such rights by a criminal statute. I have seen many citizens under the present law, brought up on such charges as I have mentioned, and denied the right of being heard. A case is brought to the notice of the court through an indictment by the grand jury. If the unfortunate individual, as is frequently the case, is not rich enough to afford to pay counsel he must abandon his rights without a struggle, and perhaps be told to rejoice that he has escaped so cheaply. I tell gentlemen it is not just to permit such interferance with the rights of these poor people, even though they happen to be opposed by one richer than themselves. It is a violation of the great principle of equal rights—it is unjust and I shall oppose it. I oppose the whole principle on which the bill is based. It is calculated to ruin the poor for the benefit of the rich. It has been justly said by one of the greatest of Roman satirists that,

> Nil habet infelix paupertas durius in se
> Quam quod ridiculos homines facit.

Digitized by Google

It is now as it was when the Roman Poet wrote. The poor are still at the mercy of the rich. It should be our business as legislators to soften their condition and smooth the asperities of their path, instead of placing them in a worse position than that to which fortune has assigned them. It seems to me that this point is so clear as not to need illustration. Suppose one of that industrious class called squatters does take possession of a tract of Government land which has been enclosed by some unauthorized person—what is the first step taken against him? There are lawyers here who know the course as well as I do. The person in possession, whether the owner or not, goes before a Justice of the Peace and makes an affidavit against the settler. The magistrate has no right to decide on the title to the property. That question does not come before him. The defendant is then sent before the Grand Jury, which can hear only the prosecutor, and is finally bound over to appear before the District Court, and compelled to give a large bail. Many who are not able to pay a lawyer to defend them, are afraid to go into Court. They feel their poverty, and their inability to contend with their rich rivals. They therefore consent to abandon their rights, because they think they have no power to enforce them. I say, sir, that in cases of this kind, all the rights, whether those of the possessor or the squatter, ought to be enforced in the same way as all other legal rights are, namely by by judicial action. If a party has rights, he can maintain them; if not, let him be cast. The passage of this bill, sir, would inflict a deep wound on our system; it would be an abominable outrage. There are severities enough in the law already, without this additional one, which I trust may not receive the sanction of this enlightened body.

Mr. Palfrey—I must beg leave to differ with the gentleman who has just addressed the Senate. I cannot agree with him that any injustice is contemplated or would be produced by this bill. Its sole object is to protect persons, or rather their property, against the encroachments of others. If an individual has a legal right, he cannot be dispossessed of it by this bill. He has only to show his right, and he will be exonerated. I take it for granted that no one has a right to burn or destroy the fences or enclosures belonging to another. The law is silent now on this subject, and it is to remedy the defect, or rather to supply the omission, that this bill is proposed.

Mr. Wickliffe—I move to strike out that part of the bill which makes the burthen of proof of the absence of malice rest on the defendant.

Mr. Martel moved an amendment providing that an inquiry should be made into the title.

Mr. Palfrey—I move to lay the amendment on the table. I do not think a Justice of the Peace is the proper person to try land titles.

The amendment was laid on the table, and the bill passed to a third reading.

THE RIVER AMITE AND BAYOU MANCHAC.

Mr. Lacey—I would request the Senate to grant a suspension of the rules for the purpose of taking up the bill for the improvement of the river Amite and the Bayou Manchac. The bill has already passed to a third reading by a vote of sixteen to one. I imagine no Senator will be inclined to prevent its passage.

Mr. King—I object to a suspension of the rules. One of my reasons is that the river proposed to be improved is in the district of a Senator (Mr. Kenner) who is now absent. He expressed a desire to be present when the bill is disposed of. Another reason is that I am opposed to the bill itself.

The rules were suspended and the bill taken up.

Mr. King—With the permission of the Senate, I will explain my objections to this bill. I am opposed, as I have heretofore intimated on more than one occasion, to all this kind of legislation. We learn from the report of the Auditor, that the entire annual revenue of the Internal Improvement Fund amounts to only $15,000, and this is to be devoted to the internal improvements of the whol eState. This is scarcely sufficient for the necessary expenses of the system. We have three steamboats running, the expenses of which are necessarily great. Then we have 106 negroes whom we have to maintain. We have a State Engineer to whom we pay a salary of $3,000, an Assistant Engineer, whose salary is $2000, while the contingent expenses of the office amount to $1000. These charges would consume almost all the revenue of the fund. If we pass this bill to-morrow, we shall see another of the same kind presented. There are other streams in the State more important than this one, and, if tried by that test, having higher claims on our consideration. If we give money out of the Fund for this purpose, we cannot refuse it for others, of the same nature. In this way it would not take long to consume the whole fund. Then what will become of our negroes? They might as well be put up at auction, and sold to the highest bidder.

What should we do with our steamboats? Are they to be laid up to rot, or sold for what they will bring? It seems to me that Senators cannot understand the nature of the Internal Improvement fund, if they contemplate voting for this bill. There are other objections to it than those which I have mentioned. The bill appropriates $3500 for the improvement of the Amite. Does any one know that that amount is enough? Have surveys been made? Have accurate estimates been prepared? For all we know, $500 may be enough, or the whole amount proposed by the bill may prove to be but a drop in the bucket. It has been said by a person who ought to be possessed of correct information on the subject, that $15,000 would be needed to accomplish the projected improvements. The $3500 would be a commencement of what we shall be called on to appropriate, and we shall probably be told that it it is necessary to give the additional sums in order to save what will have already been expended. I have before said that I am opposed to our taking upon ourselves the functions which properly appertain to engineers, and which we have delegated to officers in whom we ought to have confidence. I, for one, do not sit here for any such purpose. I do not consider myself, nor do I think the Legislature is competent to say what streams ought to be improved. Private persons do not conduct their business in this manner. They do not build a house without first making some estimate of its cost. No man in his senses would be guilty of such a piece of folly. There is no reason why the State should act differently—there is no reason why she should not conduct her business in accordance with those simple rules by which individuals are guided in the ordinary transactions of life. For my part, I am opposed to taking money from the Internal Improvement fund, and disposing of it for this or any other purpose. The Amite is not the most important river in the State; on the contrary, there are others which have far higher claims. Let the fund remain under the supervision of those officers to whom we have intrusted, and who know much better than we do the best manner in which to apply it. We will pause before we set this precedent for the annihilation of that fund, unless we are ready to disband our negroes, sell our steamboats, and discharge our engineers.

Mr. Wickliffe—I beg leave to offer a few words on this subject by way of explanation. I must say that I am sorry to observe the gloomy forebodings which seem to have possessed the mind of the Senator from New Orleans. The gentleman anxiously asks us what will become of our negroes—what must we do with the engineers if we pass this bill? Why, sir, I hope they will still remain in the land of the living. I do not see that the bill aims any deadly blow at their existence. He also asks us if the Amite is the most important river in the State. It is certainly not as large as the Mississippi, nor does it bear on its bosom the varied products of many different climes; but there are numbers of worthy and industrious citizens residing on its banks who are surely deserving of some consideration.

They have never yet received anything from the Internal Improvement fund; they have, in fact, been strangers to its benefits. For years they have suffered from the inconveniences and injuries consequent on the obstructions existing in the river. I do not say that this is the fault of the State Engineer. I have no desire to cast censure on that officer. He may have had more work than time or means; but I defy any one to point out where he has done any work in that section. The only evidence of the presence, at any time of a State force in that region, are the obstructions adverted to by the Senator from East Baton Rouge. The gentleman is also very fearful lest the Internal Improvement fund should be exhausted as a consequence of the passage of this bill. If the gentleman will direct his acuteness to an investigation of the facts, he will find that the State owes the Internal Improvement fund a large amount of money.

Digitized by Google

Mr. King—The Chairman of the Finance Committee says the Treasury does not owe a dollar to the Internal Improvement fund.

Mr. Wickliffe—I know that gentleman takes very good care of the finances, but I think I could show that he is mistaken in making that statement. I am of opinion that the gloomy picture drawn by the gentleman from New Orleans is in no danger of being realized if we pass this bill, and I hope it will be passed.

Mr. King—I am sorry to be obliged to trespass again on the time of the Senate, but I feel constrained to say a few words more. I am not opposed to the improvement of the Amite river. I think it ought to be improved; but I am opposed to the method of improvement contemplated by the bill. I am opposed to taking money out of the Internal Improvement fund. If we continue in this way, we shall certainly exhaust the fund, and ultimately be reduced to the necessity of abandoning our system of Internal Improvements. We shall be compelled to discharge our engineer, to lay up our boats and sell our negroes. This is a result which must be produced if we continue the system initiated by the bill before the Senate. It is not difficult to foresee that such must be the inevitable consequence, and it would be easy to show precisely how much legislation of this kind would reduce us to that necessity. If the improvement of the Amite river is necessary, let it be done in the regular way, by the State force, acting under the directions of the duly appointed officer. Let the State Engineer make the necessary examinations, and decide what is best to be done. In this manner the work can be accomplished in a regular way, without infringing on our established system.

Mr. Lacey—The phase which this discussion has assumed induces me to offer a few remarks, although it will be, perhaps, a work of supererogation after what has been said by the senator from West Feliciana. The gentleman was right in saying that this district has not been treated justly by the State. An officer, with a search warrant could not find a single trace of any work ever done by the State on the Amite river, except a ta single point, and there he would discover only the wood and rubbish with which the State force had succeeded in obstructing the channel. No, sir; no man can find a single trace of any benefit which that region has ever received from the Internal Improvement fund. If anything of that kind should be sought, the writ would be returned with the endorsement non est inventus. I say again, sir that that district, although emminently entitled to favorable considerstiou, has, heretofore, received nothing from the State.

The gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King,) thinks that the fund should be reserved for objects of greater importance, or if this work be done at all, it should be done by the State force. Why, sir, it would cost more to send one of the State boats around, into that river, than to complete the work under the plan proposed by the bill. When the work can be accomplished by private persons, at a less expense than by the State force, would the gentleman object to its being done by them? Would he insist on paying a large sum for what could be procured for a small sum? Surely the gentleman would not recommend such a policy as that.

This bill, sir, has passed its second reading by a vote of sixteen to one, almost a unanimous vote. After that is it necessary to say anything in behalf of the bill? I have no doubt it will pass finally by as a large majority, as it has passed the other House and that no obstruction will be thrown in its way.

The bill passed.

Mr. King called up an act relative to arrest of judgment in criminal cases, and said:

The object of this bill is expressed in its title. It is intended to relieve the law of an absurdity by which it isat present characterized. In every other State, and even in England, I believe, the incongruity has been done away with. I allude to the right which the prisoner now has to come into Court and plead to an indictment, and then after the case has been tried and the verdict rendered, to escape by some flaw in the amendment.

On motion of Mr. Ryan, the bill was laid over.

Mr. Martel called up the following bill, entitled.

AN ACT

To improve for the navigation of the Atchafalaya river.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of fifteen thousand dollars be and the same is hereby appropriated for the purpose of removing all obstructions to the navigation of the Atchafalaya river, the mouth of the bayou Courtableu included, for one mile up said bayou, and to make a levee on the West bank of said bayou, from its mouth, ending in the Atchafalaya river, extending as far up said bayou Courtableu as may be deemed necessary by the Commissioners to be appointed under this act.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That William Offatt, of Washington, La., Walthall Burton, William H. Nelson, C. S. Gordon, John J. Morgan, of the Atchafalaya, be and they are hereby appointed Commissioners, with the State Engineer, to carry this act into effect, and the sum of fifteen thousand dollars to be paid out of the Internal Improvement fund, be, and the same is hereby specially appropriated, payable to the contractor or contractors, on the warrant of at least four of said Commissioners, in such sum or sums as may be required.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That said Commissioners shall let out to the lowest bidder the performance of said contract, after giving thirty days notice of the time and place, in two newspapers, to-wit: the Louisiana Courier and the Opelousas Courier; said adjudication to take place at the House of Mrs. Robbin on the Atchafalaya river, on the first day of May next, 1854, between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That a passage be cleared as straight as possible through all that part of the Atchafalaya river which is now obstructed by rafts, sixty feet wide and five feet deep, in lowest waters, the mouth of the bayou Courtableu to be included one mile up said bayou, and the West bank of said bayou to be leveed as far up from the said mouth as said Commissioners may determine, and that the snags in the channel in the Atchafalaya river be removed.

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That three of said Commissioners shall form a quorum to let out said contract, and in case said quorum should not meet on said first day of May, on the premises as aforesaid, then, and in that case one of said Commissioners shall be authorized to adjourn said adjudication until a quorum makes its appearance, and should said quorum not appear on the third day of May, 1854, then said number present, orany shall let out said contract, provided said adjudication, with all expenses, does not exceed the sum of fifteen thousand dollars.

Sec. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That said Commissioners are authorized and required to take bond and security from the undertaker of said contract, in the sum of five thousand dollars, payable to the Governor of the State and his successors in office, conditioned for the faithful performance of the same, said bond to be furnished on the premises on the day of the adjudication, and in default thereof, said Commissioners shall make a second adjudication on the same day, or they will postpone the same until the next day; and if no sale takes place on that day, the Commissioners shall re-advertise and let out said contract as aforesaid.

Sec. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That a majority of the Commissioners present at the adjudication shall be sufficient to approve of the bond of the undertaker, but at least four of said Commissioners must agree on receiving said work or contract.

Sec. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That the conditions of said contract, and all the particulars, shall be published at length in said advertisement.

Sec. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., In case the undertaker should fail to perform his engagement, it shall be the duty of the Attorney General or District Attorney to institue suit before any court of competent jurisdiction for the collection of said bond, its amount to be deposited in the Treasury of the State to the credit of the State Engineer, to be afterwards applied by said Commissioners to improve the navigation of the Atchafalaya river.

Digitized by Google

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That the State Engineer be and he is hereby authorized to cause said contract to be published on or before the 15th day of March next, 1854, in the manner aforesaid.

Which, on motion of Mr. Martel, was read the second time, section by section.

Mr. King—I feel called on to make one remark by way of explanation. I have condemned the whole system of special appropriations of this kind. I have condemned this system of taking money out of the Internal Improvement Fund; because, if we persist in it we shall soon be unable to pay our Engineer, and be compelled to sell our boats and negroes. But the Atchafalaya river is one of great importance, and if the thing is to be done, I should like to secure something for its improvement. I would rather vote for this bill than for any other of the kind. I wish it distictly understood that this is my only reason for voting for this bill while I oppose the whole system. If we are to have a general scramble, I shall insist on getting something for the best objects.

On motion of Mr. Moore, the following section was inserted in lieu of the 1st ond 4th sections, viz:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the navigation of the Atchafalaya and Courtableu rivers shall be improved from the junction of the former with the old bed of the Mississippi river to the mouth of,, and up the latter to the head of "Petit Diable," and a levee shall be made on the southern bank of the latter, so as to prevent the escape of the current, which draws the drift from the Atchafalaya therein, and a passage shall be cleared of snags sixty feet wide through the whole extent.

On motion of Mr. Martel to adopt it, Mr. Deffrees called for the yeas and nays.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe in the Chair; Messrs. Dupre, Griffin, Hebert, King, Kittridge, Lauve, Lacey, Lawes, Martel, Moore, Palfrey, Pellerin, Ryan, Richardson, Taylor and Wickliffe—16 yeas.

Messrs. Deffrees, Evans, and Macmurdo—3 nays

Consequently the 1st section was adopted in lieu of the 1st and 4th sections.

On motion of Mr. Moore, the words "not exceeding the sum of four thousand dollars at one time," were inserted at the end of the 2d section.

The 2d section was then adopted as amended.

The 3d section was then read and adopted.

The 5th section was then adopted in lieu of the 4th section.

Mr. Defreese offered as an amendment in the 6th line of the 6th section of the original bill, the words "fifteen thousand," and to strike out the words "five thousand."

On motion of Mr. Dupre, the amendment was laid on the table.

On motion to adopt the 6th section, in lieu of the 5th section, Mr. Deffrees called for the yeas and nays.

Hon. R. C. Wickliffe in the Chair; Messrs. Dupre, Evans, Griffin, Hebert, Kittridge, Lauve, Lacey, Lawes, Martel, Moore, Palfrey, Pellerin, Ryan, Richardson, Taylor, Scott, and Wickliffe—17 yeas.

Mr. Deffrees—1 nay.

Consequently the 6th section was adopted in lieu of the 5th section.

The 7th, 8th and 9th sections were read and adopted in lieu of the 8th, 9th and 10th sections.

On motion of Mr. Martel the rules were dispensed with, it was read the third time and passed.

Mr. King—I move to take up the bill to aid the colonization in Africa of the free people of color of this State. As nothing is before the Senate, I think we might as well take up the bill now.

Mr. Macmurdo—The bill has just been printed and laid on the tables of the members. Some Senators may be familiar with the subject, but I am confident that not all are so. I think it would be more judicious to make the bill the special order of the day for another time.

Mr. King—The bill is rather long, it is true. Yet it is not very complex or very important. It is simply intended to tax free negroes in order to raise a fund with which to send such to Africa as desire to go.

Mr. Macmurdo—I am very familiar with the subject myself. I have no objection to taking up the bill, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. Martel—I renew the objection if the gentleman from New Orleans withdraws it. The bill has but just been laid on the tables of the members. It seems to be of some importance, and I think it would be better to make it the order of the day for another time.

The bill was deferred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills, entitled

An act to amend an act entitled an act to regulate the terms of the District Court (the parish of Orleans excepted) so far as relates to the Second Judicial District.

An act entitled an act to amend an act entitled an act to increase the salary of the clerk of the First District Court of New Orleans.

Mr. Lacey introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That 500 copies of the Report of the Louisiana Institution for the Deaf, Dumb and the Blind, be printed for the use of the Senate, and an additional number of 500 copies in French and 1000 in English be printed for the use of the Institution, and delivered to the Principal.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

The following message from the Governor was read:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Baton Rouge, February 15, 1854.

To the Honorable the President and Members of the Senate:

I have the honor to transmit the accompanying Report of the Board of Administrators and Superintendent of the Institution of the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind.

The rapid increase in the number of pupils admitted to this noble Asylum, coupled with the fact that there are numerous patients in the Charity Hospital who are afflicted with blindness, and who are likely to become inmates of the former Institution, render it necessary that the Legislature should carry out, with the least possible delay, the good work already commenced, by giving to the Institution the aid it requires, to enable it to accomplish the benevolent ends it has in view.

I would, therefore, particularly call the attention of your honorable body to that portion of the Report of the Board asking for an additional appropriation for building purposes, and which, I trust, will meet with your most favorable consideration.

(Signed) P. O. HEBERT.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Charitable Institutions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Hebert, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably, with an amendment,

An act for the relief of Armand Halet, of the parish of Lafayette.

Report, by substitute, on an act for the relief of Martin Kohler.

Mr. Hebert, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported correctly enrolled an act to authorize Robert M. Lea and Letitia M. Lea to adopt Eleanor Lombard.

An act to emancipate John W. Hewitt.

An act for the relief of Matthew Watson, Sheriff of the parish of Caddo.

Mr. Lacey, from the Judiciary Committee, reported favorably on the following bills, entitled

An act to emancipate Moses C. Cavett and Jas. R. Cavett.

An act to extend the privileges of the vendor of moveable effects.

An act relative to the disposition of all forfeited bonds, recognizances, and fines imposed in criminal cases.

Digitized by Google

An act to emancipate George H. Packwood, a minor.

And he reported favorably,

An act to amend Article 1035 Civil Code.

Mr. Macmurdo, from the Finance Committee, made the following report:

To the Honorable the President and Members of the Senate of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, Chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, begs leave to report that the Committee on Finance have had under their consideration a claim of George P. Briant, for services rendered to the State for the collection of the sum of eleven thousand dollars, from the municipalities of New Orleans, in the month of May last, and after due consideration of the same, recommend that he be paid the sum of one hundred dollars for said services, on his own warrant, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

J. R. MACMURDO, Chairman.

He also reported that he has found the report on contingent expenses of the office of the Treasurer correct; and he reported favorably on the following bills, entitled

An act for the relief of J. J. Odom, and

An act for the relief of Thos. J. Buffington. M. D.

On motion of Mr. Macmurdo, the rules were suspended, these bills underwent separately their several readings, and they passed.

BILLS, ETC., INTRODUCED.

Mr. King called up an act relative to motions in arrest of judgment in criminal cases.

On motion of Mr. Ryan, it was laid over, subject to call.

Mr. Evans called up House bill, entitled

An act for the relief of Thomas Killgore.

On motion of Mr. Evans, the rules were dispensed with, it underwent its several readings, and was concurred in.

Mr. Richardson called up House bill, entitled

An act for the relief of the veterans of 1814-15.

On motion of Mr. Richardson, the rules were suspended, it underwent its several readings, and it was concurred in.

Mr. Ryan, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills, entitled

An act to authorize Robert Huie, of the parish of Rapides, to adopt an orphan boy named James Roach, and change his name to James Huie, and

An act to amend Article 719 of the Code of Practice.

On motion of Mr. Ryan, these bills were severally read twice, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Ryan called up the following House Resolutions.

Resolution ordering the State Engineer to repair to Red River.

On motion the rules were suspended, and it was adopted, and Resolution relative to a Marine Hospital at Alexandria, in the parish of Rapides, was rejected by the Senate.

Mr. Wickliffe, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills, entitled

An act for the relief of John Mountjoy, a veteran of the war of 1814 and 1815.

On motion the rules were suspended, it was read twice and it was referred to the Committee on Claims, also

An act for the relief of Moses Lee, a veteran of the years 1814 and 1815, which was read twice and referred to the same Committee.

Mr. Pellerin, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act for the relief of James H. Stokes, of the parish of Vermillion.

On motion the rules were suspended, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Griffin introduced a petition of J. H. Barbin and others, which was read, and on motion it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, Swamp Lands and Levees.

Mr. Lacey asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills:

On motion of Mr. Lacey, they separately read twice and they were referred as follows, viz:

An act for the relief of John H. Martin, Geo. P. Sattenberry, Rufus J. Moore and Alexis Sappington, and

An act for the relief of Louis Dubreuil, of the State of Missouri, were referred to the Committee on Claims.

An act to provide for the establishment of a Union School in the first and second wards of the parish of East Baton Rouge, was referred to the Committee on Public Education, and

An act to incorporate the Society of the Virgins, for the relief of the poor and indigent orphans in the parish of East Baton Rouge, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Ryan, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act to complete the improvement of the falls of Red River at Alexandria.

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, it was read twice, and it was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvements, &c.

TUESDAY, February 21st.

Marine Hospital at Alexandria.

On motion of Mr. Griffin the vote yesterday against the resolution requesting our Representatives and instructing our Senators in Congress to use their efforts to procure a Marine Hospital at Alexandria, was reconsidered.

Mr. Ryan.—I will explain the nature of this resolution. I have no doubt that, owing to its title, it was not correctly understood yesterday. Red River is certainly not an inland sea, and the establishment of a "Marine Hospital" on its banks might be considered rather incongruous. Yet it is a well known fact that the United States Government has established institutions called Marine Hospitals at various points on the Mississippi river, and its tributaries. There is one at Memphis, in Tennessee, one at Paducah in Kentucky, one opposite New Orleans, and there may be others at other places. These places are called Marine Hospitals. Now the word marine is derived from the Latin, mare, which signifies the sea; and these institutions are Marine Hospitals though there is not a drop of salt water near them. On Red River, owing to the great trade which is carried on through its channel, there is as much need for one of these establishments as there is on the Mississippi itself. It is necessary to have some place for the reception of sick persons—some place where those unfortunate persons who are attacked by disease can find accommodation. It is also necessary to have some such place for the preservation of the towns and country along the river from the attacks of epidemic diseases, which are liable to be imported from the lower regions of the State. It was in this way that the yellow fever was introduced last summer, and its destructive ravages are well known by their mournful and afflicting consequences. In fact, the Red River country suffered more than other parts of the State in proportion to its population. The establisment of a Marine Hospital at Alexandria would, in addition to the benefits produced by such institutions in other places, have the effect of keeping off attacks of yellow fever epidemics by providing a place for the reception of patients, where they will be excluded from communication with the resident population, and thus from the possibility of spreading the infection. For these reasons I hope the resolution will be pass.

Digitized by Google

M. Kenner.—For my part I must confess that I can see no objection to the resolution. It is true as the gentleman from Rapides has very well remarked, that Red River is not a sea; but I have seen it when it was forty miles wide and looked like a sea if it was not one in reality. I have traveled on it for days and days when land was not visible on either side, and the river seemed to be a vast lake of boiling, surging waters. Now, whatever can be said of Red River, it is undoubtedly a large body of water, and so is the sea. Then there are salt springs on its banks, and vast salt plains along its shores, so that it has some analogy to the sea in various respects. Then, why should we not have a Marine Hospital at Alexandria? It would be just as proper to have one there as at Memphis or Paducah. However, as far as any practical result is to be considered, I think it a matter of very little consequence whether we pass this resolution or not. It will take no money out of our pocket, and probably none out of that of Uncle Sam either, for I do not believe, the old gentleman will pay the slightest attention to our request.

Mr. King.—I must say that I am opposed to the resolution in its present form. I agree with the gentleman from Ascension that, even if we pass it, it will not receive much attention from Congress. But notwithstanding that, I cannot vote for the resolution without an amendment. The word marine is derived from a Latin word signifying the sea. Now, if the United States furnish a marine hospital, they ought also to furnish the persons to put in it, and I do not believe there are many old salts in that part of the country.

Mr. Ryan.—I would inform the gentleman that I am a pretty good Latin scholar myself, so that I am aware of the etymological fact which has been stated by the gentleman. In fact I made the same remark myself only a few moments ago. But I presume the Senate will understand the subject without any further explanations. There are hospitals of the same denomination, already established by Congress on the banks of the Mississippi and other rivers so that I do not see any impropriety in our asking for the same thing. The necessity exists on Red River, and whether Congress heeds our request or not, there can, certainly, be no harm in making the effort.

Mr. Trudeau—I shall vote against the resolution for the very reasons given by the gentleman from Rapides. I think if a hospital be established, in which all persons affected by contagious diseases are to be placed, it will be much more likely to injure the health of the town near which the institution is located, than if no such hospital existed.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The Tacit Mortgage Bill.

The following bill, to provide for the registration of the evidences of mortgages in favor of minors and married women, was taken up.

AN ACT

TO PROVIDE FOR THE RECORDING OF THE EVIDENCE OF MORTGAGES IN FAVOR OF MINORS AND MARRIED WOMEN.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the first day of April, 1855, no mortgage shall be enforced or exist against a third person acting in good faith, unless the mortgage duly recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages. This record shall be made in order to affect landed property and slaves attached thereto in the parish where such property is situated, and to affect other slaves in the parish where the debtor has his domicil, or usual residence.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c, That it shall be the duty of every notary public, or other officer exercising the functions of a notary public, to cause to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in the parish where the party resides, against whom the mortgage created may exist, every act passed before him in which under the existing laws of this State, a legal mortgage is created in favor of the wife on the property of the husband; whether the said act be a marriage contract or any other act which may serve to show the sums of money or other property which the wife may have brought by way of dower at the time of marriage; or receipts or other acts serving to show the amount of money or other property received by her, or by her husband for her account during the marriage. That any notary or person exercising the functions of notary, who shall neglect to comply with the requirements of this section as to the recording of the Acts therein mentioned, besides being liable, to the persons injured thereby for all damages which may be sustained, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and shall, on conviction therefor, upon indictment or information, be dismissed from his office and be sentenced to fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the Court.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a married woman shall be entitled to property or money by inheritance or by testamentary disposition, it shall be the duty of the executors, curators or administrators through whom the property or money may be received, to take from the husband an authentic receipt for the money or property, which shall be recorded as a mortgage against the husband in the parish in which he resides, if he be a resident of this State; but the property or money shall not be delivered to the husband until he makes oath that said receipt has been recorded in the parish in which he resides, and in every other parish in this State in which he owns immovable property: Provided, that this section shall not apply to cases where the wife is separate in property from her husband, and administers her own property; and provided furthermore, such receipt shall be no evidence of the delivery of such property or money to the husband until such receipt is endorsed by the person to whom payment or delivery is made "paid," which endorsement must be dated subsequent to the record. Every executor, curator or administrator who neglects to comply with the duty enjoined by this section, besides rendering himself and sureties personally liable for all damages caused thereby to the persons injured, shall be dismissed from his office, and on conviction upon indictment or information of said neglect, shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the Court.

It shall be the duty of the clerks of Courts, in whose Courts there may at this time exist evidence of a legal mortgage upon the estate of the husband in favor of the wife, if the same be not already recorded to record the same in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, and in case any clerk shall fail to do so, on or before the first day of April, 1854, he shall be liable to any married woman for all damages she may sustain for such failure or neglect, and to the further penalty of one hundred dollars, one half for the use and benefit of the person bringing the suit. For making such recordation, the clerk shall receive a fee to be charged as costs in each case of one dollar and fifty cents, besides the fees to be paid to the Recorder for recording the same.

Digitized by Google

SECT. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a tutor for minors, or a curator of an absentee or interdicted person, shall have been designated by the Judge, or other person having the competent authority to appoint tutors or curators, the clerk of the Court shall deliver to the person so designated, or to his agent or attorney, a copy of the order of appointment in order that it may be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, in conformity to this Act, and letters of tutorship or curatorship shall not issue until said order shall have been recorded, and until the person appointed tutor or curator shall have made and subscribed the following oath:

I, (A. B) tutor of the child (or children) named ———, or curator of———, an absentee, or of ———, an interdicted person, as the case may be, do solemnly swear, or (affirm, if the party have conscientious scruples against making an oath,) that I have caused the order of appointment given to me to be recorded in the office of Recorder of Mortgages, in the parish in which I reside, and in every parish in this State, in which I own immovable property.

Which oath must be recorded by the clerk in his office.

Nothing in this act shall prevent tutors from giving a special mortgage in lieu of the general mortgage in favor of minors in the manner provided by law, but in all such cases every tutor before entering on the duties of his office, instead of the last clause of the above affidavit, shall be required to make oath that the special mortgage has been recorded in the parish or parishes, as the case may be, in this State, in which the property so specially mortgaged is situated.

SECT. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That the office of all tutors, curators of absentees and persons interdicted, now existing in this State, shall expire on the 1st day of July next, unless, in the interval, any such officer shall have caused to be recorded, the letters of tutorship or curatorship originally given to him, or copies thereof, or a certificate of the clerk, showing the date of his appointment in the manner directed in the preceding section of this Act, for recording orders of appointment, and shall have taken the oath therein directed, which oath shall be recorded as above provided. Said letters, when recorded, shall be evidence of the existence of a mortgage from the date of the original appointment of said tutor or curator. If any tutor shall have qualified by giving a special mortgage, in the manner provided by law in lieu of the general mortgage against his estate, such tutor may continue to act upon his making oath within the time above prescribed, that such special mortgage has been recorded in the manner directed in the foregoing section, for the recordation of such special mortgages.

SECT. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That on the before mentioned first day of July next, it shall be the duty of every clerk of a Court in this State, (except clerks of the Supreme Court) in whose office records of appointments of tutors and curators of persons interdicted and absentees heretofore made are kept, to examine thoroughly the said records, and within ten days after said first day of July, to make out a correct list of all the said tutorships and curatorships which the said records show still to exist: which list shall designate the names of the minors, and the persons appointed tutors, and curators who have not qualified under this Act, with the dates of their appointments. The list thus perfected shall be kept as a part of the records of the Court.

It shall further be the duty of the clerk to make out triplicate copies of said list, one of which shall be kept posted up in a conspicuous place in his office for the space of forty days; another on the door in the room of the Court-House for the like time, and the other shall be delivered to the Judge of his Court, or of the Court having jurisdiction in such matters, immediately, if said Court be in session, and if not, at the first term of the Court thereafter held. The clerk shall be allowed one dollar, from each tutorship or curatorship for making out said lists.

It shall further be the duty of said clerk, if he be vested with such power to issue notice, or if not, of the Judge or other person having, under the law, competent authority therefor, to order notice to be issued by the clerk, which shall be served by the Sheriff in the manner in which citations are served upon all such tutors or curators who have failed to qualify as may reside in the parish to appear within five days after the service of said notice, before the said clerk or judge, or other competent authority, and apply for re-appointment under this Act—and for which said Sheriff shall receive the same compensation as is allowed by law for serving citations.

Should the Sheriff neglect to serve the said notice in those cases in which service can be made by him, or to make due return of service of such notice, where it has been made within five days from the date of its service, besides being liable to the minors and other parties interested, for all costs and damages which may have been incurred, he shall be subject to a fine of twenty dollars to be imposed by the Judge for the benefit of the minors, in each case in which he fails to make service, or due return of the service of notice as aforesaid: and if the notice cannot be served, the Sheriff must make his return within twenty days from the time at which it was delivered to him. The same penalty and fine shall be incurred by the Sheriff for the neglect of any duty assigned to him by this Act.

If any tutor or curator should appear within the time designated, and pray for his re-appointment, he must qualify in conformity with the provisions of this Act, by taking the oath prescribed by the preceding fourth section, in addition to which he must further swear that he has caused to be recorded a copy of the letters of tutorship or curatorship originally issued to him, or a certificate of the clerk, showing the date of his original appointment in the parish in which he resides, and in every parish in this State in which he owns immovable property, which letters, or certificate of the clerk, thus recorded shall operate as a mortgage upon his property from the date of his original appointment. But if the tutor has given a special mortgage, then he must swear that the said special mortgage has been recorded in the Parish in which the property mortgaged is situated. The recordation, herein provided for, must be done within forty days after the tutor has applied for reappointment.

If the tutor or curator does not appear within the time specified, or if, after appearing, does not qualify within the forty days, the Clerk, if he has the power, or Judge, or other competent authority, shall proceed to appoint another tutor or curator, as the case may be, in his stead, granting such preferences as are now given by law, in the choice of tutors or curators who shall qualify as directed by this Act, within forty days, and it shall be his duty immediately to apply to the Clerk for copies of the letters of tutorship or curatorship originally given to the person who has failed to requalify, or for a certificate showing the date of the original appointment of his predecessor, which letters or certificate he shall cause to be recorded, unless the same shall have been already recorded in the parish in which his predecessor resides, or if he be dead in the parish in which his predecessor resided, and also in every other parish in the State in which he has reason to believe his predecessor owns or did own immovable property; and if his predecessor gave a special mortgage, which has not been recorded in lieu of the general mortgage, it shall be his duty to have such special mortgage recorded in the parish or parishes in this State in which the property has specially mortgaged is situated; it shall further be his duty to cause the same evidences of any previous tutorship, or curatorship, or of any previous special mortgages to be recorded in the same manner, all of which, when recorded, shall operate as a mortgage against the property of any previous tutors or curators from the date of their respective appointment.

Digitized by Google

For any neglect of the duties prescribed by this section, the tutor or curator so appointed, shall be liable to the minors and other persons interested, for all damages and costs which may be incurred thereby, and shall further be subject, in case any loss or damage to the minor should be thereby sustained, to the criminal laws enacted against tutors who embezzle the property of minors, and upon conviction thereof, after prosecution in due form of law, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for a period not to exceed two years.

It shall further be the duty of every tutor or curator appointed under this section, to institute suit, if it be necessary, against all previous tutors or curators, to recover whatever may be coming to the minors or persons for whom he has been appointed tutor or curator. Provided, that at any time before the newly appointed tutor or curator has qualified under this act, it shall be within the discretion of the person exercising the power of appointing, to reappoint the original tutor or curator, upon his appearing and showing that he has been guilty of no neglect, and offering to requalify in the manner pointed out by this Act. The tutor or curator, neglecting to requalify, shall be liable for all the costs incurred under this section.

SECT. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That when any tutor or curator has removed from, or does not reside in the parish in which he was originally appointed, the notice prescribed by the preceding section shall be sent by the Clerk to the Sheriff of the parish in which said tutor or curator resides, and he shall be allowed twenty (20) days within which to appear and make application for reappointment, and the Sheriff shall be allowed forty days in which to make his return, but must always make his return within twenty days after service of the notice.

Any sheriff neglecting to comply with the duties prescribed by this section, shall be subject to the penalties prescribed for similar neglect, by the previous section.

SECT. 8. Be it further enacted, &c. That where any tutor or curator heretofore appointed, has removed from, or does not reside in the Parish of his original appointment, and his place of residence be unknown, if he does not appear and claim a reappointment within forty days after the first day of July next, it shall be the duty of the competent authority to proceed at once to supply his place by the appointment of another tutor or curator, as the case may be: Provided it be stated in the proceedings for appointment, that the residence of such absent tutor or curator is unknown.

SECT. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That where any tutor or curator, hereafter appointed, removes from the Parish in which he resides at the time of the appointment, to another Parish in this State, it shall be his duty, unless he has given a special mortgage in lieu of a general one against him, immediately after his said removal, to cause the evidences of the mortgage existing against his estate, as tutor or curator, to be recorded in the Parish to which he has removed, and the same course shall be observed on each subsequent removal, or in case any tutor or curator, without removing, should acquire immovable property or slaves, in another Parish, subsequent to his appointment, it shall be his duty to record the evidence of the mortgage against him in said Parish. For any neglect to comply with this section, it shall be the duty of the competent tribunal, to remove such tutor or curator from his office, and to appoint another in his stead.

The said tutor or curator shall further be condemned to pay to the person appointed in his place, not less than one hundred, and not more than one thousand dollars, to be recovered in any competent tribunal.

If any loss or damage should accrue to the minor or minors, or absentee, or person interdicted, in consequence of the failure of the tutor or curator, who has removed to another Parish, or who has acquired immovable property or slaves, after his appointment, in other Parishes than that in which he resides, to record the mortgage existing in favor of said minors or absentees, or persons interdicted in the Parishes in which such property is situated, besides being liable, civily, to the minor or absentee, or persons interdicted, for all such damages, he shall be deemed guilty of an embezzlement, and on conviction thereof, be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the Court.

SECT. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That any person who shall take possession of any property belonging to any minor, who has no tutor, and shall retain the same for the space of sixty days, without having in the meantime made known the facts to the competent tribunal for the appointment of tutors and prayed for the appointment of himself or some other person who is willing and competent to take charge of said tutorship, besides being responsible personally for all damages caused thereby, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and on conviction therefor upon indictment or information, shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the Court.

SECT. 11. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for any person, on tender of the legal fees, to demand the inscription in any mortgage office of any act or document tending to show the existence of a legal mortgage, and also any of the documents or certificates which are made, by this act, evidence of the existence of a mortgage, and it shall be the duty of all recorders of mortgages, upon such application, to record the said acts or evidences of the existence of a mortgage.

SECT. 12. Be it further enacted, &c., That any Clerk of a Court in this State, who shall fail to discharge the duties imposed upon him by this Act, or be guilty of any willful neglect in relation thereto, shall be dismissed from his office by the Judge of the Court of which he is clerk, and shall further be responsible for all such damages as may be sustained by any minor, in consequence of his said failure or neglect to discharge his duties, with a right of appeal, however, from such judgment, to the Supreme Court of the State.

Digitized by Google

SECT. 13. Be it further enacted, &c., That any Judge or judicial officer, who shall fail to discharge the duties imposed upon him by this Act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, from which he may be removed by impeachment or address.

SECT. 14. Be it further enacted, &c. That it shall not hereafter be necessary to reinscribe, after the lapse of ten years, the evidence of the legal mortgages in favor of minors or married women, or persons interdicted, or absentees, but the inscription, when once made, shall remain valid, until the mortgaged debt is extinguished by payment, prescription, or otherwise

SECT. 15. Be it further enacted, &c., That all laws and parts of laws contrary to, or inconsistent with this Act, be, and the same are hereby repealed.

SECT. 16. Be it further enacted, &c., That the State Printer be and is hereby directed to publish, for distribution in pamphlet form, five thousand copies of this Act, so soon after the same becomes a law as possible; to be distributed in the following manner, to-wit: One half-dozen to each of the clerks of the District Courts—one copy to every public officer of the State, and the remainder amongst the members of both branches of the present Legislature; the postage and other expenses therefor to be included in his bill against the State for the public printing.

Mr. King.—As there are several Senators present who were not here last year when this bill was discussed, I feel called on to make a few remarks on the subject.

Mr. Wickliffe.—Before the gentleman proceeds any further, I wish to introduce a bill some sections of which I shall offer as a substitute. This bill has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, and doubtless well considered. It is the production of a gentleman in the other House who is every way competent to perform the task, which fact, I think, he has evinced in his bill.

AN ACT

TO PROVIDE FOR THE REGISTRY OF LEGAL AND TACIT MORTGAGES.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That no legal or tacit mortgage shall have effect unless written evidence thereof be inscribed in the mortgage record, at the domicil of the debtor in the manner and form prescribed for conventional mortgages; and then only for the amount for which the same may be inscribed.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That this written evidence as to minors, interdicted persons and absentees, shall be the official bond or bonds of their tutor or curator, to be given as provided for by existing laws, and by the third section of this Act; and when property which is held in common by a minor and his father or mother, is adjudicated to the father or mother, the judgment adjudicating the property shall mention the amount for which the property is adjudicated, and shall be inscribed in the mortgage records; and the judgment adjudicating the property shall be inoperative and without any effect whatever, until such record is made.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the clerks of the several courts of this State to require a bond of all natural tutors, testamentary tutors and others, who by existing laws are exempt from giving bond with security, for the same amounts as would be required of them, where they required to give security; and it shall be the duty of said clerks to cause said bonds, together with the bonds of all other tutors, of the curators of interdicted persons and of absentees, to be inscribed in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, at the domicil of the tutor or curator, immediately after their execution, and before administering the oath of office or issuing letters of tutorship or curatorship, the costs to be paid by the estate of the minor, interdict, or absentee.

SECT. 4 Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for any tutor or curator to take possession of, or in any way intermeddle with the property of any minor, or interdicted person, which may be acquired by inheritance or donation during the tutorship or curatorship, until he shall have caused said property to be inventoried, and shall have given bond for the same, and caused said bond to be recorded in the office or the Recorder of Mortgages, as provided in the preceding section, and no receipt or acquittance for property acquired shall be valid, or have any effect, unless the bond is inscribed as above provided.

SECT. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That the office of all tutors and curators in the State shall expire on the first day of January, 1856, unless, in the interval, such tutor or curator shall cause to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, at the domicil of said tutor or curator, his bond, given or to be given as before provided, and shall return the same to the clerk's office, with the certificate of the Recorder of Mortgages, showing that it has been duly inscribed.

SECT. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That the written evidence required to be recorded in the case of married women, may consist of the marriage contract, acts of sale of the wife's property, the husband's receipt for property of the wife acquired by her during marriage, by inheritance or donations; or of any written statement or memorandum, made by the husband, wife, or any third person, showing the amount and origin of the mortgage claim: provided that the wife shall establish her demands by legal evidence; and the husband's receipts, the statements and memorandums, above referred to, shall be received to prove registry only, unless they be legal evidence in themselves; and provided, that it shall be the duty of parents, tutors and all other persons, making payments or donations to the husband for account of the wife, to cause all receipts for such payments or donations to be registered in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages of the parish where the husband resides; and no receipt shall be valid or have any force or effect unless recorded as above provided. The provisions of this section shall not be in force, as to those who may have married anterior to the promulgation of this Act, until the first day of January, 1856.

SECT. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That mortgages in favor of minors, interdicted persons, absentees and married women, when once inscribed, shall remain in force without a re-inscription at the end of ten years, until cancelled.

Mr. King.—When this bill was introduced I did not take occasion to explain its features and its objects. Had I done so then I should be relieved of the necessity of doing so now. Deeming the subject of vital importance, I cannot consent to let the bill go before the Senate unexplained. I shall, therefore endeavor to give a brief outline of the evils which it is designed to remedy, and shall conclude with a condensed history of the character, and anticipated operations of the bill itself.

Digitized by Google

I take it for granted that universal assent will be yielded to the proposition that the general policy of our legislation, and the purpose of our laws should be to promote the freest intercourse among members of society, consistent with good government, and that one of our main objects should be to remove restrictions which we may find injurious by their tendency to prevent that easy transmission of property from hand to hand, or from person to person, which is so necessary to the facilities of commercial intercourse. It will not be denied that, cæteris paribus, restrictions on trade, or commerce, are injurious and inexpedient, and that, as a consequence, the removal of such restrictions is a benefit to be desired. Or, stated in general terms restrictions are evils. I do not mean to say that a restriction may not sometimes be necessary; the very existence of government would refute such a proposition. But, on the other hand, it would be as fallacious to argue that because restrictions are sometimes necessary, therefore society may be weighed down with all manner of burthens. Such a doctrine leads to tyranny and despotism. I merely lay down these general propositions as a sort of groundwork for the reasoning by which I shall endeavor to show the propriety and utility of the bill before the Senate—or rather I should say, the original bill, for which the Senator from West Feliciana has introduced a substitute.

The evils of that portion of our law, commonly known as the tacit mortgage system, have long been experienced by the people of Louisiana. They have not required the eye of the lawyer to detect them, nor do they exist only in the cunningly devised theories of discontented, or curious innovators; but, it may justly be said, they are evident to the whole community, with the exception, perhaps, of some whose attachment to antiquated forms prevents their appreciating evil, or desiring reform. In order to elucidate the subject, however, it is necessary that, not contenting myself with a bare assertion of these facts, however evident they may be, I should show some of the evils which result from this system—a system which has long weighed, like an incubus, on our prosperity. In the first place, Sir, the very name is indicative of deceit. A tacit mortgage! That, Sir, is a mortgage whose existence being unknown may operate to the prejudice, or even the ruin, of the unwary or unfortunate purchaser. A tacit mortgage is a sleeping mortgage, hidden from the sight, its presence indicated by no sign or evidence, yet possessing all the vitality and powers of a recorded mortgage. It is evident that the existence of such a system as this must make the title to real property uncertain, and diminish its reliability as security. It must cause doubt and hesitation to trammel the mind of any person wishing to invest his money in real estate. The effect of this must necessarily be, to depreciate the value of real estate, because, where it becomes unreliable as a security, and its title is rendered uncertain it is less sought for, and therefore cannot so valuable proportionately, as where such impediments do not exist. Thus the whole real property of the State is depreciated, and its wealth lessened. This is one of the evils which the bill is designed to remedy. Reasoning conversely from the same grounds, we find that the diminution of this evil must be followed by a corresponding and proportionate benefit. Not only will the depreciation of property consequent on the present system be stayed, but it will advance in value immediately. By thus enhancing the value of real estate, and rendering it more certain and reliable as a security, the owner will be enabled to procure money on it, which now is extremely difficult in this State. In other parts of the world real estate forms the best known security, and money can be borrowed on it at the cheapest rate of interest.

In Europe, a short time ago, money could be procured on real estate at 2½ per cent, and now, owing to the political disturbances, it can be obtained at 3 per cent per annum. In New York, money can easily be realized, on a pledge of real estate at 6 per cent. Indeed, it is a well known fact that, other things being equal, capitalists prefer real estate as security. They consider it, with justice, the best that can be offered. Whatever may happen, our old mother earth generally stands firm, unless shaken by an earthquake. From the very nature of things real estate is the best possible security, under a proper system of law. But how is it in this State? Does experience show that these positions would be correctly taken in reference to real estate in Louisiana, at this moment? Every one will answer the question in the negative without the slightest hesitation. The cause must exist in some defect in our system of law. It is our business to investigate and discover that defect, and we shall not have to go far to find it. It originates, Sir, in the nature of the title to real estate, as affected by the tacit mortgage system: The hidden mortgage which may rest upon it always renders the title uncertain, and for this reason, instead of being considered the best, it has come to be regarded as the worst possible security. In Louisiana real estate is practically dead capital. In the city of New Orleans it is not equal, as security, to common mercantile paper. This, sir, is not the natural result of natural causes. It is the effect of bad legislation.

There are other evils resulting from the tacit mortgage system. The whole thing is a lure, a snare by which innocent persons are entrapped and injured. Suppose, for instance, a man wishes to buy a piece of property. He examines the record and finds nothing to warn him of the hidden danger. He buys the property, and parts with his money for it. He thinks he is secure; he thinks he will enjoy the fruits of his honest labor, his industry or his enterprize. In a few years, he is astonished by one of these hidden mortgages, and he sees himself in a moment deprived of the fruit of his labor which he has earned by the sweat of his brow. Such a system should not be permitted to endure. It ought not to be tolerated in any civilized country; and the only wonder is that the people of Louisiana have not long ago swept it from the statute book. And why should we retain it? We are told that it is intended for the protection of minors and married women against the designs of those who might wish to defraud them. If such were the case, if the system really effected an object so desirable as this, there would be some shadow of an excuse for its perpetuation. But it cannot accomplish the object. So far as married women are concerned, it is notorious that they every day renounce these inestimable mortgage rights which the law gives them. Prompted by natural affection they seldom refuse the importunities or the requests of their husbands when called on to make the sacrifice. The minor also, even under the operation of this infallible system, is dayly robbed by those whose duty it is to protect him. Notwithstanding the vast expense at which we endeavour to protect the rights of the minor, we find, at last, after all our trouble, and after inflicting innumerable and grievous evils on society, that we have failed in our effort; that the security is not absolute. We do not do what we profess to do. We hold out hopes which we cannot realize, and make promises which we cannot fulfil. The community is bound down beneath the rigors of an oppressive and restrictive system, and a total failure to accomplish the end for which it was instituted is the only result. These mortgages do not and cannot afford the protection which they profess to afford, and this fact is known to other legal gentlemen on this floor as well as to myself.

Digitized by Google

And now, Sir, let me speak of the benefit which would be produced by the abrogation of this odious system, and the adoption of the bill before the Senate, In the first place, it will have the effect of capitalizing real estate, that is to say, it will make real estate equivalent to cash, by making it easily convertible into money. I hazard nothing in asserting that if we pass this bill, and relieve the State from the incubus which now weighs so heavily upon her prosperity, we shall add at least fifty millions to our aggregate wealth. Let us then free ourselves from this shirt of Nessus which binds our limbs and impedes our action. Let us throw off the useless encumbrance and stand forth unmanacled and unconstrained. If I am not mistaken in the tone and temper of the Senate, gentlemen will assist me in the effort to redeem our law from this blot which now defaces it. I ask Senators whether, if I present a system which secures all the desirable objects of the tacit mortgage system, and which at the same time is free from its defects,—I ask gentlemen, I say, whether they would refuse to support such a system. There is nothing sacred in the present system—it is not the production of an angel from heaven—it is not the result of divine inspiration or revelation. There is nothing sacrilegious in modifying it if it is capable of modification; ameliorating it, if it is susceptible of amelioration, or abrogating it if abrogation is necessary. I believe that the bill before the Senate embodies a better system than the one now in operation. I believe it affords better security to the minor, because I am convinced that one speaking mortgage is better and more effective than a thousand tacit mortgages. In order to illustrate, still more forcibly, the workings of the system, I will take another case Suppose a man buys a negro on which a tacit mortgage rests. If he has any intention to defraud, what could be easier than for him to ship the negro beyond the limits of the State. There are but few who, not knowing the existence of the mortgage, and having paid their money in good faith, could not justify themselves in such an act. There are many supposable cases of the same kind; but it would be useless for me to direct attention to them, inasmuch as they will doubtless present themselves to the mind of any Senator who reflects on the subject. What then, becomes of this infallible system of tacit mortgages? What do we gain by it, after all our sacrifices, but a total failure?

I will now, Mr. President, not wishing to trespass further on the attention of the Senate, by recapitulating evident arguments, or reproducing superfluous illustrations, proceed to give a brief history of this bill. When I first became a member of this body, I was fully impressed with the importance of the subject, and the necessity of making some modification of the existing law. I communicated with a distinguished member of the bar, now a Senator of the United States, in reference to the matter, and discussed it thoroughly with him, before attempting to embody my ideas in writing. Subsequently I drew up a bill which I presented to that gentleman, and of which I sent copies to many eminent lawyers in the State, asking their opinions, and requesting them to make any suggestions for the improvement of the bill. I spared no means of obtaining information and advice, and every suggestion was thankfully received. After the bill was introduced into the Senate it was referred to the Judiciary Committee, before which it underwent a thorough and critical discussion, and after being improved was brought before the Senate. In this body the whole subject was examined and discussed; the bill was amended in various particulars, and finally passed. It was however defeated in the House. During the succeeding summer, after the adjournment of the Legislature, I again directed my attention to the subject, and applied myself to it with great assiduity. I consulted many friends whose opinions were worth asking and then drew up a bill which, in its essential features, agrees with the bill of that year, but which differs from it in some others. And now, Sir, I would remark that this is not my bill; I do not claim its paternity. It is the joint production of 40 or 50 different minds; and those the best minds in the State. Many distinguished gentlemen have contributed to it in various ways, and among them I may mention Mr. Short, last year an honored member of this body; Mr. Lacey, the distinguished Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. Benjamin, one of our Senators in the Congress of the United States. It has been drawn with care and industry, and embodies the ideas of many eminent men whose talents and experience amply qualify them for so delicate a task. The general theory of the bill, to which its provisions are made to conform, is that all mortgages ought to be open. I imagine that no one will deny that the records of the State ought to show the position of all the real property of the State. This is not the case at present. The bill seeks to accomplish it. Gentlemen may say that under this bill minors can be injured. That is true; but it is likewise true that they may be injured under the present system. But if we can protect them as well under this bill as they are now protected, the benefits derived in other respects from its operation ought to weigh down the balance on its side. The property of minors ought to be protected in the same way as that of other persons. The law should regard the rights of all with a jealous eye. It ought not to permit one to be injured more than another. It is very true that this bill does not absolutely prevent the possibility of fraud. It is true that fraud may be committed in spite of it. So murder may be committed and is committed, but no one will contend that therefore we should have no law against it. If murder be committed, the perpetrator is liable to be punished. The principle is, that a person guilty in any other way offending, should be punished according to law. If then, crime be committed, we can attribute it only to the fallibility of human nature, and the imperfection of human institutions. We have endeavored in this bill, to do every thing necessary to secure the rights of the minor and the married woman, and to punish any fraud which may be perpetrated against their rights. We have given what we consider a good bill. It is the best we could frame, after the most mature reflection, and after consultation with the best legal minds of the State. We approached the subject with a desire to get rid of a great and oppressive evil; an evil whose existence is acknowledged by almost every person whose experience in our law enables him to form a correct judgment. If the bill needs improvement, let it be improved; if it needs modification, let it be modified; if it needs amendments in any way, let it be amended. Indeed there are several amendments which I design to offer myself, and which may perhaps render the bill acceptable to every member. If other gentlemen have amendments to propose, I ask that they be offered, as I shall take great pleasure in receiving any information, or suggestions which may benefit the bill. If such amendments are just and proper they will no doubt be adopted. Let us, at all events, endeavor to fulfill the expectations of the public by doing something towards an improvement of the present law. Let us not assist in retaining and perpetuating an odious and oppressive system, merely because the bill does not suit all of us in every particular.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Palfrey—At the last session of the Legislature, Mr. President, when a bill of a similar character with that now before the Senate was under discussion, I felt it my duty, although unaccustomed to the investigation of strictly legal questions such as this, to point out, oppose and finally endeavour to amend what I considered very objectionable features of the bill. Some of the amendments which I then proposed, I had the good fortune to make acceptable to the Senate as then constituted, and they passed with the bill; others did not concurred in, reaching no higher vote than a tie, and so were not adopted. Although the bill before the Senate differs in many minor particulars from that of the last session, yet, considering that in its main features it embodies nearly the same provisions, and will, in its effects, bring forth the same disastrous results, I again feel it my duty embarrassed as I still am by a consciousness of my inability to do entire justice to the importance of the subject, to comment on what I consider defects, and if possible, prevent its becoming laws, or if this is not in my power, at least so amend it as to diminish its pernicious influences. I trust, Sir, that in this endeavor, I shall, as the Senate progresses, have the assistance of others more competent to the struggle than myself among whom I see around me, and who are able to bring to the consideration of the subject, what I cannot, the resources of a thorough education in the profession of the law, and all the lights which can be derived from legal practice and experience. In connection I cannot avoid paying a passing tribute of regard for one, who at the last session was in our midst, contributing by the manly and powerful vigor of his energetic mind to the efforts which were then made in opposition to the bill I have now under consideration. Although not strictly in order, I hope, I shall be allowed to avail myself of this occasion, the only appropriate occasion that has yet presented, to bear testimony to the high character of a departed public servant. It is hardly necessary for me to explain that I allude to the late C. Nicholls. From his seat in this Senate, without a dissenting voice among the members of the District, transferred to a seat upon the bench. Those who were fellow labourers with him on this floor, can bear witness with me to his accuracy in the public service, to the urbanity and kindness of his social intercourse, to his candor, and freedom from unkind personalities, in ordinary debate, and to the absence in his course, of partisan asperity or violence. But none can do full justice to his character or fully appreciate his loss, who have not known him in private life, as well as in the sphere to which he was called, upon leaving the Senate. In the Judicial station to which he was elevated by the suffrages of his fellow citizens, he showed himself a firm, independent, impartial and enlightened magistrate. His love of the immutable principles of truth and justice, imparted confidence in his decisions; and he was viewed as much in the light of a friendly arbiter as a judge, while in the administration of the duties of his office in what relates to criminal law. Justice was so tempered with clemency as to deprive punishment of much of the cruelty and degradation of its infliction. But he has left us in comparative youth and the dawn of his usefulness, to appear before a higher tribunal than any earthly court, where we trust he is now receiving the reward of the "just made perfect".

To return from a digression which I trust will be pardoned on account of the sacredness of the subject, I desire to say that if I could see in the bill before the Senate, any satisfactory and sufficient substitute for the security given by existing laws to the rights of minors and married women by resorting to the instrumentality of recorded mortgages, I for one would withdraw all opposition to the bill. I am not so blindly attached to any particular system of law, as to see no merit in any other system—and I confess I have perceived much to disapprove and regret in the consequences which sometimes flow from the present system of securing those rights by means of tacit mortgages. But it seems that without great circumspection there must be want of safety to individual rights in some quarter either to those interests which belong to creditors or capitalists, or those of an antagonist character belonging to minors and married women. Now, which of those should be protected by the law? the strong or the weak? those who are able to protect themselves by personal scrutiny into titles and records? or those who are without the capacity to do so? I have no hesitation in declaring that in my opinion, the protection of the laws should be afforded to the weak and unprotected.

The supporters of this bill have uniformly declared that it is the object of the bill to convert unknown into known mortgages. If this object were indeed accomplished by this bill to the effect of making those mortgages general in their extent and bearing, so as to create a lien on the property of the tutor or the husband whenever and wherever it was acquired subject to the marriage or the appointment, the end desired would then be accomplished. But is this so?—I think not. The bill does in point of fact contain various specifications of acts to be done by the tutor or husband to accomplish this object, and provides certain penalties to be inflicted for omissions of performance of those acts. But suppose that infractions of the law are committed, for which there are temptations constantly presented, and the penalty inflicted, will this restore the minor or married woman to the enjoyment of their rights? By no means. It will be found upon trial, I fear, that this bill does not provide the means of enforcing the recording of mortgages in favor of minors and married women in parishes other than that of the residence of the tutor or husband, and as they acquire property from time to time. In this respect, the bill, while it gives "the word of promise to the ear, still breaks it to the hope", for I conceive it contains no practical enforcement of its most important requirement.

Digitized by Google

It has been urged repeatedly that the system of tacit mortgages operates as an incubus on the prosperity of our State, and more particularly of the city of New Orleans. That it produces a feeling of uncertainty and doubt in relation to the validity of titles to real estate, which drives capital away, prevents investments in such property in our State, and retards its growth and prosperity. But if we look around, may we not find other causes for this want of prosperity and growth, this unwillingness to invest, besides the one alleged? Have not these laws always existed in our State, and has she not in other times and under other circumstances been highly prosperous notwithstanding? How was it up to the year 1835 or 1836?—Was there ever a more rapid growth witnessed, a greater prosperity enjoyed by any community than by the city of New Orleans for many years previous to that time? Cannot the decline of her prosperity be attributed to other causes than to the existence of laws which have existed since the formation of the government?

May not this decline be attributed either in the first place to the construction of modes of conveyance for the western country produce to other markets than that of New Orleans; to the insalubrity of the place, and the manifest indifference of the city authorities to improving the condition of its health—to the enormous taxes, so discouraging to investments in real estate—to the exposed condition of all descriptions of produce sent to that market, as well as the extraordinary charges to which such produce is subjected, virtually driving their customers to the necessity of shipping to other markets whenever in their power? If these laws were the cause of want of prosperity, would they not affect the agricultural interest as well as that of the city? Clearly they would. And where is the evidence of want of prosperity to the agricultural interest except such as naturally proceeds just at this moment, and which I trust is only temporary, from the depression in the price of one of our staple productions. Is not the value of real estate in the country gradually rising, and as rapidly as is consistent with a sound and permanent prosperity and a rational confidence in a progressive growth? Sir, I for one do not believe that the slow advancement of the city of New Orleans in population and wealth is to be attributed to the existence of the laws which are here sought to be abrogated—I believe it is to be attributed to other causes entirely. Let the city authorities have their streets thoroughly cleansed; improve the condition of its health by wholesome sanitary regulations; let them use more economy in the details of the city government, and thereby place it in their power to reduce the enormous taxes under which their people are groaning; let them invite, not drive away the produce of the interior, or the shipping from abroad, by more moderate wharf charges, and port dues; let them, by liberal subscriptions on the part of their wealthy men, their capitalists, extend their railroads and open new avenues to trade and new encouragements to agricultural productions from lands now lying waste, particularly westward, which will then be all their own—let them do this, and I then believe they will see their commerce thrive, their prosperity increase, without the necessity of prostrating the interests of orphans and feeble women at the feet of the commercial interest.

Mr. President, much contumely has been thrown or attempted to be thrown on this feature in our laws by giving it ill names and subjecting it to dark and dismal illustrations—It has on some occasions been made to appear odious by the use of harsh and vituperative epithets, such as, that it is a treacherous law, that it is a law enacted for the encouragement of fraud—it has been compared to a Spanish stilletto formed to stab in the dark, and fancies of a like nature. Now, Sir, though not much given to figures of speech, or accustomed to illustrate my argument by the use of figurative images, I would rather compare this law, which has had the sanction of ages of safe experience; which has been handed down to us by the soundest law-givers of former times, and which has been engrafted into our Civil Code by the ablest jurisconsults which the State of Louisiana has ever known, not to a stilletto to be used treacherously and for murderous purposes, but on the contrary, to a shield through which by its silent but efficient power, protection is afforded to those who are unable to protect themselves, from the insidious attempts of cunning rapacity, and from the direful consequences of unfaithful administration of guardian trusts. It affords, in my opinion, one of the most powerful incentives to industry and frugality, which can be devised by human wisdom, for it gives the assurance that there is security in providing for offspring, and that if children are deprived of the protection of the natural parent, the law steps in and secures them in the enjoyment of those comforts and appliances which a life of toil and assiduity had gathered for their use. For my own part, when my head rests upon its dying pillow, I can conceive of no reflection which can visit my mind, except indeed those which I trust I may be made to derive from the influences of a religious faith, I say, I can conceive of no other reflection of a more cheering nature in that trying moment, than that those I leave behind deprived of my support and protection, the laws of my country will protect, and that they will not be subjected to the chances of an improvident guardianship to be thrown into indigent circumstances and left to the cold charities of an unfeeling world.

Mr. President, I repeat again, that so soon as I am made to perceive that this bill or any other presented, offers a safe substitute for existing provisions, in the shape of recorded mortgages, securing equally well the rights of minors and married women, I will withdraw all opposition to the measure and vote for it; but until I do, I must persevere in the position I have here taken—And I will take the liberty of suggesting that perhaps the better plan of digesting some well enacted law on the subject, would be by the appointment of a commission for that purpose, to sit during the recess, and afterwards to be submitted to the consideration of the General Assembly.

Mr. Trudeau.—Although in favor of some system of registration of those mortgages which are now called tacit, I cannot consent to support the bill, in the form in which it appears before the Senate. For, sir, while it removes the security which the law now affords to minors and married women, it offers no efficient substitute. The policy of our law is to protect the rights of those persons, and it is a policy the justice of which commends it to our respect. But, sir, this bill can be amended, and in such a manner as I think, to render it acceptable.

There is one portion in particular, to which I am opposed. It is that section which leaves it optional with the tutor to record the mortgage or not, I will read the section:

Digitized by Google

SECT. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a tutor for a minor, or a curator of an absentee or interdicted person, shall have been designated by the judge, or other person having the competent authority to appoint tutors or curators, the clerk of the Court shall deliver to the person so designated, or to his agent or attorney, a copy of the order of appointment in order that it may be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in conformity to this act, and letters of tutorship or curatorship shall not issue until said order shall have been recorded, and until the person appointed tutor or curator, shall have made and subscribed the following oath:

"I (A. B.) tutor of the child (or children) named ————, or curator of————, an absentee, or of————, an interdicted person, as the case may be, do solemnly swear or (or affirm, if the party have conscientious scruples against making an oath), that I have caused the order of appointment given to me to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, in the parish in which I reside, and in every parish in this State, in which I own immoveable property.

"Which oath must be recorded by the clerk in his office.

"Nothing in this act shall prevent tutors from giving a special mortgage in lieu of the general mortgage in favor of minors in the manner provided by law, but in all such cases every tutor before entering on the duties of his office, instead of the last clause of the above affidavit, shall be required to make oath that the special mortgage has been recorded in the parish or parishes, as the case may be, in this State, in which the property, so specially mortgaged is situated."

Thus it will be seen that instead of a mortgage we have a simple oath. A person can obtain letters of tutorship or curatorship, whether he has recorded the mortgage or not. It is only necessary for him to swear that he has done so. Now, sir, I am not willing to let these precious rights rest upon the security of a simple oath, which may be true, or may be false. The man who wishes to defraud would not be deterred by the oath he would be forced to take. I want these mortgages recorded, and I want the registration made a certainty. The desire is to substitute a special instead of a tacit and general mortgage. If we intend to do this, instead of the oath, made necessary by the bill, we should require the certificate of the Recorder of Mortgages as proof of the fact that the registration has actually been made in his office. If the person have not sufficient property in one parish, then he should be compelled to procure the certificates of the Recorders sufficient to pledge property worth one fourth more than the amount for which it is mortgaged. For such a provision I would vote, but for the bill as it stands now, I cannot vote. I think the gentleman from New Orleans himself will see the force of my objection and will admit the propropriety of the change which I propose, I should like to have the bill referred to the Committee in order that the change may be made. There are other modifications which might be made with advantage and if the Committee could combine the good which exists in the two bills, and reject the evil, I think a bill acceptable to all might be formed.

Mr. Ryan.—I do not wish to enter into any elaborate argument on the merits of the bill before the Senate, although I must say that I consider the subject one of great importance to the interests of the State. Now, sir, there seem to be various and conflicting opinions in reference to this matter. One side contends that the bill will tend to break down those safeguards which the law now throws around the rights of minors and married women, and leave them a prey to the wicked designs of wicked persons. Others say, on the contrary, that the present system impedes commercial operations, diminishes the value of property and and retards the prosperity of the State. I, sir, am distinctly in favor of abolishing tacit mortgages; that is, of devising some means by which they can be made known to the community. I will vote to do so if I am the only Senator on this floor that does. But I do not say that I can support this bill. In the first place it is so prolix that its provisions are with difficulty impressed on the mind. As far as I understand it, I think it will tend to render inefficacious those laws which are now the guarantee of the rights of minors and married women. This is a grievous fault. The protection of those classes has always claimed the attention of our legislators, and directed the policy of our laws, and we should not abandon that policy even to secure the benefits which might otherwise result from the bill. But I agree with the gentleman who has last spoken (Mr. Trudeau), that a bill can be framed which will secure all that is to be desired, and at the same time obviate the fatal objection to which I have alluded. The peculiarities of our existing laws on this subject, render the interests of the minor and married women antagonistic to those of the rest of the community. A very casual investigation will suffice to prove this. Our object should be to reconcile as far as possible these conflicting interests. I shall vote for a bill which, while it relieves commerce from the fetters which now restrict it, will effectually protect the rights of the minor and married woman. Their defences, sir, should be strengthened not weakened. The hand of legislation should be interposed to protect, not to oppress them. There can be no doubt that great evils exist under the present system. It was put in operation with good intentions on the part of those who formed it; but it has produced results which are so injurious as to require a change. Under it the honest purchaser is frequently defrauded, so that what was intended as a defence of the rights of one party had the effect of seriously injuring another. I repeat that I will vote for any bill which shall remedy the evils of the present law while retaining the safeguards which now prevent aggression on the rights of minors. We must protect the minors and married women of the State. Not even the demands of commerce should induce us to abandon them. But this being secured I do not see how any senator can object to making public, those mortgages which are now tacit, or hidden. I do not see why we should not pass a bill to make public the rights of minors, so that all the world can know them. Why should we not do this? How can we injure minors by making their rights known? On the contrary, sir, so far from being injured, they will be benefitted by it. Capitalists, sir, are cautious people. They always want to know what rights or incumbrances rest on any property that may be offered to them. They make strict investigation on this point, but what do their researches avail when a tacit mortgage, operative by mere force of law, may attach to the property. They go to the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, and there they find no evidence of a mortgage. They buy the property. Years and years elapse, and suddenly, when reposing in fancied security a tacit mortgage is made known, a mortgage of which he knew absolutely nothing—and the property is wrested from the possessor. Thus the purchaser is liable to be defrauded, and frequently is defrauded. This is one of the evils of the present system, and it bears hard on minors because it tends to depreciate the value of their property. We should, therefore, make these rights open and not cover them up so that they become invisible. As I said when I commenced, I do not intend to make a speech on this subject nor am Iprepared to argue it at length. It is of great importance and should be acted on with that calm and and mature deliberation which becomes the Senate I have endeavored, hastily enough to explain my views in relation to the bill, I am in favor of the general principle which the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. King) enunciated in his remarks, but I think the bill does not provide ample enough securities for the rights of minors and married women. I believe, however, that a bill can be framed which will obviate this difficulty, and I am therefore in favor of a reference to the committee.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Wickliffe.—I do not rise for the purpose of inflicting a set speech on the Senate. I do not wish to consume time uselessly now, as I know we are likely to have a three weeks' fight over this bill. The proper course will be to take up the bill section by section and discuss it. I must say, sir, that I approach this subject with great delicacy, since I fully appreciate its importance, and am conscious that we ought not to act upon it except with calmness and deliberation. The Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King) has said that the bill is the emanation of forty of the best minds in the State. I do not pretend to contradict his statement; it will be sufficient for my purpose to draw attention to the very first section.

It reads thus

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Kepresentatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the first day of April 1855, no mortgage shall be enforced or exist against a third person acting in good faith, unless the mortgage is duly recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages. This record shall be made in order to affect landed property and slaves attached thereto in the parish where such property is situated, and to affect other slaves in the parish where the debtor has his domicil or usual residence.

Why, sir, here is a conflict, or what may give rise to a conflict, at the very outset. Who is to decide this question, whether the person acted in good faith? To what tribunal is it to be referred? How are we to know whethor or not he acted in good faith until that point is investigated—and how can it be investigated unless judicially?

This, sir, is a serious difficulty. To say that a mortgage shall not be enforced, or exist against a third person, acting in good faith is to give a pretext for endless litigation on that very point. It is a question which cannot be determined until it is made the subject of a legal investigation. I would take occasion to repeat here that I do not deny that this bill is, as the gentleman asserted, the emanation of forty of the best minds in the State. I have great confidence in the judgment of the distinguished Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and also in that of my honorable friend, who, last year, presided over the Committee on Lands and Levees. I can only express the hope that the incongruities I have remarked in the bill are not their work. I will now direct the attention of the Senate to the 10th section. It reads as follows:

Sect. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That any person who shall take possession of any property belonging to any minor, who has no tutor, and shall retain the same for the space of sixty days, without having in the mean time made known the facts to the competent tribunal for the appointment of tutors, and prayed for the appointment of himself or some other person who is willing and competent to take charge of said tutorship, besides being responsible personally far all damages caused thereby, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and on conviction therefor upon indictment or information, shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the Court.

Now, sir, I venture the assertion that the effect of this section will be to prevent persons qualifying as tutors. It must necessarily be so. There are times when it might be impossible for any person to make the required declaration within the specified time, and then the minor would be deprived of the benefit of a tutor. For who would risk taking charge of an estate for a minor, when, if he should be prevented from going before a Court within the sixty days he would be subjected to fine and imprisonment? The gentleman shakes his head. Does he still think the bill the emanation of forty of the best minds in the State? Well, sir, let us suppose that a person goes to the Judge and asks him to make the appointment, and no person can be found to qualify, what is to be done then? There are times when it might be extremely difficult to find any one willing to take the appointment, and yet the bill would prevent any person from taking charge of the estate, till a tutor could be found, unless with such trouble or risk as few would be willing to incur. The gentleman has told us that the bill affords ample protection to minors. Is this what he calls ample protection? Why, sir, this section takes away every security which the law now affords.

Again, sir, the duties imposed on clerks of court, by this bill, are of such a nature, that not a man in the State could perform them within the time specified. Why, sir, in the parish of West Feliciana alone, the work could not be done in two months and yet the bill declares that it must be done within ten days.

Besides this, it would be a moral impossibility for notaries public to perform the duties required of them. For these reasons I prefer the House bill, it being free from the objections I have enumerated.

M. King.—I beg leave to say a few words in reply to the gentleman who last addressed the Senate. When that gentleman offers the House bill as a substitute for the one which I have introduced, I shall have something to say in regard to it. Till then, I shall postpone any remarks on that subject. I do not feel called on now to say more than that there are some features of the bill which are very good, but there are others which require much amendment. At present, I shall confine my remarks to the bill before us, and to answering the objections made by the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe) The first section of this bill reads thus:

Sect. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened; That from and after the first day of April 1855, no mortgage shall be enforced or exist against a third person, acting in good faith unless the mortgage is duly recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages. This record shall be made in order to affect landed property and slaves attached thereto in the parish where such property is situated, and to affect other slaves in the parish where the debtor has his domicil or usual residence.

Digitized by Google

Now, sir, nothing can be clearer than that section—nothing more intelligible. Yet, what is the position of the opponents of this bill? At one time we hear them exclaim that minors are not sufficiently protected; that even now they are liable to fall a prey to the arts of the designing and dishonest, and that we are about to break down their only defences. Why, sir, they are opposing a bill which tends to place the equitable rights of minors in the strongest possible position; they are objecting to a section which effectually prevents persons who may wish to defraud, from getting the benefit of their own malpractices When we see such opposition as this is it not clear that gentlemen are animated rather by a desire to kill this bill than by any regard for the rights of minors? By the provisions of this bill if the tutor omits to make the necessary registration he is subjected to a heavy penalty. It is said, by the opponents of the bill that this will not operate as a security in every case. It is true that it will not. It is true likewise that the law punishing murder does not prevent the occasional occurrence of murder. Suppose that a dishonest tutor should fail to record the mortgage—are we, on that account, to permit him to gain by his own malfeasance? Are we to suffer him to enjoy the fruits of his fraud? Is he to be permitted to defraud the minor with impunity? No sir, not by the aid of any vote of mine. I have too high a regard for the rights of minors, and too vivid an appreciation of our duty towards them to suffer any such thing as that if it can be avoided. When it is shown that the tutor has failed in his duty, he should not be permitted to reap the benefit of his misconduct. The object of the section is to prevent such a result and to secure the registration of these mortgages. Yet the gentleman who claims to be such a friend of the minor, opposes that very section.

Mr. Wickliffe.—The gentleman appears to misunderstand the nature of my objection. What I said was, that the first section, by leaving room for conflict and litigation, defeats the very object of the bill.

Mr. King.—Turn now to the 10th section. It says:

Sect. 10. Be it further, enacted, etc., That any person who shall take possession of any property belonging to any minor, who has no tutor, and shall retain the same for the term of sixty days, without having in the mean time, made known the facts to the competent tribunal for the appointment of tutors and prayed for the appointment of himself or some other person who is willing and competent to take charge of said tutorship, besides being responsible personally for all damages caused thereby, shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement, and on conviction therefor upon indictment or information, shall be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the Court.

Now, sir, strike out this section, and the protection it gives to minors, and what will be their position? The section does not prevent a person from acting as a friend of the minor for the space of sixty days. If, at any time, during that period, he goes before the Court, says to whom the property belongs and prays for the appointment of a tutor, he shows that he has no wish to defraud—that he has no criminal intention. Of course, in that case, he is not liable to any punishment. But strike out the section, and what then is the situation of the minor? It is plain that a person, having dishonest intentions, might take the property, neglect to qualify, or to give information, and keep it for ever. The minor would have no recourse. He would see his property torn from him without any hope of redress. This would be the result of striking out this section. Now, sir, there is nothing in the history of the discussions on this subject that has struck me with such peculiar force as the anomalous, and often contradictory positions occupied by the opponents of this bill. At one moment we are told that it does not afford sufficient protection to the rights of minors; that it will break down all the safeguards which the law now throws around them, and leave them an easy prey to the designs of the wicked and dishonest tutor. The next moment the ground of attack is shifted, and the supporters of the bill find themselves compelled to defend the rights of minors against the assaults of those who claim to be their peculiar champions. It was so last year when the measure was discussed in the Senate, and the debate to-day, is a repetition of the same thing. I hope, in spite of the efforts which are made in opposition, that the Senate will pass this bill. I have not said it is the best that could be framed, or that human sagacity could devise, but said, what I now repeat, that it is the production of many of the best minds in the State, and I beg Senators to understand that I have not the vanity to wish myself included in the number.

Mr. Wickliffe.—I must again trouble the Senate with a word or two. The gentleman from New Orleans asks what will be the position of minors if we strike out the 10th section. Does the gentleman ask that question seriously? Does he not know—and he a lawyer too—that if a person take possession of the property of a minor, and refuse or omit to qualify, and any injury is done, a tacit mortgage attaches by mere operation of law? This, it appears to me, is a sufficient security. But what is the effect of the section in question? It declares that if a person shall take possession of property belonging to a minor, and shall retain it for sixty days without making the facts known and praying for the appointment of a tutor, he shall be considered guilty of embezzlement, and fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the Court. I contend that such a provision as this must operate to the injury of minors. There are many cases in which a friend of the minor perhaps ineligible himself, would take charge of the estate and attend to it till a tutor could be appointed. But he would not be willing to do it if, in case he were prevented from going before the Court within the sixty days, he would be subjected to fine and imprisonment. In times of epidemics how many successions are left in this way, in the city of New Orleans, when, perhaps, it might be impossible to appear before a Court within the specified time? Yet the section would prevent any friend of the minor from acting in his behalf. This is what the Senator calls protection to minors. For my part, I think it is just the reverse.

Mr. Lacey.—When the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King) who introduced this bill, stated that it was one of the most important that had come before the Senate, his words met with a hearty response from me. It is truly a bill whose importance demands from us our most serious consideration. Upon its solution depend to some extent, the vast commercial interests of our State, and the rights of a large portion of our population. For one, I shall give to the bill as hearty a support as the nature of my obligations will permit. I regret that I do not feel authorized in going as far as I did last year. At that time I gave a zealous support to the bill, without considering those constitutional objections which have since presented themselves to my mind. As Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary I likewise supported the bill this year, but I must state that, in the Committee, no constitutional objections were raised. I had then no doubts in regard to the bill. Yet after reflecting on the subject and carefully examining both bills—the one introduced by the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King) and that brought forward by the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe.) I entertain no doubt that each contains a section which is in violation of the organic law of the State. I shall strive to amend the bill in that reseect. If I cannot succeed in that —if the Senate differ with me in opinion on this point, and refuse to strike that sec ion from the bill, I shall bow to their decision, and record my vote in its favor. Before going any farther I will endeavor to elucidate my views on the constitutional point to which I have referred. By turning to article 3298 of the Civil Code, gentlemen will see the effect of a portion of the bill Here let me remark, sir, that, having in view the great importance of this subject, I shall feel the less hesitation in consuming so much of the time and attention of the Senate as I deem necessary for a full examination of the bill. Article 3298 of the Civil Code is in these words:

Digitized by Google

A mortgage exists without being recorded in favor of minors, interdicted and absent persons, on the property of their tutors, curators, and others over whose property the law grants them a tacit mortgage, either general or special.

What is the law at present? What is the statute engraven on the Civil Code as a protection to minors, interdicted and absent persons, &c.? The question is answered by the article of the Code I have just quoted. They have a mortgage on the property of their tutors and curators without being compelled to have it recorded. The forms of law which are necessary to give validity to other mortgages are not necessary in these cases. It is easy to understand the operation of this article, but it is not so easy to find a constitutional method of freeing ourselves from it. It underlies our whole system of law, like a hidden monster, ready, at a moment's warning to start into vigorous life and activity. It bears upon the commercial interests of our State like a burthen whose weight is almost intolerable. Gladly, sir, would I adopt any constitutional means to throw it off; gladly would I relieve the community from the evil consequences of this erroneous system, if I can do it in any way consistent with my obligations to the fundamental law. But, sir, let us examine the proposal of this bill, and see if it is sanctioned by this essential prerequisite. This contemplates nothing more nor less than the complete and final extinction of all tacit mortgages. It says that after the 1st day of April 1855, no mortgage shall exist, which has not been recorded. The bill introduced by the Senator from West Feliciana, [Mr. Wickliff-] contains substantially, the same provision. One bill declares that no tacit mortgage shall exist after April 1st, 1855; the other does not fix the time at which they shall expire. Both, however, agree in declaring that no mortgage shall exist unless it be inscribed. The Civil Code gives a certain right to certain parties. A bill introduced by the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King,) cuts off the existence of that right on the 1st of April, 1855, and a bill brought forward by the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe) terminates it as soon as that bill becomes a law. There can be no possible doubt of the intention of the present law or its legal effect. It gives a vested right;—and is not that vested right destroyed by the bills? The Code expressly declares that the mortgage shall be tacit and shall attach without the necessity of a recordation. Does not the bill declare that the mortgage must be public, and that it shall not attach unless recorded? Is this not an attack on vested rights, which we have no power to destroy? Is it not in conflict with that article of the Code which calls those vested rights into existence? Is it not a violation of the organic law itself? Let me refer to article 109 of the Constitution, in order to show clearly and undeniably, that there is a violation of the organic law. This is the article:

No expost facto law, nor any law impairing the obligation of contracts, shall be passed, nor vested rights be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation previously made.

I see now before me some of the framers of that Constitution; honorable members of the Convention which made it. What do they think of this proposition? The Constitution tells us that vested rights shall not be divested. Now, sir, these rights are vested rights within the meaning of the Constitution, and they are divested by the bill. This must be clear to every person who investigates the subject. Under this section of the bill a palpable violation of the Constitution, which we have sworn to protect, would be committed by the divesting of vested rights. Being fully impressed with the correctness of this position I shall, therefore, at the proper time, move to strike from the bill, that section which declares that no mortgage shall exist unless it be recorded, as being in violation of the Constitution of the State. I am aware of the reply which will, doubtless be made to my argument; that State Legislatures have the right to pass such inscription laws as they may deem necessary. This ground may be taken by those who disagree with me on this point, and the case of Bronson vs. Lampshire, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, may be brought forward to sustain their position. But, after an attentive examination of that case, I cannot find anything in it to justify the opposite opinion. I do not find that it was anywhere held that a State Legislature possessed the right of repealing a law previously framed, and under which certain vested rights had accrued. Let gentleman refer to the decision and form a judgment on it themselves. The question was in regard to the ownership of a tract of land in the State of New York. The Legislature of that State, in order to perfect land titles had required them to be recorded. The point came up as to the constitutionality of this act; now what says the Supreme Court of the United States? I will read from the opinion of the Court.

"The Court are not inclined to adopt this reasoning, or to consider this as a case coming fairly within the clause of the Constitution of the United States relied on by the plaintiff. The only contract made by the State is a grant to John Cornelius, his heirs and assigns, of the land in question: the patent contains no covenant to do or not to do any further act in relation to the land; and we do not, in this case, feel at liberty to create one by implication. The State has not by this act impaired the force of the grant; it does not profess or attempt to take the land from the assigns of Cornelius, and give it to one not claiming under him; neither does the award produce that effect: the grant remains in full force, the property conveyed is held by his grantee, and the state asserts no claims to it. The question between the parties is, which of the deeds from Cornelius carries the title. Presuming that the laws of New York authorized a soldier to convey his bounty land before receiving a patent, and that at the date of the deeds there was no law compelling the grantees to record them, they would take priority from their date. This is the legal result of the deeds, but there is no contract on the part of the State, that the priority of title shall depend solely on the principles of the common law, or that the State shall pass no law imposing on a grantee the performance of acts which were not necessary to the legal operation of his deed at the time it was delivered. It is within the undoubted power of State legislatures to pass recording acts, by which the older grantee shall be postponed to a younger, if the prior deed is not recorded within the limited time; and the power is the same whether the deed is dated before or after the passage of the recording act. Though, the effect of such law is to render the prior deed fraudulent and void against a subsequent purchaser, it is not a law impairing the obligation of contracts; such too is the power to pass acts of limitations, and their effect. Reasons of sound policy have led to the general adoption of laws of both descriptions, and their validity cannot be questioned. The time and manner of their operation, the exceptions to them, and the acts from which the time limited shall begin to run, will generally depend on the sound discretion of the Legislature, according to the nature of the titles, the situation of the country, and the emergency which leads to their enactment. Cases may occur where the provisions of a law on those subjects may be so unreasonable as to amount to a denial of a right, and call for the interposition of the Court; but the present is not one."

Digitized by Google

As a general principle, sustained, by the decision from which I have just quoted, Louisiana has, undoubtedly a right to pass registration laws, in order to have proof of an act. This is in the case of a simple grant, for the compulsory registration of which it is clear the Legislature has a right to pass a law. Far different is the case where there is a law in existence giving certain rights to minors and married women. These are vested rights within the meaning of the Constitution and cannot be divested by any legislative act. The decision of the Supreme Court, lends no countenance to the doctrine that such a power is in our hands. It only confirms the necessity of a registration in order to perfect a title. But when a pre-existing law says that such a registration is not necessary to give validity to a mortgage, and under that law a mortgage has been created in favor of a minor, can any gentleman contend that a subsequent act could set aside, or destroy rights thus acquired? I repeat that when the object is simply to perfect a title, by registration, the act may be constitutional; but when it attacks vested rights, acquired under a previous law, I think there can be no doubt that it would be unconstitutional. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Jackson against Lamphire, is inapplicable here; as the cases are not by any means analogous. It cannot, in my opinion, affect the question of the constitutionality of this bill. Nevertheless, if I can be convinced that it is constitutional, or if the Senate, in its wisdom, shall refuse to sustain me in my motion to strike out the objectionable section, I shall yield my own views, and vote for the bill as perfect a bill as could be made by forty times forty of the best legal minds in the State. Yet I contend that we cannot pass a law interfering with the rights of the minors and married women of our State, and if we had the power I should doubt the policy of exercising it in such a matter. Let the rights which they have acquired, and the privileges which the law guaranties to them, be preserved. Let them be considered sacred and inviolable, nor profaned by the violent hand of legislation. Let us endeavor to enforce the registration of these mortgages, but let us not employ our legislative hands in the pollution of the rights which result from them.

I will now proceed to call attention to the details of the bill, and give my opinion thereon, premising that, apart from the unconstitutional provision to which I have alluded, they meet my entire approbation. The penalty which the bill imposes on tutors and curators in case they neglect to comply with the provisions of the law has been objected to by one gentleman. I contend that the only practicable method in which we can enforce the registration, is by a heavy penalty in case of omission. The bill may be called a bill of penalties, but that is its strength, it is the only way to make it effectual. It may also be considered long; but it is necessarily long. The transition from an old to a new system, particularly in such an important matter, involves complex details which cannot be compressed into the circumscribed limits of an ordinary act of legislation. It may not be read, on account of its length; but that should not prevent persons from reading it, I will now, sir, proceed to show that the bill is not the bugbear which it has been represented; and to do this I shall have to make a sort of running commentary on its various provisions. The first provision of the bill, after the general injunction contained in the first section, relates to wives. I must here state that in all its parts the bill is perfectly clear, from beginning to end. As I have said, its first object is to put on record the mortgages in favor of wives. The courtesy and urbanity which so preeminently distinguish the honorable gentleman who introduced the bill, induced him to pay his first attentions to the fairer portion of creation, and it was right that he should do so. Now, sir, what does the bill do? Where the wife has a secret or tacit mortgage, what says the bill? It uses these words:

SECT. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of every notary public, or other officer exercising the functions of a notary public, to cause to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in the parish where the party resides, against whom the mortgage created may exist, every act passed before him in which under existing laws of this State, a legal mortgage is created in favor of the wife on the property of the husband; whether the said act be a marriage contract or any other act which the wife may have brought by way of dower at the time of marriage, or receipts or other acts serving to show the amount of money or other property received by her, or by her husband for her account during the marriage. That any notary or person exercising the functions of notary, who shall neglect to comply with the requirements of this section as to the recording of the acts therein mentioned, besides being liable to the persons injured thereby for all damages which may be sustained, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, and shall, on conviction thereof, upon indictment or information, be dismissed from his office and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the Court.

Digitized by Google

Thus it will be seen that the bill simply provides that notaries who have records of mortgage shall be compelled to record them for the inspection of the public; and this they are obliged to do under a penalty in case of omission. And why should the law not command this; and why should it not impose a penalty in case of neglect? It is easy to perform, and is the only way in which publicity can be secured.

The bill then passes to executors, curators and administraters and others through whom the property or money may be received, and makes it their duty to take from the husband an authentic receipt for the money or property, which shall be recorded as a mortgage against the husband in the parish in which he resides, and in every other parish in the State in which he owns immovable property. There is also a penalty imposed on all executors, curators, or administrators who neglect to comply with this injunction. It likewise provides that clerks of court in whose offices there may exist evidence of a legal mortgage in favor of the wife, on the estate of her husband, shall record the same in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages. What is the bill in these respects? It is so simple that he who runs may read. Its provisions are easily carried into effect, and as efficacious when complied with. The mortgage must be recorded in the parish where the person resides and in every parish where he has property; as soon as it is recorded, he makes the necessary oath, and the money is paid over. Does this not secure the recordation of these mortgages? As soon as the receipt is recorded and the oath made, the money is paid over, and not before. This is exceedingly simple. Nothing could be more so. I have thus shown in the first place what, under the bill is the duty of notaries, and, in the second place, what is the duty of curators, executors and administrators. They are not to receive the money or property till an authentic receipt has been recorded in every parish in the State in which they own property.

Mr. Ryan.—I should like to ask the gentleman a question. The 4th section says:

SEC. 4 Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a tutor for a minor, or a curator of an absentee or interdicted person, shall have been designated by the judge, or other person having the competent authority to appoint tutors or curators, the clerk of the Court shall deliver to the person so designated, or to his agent or attorney, a copy of the order of appointment in order that it may be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in conformity to this act, and letters of tutorship or curatorship shall not issue until said order shall have been recorded, and until the person appointed tutor or curator shall have made and subscribed the following oath:

"I (A. B.) tutor of the child (or children) named ——, or curator of ——, an absentee, or of ——, an interdicted person, as the case may be, do solemnly swear (or affirm, if the party have conscientious scruples against making an oath,) that I have caused the order of appointment given me to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, in the parish in which I reside, and in every parish in this State, in which I own immovable property.

"Which oath must be recorded by the clerk in his office.

"Nothing in this act shall prevent tutors from giving a special mortgage in lieu of the general mortgage in favor of minors in the manner provided by law, but in all such cases every tutor before entering on the duties of his office, instead of the last clause of the above affidavit, shall be required to make oath that the special mortgage has been recorded in the parish or parishes, as the case may be, in this State, in which the property, so specially mortgaged is situated."

Suppose the person not to be worth a dollar and that he should run off; where would then be the security for the rights of minors?

Mr. Lacey.—We do not seek to secure the rights of miners by this bill. Those are protected already. Being now secured, the only legitimate object of the bill is to force on record the evidence of the existence of these mortgages. I say it, once for all, that in this bill we do not seek to secure the rights of minors. Strike out the unconstitutional first section, and they are as well protected as under the present system. The gentleman asks what security minors will have if this bill becomes a law. That provision which imposes a severe penalty for neglect of duty on the part of notaries, clerks, curators, tutors, &c., is a sufficient protection.

Mr. Trudeau.—Would not the bill have the effect of abolishing entirely all tacit mortgages?

Mr. Lacey.—I think it would. Immediately, under one bill and after April 1855, under the other. That portion of the bill, as I have said, I think unconstitutional, and for that reason I shall move to strike it out.

Well, sir, to proceed with the analysis of the bill—the first page provides for the recordation of future mortgages in favor of wives. But it would be imperfect if it stopped here. It must provide for the registration of those already in existence. This it does. The clerks of court must search their documents, and place on record every such mortgage. Thus we see that the registration both of existing and contingent mortgages is provided for. The bill then leaves the wife, and proceeds to minors. How does it provide for the recordation of mortgages, in favor of minors, hereafter to be acquired? I will show how:

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a tutor for a minor, or a curator of an absentee or interdicted person, shall have been designated by the judge, or other person having the competent authority to appoint tutors or curators, the clerk of the Court shall deliver to the person so designated, or to his agent or attorney, a copy of the order of appointment in order that it may be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in conformity to this act, and letters of tutorship or curatorship shall not issue until said order shall have been recorded, and until the person appointed tutor or curator, shall have made and subscribed the following oath:

"I (A. B.) tutor of the child (or children named) ——, or curator of——, an absentee, or of——, an interdicted person, as the case may be, do solemnly swear (or affirm, if the party have conscientious scruples against making an oath,) that I have caused the order of appointment given to me to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, in the parish in which I reside, and in every parish in this State, in which I own immovable property.

"Which oath must be recorded by the clerk in his office.

"Nothing in this act shall prevent tutors from giving a special mortgage in lieu of the general mortgage in favor of minors in the manner provided by law, but in all such cases every tutor before entering on the duties of his office, instead of the last clause of the above affidavit, shall be required to make oath that the special mortgage has been recorded in the parish or parishes, as the case may be, in this State, in which the property, so specially mortgaged is situated."

Digitized by Google

When all these formalities are complied with; when the tutor has been appointed, when the clerk has delivered a copy of the order of appointment to that person, or his attorney, when that order has been recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, and when the person appointed has taken an oath that the order has been recorded; then, and then only, letters of tutorship are to be delivered. Is not all this very simple? Is it not easily done? It may be said that these formalities, are so many trammels and constraints; but it is far better to submit to them than to have property covered up, and commerce burthened, as they are under the present system Let us abolish that system; let us make these mortgages open and public. When a man who desires to purchase property can ascertain what encumbrances exist on it, he has his eyes open and is not liable to be defrauded.

The sixth section of the bill provides that "on or before the first day of July next, it shall be the duty of every clerk of a court in this State, (except clerks of the Supreme Couat) in whose office records of appointments of tutors and curators of persons interdicted, and absentees heretofore made, are kept, to examine thoroughly the said records and within ten days after said first day of July, to make out a correct list of all the said tutorships and curatorships which the said records show still to exist: which list shall designate the names of the minors, and the persons appointed tutors, and curators who have not qualified under this act, with the dates of their appointment."

The fifth section declares "that the office of all tutors, curators of absentees and persons interdicted, now existing in this State shall expire on the 1st of July next, unless, in the interval, any such officer shall have caused to be recorded, the letters of tutorship, or curatorship originally given him, &c."

This, the Legislature has a right to do. It has a right to put an end to all tutorships, curatorships, &c., on a specified day. The bill then goes on, in section 6 to provide the manner in which these persons shall be cited and requalified. I have recited the first portion of that section. The remaining portions prescribe the manner in which the notices are to served on tutors and curators, the penalties for neglect of duty on the part of the Sheriff, &c., and other necessary formalities.

These general statements covers most of the important provisions of the bill. They are extremely simple, and the only objection that can be urged against them, is in the severe pains and penalties which they impose for nelgect of duty. But, I cannot consider such an objection valid, or even reasonable. Those penalties are absolutely necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of the bill. Unless they were imposed, the end in view would never be attained. It may be a bill of pains and penalties, but in that characteristic, resides its beauty and its strength. Strip it of these and you would deface its proportions and mar its beauty. It would be a dead letter on the statute book. It would resemble the fabled fruit of the Eastern sea, beautiful without, and fair to view, but full of bitter ashes within. We must affix a penalty for neglect, or omission to comply with its provisions, or the bill will be ineffectual.

I shall now notice one or two objections to the bill introduced by the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe). The first is that it requires all tutors to give bond. At present, natural tutors are not required to give bond. And why should they be so required? Why should the parent—the natural protector of his child—why should he be called into Court and compelled to give bond that he will be faithful to those duties which nature itself imposes on him. Why should we alter the principle of the law in that respect?

I say, sir, this is holy ground. Let us approach it, reverently; and like the devout worshipper, pull off our shoes before we enter. I do not see the necessity of altering our legislation in this respect. The House bill says that all tutors shall give bond. I shall refer to a simple case, in order to show the effect of this proviso. Suppose a little child whose father, in the course of nature, is called to render up his earthly account. He goes down to the grave, and leaves to the afflicted partner of his bosom, the care of their darling child. No sooner is the father and the husband laid in his cold and silent grave, that the mother, her eyes still wet with the tears of sorrow, is compelled to go to Court and ask for letters of tutorship, and Shylock like the law demands a bond—and for what? That she will be faithful to the trust that God has placed in her hands. Shall we engraft such a principle as that on our law? Shall we violate parental feelings; shall we thus outrage nature and humanity by asking a natural tutor to give a bond? I hope not—a bill characterised by such a feature as that shall never receive my support. There is still another objection, I allude to that portion which refers to intermeddling. It is a good provision, but the absence of a penalty will render it ineffectual. In this respect it is unlike the stringent penalties by which the bill of the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King) proposes to effect the object. And these are not the only objections. There are others which manifest themselves on an examination of the bill. One bill, that of the Senator from New Orleans, accomplishes everything desirable; the other does not. I have confidence in the distinguished member of the House who drew up the bill which has been introduced by the Senator from West Feliciana, I have confidence in his opinions and his jugdment; but in this case he has not exhibited the care and attention which are so manifest in the bill of the Senator from New Orleans. That gentleman has been kind enough to allude to me in complimentary terms for the slight connection I have had with this bill. I must say that unbounded credit is due to him, while I disclaim any for myself.

I am no great advocate for change merely for the sake of change. I do not wish to lay my hands with ruthless violence on those old forms and institutions which have made themselves objects of our respect and veneration. I love the jurisprudence of Louisiana, and in studying it I cannot help reverting to its source in that ancient empire which held the dominion of the world, and bringing to mind the time when the tyrant Caracalla called on his prefect to find an excuse for the murder of his father and his brother, and the virtuous advocate preferred death rather than so dishono and desecrate his calling. From the moment when I first read the incident, I have loved and admired that law. And what was the answer of the prefect when commanned by imperial power to excuse the execrable deed? Proudly he answered, "it is easier to commit parricide than to justify it." Yes, sir, I love the annals of our law, and admire the great jurisconsults of Rome, of France and of Spain, whose intellect and learning have shed upon it an imperishable lustre. I repeat that I am no advocate of change unless when experience demonstrates its absolute necessity. And this, I conceive to be just such a case. Under the operation of our present tacit mortgage system the most injurious effects have been produced. Capital, unprotected by our laws, seeks some other channel; commerce is trammeled, and the value of property immensely depreciated. These are evils which are evident to the most casual observer. They should be eradicated without delay. There ought to be no rivalry between the friends of the two bills. Contemplating a common object, they should be acted on in a spirit of concession and good will. Let them both be taken up and well considered; let their conflicting provisions be harmonised; combine them, if possible into one bill; pass that bill, and send it to the other House for the concurrence which, no doubt, it will receive. If we can frame a bill which will, in no way, interfere with the rights of minors and married women, but simply compel a registration of the mortgages which secure those rights, the other House can interpose no objection. If they do, let the weight of popular indignation fall on them. We shall have done our duty and can go before our constituents with clean hands and honest hearts.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Moore.—It is with great diffidence that I rise to say anything on a subject which has been already so ably and so elaborately discussed; but I feel it incumbent on me to make a few remarks in explanation of my position. When I first examined the bill before the Senate, I thought it a good bill; but more mature consideration brought me to the conclusion that it was entirely too complex and encumbered with too many penal clauses. In addition to these difficulties there is one insurmountable objection—both bills are unconstitutional. There can be no doubt that, should we attempt to extinguish a legal mortgage already existing, we would be legislating in direct contravention of the Constitution. The honorable senator from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey) says that if he can be satisfied that the bill is constitutional, he will vote for it, and thereupon proceeded to argue in its favor, though he had declared that he thought the very first section unconstitutional. How can he doubt its unconstitutionality? Is there not an article of the Code, as plain as the English language can make it, which declares that these tacit mortgages shall exist, and by which, therefore, they are brought into existence?

Is there not an article of the Constitution which declares that vested rights shall not be divested? If you pass the bill, do you not divest those rights which have been vested by the Code? Can you do this? Every one must acknowledge that it cannot be done. No argument has yet been brought forward against this position. You have said by your law that when a woman is married, the instant her husband receives her dowry, &c., she has a legal mortgage not only against the property which he then possessed, but on what he might thereafter acquire. If you then pass a law declaring that she shall lose this mortgage which she has already acquired by law, do you not divest her rights? And even if this is not unconstitutional, do you not take rights from them which, in justice, you have no right to take away. I am willing to prevent the acquiring of a future mortgage right unless it be registered. To this I will consent, but I must say that I consider the word "tacit" a bugbear. The mortgages called tacit mortgages are in fact legal mortgages. I am willing to compel the registration of those which may accrue hereafter, and to oblige clerks of court to perform the duty. The senator from East Baton Rouge made an argument in favor of the bill, and then turned round and said that to exact a bond from a natural tutor was inhuman. Why, sir, how can you compel a registration without demanding some evidence of it? Does the bill of the gentleman from New Orleans exempt natural tutors from the necessity of giving this bond. Not at all? Look at the bill and you will see that it does not. Now, suppose that natural tutors were not compelled to give this bond—the result would be that everything would be involved in the same doubt and uncertainty as before. Let us now look at the objects and effect of the bill. It seems to be drawn up entirely for the benefit of money leaders, who want more tangible security than they think they can obtain under our present law. They do not like to go into the country parishes and take the trouble of examining the records of the Court. It would be easy enough to do, but still it would give them some trouble. They might be obliged to go into the parish where the person might live, and examine the record, and this would be entirely too much trouble for them to take. Yet they could easily ascertain. Almost any person could give the requisite information. In the country every one who has filled these trust offices is known, so that now it is the easiest thing in the world to find it out. I say again that this bill seems to be made for the especial accommodation of money leaders, and only in order to save them a little trouble. Why, sir, go into my parish and almost any one can tell you the name of every man against whom a tacit mortgage exists. I differ with the gentleman as to compelling natural tutors to give bond. I think every person exercising one of these fiduciary trusts should be forced to give bond. It is not unnatural to impose that obligation on the parent. I myself have been a natural tutor, and I was always ready to give bond. Every honest man should be ready to do it. It is no hardship.

And now, sir, I repeat that we cannot legislate out of existence those rights which the law has called into existence. Let money leaders institute the necessary examination. They are generally pretty sharp in such matter. The credit system is based on confidence. Among merchants inquiries of this kind are seldom made. Credit is frequently given where the parties know nothing actually of each others affairs, and no injury results. The whole system is based on reciprocal confidence. People now understand the law; change it and it will not become familiar to the most of the community for a quarter of a century. For this reason it is unjust to the common people. It is better that the law should be a little hard than that it should not be known at all. It is said that, under the present system, Louisiana is not prosperous. I do not believe the assertion. I landed in New Orleans when it was a town of only 8000 inhabitants and I have seen it grow to be a stately city with a population of 150,000 souls, and the commercial emporium of the Mississippi valley. This is practical prosperity. During all that time there has been but little change in the law on this subject. We had first the Code of 18—and then the Code of 1828. Under both of these the system remained unchanged. Why should we alter it now? What difference does it make whether these mortgages be recorded or not? How does it affect our prosperity if the mortgage is legal and known to those around and not known to those at a distance? Yet, as I have said, I am willing to compel the registration of all future mortgages if it is thought necessary to do so, though I consider the whole matter more of a bugbear than anything else. People from common law States, where women have no rights come here and inform us that this is a terrible place—that here women actually have rights. They are not accustomed to such a thing and they think it very horrible. The whole thing is got up for the benefit of N. Orleans money lenders. The change is not desired in the country. There are not five men in my parish who desire it. There we know every tutor and every married woman in the community, and so it is in the other country parishes. If a person wishes to buy property, all he has to do is, to get a renunciation from the wife and then he has a perfect title. We are well enough as we are, and we ought to leave well enough alone. Let us not yield to the prejudices of people from abroad who do not understand our laws, and cannot appreciate our policy. The commercial interests of New Orleans are not the only interests to be consulted; nor the wishes of people who do not understand our laws and therefore wish to change them to suit themselves. I may say something more on this question after a time, but now my desire is simply to amend the bill so as to make its effect only mortgages hereafter to accrue. That would be constitutional, whereas the proposition to destroy existing rights is clearly unconstitutional. The argument of the senator from East Baton Rouge, on that point, is unanswerable.

Digitized by Google

Mr. King.—If the gentleman will listen to me for a few moments, I think I can satisfy him that the constitutional argument of the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, is a mere chimera of the imagination. The subject of tacit mortgages was very elaborately discussed last winter, when a bill similar to this one was before the Senate, and no man was bold enough to rise in his seat and say that it was unconstitutional. The bill passed the Senate, but failed in the other branch of the General Assembly. I was in the House during the brief debate which took place there, and I can say that the bill was voted down without being half read or half understood. I will now state the law on the constitutional point which seems to have made so great an impression on the minds of some senators. I shall not state my opinions; but shall quote the highest legal authority, that of the Supreme Court of the U. States, presided over by Chief Justice Marshall. The bill introduced by the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe) provides for the immediate abolition of all tacit mortgages. I am free to admit that a bill which contemplates their entire destruction, in a single moment, would be regarded as unconstitutional and void. While I admit this I will remind gentlemen of another legal principle. It is the undoubted right of every community to pass such registration laws as it chooses, for reasons of policy and good government. In deciding on the constitutionality of such an act the only question before a Court, would be the intention of the Legislature—whether to divest vested rights, or to frame a good system of registry. The opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, our highest legal authority, fully sustains this position. The senator from East Baton Rouge, quoted a decision of that tribunal which he seemed to think, justified his view of the case. I think I can show that his inference is entirely fallacious.

The facts of the case are simply these. A man named Cornelius, sold some land first, to one person and then to another, and of course a controversy for the ownership was the result. At that time—the time the sale was made—there was no registration law in the State of New York; and of course the title depended on the general principles of the common law, which fully established that the oldest title should take the property. Subsequently, however, the State passed a law having for its object to show the condition of all the real property in the State, under which law owners of property were obliged to register it. The first transferee neglected to comply with the law, but the second fulfilled its injunctions. By this, he became the absolute owner of the property, the defect in his title being cured by his compliance with the law, and by the neglect of the first purchaser. The case was litigated and finally carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision. The Court decided that it was clearly within the power of State legislatures to pass registration laws; and that if a man should neglect to comply with them as in the case in point, he lost his right. Let us see what was the language of the Court on this point:

"It is within the undoubted power of State legislatures to pass recording acts, by which the elder grantee shall be postponed to a younger, if the prior deed is not recorded within the limited time; and the power is the same whether the deed is dated before or after the passage of the recording act. Though the effect of such a law is to render the prior deed fraudulent and void against a subsequent purchaser, it is not a law impairing the obligation of contracts; such too is the power to pass acts of limitations, and their effect. Reasons of sound policy have led to the general adoption of laws of both description, and their validity cannot be questioned. The time and manner of their operation, the exceptions to them, and the acts from which the time limited shall begin to run, will generally depend on the sound discretion of the Legislature, according to the nature of the titles, the situation of the country, and the emergency which leads to their enactment. Cases may occur where the provisions of a law on those subjects may be so unreasonable as to amount to a denial of a right, and call for the interposition of the Court; but the present is not one"

In addition to this, which I think clear enough, I will illustrate and enforce my position by referring to an instance within our State. Last year, in Louisiana, there was no limitation of judgments. Once obtained, they were good for a thousand years. The last Legislature passed a law declaring that a lapse of ten years should bar a judgment unless reinscribed; and this applies to all judgments, those already in existence, as well as those hereafter to be obtained. Yet, when this bill passed, no such storm of indignation was aroused as that which seems to have been excited by this measure. We heard none of those exclamations about vested rights which have characterised the discussion on this bill. No one asserted that vested rights were divested or impaired by that act. But strange to say, the moment we touch this subject of tacit mortgages, these difficulties are raised; obsacles innumerable start up in our path; hills on hills, and Alps on Alps arise.

The Supreme Court says that we have a right to pass registration laws; that settles the constitutional objection. The bill specifies April 1st, 1855, as the day by which these mortgages must be recorded. A proposition has been made to lengthen the period to Oct. 1st. If the Senate think that time preferable, I am willing to accede to it. But at all events it is necessary to do away with this oppressive system which is now crushing us to the earth. Notwithstanding its acknowledged evils, and injurious effects, are we still to be told that there is no way to get rid of it? Can we believe that it is fixed upon us irrevocably; that it will cling to us as tightly as the old man of the mountain to the unfortunate Sinbad? Every person that has spoken on the subject, with the exception of the honorable gentleman from St. Martin, (Mr. Moore) has acknowledged the evils of the present system; and even that gentleman, yielding no doubt to the overpowering force of public sentiment, consents that we shall require the registration of all mortgages hereafter to be acquired. But a concession of that kind would do very little good. Before full benefit could be derived from it, the last minor must become a major and the last woman must die. This would indeed be postponing the advantage of the measure to a very remote period. Many of us came here pledged to undertake the abolition of this system of tacit mortgages. Our constituents expect a faithful redemption of those pledges. But to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from St. Martin, would be to give them a stone when they ask for bread it would be to "Keep the word of promise to the ear,

Digitized by Google

"And break it on the hope."

The gentleman has told us that the people do not desire this change. I think he labors under a great mistake. I dare him sir, to that issue. If he is sincere in that expression of opinion, he would be willing to let the people decide the question Then pass the bill and submit it to the people, and you shall soon hear a responsive shout from every section of the State. With once voice they will give it their sanction and approval. It is written in history that a Roman Emperor was dethroned, because he hung his laws so high that they could not be read by the people. What shall we say of Louisiana who, far worse than the Roman tyrant, does not write her laws at all.

And now, sir, let me say that I feel as much sympathy for minors, that I am as much interested in their rights, that I would go as far to protect them, as any senator on this floor, and I would be as unwilling to do, or to recommend anything that might be determental or injurious to them. I would be the last man to adopt or suggest such a course, and I contend therefore that, under the bill which I have offered to the Senate, minors would enjoy much better security than under this miserable system of tacit mortgages which, whilst it benefits not them, operates as a fraud on third parties. I am opposed to the substitute of the Senator from West Feliciana, and I hope it will not be passed. Before I conclude, let me say a word more on the constitutional question. I repeat, that there is nothing in it; that it is a mere chimera. But suppose gentlemen differ with me on this point, and think, that it really presents a difficulty—what then? Should we be so selfish, so confident in the infallibility of our own opinions, as to refuse to pass a beneficial law when the Judiciary can decide the question at issue? Why should we hesitate to put it before a Court,—why should we not have confidence in those tribunals which the Constitution itself has created for the decision of questions of this kind? We ought not to retain an odious and oppressive system merely to gratify our pride of opinion, when there is another and a higher tribunal to which the subject might be, more appropriately, referred.

THURSDAY, Feb. 23, 1824.

THE ATCHAFALAYA RIVER.

Mr. Pulfrey introduced a joint resolution requesting our Representatives, and instructing our Senators in Congress, to use their best efforts to procure an appropriation to be applied to deepening the channel of the Atchafalaya river to 12 feet.

Mr. Pulfrey—I desire to offer a few remarks in support of this resolution. It is well known that the Opelousas Railroad, or rather the route of that contemplated railroad, intersects an estuary of the sea called Berwick's Bay, which is the channel of communication between the sea and through the Atchafalaya river, to a large, fertile and productive section of country. It is desired to deepen the channel of the Atchafalaya river, which at present is obstructed by numerous impediments. The resolution does not contemplate any appropriation from the State, but merely draws the attention of our Representatives and Senators in Congress to the subject, requesting and instructing them, if possible, to obtain an appropriation for this object from the General Government.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Wickliffe called up a bill for the relief of Moses Lee.

Mr. Hodge—I should like to know something about this bill before I cast my vote for it.

Mr. Wickliffe—I will state to the gentleman that Mr. Lee is entitled to this money. He complied with all the provisions of the act of 1852. He sent his papers here, but could not obtain payment, only because the appropriation was exhausted. This bill makes an appropriation of the amount to which he would have been entitled under that act. It has been referred to the Judiciary Committee and reported on favorably. I hope it will pass, as it contemplates nothing more than an act of simple justice.

Mr. Hodge—Well, sir, I shall vote against the bill, because it is special in its nature. If it were a general law I should vote for it. But this is only one out of a hundred or a thousand cases arising under the law of 1852, in which persons did not get their money, although they were fully entitled to it.

Mr. Wickliffe—If the act of 1852 had not passed the Legislature at all, we should have been much better off. I think pensions should not be given except by reference to the merits of each individual case. Under general laws the evidence is always ex parte, and the opportunities for judging correctly of the merits of a case are much lessened, and persons may secure the benefits of the law who, perhaps, are not as well entitled as others who fail. In this case the whole appropriation was exhausted by persons in the vicinity of the seat of Government who had immediate and favorable opportunities of pressing their claims.

Mr. Kenner—I would ask the gentleman whether this person is one of those who received relief previously?

Mr. Wickliffe—I do not know whether he is or not. The bill passed.

QUARANTINE.

Mr. Trudeau—On behalf of the Sanitary Committee, I beg leave to present the report of the committee; before which, I shall read the reply of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New Orleans to the interrogatories propounded by the committee.

After the letter had been read, Mr. Trudeau presented the following

MAJORITY REPORT.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

Your committee having come to the conclusion that the focus of all the epidemics which have visited the State being New Orleans, it became their duty to ascertain how the city could be protected, or its health improved. To protect the city was to protect the State. To prevent the incorporation of diseased foreign ships, was the object of our first inquiry. This led to a long examination of the advantages and inconveniences of a system of quarantine. The position of New Orleans is a peculiar one. Lying sixty miles from the sea, it can still be reached by Pontchartrain, by the lakes and by the Atchafalaya. To guard a point and to leave the others unprotected, would be a useless expenditure of money. Thus not less than three quarantines would be required to guard the approach from the sea. Your committee found that should a quarantine be established at the Balize,

